Chaucer (Geoffrey). The Works of. Compared with the former editions, and many valuable ^{ms.} out of which, three Tales are added which were never before printed. By John Urry, student of Christ Church, Oxon. deceased. Together with a Glossary, by a student of the same College. To the whole is prefixed the author's life, newly written, and a preface, giving an account of this edition. London, Printed for Bernard Lintot, between the Temple Gates, 1721. 30.00

Folio, sound original calf, panel sides, gilt back. A choice specimen of old English binding.

The illustrative matter is of unusual interest and is practically the first attempt of the kind ever done for "the well of English undefiled."

The portrait of Chaucer is beautifully engraved in a large oval, at top of which is a crown of haws and his name upon a small scroll or ribbon, at the bottom is Chaucer's coat of arms with Latin inscription and Vertue's name. The impression of the print is remarkably crisp and from the circumstance of its being in the book since 1721, has escaped that injurious handling so fatal to the preservation of old prints.

The view representing the Tabard Inn and the famous company departing so many years ago from its hospitable doors, is the oldest engraved print known of that famous hostelry and scene. It is a quaint copper, 5 1/4 x 3 3/4 inches, most spiritedly drawn, really superior to the wooden conception of place or the too modernized one of Stothard. At page 147 occurs a portrait of Chaucer seated upon horseback.

This edition contains two singularly curious and valuable poems, which are erroneously attributed to Chaucer, viz. "The Foxes Tale of Callyn" and "The Merchants second Tale or the Pilgrims of Gerayn," the author of which, says Fitton, "he he whom he might was certainly a writer of uncommon merit."

Urry died before the completion of his work, the preface and glossary was finished by Dr. Williams, who says of him, "That he was remarkable not only for his learning and industry, but more particularly for his great charity, constant integrity, and a peculiar happiness of being always agreeable to his private friends."

This edition of Chaucer, being the first critically edited as well as the first illustrated, will always remain a most clearly interesting and covetable volume, and the copy here illustrated is in every respect clear and perfect.

Inserted are 6 leaves extracted from "Poems upon several occasions," entitled "To Mr. Packer: Upon his improving a Room in London for a Castle, supposed to have been Chaucer's study."

"Our Ancient Father of the British Tongue,

In Dryden late reviv'd, again grows young:

His Tales are there in freest Land are told,

Like Coins new-stamped on old Spur-royal Gold."

As Dryden's Poems appeared in 1706, this gives the date of the above poem.

Contains fine old armorial book plate of Thomas Colebrooke of Northgate Middlesex Esq. This was the father of Colebrooke the distinguished oriental scholar.

The Doctor Contemporary & Disciple of Master Chaucer and his School. Geo. Vertue Sculp. 1717.

THE L I F E O F GEOFFREY CHAUCER.

IT is observable that great Men, remarkable for the same Excellencies in different Ages, have generally several Circumstances in their Lives which bear a near resemblance to each other. Homer and the Father of our English Poetry are not more like in their Perfections of writing, than in the particulars of their Birth, and the uncertainty of their Parents and of the place of their Nativity. That Parallel which is drawn between the former and Virgil doth not square near so well as this; nor does the Roman Imitator come up to the resemblance of the Britain. The Parents of both were uncertain; the first having (as usual in such cases) his Genealogy drawn from Heroes, Dæmons, and River Deities; the other, on the contrary, boasting no other extraction than what is deduced by conjecture from mean persons. Different places contend for the honour of their Birth; a number of Cities for the one, and several Provinces the other. The near similitude of their Genius's and Excellencies is easily discovered by their Readers. They differ in nothing so much as in their Fortunes; the first being generally press'd with necessity, and disregarded; the latter favoured and rewarded by Princes, and for the most part abounding in wealth.

Many particulars relating to our Author having, through the negligence of our fore-fathers, been suffered to sink in oblivion, it is the more necessary to preserve what remains of him, and to attempt the recovery of some parts of his History: I shall therefore digest the confused common places left concerning him in as regular a method as I can, and with such additions as have been rescued from Time endeavour to clear up his Birth, and by the assistance of such particular Æra's as are on Record concerning him, trace him through the most remarkable Passages of his Life.

Leland, of all those who professedly write his Life, came nearest to his time, but at too long a distance to make any certain discoveries concerning his Birth, though he had the best opportunities of doing it, being commissioned by King Henry VIII. to search all the Libraries of Religious Houses in England, when those sacred Archives were preserved, before the Flood of Destruction, which soon after broke in upon them, and swept them away with their Buildings; even before Polydore Virgil had destroyed such curious pieces, as would have contradicted his fram'd and fabulous History. He for some * reasons believed Oxfordshire or Berkshire to have produced this great Man: What those reasons were he has not informed us; there appears at present no other, but that the Seats of his Family were in those Counties.

* Quibusdam argumentis adducor ut credam, Hæcam, vel Berochenfem provinciam illius natale solum fuisse. Lel. in vitâ Chauceri.

The LIFE of

If we fix upon Berkshire, Dunnington must be the place, which Mr. Camden^b says was a Seat of Chaucer's; but he himself seems to have been the first of that name that possess'd it, and that not till the latter part of his Life. For in the Reign of Edw. II. it was in the possession of ^c*Walter Abberbury*, Son and Heir of Thomas Abberbury (who gave the King C. s. for the same) and it continued in the possession of that Family till the latter part of the Reign of Rich. II. in whose time it was in the possession of Sir Richard^d Adderbury, or Abberbury, who had a grant from that Prince for rebuilding the Castle^e, and another for building a Religious House^f, which he endowed with two acres of Land, and the Manor of Tiftly. This was part of the Honour of Wallingford, of which Thomas Chaucer was Constable, and was probably bought by Geoffrey Chaucer, not many years before his death, of Sir Richard Adderbury the younger.

If this be all the Plea for Berkshire, there seems to be no farther room to insist upon it. Oxfordshire indeed has upon this account a better claim; there being no less than three Seats in that County belonging to his Family, Ewelme, Hocknorton and Woodstock. Leland does not expressly point at any of these, but Pits positively asserts (without giving any reasons) that Woodstock was the Place, which opinion Mr. Camden^g seems to hint at, where he speaks of that Town. Pits's authority is not so well established as to deserve credit on his bare word; but on the contrary, he and his Colleague Bale (who are poor Copiers from Leland) abound with such numerous falsities, that it is not safe even to quote them in some particulars. I suspect Pits had no other grounds for his assertion than Chaucer's House at Woodstock, and his mentioning the Park in his Works; and therefore with a turn too frequent with Biographers, raises an assertion upon a very slender supposition, and thought the darkness of the times would conceal the deceit, and leave no footsteps to trace the contrary. Ewelme^h and Hocknorton have an equal right with Woodstock, both belonging to Chaucer's family, and the first is said by Leland to be the inheritance of the *Chaucers*ⁱ, though others think it was given him by Rich. II.^k But after all these different pretensions, he himself seems to point out the place of his Nativity to be the City of London^l. And Mr. Camden, though he mentions the claim of Woodstock, evidently gives no credit to it; for speaking of Spenser (whom all allow to be born in London) he calls him Fellow-Citizen to Chaucer^m.

The name of Chaucer [or Chaucier, Chaucieris, Chaussier, Chausir, &c.] is originally French, signifying a Shoemaker: But the family which he descended from had long enjoyed an honourable name in England; the Founder being a Chief attending the Duke of Nor-mandy in his Expedition to England, as appears by the Roll of Battle Abby. And as the Original seems to have been a Person of Honour, so several of the Nameⁿ, who may reasonably be supposed to be descended from him, are mention'd in Records; but the descent of our Author is no where particularly described.

Mr. Speght thinks that one Richard Chaucer was his Father, and that one Elizabeth Chaucer, a Nun of St. Hellen's, in the second year of Rich. II. might have been his sister, or of his kindred. But this conjecture seems very improbable; for this Richard was a Vintner^o living at the corner of Kirton Lane, and at his death left his House, Tavern and Stock to the Church of St. Mary Aldermary, and was there buried in the year of our Lord 1348. At which time our Poet being a young Student in the University, this supposed Father must have been an unnatural Bigot to give all he had to the Church, and leave his Son unprovided for, unless he designed to dedicate him to Religion, as well as his supposed Sister. It is more probable that this Vintner had neither Children, nor near Relations, which frequently happens among Citizens, who leave bulky estates to charitable uses, for want of kindred: Nor is it likely that he should be possessed of the Family-Estates, mentioned by Leland, in Oxfordshire, and at the same time follow such an Occupation; and therefore passing by this conjecture, and the merry jokes which Dr. Fuller (according to his custom) makes upon his Arms, ^d This Sir Richard Adderbury, or Abberbury, or Atterbury, was a great Favourite of Rich. II. and was immediately after his Coronation sent with a Message to the Citizens of London. He was likewise made Constable of the Castle of Brest; and was in the year 1387. expelled the King's Household by the seditious Lords. There was one Adderbury returned for Dun-vington in a List of Gentry, in the Reign of Hen. VI.

as if they alluded to his Father's profession of dashing white and red Wine ^p, we shall endeavour to find out a Father more worthy of such a Son; and though I cannot implicitly believe with Pits that his Father was a Knight, yet it is likely his Parents were something superiour to a common Employ. We find one John Chaucer attending upon Edw. III. and Queen Philippa in their Expedition to Flanders and Cologne, who had the King's Protection ^q to go over Sea, in the twelfth year of his Reign. It is highly probable that this Gentleman was the Father of our Geoffrey, which I am the more inclined to believe, because Chaucer's first application, after leaving the University and Inns of Law, was to the Court; nor is it unlikely the services of the Father should recommend the Son. As this is proposed with submission to better Judgments, so I lay no greater stress upon it than the reasons suggested will bear.

I proceed to a Particular less controverted, that is, the time of his Birth, which was in the second year of the Reign of King Edw. III. A. D. 1328. His first studies were in the University of Cambridge; where he was in the eighteenth year of his Age, when he wrote his Court of Love, and was at those early years no indifferent Poet, having before written several pieces: But of what College he was is uncertain, there being no footsteps of him in the Records of that University. It is not unlikely that he was of that Hall, where he lays the Story of the Miller of Trompington, so exactly describing the place, and the humours and Northern dialect of his Fellow-Collegians. How long he continued there is not known: It is certain he removed from thence to compleat his Studies at Oxford; but in what College is as uncertain as the former. The Writer of his Life fixes upon Canterbury, or Merton College. Canterbury College, now part of Christ-Church College (which Polydore Vergil calls the most celebrated of his time) is unlikely to be the place, not being founded till the year 1363, at which time Chaucer must be Five and Thirty years of age, and had been for some time launched into the world of business. Merton College is the more likely; for tho' his name does not appear among the celebrated Members of it at that time, yet we find most of his Contemporaries, as Strode, Occleve, &c. were of that College, where one of his Sons was likewise educated. After a considerable stay here, and a strict application to the Publick Lectures of the University, he became (says Leland) a ready Logician, a smooth Rhetorician, a pleasant Poet, a grave Philosopher, an ingenious Mathematician, and a holy Divine. That he was a great Master in Astronomy (tho' he modestly pleads ^w ignorance in it) is plain by his Discourses of the Astrolabe: That he was versed in the Hermesick Philosophy (which prevailed much at that time) appears by his Tale of the Chanon's Teoman: His knowledge in Divinity is evident from his Parson's Tale, and his Philosophy from the Testament of Love.

Thus qualify'd for that considerable Figure he afterwards made, he began his approaches by degrees into the world; and leaving that learned Retirement, he travell'd into France, Holland, and other Countries, where Leland says he spent part of his younger days, and returning home, enter'd himself in the Inner Temple ^x, where he studied the Municipal Laws of this Land. Leland intimates that he prosecuted those studies towards the latter part of his Life; which is improbable for the following reasons: Leland owns that at the Inns of Court he became acquainted with John Gower, at that time an eminent Lawyer; that this acquaintance was long before the latter end of the Reign of Rich. II. (as Leland places it) appears by the Poem of Troilus and Cresseide, which is inscribed to Gower, and mentioned in his Legend of good Women ^z, which was written before the Death of the first Queen of Rich. II. he being directed to carry it to the Queen at Eltham, or at Shene: Now Rich. II. demolished the Palace of Shene upon her Death, nor was it repaired during his Reign. The places which Chaucer held would not allow him at that time to apply himself to those studies; nor is it likely that at such an advanced age, when he was near Seventy, and (as Leland confesses) found age burthensome, he had either will or strength to prosecute a hard, intricate, and to him at that age an useless study. It is therefore more probable that he acquired the knowledge of our Laws in his youth, in order to qualify himself for publick Affairs, in which he afterwards was concerned.

But he had not long followed those studies, before his singular accomplishments were discovered by some persons at Court, whither he next made his approaches. A glorious and successful Reign, as it affords subjects for the praises of the Learned, so it gives them encouragement to employ their abilities on such occasions; and Edw. III. who was a discerning Prince to judge of, and generous to reward Learning, invited Men of Letters to him, and by his example induced his Court to encourage them: So that in his Reign Valour was not more esteemed than Learning, and Cowardice and Ignorance were equally despised. The Court at that time consisted of all that was great and splendid, and every thing that could be desired contributed to make it the most glorious in Europe. A long and happy Reign, successful in Victories abroad, filled it with Heroes, and a just Administration at home supply'd it with Men of Learning. These are so inseparably linked together for the encouragement of each other, that where there are men of Valour, there can be no Slavery and Oppression, and where there is Slavery and Oppression, there can be no Men of Learning. They equally flourished in this Reign, being encouraged by a Prince who was Master of both, and applauded by a Court of Ladies remarkable for Beauty, Wit and Gaiety. In short, there was nothing going forward in that Court but perpetual Mirth, Tilts and Tournaments, and Romantick Gallantry, which has been only parallel'd by the late Reign of K. Charles the Second. And how well qualify'd our Poet was to be a Member of such an Assembly, we may judge by his learning, wit, amorous disposition, gay humour and gallantry: To which his Person gave no small addition, being about the age of Thirty (as appears by a Picture^b of him about that age) of a fair, beautiful complexion, his lips red and full, his size of a just medium, and his port and air graceful and majestick. So that every Ornament that could claim the approbation of the Great and Fair, his Abilities to record the Valour of the one, and celebrate the Beauty of the other, and his wit and gentle behaviour to converse with both, conspired to make him a compleat Courtier.

His first station, 'tis very probable, was that of Page to the King, a place of honour and esteem, and so much regarded by Princes at that time, that Rich. II. leaves particular Legacies in his Will to his Pages, when few others are taken notice of. But this was only the first step to preferment, as the King himself intimates; and therefore by his Letters Patents dated in the Forty first year of his Reign, he grants to him for his good Services, by the Title of dilectus Valettus noster^c, an Annuity of Twenty Marks per Annum payable out of the Exchequer, till he could otherwise provide for him. How mean soever such a Pension may seem now, it was then very considerable, and in Chaucer's case was still the more valuable as being an earnest of future Favours: For not long after we find him Gentleman of the King's Privy Chamber, and by that Title the King granted to him by Letters Patents dated in the Forty fifth year of his Reign, the further Sum of Twenty Marks per Annum during life. In this station he did not long continue, being next year made Shield-bearer to the King^d, a Title at that time (tho' now extinct) of great honour; such persons being always next the King's person, and generally upon signal Victories rewarded with military Honours.

Our Poet being thus placed near the King, found respect and encouragement from all the chief persons of the Court: Queen Philippa, a Princess of extraordinary merit, esteemed him; John of Gaunt Duke of Lancaster had a singular value for him^e, as had likewise his Dutches Blanch, at whose request he made the Poem called La Priere de notre Dame. The Lady Margaret, the King's Daughter and Countess of Pembroke, was the chief of his Patronesses, and would frequently complement him upon his Poems. But this is not to be meant of his Canterbury Tales, they being written in the latter part of his Life, when the Courtier and the fine Gentleman gave way to solid Sense and plain Descriptions. In his Love-pieces he was obliged to have the strictest regard to Modesty and Decency; the Ladies at that time insisting so much upon the nicest punctilio's of honour, that it was highly criminal to depreciate their Sex, or do any thing that might offend Virtue: The first of these Chaucer had been guilty of, which he afterwards attoned by the Legend of Good Women; a Task enjoined him by the Lady Margaret^f, whom he veils under the name of the Dailly, as he does in several other pieces^g. The Poems which gave offence were The Romaunt of the Rose and Troilus and Creseide^h; tho' he seems to hint at a particular offence he had given by preferring the Flower to the Leaf, which he gayly turns offⁱ.

Thus beloved, esteemed and honoured, he spent his younger years in a constant attendance upon the Court, and for the most part living near it, when residing at Woodstock, in a square stone house near the Park Gate, still called Chaucer's House^k. That this was the chief place of his abode, appears by his frequent descriptions of the Park; as particularly a Park^l walled with green stone, that being the first Park walled in England, and not many years before his time. In most of his pieces, where he designs an imaginary Scene, he certainly copies it from a real Landskape: So in his Cuckow and Nightingale, the Morning walk he takes was such as at this day may be traced from his House through part of the Park, and down by the Brook into the Vale under Blenheim Castle^m, as certainly as we may assert that Maplesⁿ instead of Phylireas, were the ornaments round the Bower; which place he likewise describes in his Dream, as a white Castle standing upon a hill^o; the Scene in that Poem being laid in Woodstock Park.

But to return; Queen Philippa being a native of Hainault, and bringing over with her several persons of that Country, there was a frequent intercourse between England and that Province, which was increased by a fresh Alliance with the Duke of Bavaria, Earl of Hainault, Zeland and Holland, who married Maud, Daughter and Coheir of Henry Plantagenet Earl of Lancaster, whose sister Blanch was married to John of Gaunt, afterwards Duke of Lancaster. The Dutchess Blanch (whether by the recommendation of her sister, or by what other means is not material) entertained in her service one Katherine Rouet, daughter of Sir Payne or Pagan Rouet a Native of Hainault and Guien King at Arms for that Country, who was afterwards married to Sir Hugh Swynford^p a Knight at Lincoln. He dying not long after their marriage, the Duke and Dutchess continued her as Guardianess to their children. This Lady had a younger Sister, whom the Duke and Dutchess recommended to our Chaucer for a Wife; and he married her about the Thirty second year of his age. Brooks calls her Anne, but her name was Philippa (as shall be made appear hereafter) a name much used at that time in Hainault, in regard of it's being the Queen's name.

Our Poet being thus fixed by marriage, the King began to employ him in more publick and advantageous Posts; for in the Forty sixth year of his Reign we find him in Commission with others to treat with the Doge and Senate of Genoa^q; but for what purpose, or with what success doth not appear. And now he began every day to rise in greatness, having the Duke of Lancaster for his Patron, who indefatigably espoused his interest, and that for several reasons: One was the application of the Lady Katharine Swynford, his wife's sister, who was a woman of singular^r Beauty, and not only an attendant on the Dutchess, but Mistress to the Duke, and extremely in his favour, as appears by the Grants made to her in the Fifty first year of K. Edw. III. of the Lordships of Gringly and Wheatly^s, which were confirmed by the King. Nor was this the only reason of the Dukes favour: His ambition requiring all the assistance of Learned men, to give it a plausible appearance, induced him to do Chaucer many good offices, in order to engage him in his Interest.

About this time (perhaps for his services at Genoa) the King granted to him by Letters Patents dated at Windsor in the Forty eighth year of his Reign, by the Title of Armiger noster^t, one Pycher of Wine daily, in the Port of London; and soon after made him Comptroller of the Customs in that Port of Wool, Woolfells and Hides, with a particular Proviso, that he should personally execute that office, and write the Accounts relating to it with his own hand^a. This Post he filled with honour and integrity, as himself declares that no wight of of his administracyon coude non yvels^w, and that he never defouled his conscience for no manner dede^x: Nor do we find, that at that time when the Customs were farmed and the People imposed upon, the King in his dotage and misled, Chaucer was ever concerned in the Impositions with Lyon, Ellis and others prosecuted for those crimes. Leland observes that there were at Ewelme Woolfacks painted in token of Merchandize, and that it was said Thomas the Son of Geoffrey Chaucer was a Merchant: To which Speght adds, that it was for this reason believed that Chaucer's Ancestors were Merchants of the Staple, but contradicts it by asserting, that the Merchants of the Staple had no Arms granted them till the Reign of Hen. VI. It is more probable that the Woolfacks were Devices of Chaucer (in frequent use at that time) alluding to the Office he held relating to the Customs of Wool, Woolfells, &c. The King, in the Forty ninth year of his Reign, and the Forty seventh of Chaucer's age, granted to him the Lands and Body of Sir Edmond Staplegate, Son of Sir Edmond Staplegate in the County of Kent, in Ward, who afterwards paid him One hundred and four Pounds for the same^y: And the year following he granted to him, by the Title of dilectus Armiger noster, the sum of Seventy one Pounds four Shillings and six pence, arising from a certain quantity of Wool therein mentioned, which was forfeited by one John Kent of London, for Non-payment of Customs^z. By these means, and the repeated favours heaped upon him, he grew exceeding rich, having (as Speght^a says) at one time, almost a Thousand Pounds per Annum; a very large Estate for those times, and scarce credible to have been acquired by a person in his station: But that he grew wealthy in the Employments he enjoyed, he himself confesses; I had comfort (says he) to be in that plight that both profit were to me and my friends^b: He also confesses, that in dignity of office he made gathering of thilk godes, and had a faire parcel for the tyme, in forthering of his sustenaunce, richesse sufficiently to weive nede, dignity to be reverenced in worship, power to kepe fro his enemies; so that he seemed to shine in glory of renome, as manhode asketh in men^c. These and the like passages in the Testament of Love are proofs of the favour of that Prince to him, and of the advantages which attended it.

But as he was thus advanced to higher places of Trust, so he became more entangled in the Affairs of State, the consequence of which proved of the utmost prejudice to him. The Duke of Lancaster having been the chief Instrument of raising him to Dignity, expected the fruits of those Favours in a ready compliance with him in all his Designs. That Prince was certainly one of the proudest men of his time; nor could he patiently bear the name of a Subject, even to his Father. Nothing but Absolute Power, and the Title of King could satisfy his Ambition; and therefore took up with a Foreign Title, and the ruins of a scatter'd Family, marrying Constance, Daughter of Peter the Cruel, King of Castile and Leon, which Title he assumed. But this was not sufficient, for upon the Death of his elder Brother Edward the Black Prince, he fixed a longing eye upon the English Crown, and seemed to stretch out an impatient hand to reach it. This was plainly intimated by his Device of an Eagle endeavouring with his Bill to undo a Foot-lock.

In this view he sought by all means possible to secure his Interest against the Decease of the old King; and being sensible that the chief obstacles in his way were the Clergy (who would be most strenuous in opposing an irregular Succession) he omitted nothing that might lessen their power and esteem with the People. For this purpose a fair opportunity now offered by Wickliffe's first appearing at Oxford; who being a Man of singular Learning and Esteem, not only in that University, but also at Court (having been employed as Ambassador by the King) found no small number of Followers. The Common People, always fond of Novelty, readily followed him, being pleased with a new Scheme which discharged them from the heavy Impositions of the Clergy of those times. The University of Oxford it self favoured him for this reason: The Fryers of Osney and S. Frideswide enticed most of the young Students of that University to enter into Orders, insomuch that Parents were fearful of sending their Sons to study, whereby the number of Students in that University diminished; which being complained of in Parliament, there was an Act made that none should be admitted into Orders under the age of eighteen years. The Nobility and Courtiers supported him, out of an inveterate hatred to the Clergy, who had all the Places of Trust and Honour ^d in their Possession. Most of those about the King countenanced Wickliffe in a particular manner, as the Lord Latimer, Sir Richard Sturry, Sir Lewis Clifford, &c. And Capgrave asserts that the King himself was a Favourer of his Opinions.

And now the Parliament intermeddling with the Affairs of the Church, Pope Gregory IX. thought it high time to put a stop to those Proceedings, and therefore issued out a Bull directed to the Archbishop of Canterbury, and the Bishop of London, for apprehending Wickliffe; whereupon the Bishop convened a Synod at St. Paul's, where, upon citation Wickliffe appeared, and with him his Patron the Duke of Lancaster, and Piercy Lord Marshal. A Quarrel happening between the Duke of Lancaster and the Bishop of London about Wickliffe's sitting down, the Duke told the Bishop he would pull down his pride, and that of all the Prelacy in England, with other opprobrious words; upon which the Londoners rose, and plunder'd his Palace of the Savoy, and reversed his Arms, the Duke himself hardly escaping their fury.

Our Chaucer had no small hand in furthering these Proceedings, both by his publick Interest, and his Writings; tho' I cannot go so far as to suppose he scurrilously reviled the Established Religion of those times, and therefore cannot think that either the Plowman's Tale or Jack Upland were written by him, as shall be further discussed in the Account of his Works: But that he was a Favourer of the Lollards (as were likewise most of his friends, and particularly Occleve) is evident from several places in his Writings, where he bitterly inveighs against the Priests and Fryers: Not that he disliked all of that Order; for he mentions Fryer John Some and Fryer Nicholas Lenne, or Lynne, with respect, calling them Reverent Clerkes^e; and expresses his regard for the secular Clergy who lived up to their Profession, in his Description of the Parson. Nor was he disesteemed by the Clergy of those times; Lidgate, who was a Monk of St. Edmondsbury, and several others entertaining a great reverence for him, and speaking of him with the utmost respect: Nor was he less esteemed by Gower, tho' a violent Bigot to the Church of Rome, and a perpetual exclaimer against Wickliffe and his Followers.

The King perceiving the aims of the Duke of Lancaster, presently put a check to his hopes by declaring Richard of Bourdeaux, Son of Edward the Black Prince, Heir to the Crown, which was no small mortification to the Duke; and from that time he was never easy, nor contented in any station, nor ever without uneasinesses from the jealousies and suspicions of the Prince upon the Throne, in which his friends bore a share.

In the last year of the King's Reign, the French (notwithstanding a Truce which had been made with them) got out to Sea and disturbed the Coast, whereupon the King endeavoured to prolong the Truce; in order to which he sent Chaucer and other Commissioners to treat with those appointed by the French King, before the Pope's Legates; but nothing being concluded, the Legates proposed a Match between the Lady Mary, Daughter to the King of France, and Richard Prince of Wales. Whereupon the King sent Sir Guiscard Dangle^f Knight of the Garter and afterwards Earl of Huntington, Sir Richard Sturry a noted Wickliffe, and our Chaucer, Embassadors to Monstreuil; but this Embassy had no other effect, than the prolonging of the Truce with France till the first of May following^g. This is the last publick Embassy that we find Chaucer employed in, tho' he was afterwards in France, and several other Countries, as shall hereafter be observed. What other Posts he held during this Prince's Reign is uncertain, there being no further account (that I can discover) upon Record of his publick Stations: But doubtless he passed through many honourable Employments, as appears from several passages of the Testament of Love; and in that Picture of him in Glostershire (which hath been mentioned before) he hath a double Chain round his neck, and hanging to the middle of his breast, which seems to be a mark of distinction then used in regard of some publick Offices he bore.

Nor was he less concerned in the close intrigues of the Court-Party at that time. For the King being superannuated, all Affairs were managed by Sir Thomas Latimer, Sir Richard Sturry (both Chaucer's Friends) and the Lady Alice Pierce^h whom the King entirely loved, not as a Mistress (as some have maliciously asserted) but because she had been Lady of the Bed-Chamber to the Queen, and a great Favourite with her. This Lady managed every thing in a very indirect manner, influencing the Courts of Judicature, causing Sir Peter Delamare the Speaker of the Commons to be imprisoned, and for bribes persuading the King to pervert the course of Justice: In all which matters, Speed says the Duke of Lancaster was concerned; but it is not likely that Prince should appear publicly at the head of that Party, he himself having not long after no small hand in punishing several of the Actors in that Corruption. Chaucer was so nearly engaged in friendship with them, that there is reason to suspect he was not altogether unconcerned.

The old King being dead, Richard his Grandson succeeded him, being under the Governance of the Duke of Lancaster, who now endeavoured all he could to compose the Differences which had been long fomented; and being reconciled to the Londoners, he proceeded to prepare every thing for the most splendid Coronation that England had ever seen; insomuch that there are several Volumes in the Cotton Library written upon that affair: In one of which, there is a Petition of Chaucer to be admitted to serve as Chief Butler, in right of his Ward Sir Edmond Staplegate, for the Manor of Billington in Kent, which was held of the King by that service; but the Earl of Arundel put in another Petition, wherein he shews that Honour to have been formerly possessed by his Ancestors, and that Staplegate had never till now claimed it, and being a Minor was unqualified for it; which Petition was granted, reserving to Staplegate the right of making his Claim afterwards.

Chaucer was in some degree of favour at the beginning of this King's Reign. In the first year of it, by Letters Patents under the Great Seal bearing date the Twenty third day of March, the King confirmed to him, by the Title of Dilectus Armiger noster, the Grant made by the late King of Twenty Marks per Annum; and by other Letters Patents, bearing date the Eighteenth day of April in the same year, he confirmed the other Grant of the late King for a Pycher of Wine to be delivered him daily in the Port of London.

King Rich. II. in the second year of his Reign took Chaucer and his Lands into his Protection, which Mr. *Speght*ⁱ believes was occasioned by some trouble into which he was fallen, by siding with the common people. But he doth not seem to have been involved in that trouble till some time after, and therefore it is more likely this Protection was to secure him from his Creditors; as was likewise another Protection granted by the same Prince. It doth not appear by what means he was reduced to such low Circumstances, unless it was by the loss of his interest at Court, and of Advantages he enjoyed under his Master and Patron the late King. The Writer of his Life supposes he expended most of his wealth in Foreign Embassies, but it should rather seem that they were the means whereby he acquired it, he being generally well rewarded, as is before observed.

This King in the fourth year of his Reign confirmed the Grants made to Chaucer and Philippa his Wife of the several Annuities granted to them^k. And now this Lady being mentioned, for whose name we have this authentick Record, it will not be improper to cast an eye upon the Domestick affairs of our Poet. By her (for we find no other Wife mentioned) he had two Sons, Thomas^l, and Lewis. Thomas was about this time married to one of the greatest Fortunes in England, Maud, Daughter and Heir of Sir John Burghershe, Brother to Sir Bartholomew Burghershe Knight of the Garter, and Dr. Henry Burghershe Bishop of Lincoln, Chancellor and Treasurer of England. Mr. Speght says, this Lady was given him in marriage by King Edw. III. at his Father's request, in return for his great services done in his Embassies in France; but it is very much to be doubted whether at the Death of that Prince, Thomas Chaucer was of age to be disposed of in marriage.

His second Son Lewis was born in the year 1381. for he was ten years old^m when his Father wrote the Treatise of the Astrolabe, which was in 1391ⁿ. He was then a Student in Merton College in Oxford, and Pupil to the famous Nicholas Strode; but we have no farther account of him. It has been observed, that in the latter part of the late King's Reign, the Duke of Lancaster (for several reasons) encouraged the Opinions of Wickliffe, as did likewise Chaucer, the consequence of which began now to appear; for every ignorant fellow, who could neither read nor write, set up for a Teacher and Instructor in new Opinions, and particularly one Smith, who was followed by the Populace, and carried about by Great Men, as Sir Lodowick Clifford, Sir Thomas Latimer, Sir John Trussel, Sir Richard Sturry and others, who appeared armed where he preached; and therefore, says Knighton, the modestest Writer of that time, What they could not convince by Reason they terrified into Opinion.

The common people thus encouraged to shake off the yoke of the Clergy, began to feel that of the Government too heavy; and being now ripe for Insurrection (upon laying on some new Taxes) rose under Straw, Tyler, and Littester; which had like to have entirely overturned the Constitution. Their spite was chiefly directed against the Clergy, as appears by their beheading the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Prior of St. John's by Smithfield, who was Lord Treasurer, and by their burning that stately Priory, and plundering the Abbies of St. Albans, Bury and several others. As soon as this Rebellion was somewhat abated, the Parliament began to enquire into the cause of it; nor were there wanting Enemies of Wickliffe, who charged him and his Followers with being the Encouragers of it: But that is unlikely to be true; for had the Rebels been Wickliffe's friends, they would never have burnt the Savoy, the Palace of his Patron the Duke of Lancaster. However, some of his Followers gave too much cause for such a surmise; as Dr. Hereford, who asserted that Archbishop Sudbury deserved that Death he found; and the King the year following impowered the Bishops to arrest Wickliffe, and forbade his Subjects to encourage any of that Perswasion. Wickliffe appeared, and seemed partly to satisfy the Bishops with his Opinion.

The Duke of Lancaster finding his hopes of greatness check'd and his Life in perpetual danger from the King, began to grow more cautious of intermeddling in these matters; and therefore when Dr. Hereford and Dr. Rapynodon came to him, he in a passion told them their Doctrine was a Doctrine of Devils, and that he had hitherto been imposed upon in the representations made to him of Wickliffe's Doctrine, and bad them go and submit themselves to the Archbishop.

Chaucer how much soever he had espoused those Opinions, thought it prudence to conceal them more than he had done, seeing the inconveniences and danger they had occasioned; so that after the Prosecution by Rich. II. and the Duke of Lancaster's changing his mind, he thought it proper to be more circumspect. Nor doth it appear that at any time he ran all the lengths of that Opinion. His resentments were chiefly against the personal Vices of the Clergy, not their Doctrines; for the Pilgrimage to Canterbury is spoken of with reverence; and he calls Becket the holy blisful Martyr^o: And the Parion, tho' he would not ren to St. Powles^p to procure Livings, makes one in the Expedition to Canterbury. This I say, not as if that Journey was real; but Chaucer would never have been guilty of so great an impropriety as to make Persons act contrary to their Opinions. Nor did even the Leaders of that Party scruple the Ceremonies then used: They opposed them in opinion, but seldom differed from them in practice. Even Wickliffe himself always conformed, and held his Living of Lutterworth without interruption, and died in it of a Fit of the Palsy, which seized him while he was saying Mass. But Chaucer differed much from them even in Opinion; for in his Testament of Love^q, he confesses the Real Presence^r; which passage, because it exposes the neglect of Religion in his time, and shews his regard for Divine Worship, shall be here set down at large. *Lo! it accordeth, for soche there ben that voluntarie lustes haunten in courte with ribaudrie, that til midnight and more wol playe and wake, but in the church at matins he is behinde, for evil disposicion of his stomake. — His aulter is broke, and lowe lithe in pointe to gone to the yerthe, but his horse must ben esy and hie, to bere him over grete waters. His chalice pore, but he hath riche cuppes. No towaile but a sbete, there God shall ben handelid. And on his mete-bord ther shall been bordeclothes and towelles many paire. At masse serveth but a clergion: five Squiers in hall. Pore chauncell, open holes in every side: Beddes of silk, with tapites going al about his chambre. Pore masse-boke and leude chapelaine, and broken surplice with many an hole: gode houndes, and manye, to hunte after harte and hare, to fede in ther festes. In the House of Fame^s we find him again going on Pilgrimage. We may gather his opinion of the Invocation of Saints, from his Priere de nostre Dame, his Ballad in commendation of our Lady, and several other Pieces. But however Chaucer might despise some extravagancies of the Church of Rome, yet that he died a Member of it, seems plain by his Retraction^t.*

The King, taking the Government upon himself, and giving way to the advice of a set of young profligate Courtiers, began to hate and despise most of the late King's friends; and particularly he endeavoured by all possible means to take off the Duke of Lancaster, whose Interest was now at a very low ebb. In order to which, one Latimer, an Irish Fryer, Bachelor of Divinity, accused him of an attempt to kill the King. Whether there was truth in the accusation, or whether it proceeded from the malice and revenge of that Order, is doubtful; but the Fryer was privately murdered, before he could make out the charge, by the Lord John Holland and others, to whose custody he was committed; and that in a shameful and barbarous manner. This Lord John Holland, called Lord of Huntington, and Duke of Exeter, was half brother to the King, and had married Elizabeth, Daughter of the Duke of Lancaster. He was a great Patron of Chaucer, and was much respected by him.

The Duke having escaped that storm, was not yet secure; for if Evidence failed, the King had an entire confidence in the Compliance of the Lord Chief Justice Tresilian, before whom it was attempted to have him tried. But the Duke stood upon his guard at his Castle of Pontefract, till by the King's Mother matters were brought to some temperament. With the Duke's Interest, that of Chaucer's entirely sunk: His Patron being now incapable of serving or supporting him, he found the want of a hand able to lead him safely through the difficulties of Publick Stations.

The Duke passing over Sea, his Friends felt all the malice of the opposite Party, which had long waited for revenge, and in order to it, sought all possible means of oppressing them. This put the others upon calling in a number of the Populace to their assistance, which is the general refuge of an oppressed Party. By these means several popular Commotions ensued, and particularly that in the City of London. As in this affair our Poet was no unartful Prompter behind the Curtain, so he felt the consequences of it in his downfall and ruin. One John of Northampton, a Creature of the Duke of Lancaster, was at the head of those Disturbances, who having been Lord Mayor the year before, made strong interest to be again chosen^u, and therefore opposed the following Election, securing to his party most of the Citizens, and crying out upon the extravagant mismanagement of the City, suggesting that there was no possible way of securing them from ruin but by re electing him. This occasioned Insurrections; and our Poet being then Comptroller of the Customs in that Port, and joined in Party with Northampton, as being both in the Duke's Interest, encouraged them: But this Disorder did not continue long; for upon Sir Robert Knolles's beheading one of the Rioters it was quell'd, and Northampton taken into Custody. Strict search was made for Chaucer, but he made his escape into Hainault, and afterwards into France, and finding the King resolved to get him if possible into his hands, (as the fittest person to discover the Abettors of those Commotions) he fled thence into Zealand, with this intent chiefly (as he says) their privitie to concele^v.

Several of the Accomplices in this affair were with him, whom he supported^x in their Exile, while the chief Ringleaders (except Northampton, who was condemned at Reading, upon the evidence of his Clerk) had here at London made their peace, by acknowledging their Crime, and making Submission, and had now forgot the Honour and Integrity of Chaucer, who suffered Exile to secure their Secrets. Nay, to such a base height of Ingratitude were they arrived, that they wished his death, and endeavoured it, by keeping all supplies^y of Money from him: And while he expended his Fortune in removing from place to place, and in assisting his Fellow-exiles, he was so far from receiving any assistance at home, that his Apartments were let, and the Money received for Rent was never accounted for to him; nor could he recover any from those who owed it him, they being fully perswaded it was impossible for him ever to return into England. The Government still pursuing their Resentment against him and his friends, they were constrained to leave Zealand; and Chaucer having no possible means left of struggling longer with the difficulties of Exile and Poverty, and finding no security wherever he fled, chusing to submit his Life to the Laws of his Country, rather than lose it through hunger and want in foreign parts, returned into England.

He had not been long here before he was arrested^z by order from the King, and imprisoned (as it is probable) in the Tower of London. And now the Government thought they had it in their power to make a full Discovery of the late Rebellion, and sending for him, told him that in order to obtain Mercy of the King, his only way was to confess the secrets of his Treason, and discover the Confederates in it; desiring him to propose in what manner those differences might be composed^a. But he a long while evaded all the arts used to make him confess, and was very unwilling to bring the malice of so powerful a Party upon him by betraying their secrets, which he says he conceal'd longer^b than he ought; but the King and his Princes (to use his words) having obliged him upon Oath to declare what he knew, and with huge words and grete^c urged him to confess, and watching his words strictly and narrowly to catch him, if they could, varying in his Confession, he very freely disclosed all he knew, and impeached the Persons concerned with him; and not only so, but (according to the custom of Trials at that time) offered to prove the truth of his Confession by Combat^d.

^u The Records are silent as to the reason of Chaucer's falling under the displeasure of the Government; but this seems to be the occasion; for in his Testament of Love, he every where alludes to the Commotions of the City; and says, that he was drawn to be assentaunt, and in his mightes helping to certain conjurations, and other grete matters of rulyng of citizins, p. 485, b. and seems to have an eye particularly to the design of this man, by these words; But than thilke Governour sayninge toforne his undoinge for misrule in his time, shope to have letted thilke election, and have made anewe himsele to have been chosen, and undir that moky lere have arered p. 486, b. What the consequence of this Discovery was with respect to his Accomplices doth not appear. It brought upon him the ill will of most people, who (as he says) called him false, lyer, base, ingratefull, &c. But the King regarding him as a person beloved by his Grandfather, and a faithful servant to himself^c, pardoned him.

This miserable condition, so different from his former prosperity, as it is a proof of the uncertainty of human Happiness, so it gave occasion to his writing that excellent Treatise called The Testament of Love: In the beginning of which he thus reflects upon his former glory and his present misery; Alas! Fortune, alas! I that some tyme in delicious boures was wont to enjoy blisfull stoundes, am now dryve by unhappy hevyness to bewaile my sondrie yvils in tene. Mirth is chaunged into tene, &c. Thus witleffe, thoughtfull, fightlesse lokinge, I endure my penaunce in this derke prisoun, caityfied fro frendshippe, and acquaintaunce, and forsaken of all that any worde dare speke. And a little further; O! where art thou nowe frendship, that some tyme with laughande chere madest bothe face and countenaunce to me wardes? And in another place^f; How am I now cast out of all sweteness of blisse, and mischevously stongen by passed joye! Sorrowfully must I bewaile and live as a wretch. Every of tho joyes is turned into his contrary: for riches now I have povertie, for dignitie now am I enprisoned, instede of power, wretchednesse I suffre, and for glory of renome I am now dispised, and fouliche hated; thus hath farne fortune, that sedainly am I overthrowen, and out of all welth dispoiled, &c. Nor did he for some time recover the shock this gave him, having lost his best friends at Court for meddling in those affairs, and brought the clamours and malice of the Commons upon him by betraying their Designs: And his continual expences in encouraging and maintaining those Parties having exhausted most of his substance, he was reduced to the lowest degree of poverty, inso-much that when he was restored to his liberty, he was so incumbered with debts, that he durst not appear for fear of arrests. And to compleat his misery, he not only lost his interest with the King, by the disgrace of his Patron the Duke of Lancaster, but also his influence on the Duke by the means of Katherine Swynford his Wife's Sister was now much lessened. For the Duke, being dejected at the troubles in which he was involved, began to reflect on his vicious course of life, and particularly his keeping that Lady as his Concubine (whom, says Knighton^e, he had kept long in his house, neither fearing God, nor blushing at Man) and therefore he now resolved to put her out of his house, and made a Vow to that purpose. Our Poet thus reduced, knew not which way to turn himself for support; he was therefore constrained to dispose of the Pensions granted him by the late King, by a surrender in Chancery, to the use of one John Scalby, as appears by the King's Grant of the same^h.

Thus dispossessed of places, power and wealth, through a misapplication of them and an unguarded conduct, he retired to Woodstock; and weary of a long series of hurry, noise, danger and confusion, he shifted it for quiet and the calm pleasures of a studious safety, which produced his excellent Treatise of the Astrolabe, which is calculated for the Latitude of Woodstock, being a small matter different (as he says) from that of *Oxford*ⁱ. It appears from that piece, that the severe treatment which Chaucer received from the Government did not make him a firm Malecontent; for he strictly enjoins his Son to pray for the King^k.

It may not be improper to observe, that during Chaucer's troubles, in the Tenth year of Rich. II. there was a dispute in a Case of Chivalry depending between Sir Richard Grosvenour and Sir Richard le Scrope, concerning their Arms; which the King directed John Staple and Walter Leycester Heralds, to examine. They accordingly met at the Preaching Fryers in London, on Monday the last day of May, where appeared as Witnesses most of the chief Nobility in England, and other persons of distinction; among whom was our Chaucer, who gave in evidence "That he saw Scrope armed at Rottes in France, Azure with a bend d'or,

“ and that Coat was by publick voice and fame taken for Scrope's Coat ¹. By this it should seem that Chaucer was some time in the Wars in France, the Scene of War being at one time near that place; to which we may add the Character given him, that he was famous in arms as well as Letters ^m.

The Duke of Lancaster surmounting his troubles, his Party gathered new life; particularly the Sentence against Northampton was repealed, and he himself cleared by a Certificate under the hands of the Mayor and Aldermen of London. Nor were the Dukes Resolutions of long continuance in regard to Katherine Swynford, for soon after his Vow before mentioned, he received her into more favour than ever, and granted her (by the Title of most dear and well-beloved) the Wardship of Bertran de Sanby's Heir, for being Guardianess to his Two Daughters Philippa and Elizabeth; and by the same appellation, and upon the same consideration, he granted her likewise an Annuity of Two hundred Marks per Annum, payable out of his Honour of Tickhill. These Pensions were exceeding large at that time, and it may seem profuse in the Duke to bestow so many favours upon this Lady; but it is to be considered that they were not only Rewards for her being Mistress to his Daughters, but were intended for the maintainance of five Children he had by her, who were born at Belfort (or Beaufort) Castle in Anjou, which came to the house of Lancaster by Blanch of Artois Queen of Navarre. She was delivered there probably for privacy, for she lived at Lincoln after the Death of Queen Philippa, in whose Life-time she was in the house with the Duke, but not publicly known to be his Mistress, much less that he had Children by her; therefore Knigh-ton says, there was only a strong suspicion of their intimacy. But the Duke, about the Twentieth year of this King, resolved to make amends at once for his former course of life, and when she had now no charms left to recommend her, married her at Lincoln; a Match which gave great offence to the Dutcheß of Glocester, the Countess of Derby and Arundel, and other Ladies of the Blood Royal, because hereby she took place of them. She was however much esteemed by King Richard, who appointed her to receive his Queen Anne, and attend her at her landing in England. Nor did the Duke think it sufficient to repair her Honour only, but likewise that of her Children: Accordingly the next year he procured them to be legitimated in Parliament ^o. The Children the Duke had by this Lady were, John Beaufort Earl of Somerset, Henry Beaufort Cardinal of St. Eusebius, first Bishop of Lincoln and afterwards of Winchester, and several times Chancellor of England, Thomas Beaufort Duke of Exeter and Earl of Derbet, and Joan Countess of Westmorland: So that by this Marriage Thomas Chaucer became allied to most of the Nobility, and to several of the Kings of England.

And now the Sun began to shine upon Chaucer with an Evening ray after a stormy Afternoon; for at the Sixty fourth or Sixty fifth year of his age, the King granted to him, by the Title of dilectus Armiger noster, an Annuity of Twenty Marks per Annum during Life, as a Compensation for the former Pension granted to him by Edw. III. which by his ill conduct he was obliged to part with. But that (how sufficient soever it might be for a present support) could not discharge the many Debts in which Chaucer was engaged; and the King willing to skreen him till he should recover himself, granted him his Protection^p dated at Westminster the fourth day of May in the Twenty first year of his Reign; setting forth that the King had occasion to employ him in several affairs of moment. And the year following he granted to him by the Title of Armiger noster, by Letters Patents dated at Westminster the thirteenth day of October, in compensation of the Pycher of Wine daily, one Pipe of Wine annually in the Port of London, to be delivered to him by his Chief Butler^q; which Office was that year granted to his Son Thomas, who now growing in great favour, it will not be improper in this place to relate what we have concerning him.

It was before observed that Thomas Chaucer, by his marriage with Maud Daughter of Sir John Burgbergh, attained to great wealth. The Office of Chief Butler to the King, granted to him this year, was afterwards given him for Life by Letters Patents from King Henry IV. and confirmed by Henry VI. In the second year of Henry IV. we find him Speaker of the House of Commons, Sheriff of Oxfordshire and of Berkshire, and Constable of Wallingford Castle and of Knaresborough Castle during Life. In the fourth year of the same Reign, the King directed an Order to him as Chief Butler to deliver 100 Tuns of Wine to the Duke of Burgundy. In the sixth year of the same Prince, he was sent Embassador into France; and the year following he went over Sea, joined in Commission with the King's Brother and G. Chaucer's Nephew, Henry Beaufort Bishop of Winchester. In the ninth year of the same Reign, on Tuesday the Twenty fifth of October, the Commons presented him their Speaker; as they did likewise in the eleventh year, on Wednesday the Twenty eighth of January. In the twelfth year of that Reign, Queen Jane granted to him for his good service, the Manor of Woodstock, Hannebrough, Wotton and Stuntlesfield during Life; and in the thirteenth year, on the fifth of November, he was again presented Speaker, as he was in the second of Henry V. on Wednesday the second day of Parliament. And in the same year he was sent by the King, in joint Commission with Hugh Mortimer, to treat of a Marriage with Katherine Daughter to the Duke of Burgundy. He was likewise Embassador in the fifth and sixth years of the same Reign with Walter Hungerford, Steward of the Household, in the same affair: And again, in the sixth year of the same Reign he was Embassador for Peace with France; and he passed through several other publick Stations, as appears by Records.

Mr. Stebbing intimates that he was Knighted, and calls him Sir Thomas Chaucer, but no such Title is given him in any Record: And if he received that Honour at the latter part of his Life, it would have been applyed to him after his death, which no where appears; but on the contrary, in an Entry of Lands held in Capite by his Daughter; and in the Epitaph on his Tomb he is only written Armiger.

The chief place of his Residence was at Ewelme in Oxfordshire, where he dyed in the year 1434, and lies buried in that Parish Church, under a Black Marble Tomb, in a fair Chapel the South side of the Quire, with the Effigies of him and his Wife upon the Tomb in brass plates, and round the verge of the Stone is this Inscription; Hic jacet Thomas Chaucer Armiger, quondam Dominus istius villæ & patronus istius ecclesiæ, qui obiit 18. die Mensis Novembris Anno D. 1434. & Matildis uxor ejus, quæ obiit 28. die Mensis Aprilis Anno D. 1436.

By his Wife Maud, or Matilda, who survived him two years, he had one Daughter named Alice, who was thrice married; first to Sir John Philips Knight, and afterwards to Thomas Montacute Earl of Salisbury, who dying left her very rich: Her third Husband was the famous William de la Pole, Earl and afterwards Duke of Suffolk, who was first secretly married to the Countess of Hainault, by whom he had one Daughter; but procuring a Divorce from her he married this Alice, by whom he had one Son, John Duke of Suffolk. Duke William lived chiefly at Dunnington and Ewelme; at the first of which Stow says he built an Hospital, but he seems to mistake it for that founded by Adderbury, as before-mentioned, for Dugdale takes no notice of any other; but at Ewelme he founded one called God's House. He was an instance of the danger of a Prince's Favour, and the envy that attends it: For influencing the Notions and the Will of his Master Henry VI. too much, and abusing the Power he had over that easy Prince, he enraged the Commons to that degree, that nothing less than his Banishment could appease them; which being agreed to, the Torkists fearful of his return, seized him in his passage in Dover Road, and cut off his head upon the side of a Cock-boat; and his Body was buried at the Charterhouse at Hull. The Dutchess survived him several years, and after an honourable Life dyed at Ewelme in the year 1475^e.

Their Son John had issue (according to Leland *) John Earl of Lincoln, Edmond, after Duke of Suffolk, Richard, William, and who was a Scholar in Gurvil-Hall in Cambridge. Edmond de la Pole, the last of that name Duke of Suffolk, for being in Treason against Henry VII. (for which he had been once pardoned) forfeited his Life to the Crown, and was beheaded in the seventh year of that King's Reign; whereby the Estates which Chaucer's Family was possessed of came to the Crown; and particularly the Hospital of Ewelme, which was by King James the First annexed to the Physick Professor of Oxford, who is always Master thereof.

But to return to our Chaucer: The King, about the Twenty second year of his Reign, confirmed again to him the Grant for the Pipe of Wine annually; and by means of these Grants and the Influence he recovered by the Duke of Lancaster's Marriage, he again grew to a considerable share of wealth. But being now near Seventy years of age, and tired with a tedious view of hurried greatness, he thought it high time to withdraw from the Court Stage, where he had acted so considerable a part and with such various success, to consider and at distant leisure reflect upon what he had been doing. In order to which, he retired to Dunnington Castle near Newbury, where he spent the two or three last years of his Life; which being

being the last place of his Retirement, some account of it may not be unacceptable. It was in Mr. Camden's time (when in it's Glory) "a small but neat Castle, situate upon the brow of a rising Hill, having an agreeable prospect; very light with Windows on all sides, said to be built by Sir Richard Adderbury Knight; who likewise founded an Hospital beneath it, called God's House: it was afterwards the Seat of Chaucer, then of the De la Pole's, and in our Father's memory the dwelling of Charles Brandon, Duke of Suffolk". At the beginning of the Rebellion in the Reign of King Charles the First, it was a Garrison for the King under the valiant Sir John Boys, which commanded the Western Road and Town of Newbury, and was therefore of considerable advantage to the Royal Party, as a safe Retreat; and the Cannons playing from it, much annoyed the Parliament Forces. This place his Majesty honoured by lying one night in it; but after a rough assault, and as bold a resistance (during which several of the Towers were battered down) it was surrendered upon honourable conditions. This was the ancient state, and the occasion of the late ruin of that pleasant Structure. At present there is nothing to be seen of it, but what raises horror and concern; a battered Gateway with two Towers, and some small part of the shattered Walls being all that remains thereof. The ground about it and the Ruins of it are choaked with Brambles, and overrun with Ivy; but lest even the place of it's situation should in a few years more be forgot, I shall as plainly as I can describe it. It lies half a mile to the right of Spinham sand (the ancient Spina of Antoninus) and a mile beyond Newbury, on the same side; as you go from London, you pass over the River Kennet to the Village of Dunnington, from which there is a pretty steep but pleasant Ascent through a Lane to a Hill under the Castle, where stands a Seat (as I remember) of the Countess of Sandwich. From hence rises the Castle-Hill very steep, and not unlike that whereon the Observatory stands at Greenwich; and from this Hill there is a very fine Prospect of several Counties. On the back of the Castle are level Grounds, Woodlands and Enclosures. It stands in a pleasant Park, and is at present the Estate of Robert Packer Esq; in right of his Wife, one of the Daughters and Coheirs of Sir Humphrey Winchcombe of Bucklebury. In this Park stood an Oak called Chaucer's Oak, under which he is said to have written several of his Poems. Mr. Evelin gives a particular account of this Tree, and says there were three of them planted by Chaucer; the King's Oak, the Queen's Oak, and Chaucer's Oak. In this pleasant Retirement Chaucer spent the few last years of his Life, living in honour, and esteemed by all, famous for his Learning, not only in England, but in foreign Countries.

He was universally beloved, and even Party-Zeal could not raise him Enemies. Of Friendships he selected the best, being familiar with, and received by all the Men of Learning at that time. Of these Gower was the chief, who was of an honourable family, and by some counted a Knight: He studied the Laws, and seems by a Collar of SS. upon the Statue on his Tomb, to have been in some considerable Station at that time. He wrote several Pieces, in which he makes honourable mention of our Poet, and addresses him as a Judge of his Works. He was a Man of singular Learning, and great Piety; but much given to change with the turns of State: He lived to a great age, and survived Chaucer two years, and was * stone blind before his death. He lies buried in St. Mary Overies Church in Southwark †.

With Gower he joins another of his friends in the Inscription of Troilus and Cresseide, whom he calls the Philosophical Strode; whose Christian name, according to Leland and Bale, was Ralph; but according to others, Nicholas. He was a celebrated Philosopher at that time of Merton College, and Tutor to Chaucer's Son Lewis, as appears by a Note at the end of a MS. Treatise of the Astrolabe, amongst the Books of the late Bishop of Ely *. Bale says, he wrote several pieces of Poetry, and particularly four Books of Elegiacs. He was a great Follower of Wickliffe.

There can be no doubt of Chaucer's intimacy with Wickliffe; being probably of the same College with him, a Follower of his Opinions, and both Retainers to the Duke of Lancaster.

Thomas Occleve, or Hocklife, was a particular favourite of our Poet, and is said to be his Scholar; but it may be doubted whether strictly speaking he was his Pupil: It is more probable that Chaucer might be his Master (as Lidgate and others call him theirs) because Occleve took his Works for his pattern in writing, or submitted his Writings to his correction; and perhaps he might receive some particular Instructions ^a from him, and upon that account might shew him such respect as Mr. Pope does to the Memory of the late Mr. Walsh ^b. This Gentleman (who next Chaucer was one of the politest Wits in England) was of the Office of the Privy Seal. He wrote a Book called Cupid's Letter, printed with Chaucer's Works, which is a curious Defence of, and at the same time an artful Satyr upon Women: This piece is by some ascribed to Chaucer, but by mistake; it being written in the year 1402 (as appears by the Date at the end of it) which was two years after Chaucer's Death. He was (as Bale says) a strict Follower of the Opinions of Wickliffe, and Berengarius, which he had imbibed at Merton College, of which he was some time Student. To this Person we are particularly obliged for Chaucer's Picture, which he caused to be drawn in his Book De regimine Principis dedicated to King Henry V.

It is highly probable that Lidgate was intimately acquainted with our Poet, he being about Thirty years of age at Chaucer's Death. He is a close Imitator of our Poet in his Works, and frequently uses his very Expressions, copying whole lines together in some places. In his Story of the Siege of Thebes (which Pitts says was written by Chaucer, and turned into English Verse by Lidgate) he shoves himself into the Company of Chaucer and his Pilgrims, laying the Scene at Canterbury, where that Story is told. He was no small Refiner of our Language; and his Pieces seem much more modern, than several of those of his Contemporaries. He had by Travel acquired all parts of Learning, and lived and died a Monk of Bury ^c. We have as much reason to believe that Scogan had a share in Chaucer's friendship, being (as Leland says) an admirer and imitator of him.

Chaucer had in the former part of his Life been acquainted with Francis Petrarch, the famous Italian Poet and Refiner of that Language. This acquaintance is supposed to have commenced at Milan in 1368. the Forty third year of King Edward III. and about the Fortieth of Chaucer's age, when Lionel Duke of Clarence married with Violante, or Iolantis, Daughter of Galeazzo Prince of Milan, and Sister of John Galeazzo first Duke of Milan. The Duke of Clarence went over attended with the chief Persons of the Court, and at Milan he gave them one of the most splendid Entertainments we meet with in History. Petrarch was present ^d at this Marriage; and some write that Chaucer was there ^e: But whether this was the place or time of their interview, I cannot determine; there can be no doubt but they were known to each other; and Chaucer in the Prologue to the Clerk of Oxenford's Tale seems to hint at himself in that Character (as he does very often on the like occasions) where the Clerk says, he learned the Story of Grifild at Padua from Petrarch. Mr. Dryden in the Preface to his Tales says it was the Invention of Petrarch, by him sent to Boccace, from whom it came to Chaucer; but Petrarch only translated it from Boccace into Latin, and dedicated it to him. Nor is there any reason to doubt of our Poet's acquaintance, or at least friendship, with Boccace (from whom he borrowed many things) who at that time bestowed a great deal of pains in refining the Italian Tongue, as Chaucer did the English, and Alan Chartier the French.

Chaucer had not long enjoyed this Retirement before he lost his Patron and Brother, the Duke of Lancaster, who dyed in the year 1399. and was buried at St. Paul's in London, where his Tomb stood until the late Fire; and upon it an Inscription, wherein his last Marriage was mentioned ^f. His Wife survived him four years, and dying at Lincoln, was there buried ^g.

Not long after the Death of this Prince that Revolution happened in England wherein Rich. II. was deposed, and Henry IV. assumed the Crown. Whether Chaucer was concerned in this doth not appear; but doubtless as he was a Follower of the Fortunes of the House of Lancaster, it could not be disagreeable to him to see the Son of his old Patron and Brother, the late Duke of Lancaster, obtain that Crown which his Father reached at in vain. But the respect he retained for his former Master Richard, and Gratitude for the Favours he had received from him, kept him from trampling upon his Memory, and basely flattering the new King; as most of his Contemporaries did, and particular Gower, who, notwithstanding the obligations he had to Rich. II. ^h yet when old, blind, and past any hopes of honour or advan-

rage, unless the view of keeping what he enjoyed, basely insulted the Memory of his murdered Master, and as ignominiously flattered his Murderer.

Tho' Chaucer nowhere mentions the name of Hen. IV. no doubt he was very well with that Prince, whose precarious Title wanted the assistance of the learned Men of those times to support it: And we find that in the first year of his Reign he confirmed to Chaucer the Grants of the Pipe of Wine and of the ¹ Annuity (which had been accidentally lost) by an Exemplification of the former Patents of Rich. II. Nor did he think this sufficient to shew the value he had for his Father's Friend and Brother; but in the same year he granted to him an Annuity of Forty Marks per Annum during Life.

Mr. Dryden says that Chaucer was employed abroad and favoured by Edward the Third, Richard the Second, and Henry the Fourth, and was Poet (as he supposed) to all Three of them ^k. But with submission to that great Man, I find no grounds to believe he was Poet Laureat to any of them; and there is this reason for the contrary opinion, that there is not one Court Poem in all his Works. The words Anglorum Vates ter maximus upon his Tomb imply no such thing; the like being said of other Poets, who never had the Title of Laureat. The same may be said of the Title given him by Lidgate of chiefe Poete of Brytayne; which perhaps might induce others to think he was Poet Laureat. But Mr. Selden could find no Poet honoured with that Title in England before the time of Edward the Fourth, to whom one John Kay dedicated The Siege of Rhodes in prose, by the Title of his humble Poet Laureat ^l. If any Poet bore that Title then, it is more likely to be Gower, though Dr. Fuller floutingly says, he was neither Laureated nor Hederated, but Rosated, alluding to what Pits says concerning him ^m; yet it hath the head bound with a Filler, in allusion to the ancient Custom: To which may be added what Gower says of the King's commanding him to write upon several Subjects, as is observed before. And Chaucer was so far from being employed by Henry IV. that he had scarce time to receive any marks of Favour from him, dying in the second year of his Reign; tho' Mr. Collier and others fix the time of his Death in 1400, which was the nineteenth year of Henry VI. If so, he could be but ten years old at the death of Edw. III. and therefore unfit to be employed by him, or to hold the Offices he enjoyed under him.

But how pleasing soever the change of Government might be to him at first, he afterwards found no small inconveniencies attending it. The Measures and Grants of the late King were annulled, the Acts of Parliament for a whole year (i. e. the Twenty first of his Reign) totally repealed; and Affairs were in so dangerous a posture, that no man thought himself secure, who had been concerned in the late Administration. Chaucer thought it high time to secure his Affairs, and get fresh Grants of his Pensions. In order to which, he left his Retirement and applied to Court; where tho' he gained a Confirmation of some Grants, as is before mentioned, yet the fatigue of attendance and his great age prevented him by Death from enjoying them: Not that he had any view of further honour, or desire of publick Employments; for Leland says he found age burthensome, and while he followed his Causes at London he fell sick, and with a truly Roman Courage, and at the same time with a calm and Christian resignation, ended his days in the Seventy second year of his age, and left the World as tho' he despised it, shewing a scorn of worldly affairs in the Song of Flie fro the prese, &c. ⁿ. which he wrote in his last hours ^o. He dyed the Twenty fifth of October in the year of our Lord 1400. in the second year of the Reign of Henry IV. and was buried in Westminster Abby, in the great South cross Isle. Some Writers have affirmed that he was first buried in the Cloysters ^p, and lay there till some years after; but this is a mistake, for Caxton in his Edition of Chaucer (which was long before the time of his removal, as they place it) says that he was buried in the Abby Church of Westminster before the Chapel of St. Bennet: And it is very probable he lay beneath a large Stone of grey Marble in the Pavement where the Monument of Mr. Dryden now stands, which is in the Front of that Chapel; upon the erecting of which, this Stone was taken up and sawed in pieces to make good the Pavement. This seems best to answer Caxton's description of the place. Speght and others say the old Verses written upon his Grave were these ^q;

ⁱ Rex, &c. salutem. Constat nobis per inspectionem Rotulorum Cancellaria Domini Ricardi nuper Regis Angliæ secundi post conquestum, quod idem nuper Literas suas patentes fieri fecit in hac verba. &c. But about the 1555^{*}. Mr. Nicholas Brigham a Gentleman of Oxford, who exercised his Muse much in Poetry, and took great delight in Chaucer's Works, and honoured his memory, at his own charge erected a handsome Monument for him not far from the said Chapel; for in the same place he could not then conveniently erect it, by reason of the Cancelli, which the late Duke of Buckingham obtained leave to remove to make room for Mr. Dryden's Tomb. Upon that Monument Mr. Brigham caused Chaucer's Picture to be painted, from that which was in Occleve's Book before mentioned, together with the following Inscription which still remains[†];

M. S.

About the Ledge of the Tomb were these Verses now quite worn out[‡];

Si rogitis quis eram, forsan te Fama docebit;
Quod si Fama negat, mundi quia gloria transit,
Hæc monumenta lege.

He was, as before observed, of a middle stature[§], the latter part of his Life inclinable to be fat and corpulent, as appears by the Host's bantering him in the Journey to Canterbury, and comparing shapes with him[¶]. His face was fleshy, his features just and regular, his complexion fair, and somewhat pale, his hair of a dusky yellow, short and thin; the hair of his beard in two forked tufts, of a wheat colour; his forehead broad and smooth; his eyes inclining usually to the ground, which is intimated by the Host's words[‡]; his whole face full of liveliness, a calm easy sweetness, and a studious venerable aspect. As in the Characters of his Pilgrims he so naturally described them, that the nicest pencil could not possibly give us so full an Idea of them as his words; so likewise he has given us as just a Picture of himself: And as Mr. Dryden observes, he saw all the Pilgrims in the Canterbury Tales, their Humours, their Features, and the very Dress as distinctly as if he had supped with them at the Tabard in Southwark[‡]; so one may from the Testament of Love conceive as perfect an Idea of Chaucer's behaviour and actions in conversation, as if one were sitting in the Prison with him, while he discoursed with Philosophy. The down-cast look, the strict attention, the labouring thought, the hand waving for silence, the manner of address in speaking, the smooth familiar way of arguing, the respectful way of starting his objections, and in short every expression in that dispute figures a lively Image of him in the mind of the Reader.

As to his Temper, he had a mixture of the gay, the modest, and the grave. The spright-

^{*} So says Weaver, Fun. Mon. p. 489. who adds that Brigham buried his Daughter Rachel near to Chaucer's Tomb the 21. of June 1557. But A. Wood says that Brigham removed Chaucer's Bones into the South cross Isle or Transept of St. Peter's Church in Westminster, in the year 1556.

[‡] So say Speght and Weaver. These Verses were probably written upon a Ledge of Brass, which may have been fixed upon the Marble Table, but is now taken away, and not upon the Stone it self, there being no footsteps of any writing upon the edge of it.

[§] In Greene's Vision, written by Robert Greene Master of Arts in Cambridge, there is a lively Description of Chaucer, who is introduced as appearing to the Author in this form;

His stature was not very tall,
Leane he was, his legs were small,
Hos'd within a stock of red;
A button'd bonnet on his head,
From under which did hang I weene,
Silver haire both bright and sheene,
His beard was white, trimmed round,
His countenance blithe and merry sound;

A sleevels Jacket large and wide,
With many pleights and shirtes side,
Of water Chamlet did he wear;
A whittel by his belt he beare;
His shoes were corned broad before;
His Inckhorne at his side he wore;
And in his hand he bore a booke:
Thus did this ancient Poet look.

linefs of his humour was more diftinguifhed by his Writings, than by his Appearance; which gave occafion to Margaret Countefs of Pembroke often to rally him upon his filent Modesty in company, telling him, that his abfence was more agreeable to her than his converfation^z, fince the firft was productive of agreeable Pieces of Wit in his Writings, but the latter was filled with a modelt deference, and a too diftant refpect. We fee nothing merry or jocofe in his behaviour with his Pilgrims, but a filent attention to their mirth, rather than any mixture of his own; and when he is called upon by Harry Baily the Hofte, and rouzed out of his thoughtful Lethargy to tell a Tale, he endeavours to put it off by finging an old Ballad; but that not fatisfying the Company, the Tale he tells is grave, moral and inftitutive.

In his early years his Temper and Inclination were fomewhat too gay and loofe; nor did even Marriage confine his amorous humour, as appears by the Banter which paffed between him and his Man in fome Verfes written by them with a Diamond in the glafs Window where he lived^a; and he himfelf fpeaks with a^b penitent concern of the many wanton Songs he had writ in his younger years. Towards the latter part of his Life, the gay Gentleman gave way to the grave Philofopher and pious Divine.

When difengaged from publick Affairs, his time was entirely fpent in ftudy and reading: So agreeable to him was this exercife, that he fays, he preferred it to all other fports and diverfions^c. He lived within himfelf, neither defirous to hear nor bufy to concern himfelf with the affairs of his Neighbours^d. His courfe of living was temperate and regular; he went to reft with the Sun, and rofe before it^e, and by that means enjoyed the pleasures of the better part of the day, his morning walk and frefh contemplations. This gave him the advantage of defcribing the Morning in fo lively a manner as he does every where in his Works: The fpringing Sun glows warm in his lines, and the fragrant Air blows cool in his defcriptions; we fmell the fweets of the bloomy Haws, and hear the Mufick of the feathered Choir, when ever we take a Forreft walk with him. The hour of the day is not eafier to be difcovered from the Reflexion of the Sun in Titian's Paintings, than in Chaucer's Morning Landfapes. 'Tis true, thofe Defcriptions are fometimes too long, and (as it is before obferved) when he takes thofe early rambles, he almoft tires his Reader with following him, and feldom knows how to get out of a Forreft, when once entered into it: But how advantageous this beautiful extravagance is, moft of his Succelfors well know, who have very plentifully lopt off his exuberant Beauties, and placed them as the chief Ornaments of their own Writings.

His Reading was deep, and extenfive, his Judgment found, and difcerning; but yet (a thing rarely found in Men of great Learning and poignant Wit) he was communicative of his Knowledge, and ready to correct or pafs over the Faults of his Cotemporary Writers^f. He knew how to judge of, and to excufe the flips of weaker Capacities, and pitied rather than expofed the Ignorance of that Age.

In one word, he was a great Scholar, a pleafant Wit, a candid Critick, a fociable Companion, a ftedfaft Friend, a grave Philofopher, a temperate OEconomift and a pious Chriftian. He was not unacquainted with the ancient Rules of Poetry, nor did he difdain to follow them, tho' he thought it the leaft part of a Poet's perfections. As he had a difcerning Eye, he difcovered Nature in all her appearances, and ftript off every difguife with which the Gothick Writers had cloathed her: He knew that thofe Dreffes would change as Times altered; but that fhe her felf would always be the fame, and that fhe could never fail to pleafe in her fimple attire, nor that Writer who drew her fo; and therefore defpifing the mean affiftances of Art, he copied her clofe. He knew what it was to be nimis Poeta, and avoided it as the moft dangerous extreme. His Strokes are bold, and his Colours lively; but the firft not too much laboured, nor the other too fhowy or glaring. There is a wild Beauty in his Works, which comes nearer the Defcriptions of Homer, than any other that followed him: And though his Pieces have not that regular difpofition as thofe of the Grecians, yet the feveral Parts fe-parately compared, bear an equal value with theirs; and Mr. Dryden, than whom there was no better Judge of the Beauties of Homer and Virgil, pofitively afferts that he exceeded the latter, and ftands in competition with the former^g. Whoever reads the Knight's Tale, which is the beft of his Performances, being a finifhed Epick Poem, and examines the Characters, the Sentiments, the Diction, Difpofition and Time, will find that he was not unacquainted with the Rules of that way of Writing; but this requires an abler hand, and longer time to enlarge upon it.

That he was a true Mafter of Satyr, none will deny. It is true the Perfons levelled againft, and the Crimes expofed, would not allow of the fevere Scourge Juvenal made ufe of, nor was there fuch a variety of Follies as Horace facetioufly exploded: Not but that Chaucer had a Scene of Vice in the Court of that time, capable of supplying him with matter sufficient for the sharpest strokes of Satyr; but he was wise enough not to exasperate a Court by which he was supported, and in which he had interest little enough to screen himself from malice, without provoking it: He knew he had a fair Province for the exercise of that Talent without exposing himself to it's resentment; and having a Court to back him, he has shewn by severely lashing an ignorant and corrupt Clergy, that he could (had it been safe) have applied as severe a lash to a vicious irreligious Laity. Yet there are some strokes which shew he was not incapable of writing in the Horatian way; of which the Physician whose studie was but litle in the Bible^b, the Lawyer who semed besier than he was^c, the libidinous Wife of Bath^k, and the testy cholerick Reve^l, and several other Characters are sufficient Instances.

That in the Elegiack kind of Poetry he was a compleat Master, appears plainly by his Complaint of the Black Knight, the Poem called La belle Dame sans mercy, and several of his Songs. He was an excellent Master of Love-Poetry, having studied that Passion in all it's turns and appearances; and Mr. Dryden prefers him upon that account to Ovid. His Troilus and Creseide is one of the most beautiful Poems of that kind; in which Love is curiously and naturally described in it's early appearance, it's hopes and fears, it's application, fruition, and despair in disappointment.

It is thought by some that his Verses every where consist of an equal number of feet, and that if read with a right accent, are no where deficient; but those nice discerning Persons would find it difficult, with all their straining and working, to spin out some of his Verses into a measure of ten Syllables^m. He was not altogether regardless of his Numbers; but his thoughts were more intent upon solid sense than gingle, and he tells us plainly that we must not expect regularity in all his Versesⁿ.

His Language, how unintelligible soever it may seem, is more modern than that of any of his Contemporaries, or of those that followed him at the distance of Fifty or Sixty years, as Harding, Skelton, and others; and in some places it is to this day so smooth, concise and beautiful, that even Mr. Dryden would not attempt to alter it, but has copied some of his Verses almost literatim: And Chaucer was the first that adorned and amplified the English Tongue from the Provençal^o, which was the most polished of all the Languages used at that time^p. It would require a just Dissertation to trace the old French Idiom through all his Works; but some notice being occasionally taken of it in the Glossary, the Reader must be referred thither.

I proceed to give some account of his Works, in the order wherein they were written, so far as it can be collected from them.

Mr. Phillips supposes a great part of his Works to be lost, above what we have extant of him^q; of that number may be, manye a Song, and many a letcherous lay^r, which might perhaps have been written by him while he was a Student at Cambridge. Bale and Pits give (after their manner) a very long Catalogue of his Works, by repeating the same Pieces under different Titles, which has lead others into the like mistakes.

The Court of Love was written while he resided at Cambridge, in the eighteenth year of his age^s.

The Craft of Lovers was written in the year of our Lord 1348. which was the twentieth year of his age^t; and it is probable the Remedy of Love was written about that time, or not long after^u.

The Lamentation of Mary Magdalen, taken from Origen, was written by him in his early years^v. And perhaps Boerhius de Consolatione Philosophiæ was translated by him about the same time^x.

The Romaunt of the Rose, is a Translation from the French. This Poem was begun by William de Lorris, and continued by John de Meun, both famous French Poets in their time^y. It seems to have been translated by Chaucer while he was at Court, and about the time of the Rise of Wickliffe's Opinions, it consisting of violent Invectives against the Religious Orders. It is left imperfect at the end, and there are some Lacuna's in other places of it.

The Complaint of the Black Knight, was written (as some do conjecture) during John

of Gaunt's Courtship with Blaunch; and Chaucer's Dreame is supposed to be written upon account of the Duke of Lancaster's Marriage.

The Poem of Troilus and Creseide was written in the former part of his Life, and translated (as he says) from ^a Lollius, an Historiographer of Urbane in Italy; it is called Trophe in the Lombard Tongue. He has not contented himself with a bare Translation of his Author, but hath added several things of his own, and borrowed from others what he thought proper for the Embellishment of this Work; and particularly the Song of Troilus in the First Book is a Translation of that Song in Petrarch, which begins, S'amor non è, che dunqu' è quel ch'io sento? And that Discourse of Predestination in the Fourth Book is an addition of his own; in which Controversy, he seems by this Passage and that in the Priest's Nonne's Tale beginning at ℥. 1349. to be so well versed, that Sir Henry Savil thinks he had perused Archbishop Bradwardine's learned Book De Causâ Dei published at that time ^b. Sir Francis Kinaston, who translated this Poem into Latin Rhimes, in his MSS. Notes upon it, says that it was not improbably conjectured that Chaucer, in writing the Lives and Loves of Troilus and Creseide, glanced at some private persons in the Court of King Edw. III. and did not follow Homer, Dares, Dictys, or any Historian of those times. However (says he) Chaucer has taken the liberty of his own inventions; he hath made an admirable and inimitable Epick Poem, describing in Troilus a compleat Knight in Arms and Courtship, and a faithful constant Lover, and in Creseide a most beautiful and coy Lady, which being once overcome yields to the Frailty of her Sex.

The Book of Blaunch the Duchefs, commonly called the Dreame of Chaucer, was written upon the Death of that Lady. It is called The deth of Blaunche the Duchesse in the Leg. of gode Women, ℥. 418. and by Lidg. in his Prol. to the Fall of Princes.

The Assembly of Fowls (or Parlement of Briddis ^c, as he calls it in his Retraction) was written before the Death of Queen Philippa.

The Life of St. Cecilia seems to have been first a single Poem ^d, afterwards made one of his Canterbury Tales, which is told by the second Nonne: And so perhaps was that of the Wife of Bath, which he advises John of Gaunt to read ^e, and was afterwards inserted in his Canterbury Tales.

The Canterbury Tales were written about the year 1383. It is certain the Tale of the Nonne's Priest was written after the Insurrection of Jack Straw and Wat Tyler, which was in the year 1381. it being mentioned in that Tale ^f. It is probable that most of the Tales were written as so many distinct Poems at different times (as it has been before observed of the Second Nonne's Tale, and that of the Wife of Bath) and afterwards collected into one Body in Imitation of Boccace's Decameron, whence the Arguments of some of them were taken.

The Flower and the Leaf, was written by him; as appears by his own words in the Prologue to the Legend of gode Women. This is judged by Mr. Dryden to be of our Author's own invention, after the manner of the Provençals ^g; and he was so particularly pleased with it both for the Invention and Moral, that he recommends it to the Reader in a modern Dress.

Chaucer's A. B. C. called La Priere de nostre Dame, was written for the use of the Dutcheß Blanch.

The Book of the Lion is mentioned in his Retraction, and by Lidg. in the Prologue to the Fall of Princes; but it is now lost, as is that

De Vulcani veru, i. e. Of the Broche of Vulcan, which is likewise mentioned by Lidgate ^h.

La belle Dame sans mercy, was translated from the French of Alain Chartier, Secretary to Lewis the Eleventh, King of France.

The Complaint of Mars and Venus was translated from the French of Sir Otes de Grantson a French Poet. This Poem is supposed to have been written upon the account of the Lord John Holland before mentioned, who married the Lady Elizabeth (Daughter of the Duke of Lancaster) and that Lord is thought to be meant by Mars, and by Venus the Lady of Tork, Daughter to the King of Spain.

The Complaint of Annelida to false Arcite.

The Legend of gode Women (called The Assembly of Ladies, and by some The Ninetene Ladies) was written to oblige the Queen, at the request of Margaret Countess of Pembroke.

The Treatise of the Conclusions of the Astrolabie was written in the year 1391 ⁱ.

GEOF. CHAUCER.

Of the Cuckow and Nightingale. This seems by the Descriptions to have been writ at Woodstock.

The Ballade beginning In Feverere, &c. was a Compliment to the Lady Margaret Countess of Pembroke^k.

Verfes beginning, The long nyghtis, &c.

Several other Ballads are ascribed to him, some of which are justly suspected not to have been written by him; as that beginning, O mossie Quince^l, &c. and that beginning I have a Ladie^m, &c. which must needs be written long after his time; for the Marriage of Queen Jane with King Henry IV. which is therein mentioned, did not happen till after Chaucer's Death.

The Comedies ascribed to him, seem to be nothing else but his Canterbury Tales, and the Tragedies were those his Monk tells in his Taleⁿ; and they are so called in the Title of that Tale in some MSS.

The Testament of Love was written in his Troubles, in the latter part of his Life.

The Song beginning Fly fro the prese, &c. was written on his Death-bed, as it is before observed.

The Testament and Complaint of Creseide, are by Bale and Pits (after Leland) ascribed to Chaucer^o: But as to the Author of them, the Reader may be referred to the Note prefixed to them.

Leland says, that by the consent of the Learned in his time, the Plowman's Tale was attributed to Chaucer, but was suppressed in the Editions then extant, because the Vices of the Clergy were therein exposed. Fox is of the same Opinion^p, who also ascribes the little Piece called Jack Upland to him; as some have that Poem called Piers Plowman's Visions, confounding it with the Plowman's Tale.

Mr. Speght in his Life of Chaucer printed in 1602. mentions a Tale in Mr. William Thynne's first printed Book of Chaucer's Works, more odious to the Clergy than the Speech of the Plowman, which began thus;

*In Lincolneshire fast by a Fenne

The Argument of which Tale, as also the occasion thereof, and the cause why it was left out of Chaucer's Works, he promised should be shewed in Mr. Francis Thynne's Comment upon Chaucer^q; but neither the one nor the other have been since published.

One thing more is to be observed of his Works; that they were so universally valued, that we do not find them in the Catalogues of Books prohibited by the Bishop of London, in the year 1526. nor of those prohibited by the King, at the Instigation of the Bishops, by Proclamation in 1529^r. But on the contrary, in an Act of Parliament in the 34 Hen. VIII. Cap. I. For the advancement of true Religion, and for the abolishment of the contrary, the Canterbury Tales, Chaucer's Works, are excepted from the Prohibition of that Act.

As to the Tales added in this Edition; an Account of them comes within the Design of the Preface, to which the Reader is referr'd; as he is to the following Testimonies for a fuller account of the Judgment of Learned Men, both in Chaucer's time and since, concerning Him and his Works.

TESTIMONIES

Of Learned Men concerning

CHAUCER and his WORKS.

Jo. Gower De Confessione Amantis,
Printed by Thomas Berthelette, 1554.
Fol. CXC. a. where Venus speaks to Gower;

— G Rete well Chaucer, whan ye mete,
As my discipule and my poete,
For in the floures of his youth,
In sondrie wise, as he well couth
Of ditees, and of songes glade,
The which he for my sake made,
The londe fulfilled is over all;
Whereof to hym in speciall
Above all other I am most holde.
Forthy nowe in his daies olde
Thou shalt hym tell this message,
That he upon his later age,
To sette an ende of all his werke,
As he whiche is myn owne clerke,
Do make his Testament of love,
As thou hast done thy shrifte above,
So that my courte it may recorde.
Madame, I can me well accorde,
(Quod I) to telle as ye me bid.

John Lidgate in his Prologue to the Story of Thebes, speaking of the Canterbury Tales;

AS openly the Story can you lere
Word by word, with every circumstance
Echone iwrit and put in remembrance
By him that was, if [that] I shall not faine,
Floure of Poetes, throughout all Bretaine,
Which sothely had moste of excellence
In Rhetorike and in eloquence.
Rede his making who liste the trouthe find,
Which never shall appallen in my mind,
But alwaie freshe been in myne memorie,
To whom be yove prife, honour and glorie

Of well seyng first in our language;
Cheefe Registrer in this pilgrimage,
All that was told foryeting nought at all,
Feined tales, nor thing historiall,
With many Proverbs, divers and uncouth,
By reherfaile of his sugred mouthe,
Of eche thyng kepyng in substaunce
The sentence hole withoutin variaunce,
Voidyng the chaffe, sothely for to seine,
Enlumining the true piked greine,
By craftie writyng of his sawes swete,
Fro the tyme that they did mete.

The same Author in the Prologue to his Translation of Boccace of the Fall of Princes.

MY Maister Chaucer with his fresh comedies
Is dede, alas! chiefe Poete of Bretayne,
That whilom made ful piteous tragedies,
The Fall of Princes he did also complayne,
As he that was of makyng soverayne:
Whom all this londe schulde of ryght preferre,
Sith of our langage he was the lode-sterre.

And semblably as I have told toforne
My Maister Chaucer did his besynesse,
And in his dayes hath so well him borne
Out of our tong t'avoyden all rudenesse,
And to reforme it with colors of swetenesse:
Wherefore let us yeve him laude and glorye,
And put his name with Poetes in memorye.

Of whose labour to make mencion,
Wherethurgh of right he shulde commendid be,
In youthe he made a translacioun
Of a boke which called is Trophe
In Lumbard tong, as men may rede and se,
And in our vulgare, long or that he deyde,
Gave it the name of Troilus and Cresseide.

Which

TESTIMONIES, &c.

Which for to rede lovers them delite,
They have therin so grete devocioun;
And this Poete also himfelfe to quite,
Of Boecius boke the consolacioun
Made in his tyme an hole translatioun;
And to his Sonne that called was Lewis
He made a tretise, ful noble and of great prife.

Upon th' Astrolabour in full noble forme
Set them in ordre with ther divisiouns,
Mennys wittes t'applien and conforme,
To understond by full expert resons,
By domifieng of sundrie mansions,
The rote out sought at the Ascendent,
Toforme or he gafe any jugement.

He wrote also ful many a day agone
Dante in English, himself so doth expresse;
The piteous Story of Ceix and Alcion,
And the dethe eke of Blaunche the Duchesse;
And notably did his besinesse,
By grete avyse his wittes to dispose,
To translate the Romans of the Rose.

Thus in vertue he set all his entent
Ydelnes and vices for to fle:
Of fowles alle he wrote the Parliament,
Therin remembring of royall Egles thre,
Howe in their choyse they felte adversite,
Tofore nature profered the batayle
Eche for his partie, if it would avayle.

He did also his diligence and payne,
In our vulgare to translate and endite
Origene upon the Maudelayne;
And of the Lyon a boke he did write;
Of Annelida and of false Arcite
He made a complaynt doleful and piteous;
And of the broche which that Vulcanus

At Thebes wrought full divers of nature;
Ovide writeth who therof had a fight
For high desyre he shuld not endure
But he it had never be glade ne light;
And if he had it onys in his might,
Like as my maister faith and writeth in dede,
It to conserve, he shuld aye live in drede.

This poete wrote, at the request of the quene,
A legende of perfite holynesse,
Of good women to fynd out nynetene
That did excell in bounte and fayrenes;
But for his labour and besinesse
Was importable his wittes to encombre,
In all this world to fynd so grete a nombre.

He made the boke of Caunterbury Tales,
Whan the pylgryms rode on pylgrymage
Throughout Kent, by hylles and by dales,
And all the stories told in their passage,
Endited them full well in our langage;
Some of knighthode, some of gentilnesse,
And some of love, and some of perfitenes.

And some also of grete moralite
Some of disporte including grete sentence:
In prose he wrote the tale of Melibe
And of his wife, that called was Prudence;
And of Grifildes perfite pacience;
And how the Monke of Stories new and olde
Pitous tragedies by the weye tolde.

This sayed Poete my maister in his dayes
Made and compiled ful many a fresh dite,

Complaintes, ballades, roundeles, virelaies,
Ful delectable to heren and to se;
For which men shulde of right and equite,
Sith he of English in making was the best,
Pray unto god to yeve his soule good rest.

The same Author, ibid. L. I. C. 6.

BUT if ye list have clere inspectioun
Of this story upon every side,
Reade the Legende of Cupide,
Which that Chaucer in order as they stode,
Compyled of women that were called gode.

Touchyng the Story of Kyng Pandion
And of his godely fayre doughters twayne,
How Thereus false of condicion
Them to deceive did his besy payne:
They bothe named of beauty soverayne,
Godely Progne, and yonge Philomene,
Bothe Innocentis of intent full clene.

Their pitous fate in open to expresse,
It were to me but a presumption,
Syth that Chaucer did his besinesse
In his Legende as made is mencion,
Theit martyrdome, and their passion
For to reherse them did his besy payne,
As chiefe Poete called of Brytayne.

Of good women a boke he did write,
The number uncomplete fully of nynetene;
And there the story plainly he did endite
Of Thereus, Progne and Philomene,
Where ye may se their legende; thus I mene,
Do them worshyp, and forth their life do shewe
For a clere myrror, because there be but fewe.

The same, On the Praise of the Virgin Mary, Printed by Wyllyam Caxton, Cap. xxxiii. A commendation of Chauceres.

AND eke my master Chauceris now is grave,
The noble rethor poete of brytayne,
That worthy was the lawrer to have,
Of poetrye, and the palme attayne,
That made first to dystylle and rayne
The gold dewe dropys of speche and eloquence
Into our tunge thurgh his excellence.

And fonde the flouris first of rethoryke
Our rude speche only to enlumyne,
That in our tunge was never none hym lyke;
For as the sonne doth in heven shyne
In mydday spere down to us by lyne,
In whos presence no sterre may appere;
Right so his ditees withouten ony pere

Every makyng with his light distayne,
In sothfastnes whoso takyth hede;
Wherfore no wonder though myn herte playne
Upon his deth, and for sorow blede,
For want of hym now in my grete nede,

Mr. William Thynne's Epistle Dedicatory to King Henry the Eighth before Chaucer's Works.

To the Kinges Highnesse, my most gracious soveraigne Lord, Henry the Eight, by the grace of God, King of England, and of France, Defensor of the Faith, and Lord of Ireland, &c.

AMonges all other excellencies, most gracious soveraine lord, wherewith almighty God hath endowed mankind, above the residue of earthly creatures, as an outward declaration of reason or reasonableness, wherein consisteth the similitude of man unto angels, and the difference between the same and brute beasts, I verayly suppose, that speech or language is not to be reputed amonges the smallest or inferiours. For thereby is expressed the conceit of one to another, in open and plaine sentence, which in the residue of lively creatures lacketh and is not shewed amonges them, but by certaine covert and derke signes, and that in few thyngs, having course and operation onely of nature. This speech or language, after the confusion of tongues sent by God's punishment for pride and arrogancie of people, hath been by a certaine instinct and disposition naturall devised and invented in sundrie parts of the world, as fellowships or companyings of folks one with another chaunced, much to the outward expressing of the thing in word or sound, according to that whereof it had meaning or signification. But in procresse of time, by diligence or policie of people, after divers formes, figures and impressions in metall, barks of trees and other matter used for memorie and knowledge of thyngs then present or passed, sundry letters or characteres were first amonges the Phenices devised and found, with such knittings and joynings of one to another, by a marvellous subtiltie and craft, as counterveiled was and is equivalent to the same languages. So as the conceit of man's mind, which at the beginning was used to be declared by mouth only, came to such point, that it was as sensibly and vively expressed in writing. Hereupon ensued a great occasion and courage unto them that should write, to compone and adorne the rudenesse and barbarietie of speech, and to forme it to an eloquent and ordinate perfection; whereunto many, and many great Poets and Oratours have highly employed their studies and courages, leaving thereby notable renoume of themselves, and example perpetuell to their posteritie.

Amonges other, the Greekes in all kinds of sciences seemed so to prevaile, and so to ornate their tongue, as yet by other of right noble languages cannot be perfetly imitated or followed. The Latines, by example of the Greekes, have gotten or wonne to them no small glorie in the forming, order and uttering of that tongue. Out of the which two, if it be well searched, that is to say, Greek and Latin (though by corruption of speech it should seem much otherwise) have been derived the residue of the languages, that be written with the letters or caractes of either of them both. But of all speeches, those which most approach to the Latine be the Italian and Spanish tongues; of whome the one by the corruption of the Gothes and Longobardes had her beginning, as Latine spoken by strangers of a barbare understanding: The other, being also Latine, was by Vandales, Gothes, Moors, Saracens and other so many times blemished, as marveile it is to see now unto what perfection these two formed out of the Latine and Barbares speeches be reduced. Next unto them in similitude to the Latin is the French tongue, which by diligence of people of the same is in few years passed so amended, as well in pronounciation as in writing, that an Englishman, by a small time exercised in that tongue, hath not lacked ground to make a Grammere or rule ordinarie thereof. Though of trouth (which some shall scarcely believe) the Germanes have so formed the order of their language, that in the same is both as much plentie and as nere concordance to the phrase of the Latin, as the French tongue hath. And veraily like as all these and the rest have ben thus vigilant and studious to meliorate or amend their languages; so hath there nat lacked amonges us Englishmen, which have right well and notably endeavored and employed themselves to the beautifying and bettering of the English tongue.

Amonges whome most excellent Prince, my most redoubted and gracious soveraigne lord, I your most humble vassall, subject and servaunt William Thynne, cheef clerke of your kechyn, mooved by a certaine inclination and zeale, which I have to heare of any thing sounding to the laude and honour of this your noble realme, have taken great delectation, as the tymes and layfers might suffer, to rede and heare the booke of that noble and famous clerke Geoffray Chaucer, in whose workes is so manifest comprobation of his excellent learning in all kindes of doctrines and sciences, such fruitfulness in wordes, well accordynge to the matter and purpose, so swete and plesant sentences, such perfection in metre, the composition so adapted, such freshness of invention, compendiousnesse in narration, suche sensible and open style, lacking neither majestie ne mediocritie covenable in disposition, and such sharpnesse or quicknesse in conclusyon, that it is much to be marvelled how in hys tyme (when doutlesse all good letters were laide aslepe throughout the world, as the thing whiche either by the disposition and influence of the bodies above, or by other ordinaunce of God, seemed like and was in daunger to have utterly perished) such an excellent poet in our tong shuld (as it were nature repugning) spring and arise. For though it had been in Demosthenes or Homerus times, when all learning and excellencie of sciences flourished amonges the Greeks, or in the season that Cicero prince of eloquence amonges Latines lived, yet had it ben a thinge right rare and straunge and worthie perpetuall laude, that any clerke by learninge or witte could then have framed a tonge, before so rude and imperfite, to such a swete ornatute and composition; likely, if he had lived in these dayes, beinge good letters so restored and revived as they be (if he were not empèched by the envie of such as may tolerate nothing, whyche to understande their capacite doth not extend) to have brought it unto a full and finall perfection.

delight and pleasure in the workes of this noble clerke (as is afore mentioned) I have of a long season much used to rede and visite the same, and as bookes of divers imprints came unto my hands, I easily and without great studie might and have comprehended in them many errours, falsities and depravations, which evidently appeared by the contrarieties and alterations found by collation of the one with the other, whereby I was moved and stirred to make diligent serch where I might find or recover any true copies or exemplaries of the said bookes; whereunto in proceſſe of time, nat without coſt and pain, I attained, and nat onely unto ſuch as ſeeme to be very true copies of thoſe workes of Geffrey Chaucer, which before had beene put in print, but alſo to divers others never till nowe imprinted, but remaining almoſt unknown and in oblivion: Whereupon lamenting with my ſelfe the negligence of the people that have been in this realme, who doubtleſſe were very remiſſe in the ſetting forth or avauncement either of the histories thereof, to the great hinderaunce of the renoume of ſuch noble princes and valiant conquerours and captaines as have been in the ſame, or alſo of the workes of memory of the famous and excellent clerks in all kinds of ſciences, that have flouriſhed therein (of which both ſorts it hath pleaſed God as highly to nobilitate this Iſle, as any other region of Chriſtendome) I thought it in manere appertenaunt unto my dutie, and that of very honeſtie and love to my country I ought no leſſe to doe, than to put my helping hand to the reſtauration and bringing againe to light of the ſaid workes, after the true copies and exemplaries aforeſaid. And deviſing with my ſelf who of al other were moſt worthy, to whom a thing ſo excellent and notable ſhould be dedicat, which to my conceit ſemeth for the admiration, noveltie and ſtraungenesse, that it might be reputed to be of in the time of the author (in compariſon as a pure and fine tried precious or poliſhed jewel out of a rude or indigeſt maſſe or matere) none could to my thinking occur that, ſince or in the time of Chaucer, was or is ſufficient, but only your Maieſty Roiall, which by diſcretion and judgement, as moſt abſolute in wiſedome and all kinds of doctrine, could and of his innate clemencie and goodneſſe would adde or give any authoritie hereunto.

For this cause, most excellent, and in al vertues most prestante Prince, I as humbly prostrate before your Kingly estate, lowly supplie and beseech the same, that it woll vouchsafe to take in good part my poore studie and desirous minde, in reducing unto light this so precious and necessarie an ornament of the tongue of this your realme, overpitous to have been in any point lost, falsified or neglected: So that, under the shield of your most royal protection and defence, it may goe forth in publick, and prevaile over those that would blemish, deface, and in many things clearly abolish the laud, renoume, and glorie heretofore compared and meritoriously adquired by divers princes, and other of this said most noble Isle, whereunto nat onely straungers under pretext of high learning and knowledge, of their malicious and perverse mindes, but also some of your owne subjects, blinded in follie and ignoraunce, doe with great studie contend.

Most gracious, victorious, and of God most elect and worthie prince, my most dread soveraigne lord, in whom of very merite, dutie, and succession is renued the glorious title of Defensor of the Christen faith, which by your noble progenitour, the great Constantine, sometime king of this Realme and Emperour of Rome, was next God and his

Thus endeth the Preface.

The Publisher of John Lidgate's History and Chronicle of the Trojan War, Printed MDLV. in the Pistle to the Reader.

AS the verye perfect disciple [speaking of Lidgate] and imitator of the great Chaucer, the onely glorye and beauty of the same. Nevertheles, lykewyse as it hapned the same Chaucer to lease the prayse of that tyme wherein he wrote, beyng then when indeede al good letters were almost aslepe, so farre was the grosenesse and barbarousnesse of that age from the understandinge of so devyne a wryter. That if it had not bene in this our time, wherein all kindes of learnyng (thancked be god) have as much floryshed as ever they did by anye former dayes within this realme, and namely by the dylygence of one Wylliam Thynne a gentelman, who laudably studyouse to the polyshing of so great a Jewell, with right good judgment, travail, and great paynes causing the same to be perfected, and stamped as it is now read, the sayde Chaucer's works had utterly peryshed, or at the lest bin so depraved by corruption of copies, that at the laste there shoulde no parte of hys meaning have ben founde in any of them.

SOME that make Chaucer in English and Petrarch in Italian their Gods in verses, and yet be not able to make trew difference, what is a fault and what is a just prayse in those two worthie wittes, will much mislike this my wrytyng [against Riming.] But such men be even like followers of Chaucer and Petrarke, as one here in England did folow Syr Tho. More, who, being most unlike unto him in wit and learnyng, nevertheles in wearing his gowne awrye upon the one shoulder, as Syr Tho. More was wont to do, would needs be counted like unto him.

WHose horriblenes [speaking of Gaming] is so large that it passed the eloquence of our Englishe Homer [Chaucer] to compasse it: — I ever thoughte his saynges to have as much authority as eyther Sophocles or Euripides in Greke.

The same Author in his Book of the State of Germany. Written about 1552. Fol. 1.

Diligence also must be used [by an Historian] in keeping truly the order of tyme, and describyng lyvely both the site of places and nature of persons not only for the outward shape of the body, but also for the inwarde disposition of the minde, as Thucydides doth in many places very trimly, and Homer every where, and that always most excellently, which observation is chiefly to be marked in hym: And our Chaucer doth the same very praise worthely; mark hym well and conferre hym with any other that writeth in our tyme in their proudest tounge, whosoever lyst.

Sir Philip Sidney, in his Defence of Poesie, Printed 1598. p. 492.

IN the Italian language, the first that made it to aspire to be a Treasure-house of Science were the Poets Dante, Boccace and Petrarch. So in our English wer Gower and Chaucer; after whom encouraged and delighted with their excellent foregoing, others have followed to beautifie our mother Tongue, as well in the same kind as other Artes.

Chawcer undoubtedly did excellently well in his Troilus and Creseid; of whom truly I know not whether to marvell more, either that he in that mystie time could see so clearly, or that we in this clear age go so stumblinglie after him. Yet has he great wants, fit to be forgiven in so reverent an Antiquitie.

I Will not reach above the time of King Edward the Third, and Richard the Second, for any that wrote in English meeter; because before their times, by reason of the late Normane Conquest, which had brought into this Realme much alteration both of our langage and lawes, and therewithall a certain martiall barbarousnes, whereby the study of all good learning was so much decayed, as long time after no man or very few entended to write in any laudable science: so as beyond that time

Mr. Fox in his Acts and Mon. Lond. 1684. Vol. II. p. 42.

I Marvel to consider this, how that the Bishops condemning and abolishing all manner of English Books and Treatises which might bring the people to any light of knowledge, did yet authorise the Works of Chaucer to remain still, and to be occupied; who (no doubt) saw in Religion as much almost as ever we do now, and uttereth in his Works no less, and seemeth to be a right Wicklevian, or else there was never any, and that all his Works almost, if they be thoroughly advised, will testifie (albeit it be done in mirth and covertly) and especially the later end of his third Book of the Testament of Love: for there purely he toucheth the highest matter, that is, the Communion; wherein, except a man be altogether blind, he may espie him at the full. Although in the same Book (as in all other he useth to do) under shadows covertly, as under a Vizour, he suborneth Truth in such sort, as both privily she may profit the godly-minded, and yet not be espied of the crafty Adversary. And therefore the Bishops, belike, taking his Works but for Jestes and Toys, in condemning other Books, yet permitted his Books to be read.

So it pleased God then to blind the Eyes of them, for the more commodity of his people, to the intent that through the reading of his Treatises, some fruit might redound thereof to his Church, as no doubt it did to many. As also I am partly informed, of certain which knew the Parties, which to them reported, that by reading of Chaucer's Works, they were brought to the true knowledge of Religion: And not unlike to be true; for to omit the other parts of his Volume, whereof some are more fabulous than other, what Tale can be more plainly told than the Tale of the Ploughman? Or what finger can point out more directly the Pope with his Prelates to be Antichrist, than doth the poor Pellican reasoning against the greedy Griffon? Under which Hypotyposis, or Poetic, who is so blind that seeth not by the Pellican the Doctrine of Christ and of the Lollards to be defended against the Church of Rome? Or who is so impudent that can deny that to be true which the Pellican there affirmeth, in describing the presumptuous Pride of that pretended Church? Again, what Egg can be more like, or Fig, unto another, than the words, properties and conditions of that ravenous Gryphon resembleth the true Image, that is the Nature and Qualities of that which we call

Mr. Francis Beaumont's Letter to Mr. Speght, pressing him to print his Observations upon Chaucer, dated the last of June 1597. From the Edition of Chaucer 1602.

Touching the incivillitie Chaucer is charged withall; what Romane Poet hath less offended this way than he? Virgil in his Priapus is worse by a thousand degrees, and Ovid in de Arte Amandi, and Horace in manie places as deep as the rest: but Catullus and Tibullus in uncleane wantoness beyond measure passe them all. Neither is Plautus nor Terence free in this behalfe: But these two last are excused above the rest, by their due observation of Decorum, in giving to their comicall persons such manner of speeches as did best fit their dispositions. And may not the same be said for Chaucer? How much had he swarved from Decorum, if he had made his Miller, his Cook, and his Carpenter, tell such honest and good tales, as he made his Knight, his Squire, his Lawyer, and his Scholler? But shewing the disposition of the baser sort of men, he declareth in their Prologues and Tales, that their chief delight was in undecent speeches of their owne, and in their false defamations of others. — No man can imagine in his so large compasse, purposing to describe all Englishmen's humours living in those daies, how it had been possible for him to have left untouched their filthy delights; or in discovering their desires, how to have exprest them without some of their words.

And now to compare him with other Poets: His Canterbury Tales containe in them almost the same Argument, that is handled in Comedies: his Stile therein for the most part is lowe and open, like unto theirs; but herein they differ: The Comedie writers doe all follow and borrowe one from another; as Terence from Plautus and Menander; Plautus from Menander and Demophilus; Statius and Cacilius from Diphilus, Apollodorus and Philemon; and almost all the last Comedians from that which was called antiqua Comædia. Chaucer's devise of his Canterbury Pilgrimage is meerely his owne: His drift is to touch all sorts of men, and to discover all vices of that Age, and that he doth so feelingly, and with so true an ayme, as he never failes to hit whatsoever marke he levels at.

Mr. Rymer's Short View of Tragedy.
1693. p. 78.

They who attempted Verse in English, down till Chaucer's time, made an heavy pudder, and are always miserably put to't for a word to clink; which commonly fall so awkward, and unexpectedly as dropping from the Clouds by some Machine or Miracle. Chaucer found an Herculean labour on his hands; and did perform to admiration. He seizes all Provençal, French or Latin that came in his way, gives them a new garb and livery, and mingles them amongst our English: turns out English gowty, or superannuated, to place in their room the foreigners, fit for service, train'd and accustomed to Poetical Discipline.

And a little further;

Chaucer threw in Latin, French, Provençal, and other Languages, like new Stum to raise a Fermentation: In Queen Elizabeth's time it grew fine, but came not to an Head and Spirit, did not shine and sparkle till Mr. Waller set it a running.

Mr. Dryden in the Preface to his Fables.

As he [Chaucer] is the Father of English Poetry, so I hold him in the same degree of Veneration as the Grecians held Homer, or the Romans, Virgil: He is a perpetual Fountain of good Sense; learn'd in all Sciences; and therefore speaks properly on all Subjects. As he knew what to say, so he knows also when to leave off.

Chaucer followed Nature every where, but was never so bold to go beyond her. — The Verse of Chaucer, I confess, is not harmonious to us; but 'tis like the Eloquence of one whom Tacitus commends, it was, auribus istius temporis accommodata: They who liv'd with him, and some time after him, thought it musical; and it continues so even in our Judgment, if compared with the Numbers of Lidgate and Gower his Contemporaries: There is the rude sweetness of a Scotch Tune in it, which is natural and pleasing, though not perfect. 'Tis true, I cannot go so far as he who published the last Edition of him; for he would make us believe the Fault is in our Ears; and that there were really Ten Syllables in a Verse, where we find but Nine: But this opinion is not worth confuting; 'tis so gross and obvious an error, that common Sense must convince the Reader that Equality of Numbers in every Verse which we call Heroick, was either not known, or not always practis'd in Chaucer's Age. It were an easy matter to produce some thousands of his Verses, which are lame for want of half a Foot, and sometimes a whole one, and which no Pronunciation can make otherwise. We can only say that he lived in the Infancy of our Poetry, and that nothing is brought to Perfection at the first.

He [Chaucer] must have been a man of a most wonderful comprehensive Nature, because, as it has been truly observed of him, he has taken into the Compass of his Canterbury Tales the various Manners and Humours (as we now call them) of the English Nation in his Age. Not a single Character has escap'd him. All his Pilgrims are severally distinguish'd from each other; and not only in their Inclinations, but in their very Physiognomies and Persons. Baptista Porta could not have described their Natures better, than by the Marks which the Poet gives them. The matter and manner of their Tales, and of their Telling, are so suited to their different Educations, Humours, and Callings, that each of them would be improper in any other Mouth. Even the grave and serious Characters are distinguished by their several sorts of Gravity: Their Discourses are such as belong to their Age, their Calling, and their Breeding; such as are becoming of them, and of them only. Some of his Persons are Vicious, and some Vertuous; some are unlearned, or (as Chaucer calls them) Lewd, and some are Learn'd. Even the Ribaldry of the Low Characters is different: The Reeve, the Miller, and the Cook, are several Men, and distinguish'd from each other, as much as the mincing Lady Prioresse, and the broad-speaking, gap-tooth'd Wife of Baith.

THE P R E F A C E.

THE Reader will meet with no more interruption here, than will be necessary to acquaint him in some measure with Mr. Urry's Design in this Edition, and the Methods he took for the accomplishment of it. This might have been better performed by others, of themselves inclined to this sort of Study, who upon that account, as well as their particular intimacy with Mr. Urry, were thought to have been made acquainted with his whole Scheme, and to have been consulted by him upon every part of it. It were to be wished that such Persons could have been prevailed upon to give the World an Account of this Work, and at the same time to do Justice to the Merit and Memory of their Friend, who was taken away in the midst of it.

As for my self, I was equally a stranger to Mr. Urry and his Undertaking, till some time after his Death; when a Person, whose Commands I was in all Duty bound to obey, put the Works of Chaucer into my hands, with his Instructions to assist in carrying on this Edition, and to prepare Matter for a Glossary to it. Mr. Thomas Ainsworth of Christ-Church had been employed by Mr. Urry in transcribing part of the Work for the Press, and was therefore thought qualified to proceed in preparing the rest for my perusal. This Gentleman likewise dyed in August 1719. soon after the whole Text of Chaucer was printed off. Had he lived, he could have given a fuller account of this Work than is to be expected here, which I am perswaded he would not have declined; but as he always had the greatest veneration for the Memory of Mr. Urry, would have readily embraced such an opportunity of expressing it. What I have to say on this Subject is chiefly owing to his Information; but as I did not expect to have this Task enjoined me, I took no Notes of what I heard from him from time to time relating to this matter: I shall therefore acquaint the Reader with every thing just as it occurs to my memory upon a Recollection; adding such particulars as I find noted in those Papers of Mr. Urry which have come to my hands.

About the latter end of the Year 1711. some Persons well acquainted with Mr. Urry's Qualifications (who, he thought, had a right to command him) proposed to him to put out a new Edition of Chaucer; which he was perswaded to undertake, though much against his inclination: "For, though (as he says) his skill in the Northern Language spoken in the Low-lands of Scotland qualified him to read this Poet with more ease and pleasure than one altogether bred be-South Trent could do without more than common Application, yet he assures us, he had not the least thought of publishing his private Diversions.

Having thus undertaken the Work, he proposed to proceed in this Method, viz. to correct the Text of Chaucer, and add what he could find of his Works in MSS. which had not been printed; to make some Observations upon the Author, and among other things to shew where he had imitated or borrowed from the Greek or Latin Poets; to add a more copious Glossary than had been printed before; to write a fuller Account of his Life than had been yet published; and to acquaint the Reader in a Preface what he should have performed in this Edition.

Having not lived to finish the Work, it was not to be expected that he should leave Materials for a Preface: Nor was there any thing found for that purpose amongst his Papers, but a very short Sketch couched in very general words, not at all entering into the main Subject which was proposed to be explained in it; and an Account of such MSS. of Chaucer's Works as he had seen and perused, which shall be taken notice of hereafter. He left some Extracts out of Records, which were intended for Chaucer's Life; but as they were very few, and those for the most part relating to Thomas Chaucer, who is supposed to be his Son, it was judged necessary to employ a Gentleman who had made some Collections that way, to draw up the account of our Author's Life, which is prefixed to this Edition. But I could never find that Mr. Urry had made any progress in the Notes or Observations which he intended, nor have I seen any Comparisons with, or References to the ancient Poets; except a Reference to Ausonius against the Eight godely Questions with their answers; which makes it probable that he never proceeded further in that matter. Nor had he done any more towards a Glossary, than collecting a few words, which was done in such a manner that it could be of very little service to any body but himself.

His chief business was to make the Text more correct and compleat than before. He found it was the opinion of some learned Men that Chaucer's Verses originally consisted of an equal number of Feet; and he himself was persuaded that Chaucer made them exact Metre, and therefore he proposed in this Edition to restore him (to use his own Expression) to his feet again, which he thought might be performed by a careful Collation of the best printed Editions and good MSS.

He had observed that several Initial and Final Syllables in use in Chaucer's time, and since, had been omitted or added at pleasure in the MSS. by unskilful Transcribers, from whence the same Errors crept into the Printed Editions, whereby many Verses were rendered unjust in their Measure; so that the lameness of many of them might easily be remedied by the discreet Addition or Omission of such Syllables.

The Initial Syllables were chiefly a, i, and y, which were to be prefixed to Verbs (for the most part in the Preter Tenses) and Participles: as Ago for Gone, Ilast for Last or Left, Trunn for Run, &c. And a was sometimes to be put before Adverbs, as Abak for Back; and i, or y, were often to be put before Nouns; as Iliche, or Tliche, for Like: And sometimes they were to be omitted as the measure of the Verse required.

The Final Syllables were for the most part such as might be said rather to be added in the Pronunciation, than by Writing: The chiefest of which, and the most frequently made use of to help out a Verse otherwise deficient, was the Final è, which he always marked with an accent when he judged it necessary to pronounce it; as sweetè, halvè, smalè, Prol. 5, 8, 9. for sweet, halve or half, small; of which there are many Instances in every page. Whether the assistance of this Final è be not here too frequently, and sometimes unnecessarily, called in, is not my business at present to enquire into: But it seems beyond contradiction that it was anciently pronounced; and I have seen a Note of Mr. Urry's, wherein he affirms that in some parts of England it is still used, and instances in the words pipè, buttonè, don't finè, &c. wherein the Final è is pronounced in Dorsetshire at this day.

The next thing to be taken notice of as used for lengthening of words, is the distinct pronouncing of the Termination ed or id in the Preter Tenses of Verbs, and in Participles; as Percid, Bathid, Harnisid, for Pierc'd, Bath'd, Harnes'd: Not that Mr. Urry thought this Termination was always to be pronounced as a distinct Syllable, but only as the measure of the Verse required; and therefore he contrived this Distinction to run through the whole Text, that it should be written ed, when it is not to be taken as a distinct Syllable, and id when it was to be pronounced as such. The same thing, under the proper restrictions, is to be observed of est and ist, eth and ith, the Terminations of the second and third Persons Singular in the Indicative Mood, and the latter also very often a Termination of the Imperative Mood from the AS. as, Holdith, Drawith, for Hold, Draw.

Another help he saw might be gained by making a discreet use of en, or in, a Termination of Verbs, Nouns and Adverbs, but most frequently of Verbs; as Servin, Wendin, Wouldin, Werin, &c. for Serve, Wende, Would, Were, &c. Selfin for Self, and Selvin in the Plural Number for Selves, Withoutin for Without, Aboutin for About, Abovin for Above.

And again the pronouncing of es or is, the Plural Termination of Substantives, and sometimes of Adverbs, and also of is the Termination of the Genitive Case Singular has contributed no small assistance towards the supply of a Foot to many Verses, which must otherwise have halted; as Croppis, Bootis, instead of Crops, Boots; Oftimis, Sometimis, Thryis, for Oftimes, Sometimes, Thrice; Shir'is end, Godd'is name, Mann'is wit, for Shire's end, God's name, Man's wit. And here likewise it must be observed, that these Terminations are not always to be pronounced, but only where the Metre is deficient without it; and whenever the Plural Termination is to be quiescent it is printed es; as Londes, Strondes, Sleves, in one Syllable, not Londis, Strondis, Slevis, as they are in other places, where they are to be pronounced as distinct Syllables. The same thing must be understood of the Genitive Case Singular, and the Adverbs. And here it may be proper to acquaint the Reader that the Genitive Case Singular is throughout the whole Book distinguished from the other Terminations in is by an Apostrophe thus ['is] which perhaps might proceed from an opinion that is in such cases is a Contraction of his (as some write it) and not a proper English Termination of the Genitive Case derived to us from the Saxon. The same Mistake has induced some Learned men to write

write her instead of the Termination 's, after a Feminine Noun, as The Wife her Prologue, or Tale, &c. instead of The Wive's Prologue, or Tale, &c.

There are also some Syllables in the middle of words, which though not founded at this time, were thought anciently to have been left in Poetry to the discretion of the Reader to pronounce, or not, as it should be most agreeable to the Measure of the Verse; as Semely, Daiësey, Juggement, Commaundement, &c. for Seemly, Daisy, Judgment, Commandment, &c.

Mr. Urry had observed particularly, that the word which was sometimes written whiche, and very frequently followed by that, and that without the one or the other, or sometimes both, the Verse was lame, but that with one or both it would have it's just number of Feet; and therefore he added them accordingly as he found it requisite. And in short I find it acknowledged by him, "That whenever he could by no other way help a Verse to a Foot, which he was perswaded it had when it came from the Maker's hands, but lost by the Ignorance of Transcribers, or Negligence of Printers, he made no scruple to supply it with some Word or Syllable that serv'd for an Expletive": But I find at the same time that he had once a design of enclosing such words in hooks thus [] to distinguish them from what he found justified by the authority of MSS. but how it came to pass that so just, useful and necessary a Design was not executed, I cannot satisfy the curious Reader.

Besides all those Methods for lengthening out Verses, which was the thing generally wanted, he had occasion sometimes to shorten them; and for that purpose he frequently makes use of an Apostrophe where he would have a Syllable dropt in the pronouncing of a word, as, Sove'rane prize, Carry'a morsel, Prol. 67, 130. for, Soverane prize, Carry a morsel. And oftentimes he contracts two words after the modern fashion, by throwing out a Letter or two; as That's, He's, Th'art, Prol. 180, 182, 856. for, That is, He is, Thou art: But besides this method of reducing to it's proper measure a Verse which had a redundancy of Syllables, it must be remembered that he reserved to himself a discretionary power of retaining or omitting the Initial, Middle or Final Syllables before mentioned for the lengthening or shortning of a Verse.

But that the use of all these helps for compleating the measure of Verses might be made with more Judgment and Authority, and for the correcting and improving a great number of places, where the Text had been corrupted in the common Editions, and so made unintelligible, and sometimes downright Nonsense; and that such Pieces as were judged to be Chaucer's, which had not been before printed, might be recovered and appear in this Edition; and in short to make the Book in all respects more correct and compleat, it was thought necessary to collect not only all the printed Editions of value, but also all the MSS. that could be procured. I find no account of the printed Copies which Mr. Urry had perused; but he has left a Catalogue of the MSS. made use of in this Edition, which is very particular, both with respect to the Contents and Condition of them, and also the names of the Persons from whom they were borrowed, or by whose means they were procured: An Abstract of which is thought proper to be here inserted, not only to inform the Reader of the Advantages of this Edition above the former ones, but also to inform any person that may hereafter undertake a new Edition of this Author, where to make his Enquiries in order to a further Improvement of him.

I. In the first place he mentions Two MSS. belonging to the Right Honourable the Earl of Oxford. One of them is a large Folio, written on Velom in a fair hand, marked 93. B. 2. and in the Glossary, H. 1. containing the Canterbury Tales, but it is imperfect in several places. It has the Tale of Gamelyn (which wants the beginning) as spoken by the Coke; and the Coke's Tale is the running Title of it. The MS. begins thus; Here beginneth the book of the tales of Caunterburye compiled by Geffraie Chauciers of Brytayne chef poete. It hath the Retraction after the Parson's Tale; and at the end of it this Note; Here endeth the book of the tales of Caunterburye. Compyled by Geffraie Chaucers. Of whos soule Jhu Crist have mercye. Amen quod Cornhyll, which seems to be the Transcriber's Name. This Book has some particularities in the Orthography; as sch for sh (so scho for she) sometimes for u or v; y very frequently for i. The first Letters of such Tales as are perfect at the beginning, are beautifully illuminated in this MS. and it is probable that the Pictures of the Pilgrims were intended to be inserted before their Tales, there being a void space left capable of containing them: But none of them were finished, unless we may suppose that of the Knight to be done, which might be the occasion of cutting out the first Leaf of that Tale.

II. The other Harleyan MS. is likewise written on Velom in a long Folio, marked 67. C. 3. and contains, besides the Poem of Troilus and Creseide, part of the Knight's Tale, and the Tales of the Man of Law, the Wife of Bath, the Clerk of Oxenford, and the Frankelien, which last differs in the beginning from the Printed Editions. In the first Letters of Troilus and Creseide (which begins the Book) are the Arms of Speke and Shepey impaled, and at the end of the Tales, which are written in another hand is this Note, which seems to be added by the Writer of the latter part of it; Vestre magnifice & generosissime dominacionis nis humilimus serviens & orat. heremita de Grenewych, mundo qui totaliter segregatus ac mentibus suorum fortune amicorum & hominum peroblitus.

III. In the next place he describes two MSS. which he had borrowed of the worthy and learned Dr. Sloan, now Sir Hans Sloan; one of them written on Velom, the other on Paper. The former is imperfect at the beginning, and ends with the Tale of the Nonne's Priest; it hath the Legend of Gamelyn, but imperfect, as it is in other places.

IV. Sir Hans Sloan's Paper MS. besides other imperfections, wants all the Parson's Tale, but the Legend of Gamelyn is there told by the Coke.

V. He then acknowledges the favour of the Right Honourable the Earl of Carnarvon, now Duke of Chandos, in allowing him the perusal of a very fair MS. on Velom, well preserved, containing all the Tales, and ending with the Retraction. It may be proper here once for all to advertise the Reader, that the Plowman's Tale is not in any of the MSS. which Mr. Urry describes, nor in any other that I have seen or been informed of.

VI. He borrowed from the Honourable Colonel Hen. Worsely a Paper MS. imperfect at the beginning and end, containing all the Tales, but in a different order.

VII. He saw two MSS. in the Royal Library, one on Velom, N^o. 1541. Lumley. which contains all the Tales with the Retraction. The Story of Gamelyn is thus introduced (as it is in several other MSS.) after that of the unthriftly Prentice;

*But hereof woll I passe as now,
And of yong Gamelyn I wol tell you.*

The Shipman's Tale, by the Transcriber's mistake is in this MS. entitled the Marchand's Tale; the Marchaunt's being before written in it's proper place.

VIII. The other MS. in the Royal Library is on Paper, and contains the Tales as in the other, but is much torn in the Manciple's and Parson's Tales. Before Gamelyn it has this Rubrick; Here endeth the Tale of the Cook, and here followeth another Tale of the same Cook. a long Legend of yong Gamelyn.

IX. He borrowed, by the means of the Reverend Mr. Harbin and Mr. Tarborough, of Mr. Edmond Canbey of Thorn in Yorkshire, another fair MS. well preserved: This Book wants the Coke's Tale and Gamelyn, and also the Squire's and the Marchaunt's Tales, and is imperfect in the end.

X. He borrowed of Mr. Norton of Suthwic in Hampshire, by the favour of John Chicheley Esq; a MS. which he guesses to have been written in the time of Rich. II. the Writing being very like that in the Patent of that King to Chaucer for a Pycher of Wine daily: But it is most miserably mangled, a great many leaves being cut out, in every part of it; so that there is scarce one Tale or Prologue entire; and particularly the Parson's Tale has neither beginning nor end. The Legend of Gamelyn is introduced in this Book by the same Verses which have been before set down out of the Velom Book in the Royal Library.

XI. The Reverend and Learned Dr. Jenkins Master of St. John's College in Cambridge, and Margaret Professor in that University, procured from the Publick Library there, a very fine MS. for his perusal; in which are many leaves wanting, which are supplied by a Modern hand (as he thinks) out of the printed Books. It hath before the Tales Chaucer's A. B. C. Littera de Scogan, Balad de bon conseil, A Poem beginning,

*In them when any hert is light,
And flouris freshly spred and spring;*

De amico ad amicum responsio, V Bookis of Troilus and Creseide. Then follow the Tales in their order: But Mr. Urry does not take notice of the Tale of Gamelyn, nor the Retraction in this Book. After the Tales are the following Poems; The Legend of Good Women, Legenda Cleopatre Regine, The Legend of Pyramis and Thisbe, The Legend of Dido Q. of Carthage, The Legend of Hipsiphile and Medea, The Legend of Lucrece of Rome, The Legend of Philomene, The Legend of Phyllis, The Legend of Hypermetestre, The Parlement of Foulis in die Sancti Valentini tent. The Temple of Glas (but this is Dan Lidgate's Supplicatio Amantis) La Compleyn. There are in this Book Figures of some of the Pilgrims on horseback illuminated, which Mr. Urry had not seen in any other MS. of this Author, and he doubts not but this Book originally had them all. Before it is the Picture of Chaucer drawn by Sir Thomas Occleve on a leaf of his Book De Regimine Principis; and Mr. Urry had been informed of another upon the Margin of one of the same Books; and there is a third in the Cotton Library at the end of OTHO. A. XVIII. From which Mr. Urry very justly infers that Occleve, to preserve his Master Chaucer's memory, caused his Picture to be limn'd in every Book that was presented by him to his friends; of the number of which, seems to be that beautiful Copy of it in the Royal Society's Library [N^o 38.] which, besides a Picture of Occleve presenting a Book to Henry V. had doubtless Chaucer's Picture on a Leaf, where that honourable mention is made of him, which has been cut out, perhaps to adorn adorn some MS. of Chaucer, such as that here described in the Publick Library at Cambridge; or that in the Cotton Library, which last contains no more of Chaucer than those Poems beginning, Flie fro the prese, &c. and Sometyme the worlde so stedfast was and stable (which is there entituled Balade Ryalle made by Poeticall Chaucer) Chaucer's Song to his emptye purse, and the first Stanza of Troilus's Song, in the first Book of that Poem.

XII. Mr. Urry gives an account of a MS. of the late Bishop of Ely which he had collated, containing all the Tales with Gamelyn, and the Retraction thus introduced at the end of the Parson's Tale, Here takith the maker of this book his leave; and after it this Rubrick, Here endith the Canterbury tales compiled by Geffrey Chaucer, of whose soule Jhu Crist have mercy. Amen.

XIII. The Honourable Mrs. Thynne, Widow of the Honourable Henry Thynne Esq; Son to the late Lord Viscount Weymouth, was pleased to lend him a MS. purchased by her, which had belonged to Mr. Long a Prebendary of the Church of Exeter. It is a fair Book, but is imperfect at the beginning and end, and wants the Coke's Tale, and that of Gamelyn: But this Defect is sufficiently compensated by the addition of two new Pieces, not extant in any of the other MSS. which are there inserted between the Tale of the Chanon's Teman and Chaucer's Tale of Melibeus, viz. The Adventure of the Pardoner and the Tapster at the Inn in Canterbury, and the Merchant's Tale in the Pilgrim's Return from thence, of which more hereafter.

XIV. The last MS. mentioned by Mr. Urry is a fair and perfect one, borrowed from Sir Nicholas L'Estrange. This he says was the best preserved of any he had seen, and not deficient in any leaves that he had observed. He supposes it had been Sir Henry Spelman's, by the Characters of S^r H. S. on the outside of the Cover, the Book having been newly bound in 1623. He gives no further account of it, but that it contains the following Tales, which being not set down as in his Description of the other MSS. it should seem he did not live to go through it.

With these helps Mr. Urry had made several Corrections throughout the greatest part of Chaucer's Works, and had prepared a fair Copy for the Press, written partly in his own hand and partly by Mr. Ainsworth, to the end of the Frankleyn's Tale. He also printed Proposals for Subscriptions some time before his Death, which happened in March 1714.

In the Proposals it was published that Three new Tales of this Author, never yet printed, were recovered, and would be added to this Edition: By which were certainly meant The Coke's Tale of Gamelyn, The Merchant's Second Tale, or The History of Beryn, and The Adventure of the Pardoner and Tapster at the Inn at Canterbury. Though the latter is not properly a Tale, but an Account of the Behaviour of the Pilgrims; and particularly of the Pardoner, at their Journey's end, and a kind of Prologue to a set of Tales to be told in their Return, it was not judged proper to make any Alteration in that part of the Title Page, lest it should be thought that any thing is omitted in this Edition, which was intended by Mr. Urry.

As to the Tale of Gamelyn, Mr. Urry's Sentiments concerning it may be seen in the Note before it. Mr. Selden was of opinion * that what is called the Tale of the unthristy Prentice, was only a kind of Prelude, and not the Tale it self which the Coke intended to tell; and that those two Verses which immediately precede it, viz.

*And therewithall he lough and made [^b glad] chere,
And seid his Tale, as you shall after here,*

are misplaced, and should have come after it, as an Introduction to the Tale of Gamelyn; and he says they were so placed in a very fair MS. which he had, and in some others.

It were to be wished that this Tale had been more carefully collated with the several MSS. wherein it is found. It may be made much more perfect and correct from the two MSS. which I have had an opportunity of collating, viz. the Harleyan MS. H. i. and Mr. Cholmondley's MS. which shall be described in it's proper place. I shall not take notice here of the minute Variations; some of them which affect the sense being noted in the Glossary as occasion offered: I shall only make a few Remarks out of them in this place.

The Reader will observe a Lacuna after Verse 477. which may be made up out of those MSS. thus;

*Thanne seyde yong Gamelyn Unto the Champioun:
Thou art faste aboute
For to brynge me adoun.*

* De Synedriis Ebraeorum. Amst. 1679. L. II. C. 2. §. 3. p. 360.

^b So it is in MS. Ch.

There

The PREFACE.

*There weren two gentellmen,
God yeve hem gode grace,
That comen to Gamelyn,
Were keperis of the place.*

ŷ. 540, 541.

*Thanne seyde the Champioun,
So browke I my swere.*

After ŷ. 555. MS. Ch. proceed thus;

*And seyde have Gamelyn, thee ring and the ram
For thee beste wrastelere, that evere here cam.

which may be made very good Metre, with very little Alteration.

Instead of beste ŷ. 647. should be read cheste, i.e. Quarrel, debate, &c. See Gower's Conf. Amantis. L. 2. fol. 49. b. Edit. 1554.

ŷ. 706. may be read,

Of fiftene plowis land the prowte. See ŷ. 713.

Instead of bonde ŷ. 865. H. 1. hath bound; but MS. Ch. hath it handefast. In ŷ. 972. both MSS. want be, which is only an Explanation of worthe. After rout, ŷ. 1192. should follow,

*Adam seyde Gamelyn,
What ben now thy redis?
Here comith the Shiregereve,
And wolde have our bedis.
Adam seyde to Gamelyn
My rede is now this, &c.*

Instead of say, ŷ. 1226. the MSS. have see; and ŷ. 1413. Both husbunde and wif; and ŷ. 1629. And with the Jusfice speke. And ŷ. 1692 and the following Verses may out of them be thus read;

*Gamelyn sette hym adoun
In the Jusfic's fete,
And Adam and Ote his brother
Settyn at his fete.
Whanne Gamelyn was sette
In the Jusfic's fete,
Will ye herin of a bourde,
That Gamelyn [tho] dede?
He lete^d fetre the Jusfice, &c.*

These are some of the most material Amendments that may be made out of these MSS. I doubt not but many more as considerable may be made by an exact Collation of all the MSS. wherein this Tale is to be found.

There is very little to be added to what has been said before concerning the other Two Pieces added in this Edition. As they are printed from the single MS. of Mrs. Thynne, the Reader is to expect no more than an exact Transcript from it, which Mr. Ainsworth assured me he had made. It may (perhaps with some shew of reason) be suspected that Chaucer was not the Author of them, but a later Writer, who may have taken the hint from what is suggested in ŷ. 796. of the Prologues, that the Pilgrims were to tell Tales in their Return homewards; but as to that the Reader must be left to his own Judgment. But supposing they

^c H. 1. hath these Verses thus;

And Sir Ote his brother by hym, and Adam at his fete.

^d So it is in MS. Ch.

The PREFACE.

were not writ by our Author, we are however obliged to Mr. Urry's diligence for finding out and publishing Two ancient Poems, not unworthy our perusal: And they have as good a right to appear at the end of this Edition, as Lidgate's Story of Thebes had to be printed in former ones.

When the greatest part of the Tales were printed off, there came to my hands another MS. of the Canterbury Tales, which Mr. Urry had not seen. It belongs to Charles Cholmondley Esq; of Vale-Royal in Cheshire, whose Name should be mentioned with particular respect for his readiness in communicating this MS. without any previous application, as soon as he understood where a new Edition of Chaucer's Works was preparing. It is imperfect at the beginning and in most of the Tales; but those of the Frere and Sompnour are entirely lost. This MS. hath the Retraction at the end of the Parson's Tale. Though this was the first Copy of it which I had seen, yet I had an opportunity of collating it with other Copies before it went to the Press; and therefore the Reader may expect to find it more compleat and correct than any single MS. represents it. The valuableness of it will appear by the use which has been made of it in the Glossary. It was indeed designed that some of the different Readings of it should have been set down at the bottom of the Page in those Tales, which were not printed off when I received it; but my direction being misunderstood at the Press, some of them were inserted in the Text: But this is more particularly taken notice of in the Glossary, where other material differences are also observed as occasion offers. This MS. is quoted by the Abbreviation [MS. Ch.]

The Reader will observe MS. Sp. often quoted in the Glossary, by which is meant a MS. in Octavo partly written on Velum and partly on Paper, containing the Five Books of Troilus and Cresseide. This I found amongst Books and Papers left by Mr. Urry; but I could not perceive that he had made any use of it. It came not to my hands till a long time after that Poem was printed off: But where upon collating I found any material variations in the Reading, I have inserted them in the Glossary. When I made this use of it, I did not know to whom it belonged, and therefore quoted it in the manner mentioned above; because it seemed to have once belonged to that Learned Antiquary Sir Henry Spelman, his name [Henrici Spelman] being written in fair hand on the first leaf of it, and at the beginning of other Tracts contained in that Volume. But I have been since informed that it belonged to the late Lord Viscount Weymouth, from whom it is probable Mr. Urry borrowed it not long before his Death; which might be the reason that no notice is taken of it in that Catalogue he left of the MSS. which he had seen and perused.

There is another MS. of this Poem in the Lord Harley's Library, which has been occasionally consulted when any difficulty occurred in revising the Glossary, and is there meant by H. 3.

It may be of use in this place to give the Reader notice of another MS. in the Harleian Library [34. B. 18.] which, though it contains but Two small Pieces of our Author's, viz. How pyte is dede, &c. p. 421. and that beginning, The longe nyghtis, &c. p. 558. it may be worth an Editor's while to collate for the many Improvements and Corrections that may be made from it, especially in the former Poem; one of which is observed under Herenus in the Glossary, wherein this Book is designed by H. 4.

And it may be equally useful to a future Editor to be advertised, that Chaucer's Tale of Melibeus and his Wife Prudence may receive considerable Improvements from a Fragment of it at the end of a Paper MS. [Nº. 140.] in the Arundelian Collection belonging to the Royal Society; which is the only MS. there that contains any of our Author's Works. This is mentioned here to prevent any future Loss of time in searching amongst those MSS. for the Continuation of the Squier's Tale, which some have pretended to have been compleat in Arundel-House Library: Nor is it likely the curious Enquirer should be more successful in his Researches elsewhere for the Remainder of that Tale, which no doubt was left imperfect by the Author, as it is mentioned in some MSS. and in that MS. of Mr. Selden in the Bodleian Library [Archiv. B. 30. 3360.] after the two Verses which we have of the third part of that Tale, these Eight Verses follow;

*But I here now wol maken a knotte,
To the tyme it come next to my lotte;
For here ben felawes behynde an hepe truly,
That wolden talke full besily,
And have here sport as well as I;
And the day passith certaynly:
Therefore, Ofe, taketh now good bede
Who shall nexte telle, and late him spede.*

The PREFACE.

And certainly Spenser was of opinion that Chaucer never finished it, when he undertook to carry on that Story, so far at least as it made for his purpose, in his Fairy Queen^f; which gave occasion to others to fancy he wrote a Continuation of it. That indeed was attempted by one John Lane in Q. Elizabeth's time: How well he succeeded in his performance is left to the Judgment of such as have leisure to peruse it in the Ashmolean Museum, N^o. 6937.

I had also an opportunity by the favour of an ingenious Friend, of collating a MS. of Jack Upland, on Vellum in a very small Volume, which was of use to explain some, and correct other Passages in it; but the Text is generally so different there from that which is exhibited in this, as well as former Editions of Chaucer, that it may deserve to be printed entire as it is in that MS. which is now in the possession of that indefatigable Collector, Thomas Rawlinson Esq;

I had likewise the assistance of my friends in collating most of the old, and all the valuable Editions; some of which the Reader will find often mention'd in the Glossary, especially those of Caxton and Pynson, which are designed by Ca. 1. 2. and Py. 1. 2. And here it may not be unacceptable to give a short account of such Editions of Chaucer as have come to my hands, or have been collated for me by my friends, not omitting in their proper places such as I find mentioned by others, and particularly by the late industrious Mr. John Bagford in his Collections towards the History of Printing, in the Lord Harley's Library.

Mr. William Thynne in his Dedication of Chaucer's Works to King Henry VIII. says that divers Imprints of them came to his hands, in which he deprehended many errors, falsities, and depravations: But when his Edition came out, which was much more compleat as well as more correct than the former ones, they were totally neglected, and therefore it is very rare to meet with any Copies of them but what are imperfect, especially at the beginning and end; so that the Reader is not to expect here an exact account of the Dates of the first Impressions.

We are told by Mr. Stow in his Survey of London, that the Works of Chaucer were first printed by William Caxton in a thin Folio in 1466. but this is a mistake, for (as Mr. Bagford well observes) Caxton did not print so early. But I have seen Two Editions of the Canterbury Tales published by that Printer, both in a small Folio, in single Columns: The first in a fair large Character, without Cuts, Running Title, or distinction of Stanza's: But the Copy which I perused being imperfect both at the beginning and end, the Date of it no where appears. The other hath rude wooden Cuts of most of the Pilgrims, and of the Supper at the Tabbard Inn, and is printed in a smaller Letter, which is the same with that used in Caxton's Edition of Troilus and Creseide^h, at the end of which he put his name thus; Explicit per Caxton. But the Copy which I saw of this Edition being likewise imperfect, there appears no Date. But that this was not the first Edition of Chaucer, cannot be doubted; many omissions in the former being supplied in this, and several Corrections made where that was very erroneous.

William Caxton, or rather Wynkin de Werde (as Mr. Bagford thought) printed in 4^o. amongst other things, several small pieces of Chaucer's, as The Counsel to [f. of] Chaucer, His Envoy to Scogan, Little John called the Book of Courtesy, Annelida and false Arcyte, The Complaynt of Chaucer to his empty purse, &c. This seems to have been intended as a Supplement to his Editions of the Tales, and is supposed by Mr. Bagford to have been printed in 149...

Mr. Stow^k also mentions the English Translation of Boethius set forth by Caxton with Suigrigus's Verses.

Richard Pynson was the next that printed Chaucer's Works, of which he published Two Editions. The first is in a small Folio, containing only the Canterbury Tales, printed in a large and fair Letter, in one Column, except the Tale of Melibeus and that of the Parson, which are printed in a smaller Character and in two Columns. This seems to have been printed from Caxton's Second Edition; and he acknowledges in the Prohemye to this Edition that it was printed by a Copy of his Master William Caxton^l. But the Copy of it which I perused ^m wanting the Title Page, I cannot determine the year wherein it was published, but Mr. Bagford says it was in 1520, or 1522. This is adorned with wooden Cuts of most of the Pilgrims and of the Supper, differing from those in Caxton's Second Edition, but not much improved.

Pynson's Second Edition came out in 1526. and is printed in two Columns, and contains, besides the Canterbury Tales, and the Retraction at the end of the Parson's Tale (which was the first, and I believe the only time it was printed before the present Edition of it) the Poems following;

The Boke of Troylus and Cresyde, The Boke of Fame, The Assemble of Foules, otherwise called saynt Valentine's day, La bele Dame sauns mercy translate out of Frenche into Englyshe by Geffray Chaucer, flour of poetes, &c. Bonum consilium Galfredi Chaucer, contra fortunam; Flye fro the preace, &c. Morall proverbes of Christine, beginning, The great vertues of our elders notable, and ending, Wo may be that to God endeth mys; The Complaynt of Mary Magdaleyne, The Letter of Dido to Eneas, Proverbs of Lydgate: What other pieces it may contain I know not, the Copy which I had the use of ^o being imperfect at the end.

The Cuts in this are generally the same in the Tales with those in the former Edition of Pynson, and some of them are a little improved. There are also Cuts before most of the other Poems contained in this Edition, which have some relation to the subject matter of them. It has this Note after the Retraction; Thus endeth the boke of Caunterbury tales. Imprinted at London in fletestrete, by me Rycharde Pynson, printer unto the kynges noble grace: and fynished the yere of our lorde god a. M. CCCCC. and xvi. the fourth day of June. This Edition was printed from a Copy of one of Caxton's, which he had corrected for the Press; and the Prohemie to this Edition differs in that part from that to his first Edition ^p.

The next to these in Antiquity is a large Folio in two Columns. This has for the most part the same Cuts which were used in Caxton's second Edition, but worn and much damaged, and therefore most of the Borders of them are cut off; the Cuts of the Knight and Parson are new. Besides the Tales and other Works of Chaucer mentioned in the foregoing Article, it contains the Retraction, (which is in none of the subsequent Editions that I know of) The Romaunt of the Rose, The Complaynt and Testament of Cresseide, The Legend of good Women, The Translacion of Boethius de Consolatione Philosophiæ, The Dreame of Chaucer, The floure of Curtesy, How pite is ded, &c. Of quene Annelida and false Arcite, The Assemble of ladies, The Conclusions of the Astrolabie, The Complaynt of the Black knyght, A Prayse of Women, and The Testament of Love, which is imperfect in the Copy ^q I perused, both the beginning and end of the Book being lost; so that I cannot determine whether this be the first Edition put out by William Thynne, printed (as Leland says) by Berthelet, to which Brian Tucca added an elaborate and elegant Preface^r; or the second, increased by Mr. Stow; and printed by Thomas Godfray in 1532. Cum privilegio à Rege indulto^s.

In 1542. William Bonham dwellynge at the sygne of the Kinges Armes in Paul's Church-yard put out The Workes of Geffray Chaucer, wyth dyvers workes whych were never in print before, Cum privilegio ad imprimendum solum. This has Mr. Thynne's Preface to King Henry VIII. and is the first printed Book that I have seen with the Plowman's Tale, which

ⁿ At the end of the Boke of Fame there is this Note;

There is no more of this foresaid worke, for as it may be wel understoode, this noble man Geffray Chaucer, fynished it at the said conclusyon of the metyng of leysyng and sothsaue: where (as yet) they ben checked and may nat departe. Whiche worke as me semeth, is craftely made, and digne to be written and knownen: for he toucheth in it right great wysedome and subtell understandyng, and so in all his workes he excelleth in myn opynion all other writers in Englyshe, for he writeth no voyde wordes, but all his mater is full of hye and quicke sentence, to whom ought to be gyven laude and praisse, for his noble makynge and writyng: And I humbly beseeche and pray

I purpose to emprente by the grace of Iesu, the boke of the tales of Canterbury, in whiche I fynde many a noble historie, of every astate and degre. Fyrst reherseyng the condicions and the aray of eche of them, as properly as possible is to be said, and after their tales, which ben of nobleste, wysdome, gentleste, myrthe, and also of very holynesse and vertue, wherein he fynyssheth this sayde boke; whiche boke is diligently and trewly corrected, by a copy of William Caxton's imprimsyng, according to the true makinge of the sayd Geffray Chaucer, as hereafter shall followe all along by the helpe of almighty god: to whom I humbly beseeche, that I maye it so archyve and accomplyshe, that it be to his laude, honour and glory; and that all ye that shall in this boke rede or here, wyll of your charite amonge your dedes of mercy, remembre the soule of the sayd Geffrey Chaucer fyrste auttour and maker of this boke; and also, all we that shall se and rede therein, maye so take and understande the good and vertuous tales, that it may so profyete unto the helth of our soules, that after this shorte and transitorye lyfe, we may comme to everlastyng joye in heaven. in this follows that of the Parson, whereas in other Editions it immediately precedes that Tale. The Cuts in this are the same with those in the Edition last mentioned, except one which represents the Knight and the Squier attending him.

The Remedy of Love, The Complaynt of Mars and Venus, The Letter of Cupyde, A balade in commendation of our Lady, John Gower unto the worthy and noble kynge Henry the fourth, Of the Cuckow and the Nightyngale, A Poem beginning, O leude boke with thy foule rudenesse, &c. Scogan unto the lordes, &c. The Poem beginning, Sometime the worlde so stedfast was, &c. Balade of the vyllage wythout payntyng, Chaucer unto his empty purse, Chaucer unto the kynge, The Poem beginning, Consyder wel every circumstance, &c. and Chaucer's Epitaph by Surigonus.

Mr. Bagford mentions another Edition in 1542. by John Reyne at the signe of the St. George in Paul's Churchyard; and says that about this time Chaucer's Works were printed by Thomas Petit living in Paul's Churchyard without Date, with Mr. Thynne's Preface to Henry VIII. at the beginning, and Surigonus's Verses at the end, without Cuts.

In 1555. The Works of Geffray Chaucer newly printed, with divers works which never were printed before, were printed by Richard Kele in Lombard street, Cum privilegio. This Edition has only a Cut of the Knight. The great Initials are finely cut in Wood, and the A hath I. R. in it.

There is another Edition printed by Robert Toye dwelling in Poule's Churchyard at the sign of the Bell, very like this, having I. R. in the A, as the former; but it has no Date. It has the Plowman's Tale before the Parson's; and the Contents are the same with those of Bonham's Edition 1542. and seems to be the same with that of 1561. at the end of which is printed the Story of Thebes by Lidgate, after which is this Note; Imprinted at London by Jhon Kyngstone for Jhon Wight dwellyng in Poules Churchyard. Anno 1561. which was the Edition which Mr. Stow says was increased by his labour. It is thought he received great helps in this Work from the Collections of John Shirley Esq; who was a great Traveller in divers Countries, and among other labours, had painfully collected the Works of Geffrey Chaucer, and John Lidgate and other learned Writers, in sundry Volumes, which Mr. Stow owns he saw, and partly possessed. This Gentleman dyed the twenty first of October 1456. and was buried in the Parish Church of St. Bartholomew the Less, London. Mr. Bagford says, Chaucer's Works were printed by John Kingstone, and George Bishop in 1561. and the year following by Adam Islip.

Mr. Stow tells us, that they were the Third time put forth with Notes by him collected out of divers Records and Monuments, which he delivered to his loving and learned friend Mr. Thomas Speght, who having drawn them into a good form and method, printed them in 1597. Mr. Stow's additions begin at Fol. CCCXL. and are as follows;

A Balad of gentillesse, A Proverb against Covetise and Negligence, Against unconstant women, In the praise (or rather dispraise) of women for their doubleness, The Craft of Lovers, A Poem beginning, Of their nature they greatly them delite, The X Commaundements of Love, The IX Ladies worthie, The Poems beginning, Alone walkyng, &c. In the season of Fevverere, &c. O mercifull and o merciabe. How Mercury with Pallas, Venus, and Minerva appered to Paris of Troie, &c. I have a Ladie, &c. O mossie Quince, &c. Loke well aboute, &c. A Poem beginning, The long nyghtes when every creature, and that beginning, In womanbede as auctours all write, The Court of Love. There were also added in this Edition Chaucer's Dreame, beginning, When Flora the Queene, &c. and The Floure and the Leaf.

This was printed by Adam Islip, at the charges of Thomas Wight, and was begun in 1597, but not published till the year following. It was dedicated by Mr. Speght to Sir Robert Cecil afterwards Earl of Salisbury; after which follows Mr. Beaumont's Letter to Mr. Speght (pressing him to hasten this Edition with his Notes) and the Life of Chaucer drawn up by Mr. Speght from Mr. Stow's Collections, together with a Print of Chaucer from his Picture in Occleve's Book: And at the end is added an Explanation of old and obscure Words, a Translation of the French in Chaucer, a Declaration of the Authors cited by him, together with some Corrections and Annotations; and after the Story of Thebes there is a Catalogue of Lidgate's Works. This was reprinted in the same year by Richard Kele, and (as Mr. Bagford says) by George Bishop towards the end of the year.

There is a Copy of the Edition 1597. with MS. Notes of Junius in the Bodleyan Library amongst his MSS. [N^o. 5121. 9.] but neither did those Notes nor his other Papers there of that nature (which I likewise consulted) afford that assistance which might be expected from so great a Name; most of them being very imperfect, or drawn up rather for his own use than for the information of others.

In 1602. Mr. Speght put out another Edition with some Improvements; in which was first printed the Treatise intituled Jack Upland. He also inserted the Notes of the former Edition amongst the old and obscure words, and added a Translation of the Latin in Chaucer.

Mr. Francis Thynne, Lancaster Herald, Son to Mr. William Thynne, intended to have put out an Edition of Chaucer with Notes, as the Italians had Petrarch, and others, in their Language¹; having, besides the helps left him by his Father, made Collections of his own for that purpose: But whether Mr. Speght had the use of them for this Edition, or what became of them doth not appear. Mr. A. Wood says Mr. Thynne assisted Mr. Speght with his Notes and Directions, as also with considerable Materials for writing of Chaucer's Life²: But that is very improbable, since Mr. Speght doth not acknowledge any such assistance where he mentions Mr. Thynne's intention of undertaking a new Edition of *Chaucer*³.

The last Edition in 1687. scarce deserves a mention here, having all the defects of the former ones, with many additional Errors of it's own. It is furnished with a pompous Title Page only for Sale, pretending that it was compared with the best MSS. and that several things were added never before in print, which are only Two Advertisements; one at the beginning, that the Pilgrim's Tale could not be found; the other at the end, pretending to have found the Conclusion of the Coke's and Squier's Tales. To the former he directs these Lines to be added;

*What throw himself and his felaw that fought,
Unto a mischief both they were brought,
The one ydamned to prison perpetually,
The tother to deth, for he cou not of clergy,
And therefore yong men learne while ye may,
That with many divers thoughts both pricked all the day,
Remembre you what mischief cometh of misgouvernaunce,
Thus mowe ye learne worship and come to substaunce;
Think how grace and governaunce hath brought aboune
Many a poore man's Son chese state of the Town.
Ever rule thee after the best man of name,
And God may grace thee to come to the same.*

At the end of the Squier's Tale, after the two Verses of the third part which are extant, he directs to add the Lines before set down out of Mr. Selden's MS. with the addition of the two following Lines between the sixth and seventh Verses;

*So on this mattere I may no lenger dwell,
But stint my clack, and let the other tell,
Therefore oft [l. oft] taketh, &c.*

Besides these Editions of Chaucer's Works together, several of his Poems have been printed separately, at several times.

The Description of the Plowman and his Tale, were printed in 1606. in 4^o. with Notes which are thought by some to be Mr. Francis Thynne's.

In 1635. Sir Francis Kinaston of Otely in Shropshire published the First and Second Books of Troilus and Cresseide, with an elegant Latin Version of them in Rhime, dedicated to Pat. Junius, Library Keeper to the King: And in the Epistle to the Reader, he promises to translate the remaining Books in the same manner; and in case that Essay met with the Approbation of the Learned to publish the whole, with a Comment or Notes for the fuller Illustration of that Poem. And it seems he lived to finish this Work, though not to publish it; for I have been informed that there was a MS. of it in the hands of the late Mr. Henry Aldriche, Dean of Christ-Church, Oxon. (whose Name is never to be mentioned by a Member of that Society without the utmost Respect and Gratitude) out of which Mr. Urry procured some of the Notes to be transcribed, which have been made use of in the Glossary. I could never learn what became of that MS. but I am perswaded if it falls into the hands of a person capable to judge of it, he will not grudge the Learned World the use of so valuable a Piece by suppressing it, or delaying it's Publication.

An Anonymous Writer published a Comment on the Miller's Tale, and on the Prologue and Tale of the Wife of Bath in 1665. at the instance (as he says) of several Persons of Quality, who importuned him to go on with the rest; but the Author excuses himself, on account of his Age, from proceeding any further in that Work.

Mr. Ashmole printed the Chanon's Teme's Tale with some Notes, in his Theatrum Chemicum in 1652.

Mr. Dryden turned into modern language the Knight's Tale, the Wife of Bath her Tale, and the Nonne's Priest's Tale, and also the Poem Of the Floure and the Leafe, which are printed amongst his Fables in 1700. and at the end of that Book, those Poems are printed as they were written by Chaucer. He also wrote the Character of a Good Parson, in Imitation of Chaucer's Description of the Parson in his Prologues, with some Enlargements, which is printed in the same Volume.

Mr. Pope also modernized two of the Canterbury Tales, viz. The Merchant's Tale of January and May, and the Wife of Bath her Prologue, which are among his Works printed in 1717. And some other of our Author's Poems have been attempted by other ingenious Persons in the same manner.

I shall not trouble the Reader in this place with a particular Enumeration of the other Books which I had occasion to make use of in compiling the Glossary, many of them being mentioned in the Explanation of the Abbreviations, &c. before it, and the rest quoted at length where they are referr'd to in the Body of it. He will easily observe how much this Work, such as it is, owes to the Harleyan Libraries: But I must not omit making my particular Acknowledgments to the Right Honourable the Lord HARLEY, not only for his readiness in communicating such MSS. and printed Books as were necessary to be consulted in the progress of it (a Quality which he enjoys in common with other learned Collectors of Books) but for his personal Directions in very many Particulars relating to it, without which the use of his numerous and valuable Collection could not have been so available to my Design. Had I consulted his Lordship's Inclinations more than the Advantages which the Learned may receive from his Communicative Disposition, I should have concealed this, as I do many other uncommon Favours I have received from him: But it may be of no small service to such as may be hereafter engaged in a Task of the like nature, to be informed where they may receive the best Instructions, as well as Materials, for the accomplishment of it.

Before I proceed to make an Apology for the Defects of the Glossary, I should acquaint the Reader, that many of the Ancient English Poets have been read over in order to make it the more perfect, many words occurring frequently in them, which we read but once, or very seldom, in our Author; and therefore the sense could not be well determined without looking into other Writers of the same Age. Amongst these Gower and Lidgate were of most use, the latter being a close Imitator of Chaucer's Language, as He was of that of the former; and as they borrow Thoughts and Expressions from one another, so they give light to the mutual Illustration of one another. What is said of Lidgate holds true in a great measure of Occleve: And had there been time allowed for more Reading in this way, the Glossary might have been made more universal; but as it is, it will be found useful for the understanding of most of the Old English Poets as well as Chaucer.

Some will no doubt account it a Defect in this Glossary, that I have not entered further into the Etymologies of Words: To which I shall only answer, that I was at first enjoyed to be as short as possible in the Explanation of them; which has been scrupulously observed, where it was not necessary to give the Origine of a Word in order to determine it's signification. But to make amends for the Compendiousness of it, in this respect, I have very frequently referred to the Authors where a fuller Explanation may be found.

It was once intended to have prefixed to the Glossary some general Rules for the better understanding of Chaucer's Language: But as there was not time allowed for drawing them up in a proper Method, the Reader must be content to take them as he finds them occasionally dispersed through it. For the same reason another Design was laid aside, which would in some degree have compensated the want of Notes upon Chaucer; and that was to give a short History of Persons and Places so far as they were referred or alluded to in his Works: But that would have taken up more time to do it to the learned Reader's Satisfaction, as well as my own, than has been spent in putting out this Edition, as long as it has been in hand: For besides the hints out of the Greek and Latin Authors, there are frequent Allusions to Romances and Legends in several Languages well known in Chaucer's time; so that to make that Work tolerable, the Undertaker must be Master of all that sort of Learning and Knowledge which was peculiar to that Age. The Reader must therefore be contented with the few Notions of that kind which he will find interspersed in the Glossary, and the Account of Authors subjoined to it, printed out of the former Editions with some Improvements.

The Reader will find at the end of the Glossary a compleat Collection of the French and Latin Expressions used in Chaucer, which are not only translated, but more fully explained than in the former Editions: And some Corrections are also attempted where there are manifest Corruptions.

I must

The PREFACE.

I must not leave this Subject without doing justice to that worthy Gentleman, whose Name was mentioned in the last Proposals for this Edition, as having undertaken a more useful and copious Glossary for the better understanding of this Poet. Such a Work performed by a Person of his extensive Learning and uncommon Knowledge in this particular Study, would have fully answered that Character: But as we are deprived of the Benefit of his Labours in this kind (for what reasons I am not at this time satisfied) I would not have his Reputation suffer by the imperfection of this Performance, and therefore am bound to acquit him of having any hand in compiling this Glossary.

Some may possibly expect in a Preface of this kind an Account of the Original of English Poësie, and of it's Progress to our Author's time: But this hath been so fully and accurately performed by the learned Dr. Hickes, that I need not be ashamed to own I had nothing to add, nor do I care to transcribe.

Nor shall I be more solicitous to vindicate this Author from the Imputation of Smut and Obscenity. It has been very well observed by others that he has put it into proper mouths; and that having proposed to himself to describe the Manners of all Degrees of Persons in his time, he was under a sort of necessity to introduce this Character. I shall only add, that our present Words of Ribaldry, which are of English growth, were anciently Words of Decency, and had then a clean and modest signification.

The Number of Errata's needs no Apology to such as are acquainted with Works of this nature; especially if it be consider'd that my distance from the Press could not, without very much retarding the Work, allow me to revise the Sheets more than once: But I chose rather to the risk of Censure by giving a full List of the most material ones, than impose upon the Reader by concealing them. Many of them had passed unregarded in the former Editions, and were propagated from one of them to another: But I made a scruple of correcting any of those in the Text without express Authority, but I have in the Glossary given my Conjectures concerning some of them as occasion offered, and the rest are corrected among the Errata. Those parts of our Author's Works which are written in Prose abound most with Errors of this sort; but none more than his Translation of Boethius de Consolatione Philosophiæ: But upon collating the several passages which are corrupted with the Latin Original, it will be found not very difficult to restore most of them. The Reader will find in the Glossary some Specimens of what may be done by that means.

I cannot conclude this Preface without expressing my Regret that I have not sufficient Materials for enlarging upon the Character of Mr. Urry, a Gentleman so remarkable, not only for his Learning and Industry, but more particularly for his great Charity, constant Integrity, and a peculiar Happiness of being always most agreeable to his private Friends. But I must not omit the mention of his Gratitude to the Place of his Education, which he intended to express by a Legacy of Five hundred Pounds towards the new building of Peckwater: And he often took occasion to tell his Friends, with what cheerfulness he went on with this Work, as it would enable him the better to perform his pious and generous Intention; which since he did not live to accomplish, must however be gratefully acknowledged to be in some measure made good by his worthy Executor William Brome Esq; formerly of Christ Church (who was likewise Mr. Urry's intimate Friend, and at the same time with him an Ornament to that Society) by appropriating a Third part of the Profits of this Edition to the carrying on of that Building.

Having finished what I had here to offer to the Reader's consideration, I shall dismiss him from any further trouble, with Mr. Urry's own words to him in the short Sketch of a Preface, which was mentioned before: "If this is the First Edition of Chaucer that ever thou didst read, it will be to little purpose to tell thee what pains I have been at to fit out this Edition for thee. Thou wilt, may be, not thank me for what I have done, and complain of me for having left so much undone. All this I do believe thou mayst do justly: But if thou hast read any of the former Editions, thou wilt be my witness that I have been at some trouble in settling the Text, and giving Metre to the Poet's Verse, in collating many MSS. and not a few Printed Books, writing out Indexes, looking over a great many Dictionaries for words I could not find, as well as for words I could. In short, if thou ever wert an Editor of such Books, thou wilt have some compassion on my failings, being sensible of the toil of such sort of creatures; and if thou art not yet an Editor, I beg truce of thee till thou art one, before thou censurest my Endeavours."

Eight godely QUESTIONS with their ANSWERS*.

Sometime in Grece, that noble region,
There were eight clerkis of full grete science,
Philosophers of notable discrecion;
Of whom was asked, to provin their prudence;
Eight questions of derke intelligence:
To which they answered after their entent,
As here doth appere plaine and evident.

Thee first question was, What ertly thing
Is best, and unto God most commendable?
The first clerke answered without tarying,
A mann's soule ever firme and stable
In right, [and] from the trouh not variable.
But now alas! full sore may we wepe;
For covetise hath broughte trowth alkepe.

The second, What thing is most odious?
A double man, sayed the Philosopher,
With virgine face, and a taile venomous,
With a fair view, and a false profer:
A corrupt carien in a golden tree.
It is a monster in natures linage,
One man to havin a double visage.

The third [question,] What is the beste dower
That may be to a wife appropriate?
A clene life, was the clerkis answer.
Without sinne, all chaste, and inviolate
From all deceits, and speches inornate,
Or countenance, which shall be to dispise:
No fire make, and then no smoke woll arise.

The fourth question [was,] What maiden may
Be called clene in chastitie?
The fourthe clerke answered, which alway
Every creature is ashamde on to lie,
Of whom men reporten great honestie:
Good maidens kepe youre chastitie forth,
And remember that good name is gold worth.

[The fifth] Who' is a pore man ev'er full of wo?
A covetous man which is a nigon,
He that in his herte can never say ho;
The more gode, the lesse distribution;
The richer, the worse of condition:

Men in this coast clepen him a niggard,
[And] Sir Guy the bribour is his steward.

[The sixth] Which is a rich man without fraud?
He that canne to his gode suffice;
Whatever he hath, he yeveth God the laud,
And kepeth him clene from all covetise;
He desires nothing in ungodly wise;
His body is here, his mind is above:
He is a rich man, for God doth him love.

Who is a foole? is the seventh demand;
He that wolde hurt, and bath no powere;
Might he mikell, much wolde he command;
His malice grete, his might nought were;
He threteth full fast, full little may he dere:
He thinketh not how men have sayed beforne,
God sendeth a shreude Cowe a short horn.

Who is a wise man? is the eight question;
He that might noye, and doth no annoiance;
Might punish, and leaveth punission;
A man mercifull, without vengeance:
A wise man puttith in remembraunce
[This] Saying, Had I venged all mine harme,
My cloke had not been furred halfe so warme.

To the Kinges most noble grace, and to the Lords and Knightes of the Garter.

TO you welle of honour and worthinesse,
Our Christen King, the heire and successour
Unto Justinian's devout tendernesse,
In the faith of Jesu our redemptour;
And to you, lordis of the Garter, floure
Of chevalrie, as men you clepe and call,
The lord of vertue, and of grace outhour,
Graunt the fruit of your lose never appall.

*Quenam summa boni? Mens qua sibi conscia recti.
Pernicies homini qua maxima? Solus homo alter.*

*Quis dives? Qui nil cupiat. Quis pauper? Avarus.
Qua dos matrona pulcherrima? Vita pudica.
Qua casta est? De qua mentiri fama veretur.
Quod prudentis opus? Quum possit, nolle nocere.
Quid stulti proprium? Non posse, & velle nocere.*

O liege lorde, that have the likenesse
 Of Constantine, th'ensample and mirrour
 To princes all, in humble buxomenesse
 To holy church, O veray sustainour
 And pillar of our faith, and werriour
 Againe of heresies the bitter gall:
 Doe forth, doe forth, continue your succour,
 Hold up Christis banner, let it not fall.

This Isle or this had ben but hethenesse,
 N'ad be of your faith the force and vigour;
 And yet this day the fiendis crabbednesse
 Wenith fully to catch a time and houre,
 To have on us your lieges a sharpe shoure,
 And to his servitude us knitte and thrall:
 But aye we trust in you our protectour,
 On your constaunce we awaitin all.

Commaundith that no wight have hardinesse,
 O worthy king, our Christen Emperour,
 Of the faith to disputin more or lesse
 Openly emonges peple: Her errour
 Springeth all day, and engendrith rumour.
 Makith such law, and for ought may befall,
 Observe it wele, thereto be ye doctour;
 Doth so, and God in glorie shall you stall.

Ye Lordis eke, shining in noble fame,
 To which approped is the maintenaunce
 Of Christ's cause, in honour of his name,
 Shove on and put his foes to utteraunce;
 God wolde so, and so wolde eke your legiaunce;
 To the two aye prickith you your dewte.
 Who so nat kepeth this double observaunce,
 Of merite and honour naked is he.

Your stile sayith [that] ye ben foes to shame:
 Now kith of your faith the perseveraunce,
 In which an hepe of us ben halt and lame,
 Our christen king of Englonde and of Fraunce,
 And ye my lordis with your alliaunce,
 And other faithful peple that there be,
 Trust I to God, shall quench al this noisance,
 And this lond set in high prosperite.

Conquest of high prowesse is for to tame
 The wild wodenesse of all this miscreaunce;
 Right to the rote daily repe ye that fame.
 Slegen nat this, but for God's plessaunce
 And his mother, and in signifaunce
 That ye ben of saint George's livere,
 Dorth him service, and knightly obeisaunce;
 For Christis cause is his, well knowin ye.

Stiffe stand in that, and ye shall greve and grame
 The foe to pece, the norice of distaunce;
 That now is ernest, turne it into game;
 Now kith of your beleve the constaunce,
 Lord liege and lordis, have in remembraunce,
 Lord of all is the blisfull Trinite,
 Of whose vertue the mightie habundaunce
 You herten and strengthen in faithfull unite.

When faith faylith in Priest's sawes,
 And lordes hestes are holde for lawes,
 And robberie is holde purchase,
 And letcherie is holde solace;
 Then shall the lond of Albion
 Be brought to great confusoun.

It falleth for a gentleman
 To say the best that he can
 Alwaies in mann's absence,
 And the sooth in his presence.

It commeth by kind of gentil blood
 To cast away all hevinesse,
 And gadher togither wordis good,
 The werke of wisdom beareth witnesse.

ANNE R.

WHEREAS Our Trusty and Well-beloved John Urry, Student of Christ-Church College in our University of Oxford, hath humbly represented unto Us, that he hath with great Labour and Expence prepared for the Press a compleat and correct Copy of the Works of Geffrey Chaucer, with a Glossary, and in order thereunto has carefully perused and compared not only all the former Editions of Value, but many rare and ancient Manuscripts not hitherto consulted; from the collating of which he hath in a great measure restored and perfected the Text, amending many Errors and Corruptions that have crept in, and continued in all the Editions hitherto printed, remarked many Pieces in them falsely ascribed to Chaucer, and added several entire Tales never yet printed, as well as many single Lines hitherto omitted in former Editions of this Work; by which Alterations, Amendments and Additions, the Work is in a manner become new; and has therefore humbly besought Us to grant him Our Royal Privilege and Licence for the sole Printing and Publishing thereof for the Term of Fourteen Years: We being graciously inclined to encourage the said Undertaking, are pleased to condescend to his Request, and do therefore by these Presents grant unto him the said John Urry, his Heirs, Executors, Administrators and Assigns, Our Royal Licence and Privilege for the sole Printing and Publishing the Works of Geffrey Chaucer as he hath collated them with the Manuscripts, and the Glossary aforesaid, for the Term of Fourteen Years from the Date hereof, strictly forbidding and prohibiting all Our Subjects within Our Kingdoms and Dominions to reprint the same, either in the like, or in any other Volume or Volumes whatsoever, or to import, buy, vend, utter or distribute any Copies thereof reprinted beyond the Seas, during the aforesaid Term of Fourteen Years, without the Consent or Approbation of the said John Urry, his Heirs, Executors, Administrators and Assigns, under his or their Hand and Seals first had and obtained, as they will answer the contrary at their Peril. Whereof the Master, Warden, and Company of Stationers are to take notice that the same may be entered in their Register, and that due Obedience be rendered thereunto.

Given at Our Court at Kensington the Twentieth Day of July 1714. in the Thirteenth Year of Our Reign.

By Her Majesty's Command,

W. Bromley.

N. B. This Licence was Assigned by Mr. Urry unto Bernard Lintot Bookseller, the Seventeenth Day of December 1714.

JEOFFREY CHAUCER.

The PROLOGUES of the Canterbury Tales of CHAUCER, from the MSS.

WHEN that Aprilis with his Shouris fote,
The drought of March had percid to the rote,
And bathid every veyn in such licour,
Of which vertue engendrid is the flour.
When Zephyrus eke, with his swete breth
Enspirid hath, in every holt and heth
The tender croppis; and that the yong Sunn
Hath in the Ramm his halve cours yrunn:
And smale foulis makin melodye,
That slepin alle night with opin eye,
(So prickith them nature in ther corage)
Then longin folk to go on pilgrimage:
And Palmers for to sekin strange stondes,
To servin Hallowes couth in sondry londes:
And specially fro every shir'is end
Of England, to Canterbury they wend,
The holy blisfull Martyr for to seke,
That them hath holpin, whan that they were seke.

Befell that in that seson on a day
In Southwerk at the Tabberd as I lay,
Redy to wendin on my Pilgrimage
To Canterbury, with devote corage,
At night wer come into that Hostery
Wele nine and twenty in a company

Of fundrie folk, by aventure yfall
In felasship; and Pilgrimes wer they all;
That toward Canterbury wouldin ride.
The Chambers and the Stablis werin wide,
And well we werin esid at the best:
And shortly whan the Sunne was to rest,
So had I spokin with them everychone,
That I was of ther felasship anone;
And made forward erli for to rise,
To take our weye, ther as I did devise.
But nathleß while that I have time and space,
Er' that I farther in this Tale pace,
Methinkith it accordaunt to reson,
To tell you alle the Condition
Of ech of them, so as it semid me;
And which they werin, and of what degree,
And eke in what array that they wer in:
And at a Knight then woll I first begin.

The Knight.

A Knight ther was, and that a worthy man,
That fro the time that he first began
To ridin out, he lovid Chevalrie,
Trough and Honour, Fredome and Curtesy,

B

Full

Full worthy was he in his Lord's werre,
And thereto had he riddin nane more ferre
As well in Christendom, as in Hethnes;
And evyr honoured for his worthines.

At Aleffandre' he was whan it was won;
Full oft timis he had the bord begon
Abovin allè Naciouns in Puce;
In Lettow had he riddin, and in Luce,
No Christen-man so oft of his degree
In Granada; in the Sege had he be
Of Algezir, and ridd in Belmary;
At Leyis was he, and at Sataly,
Whan that they wer won; and in the grete See
At many'a noble army had he be:
At mortal battails had he ben fiftene,
And foughtin for our feith at Tramesene,
In listis thrys, and alwey slein his fo.

This ilke worthy Knight had ben also Sometimis with the Lord of Palathy,
Ayens anothir hethin in Turkey;
And evirmore he had a Sov'raane prize;
And though that he was worthy, he was wise;
And of his port as meke as is a Maid,
He nevyr yet no villany ne said
In all his life unto no manner wight:
He was a very parfit gentil Knight.
But for to tellin you of his array,
His hors wer good; but he was nothing gay,
Of Fustian he werid a gipon,
Allè besmottrid with his haburgeon.
For he was late ycome from his viage,
And wentè for to do his pilgrimage.

The Squire.

With him there was his Sonn, a yongè Squire,
A Lovir, and a lusty Bachillere,
With lockis curle, as they were leid in prefs;
Of twenty yere of age he was, I ghesse,
Of his Stature he was of evin length,
Wondirly delyver, and of grete Strength;
And he had ben sometime in Chivauchie
In Flandris, in Artois and Picardye,
And born him wele, as of so littil space,
In hope to standin in his Lady's grace.
Embroudid was he, as it were a Mede,
All full of fresh flouris both white and rede;
Singing he was or floyting all the day,
He was as fresh as is the Month of May.
Short was his goune with slevis long and wide,
Well couth he sit an hors, and feire yride;
And Songis he couth make, and wel endite,
Just, and eke daunce, and well portraie and write.
So hote he lovid, that by nighter tale
He slept no more than doth the Nightingale.
Curteys he was, lowly, and servisable,
And karft before his faðir at the table.

The Squire's Yoman.

A Yoman had he, and Servantes no mo,
At that time, for him list to ridin fo.
And he was clad in Cote and hode of grene,
A sheff of Pecoock arrowes, bright and kene,
Undir his belt he bare, full thriftily;
Wel couth he drefs his tackle yomanly,
His arrowes droupid not with fethris low;
And in his hand he bare a mighty bow.

A nott hede had he, with a brown visage,
Of wood-craft wel couth he all the usage.
Upon his arme he bare a gay bracer,
And by his side a Swerd and bokeler,
And on that othir side a gay daggere
Harnisid wele and sharp as point of Spere;

A Christopher on' his brest of silver shene,
An horne he bare, the baudrick was of grene;
A Foster was he sothly, as I ghesse.

The Prioreße.

There was also a Nonne, a Prioreße,
That of her smiling was simble and coy;
Her gretist oth was but by Seint Eloye. 120
And she was clepid Madame Eglentine;
Full wele she song tho the Service devine,
Entunid in her nose full family;
And French she spake full fayr and fetisly,
After the School of Stratford attè Bowe,
For French of Paris was to her unknowe.
At Metè was she well ytaught withall,
She let no morfell from her lippis fall;
Ne wet her fingris in her saucè depe;
Well couth she carry' a morfell, and well kepe, 130
That no dropè ne fell upon her brest;
In curtesie was sett full much her lest.
Her over-lippè wipid she so clene,
That in her cup there was no ferthing sene
Of grece, whan she dronkin had her draught;
Full family aftir her mete she raught;
And sikerly she was of gret disport,
And full plesant and amiable of port;
And painid her to counterfete chere
Of Court, and to ben stately of Manere, 140
And to ben holdin digne of reverence.

But for to spekin of her conscience,
She was so charitable and so pitous,
She wouldè wepe, if that she saw a Mous
Caught in a Trapp, if it were ded or bled.
Of smale houndis had she that she fed,
With rostid flesh, or milk and wastel bred;
But fore wept she, if any' of them were ded,
Or if men smote them with a yard smert,
And all was conscience, and tendir hert. 150

Full family her wimple pinchid was:
Her nose was tretes, her yin gray as glas,
Her mouth full smale, and thereto soft and red,
But sikirly she had a fayr forehed;
It was almost a spannè brode I trow;
For hardity she was not undergrow.

Full fetise was her cloke, as I was ware;
Of smale corall about her arm she bare 90
A pair of bedis, gaudid alle with grene,
And theron hong a broch of gold full shene, 160
On whiche ther was first writ a crownid A,
And after, Amor vincit omnia.
Another Nonn also with her had she,
That was her chapelein, and priestis thre.

The Monke.

A Monke ther was fayr for the Maistery,
An outrider, that lovid Venery;
A Manly man, to ben an Abbot able,
Many a dainty horse had he in stable:
And when he rode, Men might his bridle here 170
Gingiling in a whistling wind as clere
And eke as lowd, as doth the Chappell bell
Ther as this Lord was keper of the Cell;
The rule of St. Maure and of St. Benet,
Because that it was old and somdele streit,
This ilke Monke let old thingis to pace,
And heldin after the new world the trace.
He gave not of the text a pullid hen,
That faith, that Hunters be not holy men,
Ne that a Monke, whan he is recheles,
Is likenid till a fish, that's waterles: 180
This is to say, a Monke out of Cloystre,
This ilk text yeeld he's not worth an Oystre:

I seide

I seide his opinion was good,
What shuld he study, or make himself wood,
Upon a boke in cloystre alweie poure,
Or swinke with his hondis, or labour,
As Austyn did. How shall the world be served?
Let Austyn have his swinke to him reserved.
Therefore he was a Prikasoure aright;
Greiounds he had as swift as foule of flight: 190
Of pricking, and of hunting for the hare
Was all his lust, for no cost would he spare.

I see his sleves purfilid at the hande
With grys, and that the finist in a lande.
And to sustene his hood under his chinn,
He had of gold wrought a full curious pinn;
A Love-knot in the greter end ther was.
His hed was bald, and shone as any glas,
And eke his face as he had ben anoint;
He was a Lord full fat, and in gode point: 200
His eyen stepe, and rolling in his hed,
That stemid as a furneis of led.
His bootis souple, his hors in gret estate;
Now certainly he was a fayr Prelate!
He was not pale as a forpinid ghost,
A fat Swann loved he beste of any rost.
His palfry was as browne as is a berry.

A Frere

A Frere there was, a wanton and a merry,
A Limitour, and a full solempne man,
In all the Orders four is none that can
So much of daliaunce and fair langage.
He haddè made full many'a marriage
Of yongè women, all at his own cost,
Till his Order he was a noble post.
Full wele beloved, and familier was he,
With Frankleins all over his Contre,
And with the worthie Women of the towne;
For he had powir of confessioun,
As he seide himself more than a Curate,
For of his Order he was Licentiate: 210
Full swetely herde he their confessioun,
And plesant was his absolutioun.
He was an esy man to give pennaunce,
Ther as he wist to have a gode pittaunce;
For unto a pore Order for to give
Is a signe that a man is wele yshrive:
For if he gave ought, he durst make avaunt,
He wist wele that that man was repentaunt;
For many' a man so herde is of his herte,
That he may not wepe, although him fore smert; 230
Therefore instede of weping and prayers,
Men mote give silver to the pore Freres.
His tippet was ay farfid full of knives,
And pinnis for to givin to faire wives.
And certainly he had a merry note,
Wele couth he sing and playin on a Rote:
Of yedding he bare utterly the price.
His neck was white as is the Floure de lis.
Therto stronge was he as a champion,
And knewe the Tavernes wele in every toun, 240
And every hostiler and tapistere,
Better than a Lazere, or a beggere;
For unto such a worthy man as he
Accordith naught, as by his faculte,
To have with such like Lazares acqueyntaunce,
It is naught honest, it may not avaunce,
For to have deling with suche base poraille;
But alle with rich and sellers of Vitayle,
And over alle, as profit shulde arise;
Courtis he was, and lowly of servise.
Ther na's no man no wher so vertuouse,
He was the best beggere in alle his house.

And gavin a certaine ferme for the graunt,
None of his brethren camin in his haunt.
For though a Wedowe had nought but a Scho,
(So plesant was his In principio)
Yet would he have a ferthing er he wente,
His purchase was wele better than his rente:
And rage he couth as it werin a whelpe.
In love dayis ther couth he mikill helpe, 260
For ther he was not like a Cloisterere,
In a thred-bare Cope, like a pore Scolere;
But he was like a Maistere or a Pope;
Of double worstede was his semy Cope,
So roundid 'twas as a bell out of presse.
Somewhat he lipsid for his wantonnesse,
To make his English swete upon his tonge,
And in his harping whan that he had songe,
His eyen twinkelid in his hede aright, 270
As don the Sterris in a frosty night.
This worthy Limitour was cleped Huberde.

A Marchaunt.

A Marchaunt was ther with a forkid berde,
In motley, and high on his horse he fere,
Upon his hed a Flaunders' bevir hat,
His bootis clafsid faire and fetisly,
His refons ay spake he full solempnly,
Shewing alweye the' encrease of his winning,
He would the See wer kept for any thing,
Betwixte Middleborough and Orewell;
Well couth he in eschaunge his Sheldis sell. 280
This worthy man so wele his wit bifett,
That there wist no wight that he was in debt.
So statly was he with his governaunce,
With his bargeins, and with his chevifaunce.
Forsooth he was a worthy man with all;
But sooth to faine, I n'ot what men him call.

The Clerke of Oxenford.

A Clerke there was of Oxenford also,
That unto Logik longe time had y go.
As lenè was his horse as is a rake,
And He was nothing fat I undertake, 290
But lookid hollow, thereto soberly:
Full thredbare was his overist Courtpy;
For he had gettin him no benefice,
Ne was so worldly for to have office:
For him had lever han at his bedshed
Twentie bokis, yclad with black or red,
Of Aristotle' and his Philosophie,
Than robis riche, fithell, or gay sautrie.
But albe that he was a Philosopher,
Yet had he but little gold in his Coffer, 300
But alle that he might of his frendis hent,
On bokis and on learning he it spent;
And busily gan for the Soulis praye
Of them, that gave him wherewith to Scholeie.
Of studie tookin he most cure and hede
Nought oo word spak he more than ther was nede,
And that was seide in forme and reverence,
And short and quick, and full of high Sentence.
Sowning in moral vertue was his speche,
And gladly would he learn, and gladly teche. 310

The Sargeant at Law.

A Sargeant of the Law both ware and wise,
That oftin had yben at the Pervise,
That was also full rich of excellence,
Discrete he was, and of grete reverence, 250
He semid suche, his wordis were so wise:
Justice he was full oftin in Assise,

By

By Patent, and by pleine Commissioun;
 For his Science, and for his high renoun,
 Of fees and robis had he many oon.
 So grete a purchasour was no wher none.
 All was fee simple to him in effect,
 His purchasynge might not ben in suspect.
 No wher so besy'a man as he ther n'as,
 And yet he semid besier than he was.
 In termis had he caas and domis all,
 That fro the time of King William were fall.
 Thereto he couth endite, and make a thing;
 Ther couth no wight pinchin at his writing.
 And every statute couth he plaine by rote,
 He rode but homely in a medley cote,
 Girt with a Seint of Silk, with barris smale;
 Of his aray telle I no lenger tale.

The Frankelein.

A Frankleyn was in his company;
 White was his berde as is the Daiysefey,
 Of his complexion he was sanguine;
 Well loved he by the morrow' a sop in wine:
 To live in delight was ever his wonne,
 For he was Epicurus his own Sonne,
 That held Opinioun, that plaine delite
 Was the verray felicitye perfite.
 An Householder, and that a grete, was he,
 St. Julian he was in his Countre;
 His brede, his Ale was alweye after one;
 A bett viendid Man was no wher none;
 Withoutin bake mete never was his house,
 Of fishe and fleshe, and that so plenteouse,
 It snwid in his house of mete and drinke,
 And of all dainties that men couth of think:
 After the soudre sefons of the yere
 So chaungid he his mete and his suppere.
 Many a fat Partriche had he in mewe,
 And many' a Breme, and many' a Luce in stewe.
 Woe was his Coke, but that his saucis were Poinant and sharp, and redy alle his gere.
 His table dormaunt in his halle alwey
 Stode redy covered all the longè dey.
 At Cessiounes ther was he Lord and Sire,
 Full often times he was Knight of the Shire.
 An Anlas, and a gipsire alle of silk
 Hing at his girdill, white as morowe milk.
 A Shereve had he ben, and Coronner,
 Was no wher such a worthy Vavefor.

Haberdasher, &c.

An Haberdasher and a Carpenter,
 A Webbe, a Dier, and a Tapiser,
 All they were clothid in oo lyvere,
 Of a solempne and grete fraternite,
 Full fresh and newe their gere y pikid was,
 Their knives y chapid ne wer not with brads,
 But al with silver wrought ful clene and wele,
 There gurtheles and there pouchis every dele.
 Well semid eche of them a faire burgeys,
 To sittin in a yelde Hall on the deys;
 Everich for the wisdome that he cann,
 Was Shape lich for to ben an Aldermann.
 For Cattaile had they right inough and rent,
 And eke their wivis woulde it wele assent,
 And ellis certain thei werin to blame,
 It is full fair to ben clepid Madame,
 And to gone to Vigillis all before,
 And have a Mantell roialiche y bore.

The Coke.

A Coke thei haddè with them for the nones
 To boyle the chickens and the marie-bones,

And poudre Marchaunt, tarte, and galingale;
 Well couth he know a draught of London Ale.
 He couth rostè, boilè, grillè and frie;
 And make mortreis and well bake a Pie.
 But grete harme was it, as it semid me,
 That on his Schinnè a Mormall had he,
 For blank manger that made he with the best.

The Shipman.

A Shipman was there wonning ferre by West; 390
 For ought I wote he was of Dertemouth;
 He rode upon a rouncy, as he couth,
 In a gownè of falding to the knee: 330
 A dagger hanging on a lace had he,
 About his neck, under his arm adoun:
 The hot Sommer had made his hew all broun.
 And certeynly he was a gode felaw,
 Full many' a draught of Wine had he ydraw
 Fro Burdeux ward while that the chapmen slepe,
 Of nycè Conscience toke he no kepe. 400
 If that he faught, and had the higher hand,
 He sent them home by water to eche land.
 But of his craft to rekin wele his tides,
 His strems, and his daungeres him besides,
 His herbrough, his mone, and his Lode menage, 340
 There was none such fro Hull unto Cartage.
 Hardie he was, and wise to undertake;
 With many' a tempest had his berde ben shake:
 He well knew all the Havins as they were,
 Fro Scotland to the Cape of Fynyftere, 410
 And every creek in Brittain and in Spain,
 His barge y calid was the Maudelain.

The Dr. of Phisick.

With us ther was a Doctour of Phisick,
 In all this world ne was ther none him like
 To speke of Phisike and of Surgery;
 For he was groundid in Astronomy;
 He kept his pacient a full gret dele
 In houris by his Magike naturele;
 Well couth he fortunè the ascendent
 Of his images for his pacient. 420
 He knewe the cause of every maladic,
 Were it of hote, or cold, or moist, or drie;
 And where engendrid, and of what humour,
 He was a very parfit practifour.
 The cause yknow, and of his harme the rote,
 Anon he gave to the sike man his bote.
 Full redy had he his 'Pothecaries,
 To send him druggis and 'lectuaries,
 For eche of them made other for to winne:
 Their frendship n'as not new, now to beginne. 430
 Well knew he the old Esculapius,
 And Dioscorides, and eke Rufus,
 Old Hippocrates, Haly, and Galen,
 Serapion, Rasis, and Avicen,
 Averrois, Damascene, Constantine,
 Bernard, and Gatifden, and Gilbertin.
 Of his diete mesurable was he,
 For it was of no superfluite,
 But of grete norisshing, and digestible.
 His studie was but litil in the Bible; 440
 In Sanguine, and in Perse he was clad all
 Linid with Tafata, and with Sandall.
 And yet he was but esy of dispence,
 He keptè that he wan in Pestilence;
 For gold in Phisike is a cordiall;
 Therefore he lovid gold in special.

The

The Wife of Bath.

A gode wife there was also beside Bathe,
But she was somdele defe, and that was scathe.
Of Clothmaking she hadde such a haunt,
She passid them of Ipre, and of Gaunt. 450
In all the Parish wife ne was there none,
That to the offryng shoulde before her gone,
And if there did, certaine so wroth was she,
That she was outin of all charite.
Her covercheifes were large and fine of ground,
I durst to swere that thei weyid thre pound,
That on a Sonday were upon her hedde;
Her hofin werin of fine Scarlet redde,
Full strait ystrainid, and her shoos full new;
Bold was her face, and fayr and red her hew: 460
She was a worthy woman all her live,
Husbandes at the Chirche dore had she had fve,
Withoutin other companie in youth,
But thereof nedith not to speke as nouth.
Thries hadde she ben at Jerusalem,
She had passid many a straunge strete,
At Rome had she ben, and als at Boloine,
In Gallice, at Seint Jame, and at Coloine;
She couth much talk of wandring by the way;
Gap-tothid was she, soothly for to say: 470
Upon an Ambler esily she satte,
All wimplid well, and on her hed an hatte
As brode as is a bokeler or a Targe;
A foot-mantill about her hippis large,
And on her feet a paire of Spurris sharpe.
In felawship wele couth she laugh and carpe,
Of remedies of love she knew perchaunce,
For she couth of that art the oldè daunce.

The Parfone.

A gode Man there was of Religioun,
And he was a pore Parfone of a Toun: 480
But riche he was of holy thought and werke,
He was als a lernid Man, and a Clerk,
That Christ's gospell trewly wolde preche,
His Parish'ners devoutly wolde he teche.
Benigne he was, and wonder diligent,
And in Adversite full pacient:
And soch one he was provid oftè sithes.
Full loth were him to cursin for his tithes,
But rather wolde he gevin out of dout,
Unto his pore Parish'ners all about, 490
Both of his offryng and of his substaunce;
He couth in liry thing have suffisaunce.
Wide was his parish, and housis asonder,
But he ne left, neither for raine, ne thonder,
In Sikeness, ne in mischief to visite
The ferthist in his parish, much or lite,
Upon his fete, and in his hand a staffe;
This gode ensample to his shepe he yafte,
That first he wrought, and afterward he taught;
Out of the Gospell he the wordis caught, 500
And this figure he addid eke therto,
That if gold rustid, what shoulde iron do?
For yef a Priest be foule, on whome we trust,
No wonder is it a lewde man to rust:
And shame it is (but that a Priest take kepe)
To see a shittin Shepherd and clene Shepe.
Well ought a Priest ensample for to yeve,
By his own clenesse how his Shepe shoulde live.
He sette not his Benefice to hire, 510
And let his Shepe acomber in the mire;
And ren to London, unto Seintè Powles,
To sekin him a chaunterie for Soules;
Or with a broðerhede to ben withhold:
But dwell'd at home, and keptè well his fold,

So that the wolf ne made 'hem not miscary,
He was a shepherd, not a mercenary.
And though he holy were and vertuouus,
He was not to sinfull men dispitous.
Ne of his spechè daungerous, ne digne, 520
But in his teching discrete and benigne,
To drawin folk to hevin bi fairenesse,
Bi gode ensample, this was his besnesse.
But if were any person obstinate,
Whether he were of high or low estate,
Him woulde he snibb sharpely for the nonis:
A better Priest I trowe no where none is.
He waitid after no pomp ne reve'ence,
Ne makid him no spicid Conscience,
But Christ's lore and his Apostles twelve
He taught, but first he followed himselve. 530

The Ploughman.

With him there was a Ploughman his broðer,
That had lad of dong many a fother;
And a trewe Swinker, and a gode was he,
Living in pece and perfite charite.
God lov'd he best with all his wholè herte,
At alle timis, though him gained or smerte;
And then his neighbouris right as himselve;
And he would thresh, and thereto dike and delve,
For Christ's sake, for every pore wight,
Withoutin hire, if it lay in his might. 540
His tithis payid he full faire and well,
Both of his proper swink, and his cattell:
In a Tabbarde he rode upon a Mare.
There was also a Reve, and a Millare,
A Sompnour, and a Pardoner also,
A Manciple, and my self, ther was no mo.

The Millare.

The Millare was a stout Carle for the nones,
Full bigge he was of braune and eke of bones,
That prov'd he wele, for o're all there he cam 550
At wrastring he would have away the Ram.
He was short shulder'd, and a thicke gnarr,
There n'as no dore but he would have the barr,
Or breke it at a renning with his hedde;
His berde as anie Sow or Fox was redde,
And thereto brode as though it were a Spade:
Upon the Coppe right of his nose he hade
A wert, and thereon stode a tuffte of heeres,
Red as the bristelles of a Sow's eres; 490
His nostrilles also black werin and wide,
A Swerde and bokeler bare he by his side; 560
His mouth as wide was as a grete forneis,
He was a jangler and a Golierdeis,
And that was most of Sinne and harlotreis;
Wele couth he stele corne, and tolle thrys,
And yet he had a thombe of gold parde.
A white Cote, and a blew hode werid he;
A Bagge pipe well couth he blow and sowne,
And therewithall brought he us out of towne.

The Manciple.

A Manciple there was of the Temple,
Of which all Catours might take ensample, 570
For to ben wise in buying of Vitaille;
For whether he payid or toke by taile,
Algate he waitid so in his ashate,
That he was ay before in gode estate.
Now is not that of God a full faire grace,
That such a lewde Mann's wit shall pace
The wisdom of a hepe of lernid Men?
Of Maisters had he mo than thryis ten,

C

That

That were of lawe expert and curious,
Of which ther were a dofin in that house,
Worthy to ben Stuaards of house and londe
Of any Lordè that is in Englonde,
To make him livin by his proper gode,
In honour detteles, but if he were wode,
Or live as scarfly as him list desire,
And able for to helpin al a Shire
In any caas that might fallin or hap:
And yet this Manciple set all ther cap.

The Reve.

The Revè was a sklender colerik man,
His berde was shawe as nie as e're he can;
His here was by his eris rounde thorne,
His top was dokkid like a priest beforne:
Full longè were his leggis, and full lene,
Ylike a Staf, ther was no calfe y fene.
Well couth he kepe a Garner and a Binn,
Ther was none Auditour couth on him winn.
Well wist he by the drought and by the raine
The yelding of his fede, and of his graine.
His Lord's shepe, his nete, and his deirie,
His swine, his hors, his store, and his pultrie,
Were wholly in this Reve's governing,
And by his Covènaunt yave he rekening,
Syn that his Lord was twenty yere of age,
Ther couth no man bring him in arrerage.
There ne was Bailie, herd, nor other hine,
That he ne knew his sleight and his covine;
They were adradd of him as of the deth:
His wonning was full fayr upon an heth.
With grenè trees yshadowd was his place,
He couthè better than his Lord purchase;
Full rich he was astorid prively;
His Lord he couth wele plesin subtilly,
To yeve and lenin him of his own gode,
And have a thank, and get a Cote and hode.
In youth he had ylernd a gode mistere,
He was a Whelewright and a Carpenter.
This Revè sat upon a right gode Stot,
That was all pomelly gray, and hight Scot.
A longè Surcote of Perfe blew he hade,
And by his Side he bare a rustie blade.
Of Norfolkè was this Reve of whiche I tell,
Beside a town men clepin Baldifwell.
Tuckid he was as is a Frere about,
And ever he rode hinderest of our rowte.

The Sompnour.

A Sompnour was ther with us in the place,
That had a fry red cherubimes face,
For fauflemè he was, with eyin narow,
All hote he was, and lech'rous as a Sparow,
With scallid browis blak, and pilid berde,
Of his visage childern were fore afferde.
Ther n'as quyksilver, litarge, ne brimstone,
Borace, Cereuse, ne oile of Tarter none,
Ne Ointement, that woldè clesse or bite,
That him might helpin of his whelkis white,
Ne of his knobbis sitting on his chekes.
Well loved he garlike, onions, and lekes,
And for to drinkin strong wine, red as blode,
Then wold he speke and crie as he were wode.
And when that he well dronkin had the wine,
Then wolde he speke no word but Latine:
A few Schole termis couth he, two or thre,
That he had lernid out of some decre:
No wonder is, he herde it all the day,
And ye well knowin eke, how that a jay
Can clepe watt, as well as can the Pope,
But whofo couth, in other thinges, him grope,

Then had he spent all his Philosophie,
(A questio quid juris) wolde he crie.
He was a gentil harlot and a kind,
A better felaw sholde a man not find;
He woldè suffer for a quarte of wine,
A gode felaw to have his Concubine
A twelvemonth, and excuse him at the full;
Full prively eke a finch couth he pull,
And if he found owher a gode felawe,
He woldè techin him to have none awe
In sochè caas of the Archdekin's curse,
But if a Mann's Soule wer in his purse,
For in his purse he sholdè punish'd be,
Purs is the Archdekin's hellè, seid he.
But well I wot, he lyith right indede,
Of cursing ought eche sinfull man to drede:
Cursing woll slay, right as affoiling savith,
And als ware him of a significavit.
In daungere had he, at his ownè gife,
All the yong girlis of the diocise,
And knew ther counsaile, and was of ther rede.
A Garlond had he sette upon his hede,
As gret as it werin for an Alestake,
A Bokeler had he made him of a Cake.

The Pardoner.

With him ther rode a gentil Pardonere,
Of Rouncevall, his frend and his compere,
That strait was comè from the Court of Rome;
Full loude he song, come hiðir lov'is sone;
This Sompnour bare to him a stiff burdoun,
Was never tromp of half so gret a Sown.
This Pardonere had here as yellowe' as wax,
And smothe it heng as doth a strike of flax;
By ouncis heng his lokkis that he had,
And therewith he his shulderes oversprad,
Full thynne it lay, by culpons one by one;
But hode for jollitie werid he none,
For it was trussid up in his walet;
Him thought he rode all of the newè fet,
Dischevele, saaf his cappe, he rode al bare:
Such glaring eyin had he as an hare.
A vernycle had he sewd on his cappe.
His Walet lay before him in his lappe.
Bret full of pardon come fro Rome al hote,
A voice he had as smale as hath a gote.
No berde he had, ne never shuldin have,
As smothe it was as it were late shave.
I trowe he were a gelding or a mare;
But of his craft, fro Barwike unto Ware,
Ne was there such another Pardonere:
For in his Male he had a pilowbere,
Which, as he seidè, was our Ladies vaile:
He saide, he had a gobbet of the Saile
Which Seint Peter haddè, whan that he went Upon the See, till Jesu Christ him hent.
He had a croos of Laton full offstones,
And in a glas haddè he piggis bones;
But with these relikis, whan that he fonde,
A pover parfone dwelling up on londe,
Upon o day he gat him more money,
Than that Parfone got him in monthis tweye.
And thus with fainid flatering and japes,
He made the Parson and the peple' his apes.
But truly for to tellin at the last,
He was in Church a nobill ecclesiast;
Well couth he rede a lesson or a storie,
But alderbest he songe an offertorie:
For wele he wistè, whan that song was songe,
He must prechè, and well afile his tonge,
To winnè silvir, as he full wele cou'd,
Therefore he songe so merrily and lowd.

Now

Now have I tolde you sothly in a claufe,
The State, aray, and nomber, and the Cause,
Why that assemblid was this companie
In Southwerke, at this gentil hostelrie;
That hight the Tabbarde, faste by the Bell.
But now it is time to you for to tell,
How that we barin us that ilke night,
Whan we wer in that hostelrie alight,
And after woll I tellin our viage,
And all the remnaunt of our Pilgrimage.
But first I pray you of your curtasie,
That ye n'arett it nought my villanie,
Though that I plainly speke in this mattere;
To tellin you ther words, and eke ther chere,
Ne though I speke ther wordis properly.
For this ye knowin al as wel as I,
Whofo shall telle a tale after a man,
Mote reherse, as nygh as ever he can,
Everich word, if it ben in his charge,
Al speke he nevir so rudely ne large:
Or ellis he mote telle his tale untrewre,
Or feynè thingis, or find wordis newe:
He may not spare tho he wer his brother,
But as wele say o word as another.
Christ speke himself full brode in holie writ,
And wele ye wote no villanie is it.
Eke Plato sayith, whofo can him rede
The wordis mote be Cofin to the dede.
Also I pray you to forgive it me,
All have I not set folk in ther degre,
Here in these talis as thei sholdè stonde,
My wit is short ye may well understonde.
Grete chere made our host as everichone,
And to the suppere set he us anone:
And servid us with vitales of the best,
Strong was the wine, and wele to drink us left.
A femely man our hoste was withal,
To ben a Marshall in a Lord's Hall;
A large man he was, with eyin stepe,
A fayrer Burgeis is there none in Chepe.
Bold of his speche, and wise, and well ytaught,
And of manhodè lakkid him right naught.
And eke thereto he was a mery man,
And after suppere playin he began,
And spake of mirth amongis other thinges,
Whan that we haddè made our rekeninges;
And seide thus, now Lordingis trewly,
Ye ben to me welcome right hertely:
For by my trouth, if that I shal not lie,
I saw not this yere soche a cumpanie
At onis in this herbrue' as is now,
Fain would I don you mirthè, wist I how.
And of a mirth I am right now bethought,
To don you ese, and it shal coste nought.
Ye gon to Canterbury, God you speke,
The blisfull Martir quite you your mede:
And well I wot as ye gon by the way,
Ye shapin you to talkin and to play:
For trewly comfort ne mirth is there none,
To ridin by the way as domb as stone.
And therefore woll I makin you disport,
As I seide erst, and done you some comfort.
And if you likith all by one assent
For to stonde at my will and judgement;
And for to workin as I shal you say,
To morrow, whan we ridin on the way;
Now by my fa'ir's Soule, that is dede,
But ye be mery, I woll give my hede;
Holdith up your hondis without more speche;
Our Counsaile was not longe for to seche:
Us thought it was not worth to make it nice,
And grauntid him withoutin more avise,

And bad him say his verdict as him left:
Lordinges, quoth he, now herk'nith for the best, 790
But take it not I pray you in disdaine,
This is the point to speke it plat and plaine,
That eche of you to shortin oth'er's way
In this viage, shall tellin talis tway;
To Canterbury ward, I mean it so,
And homewardes he shall tellin other two,
Of Aventures, whilome that have befall;
And which of you him berith best of all,
That is to sayn, that tellith in this case,
Talis of best Sentence, and most so'ace, 800
Shall have a Suppere at our alder cost
Here in this place sitting by this Post,
When we come ayen fro Canterbury.
And for to makin you the more mery
I woll my selvin godelie with you ryde,
Right at mine ownè cost, and be your gyde.
And whofo wolle my judgement withsay,
Shall pay for all we spendin by the way.
And if that ye vouchsaaf that it be so,
Telle me anon withoutin wordis mo; 810
And I woll erely shapin me therefore.
This thing was grauntid, and our othis swore,
With full glad herte, and praydin him also,
That he woldè vouchsaaf for to do so,
And that he woldè ben our governour,
And of our talis judge, and reportour:
And set a Suppere at a certaine price;
And we wold rulid ben at his devise,
In hie and low; and thus by one assent
We ben accordid to his judgement. 820
And thereuppon the wine was fett anone,
We dronkin, and to rest went ilke one,
Withoutin any longer tarying.
The Morrow whan the day began to spring,
Uprose our Host, and was our alder Cock,
And ga'drid us togethir on a flock.
And forth we riddin all a litil space
Unto the watering of St. Thomas:
And there our Host began his horse arest,
And seide, Lordingis, herk'nith if ye lest, 830
Ye wote your foreword, and I it record,
If Ev'esong and Morrowsong accord.
Let see now who shall tellin the first tale.
As ever mote I drinkin wine or ale,
Whofo is rebell to my judgement,
Shall pay for all that by the way is spent.
Now drawith Cut ere that ye farther twin,
The whiche that hath the shortist shall begin.
Sir Knight, quod he, my Maister and my Lord,
Now drawith Cut, for that is mine accord,
Come nere, quod he, my Ladie Prioreffe,
And ye, Sir Clerke, let be your shamefacednesse, 770
Ne studie not, lay hand to, every man;
Anone to drawin every wight began.
And shortly for to tellin as it was,
Were it by Adventure, or Sort, or Caas,
The sothe is thus, the Cut fell to the Knight,
Of which full blithe and glad was every wight.
And tell he must his tale, as was refon,
By foreword, and by Composition, 850
As ye han herde; what nedith wordis mo?
And whan this gode Man saw that it was so,
As he that wise was, and obedient,
To kepin his forward by free assent,
He seide, sithin I shall begynn the game,
Th'art welcome, Cut, to me a Godd's name.
Now let us ride, and herk'nith what I say,
And with that word, we ridin forth our way,
And he began, with a right mery chere,
His Tale, the which anon right shall ye here.

Thus endith the Prologues of the Canterbury Tales. And follows, I. The KNIGHT's TALE.

I. The KNIGHT's TALE.

Hylome, as oldè stories tellin us,
There was a Duke, that hightè Theseus,
Of Athens he was Lord and Governour,
And in his timè soche a Conquerour,
That greter was there non under the Son:

Full many a rich countrie had he wonn,
What with his wisdome, and his chivalrie,
He conquer'd all the reign of Feminie,
That whilome was yclepid Scythia:
And weddid the Quene call'd Hypolita, 870
And brought hir home with him to his Countrie,
With mikill glorie and solempnitie,
And eke hir yongè Sister Emelie.
And thus with victorie and melodie
Let I this worthy Duke to Athens ryde,
And all his host in armis him beside.

And certis if it n'ere too long to here,
I would have toldè fully the manere,
How wonnin was the reign of Feminie,
By Theseus, and by his chevalrie.
880 And of the gretè bataile for the nones,
Betwixt Athenis and the Amazones.
And how befegit was Hyppolita,
The feire, yonge, hardie Quene of Scythia.
And of the feste that was at their wedding,
And of the tempest at their home-coming.
But al these thynges I mote as now forbere,
I have, God wot, a largè felde to ere,
And wekid ben the oxin in the plow,
The remnaunt of my tale is long inow.

I will not lettin eke none of this rout,
Let every felaw tell his tale about;

And let see now who shall the Suppere win:
But there I left I woll agayn begin.

This Duke, of whome I makin mencion,
When he was come almost unto the toun,
In all his welè, and in his most pride,
He was ware, as he cast his eye aside,
Where that there knelid in the highè wey
A companie of Ladys twey and twey, 900
Eche aftir other, cladde in clothis blake,
But soch a crie, and soch a wo they make,
That in this world ne is cature living,
That evir herdè such a weymenting.
And of this crie they n'oldè nevir stentin,
Till they the reins of his bridle hentin.

What folk be ye, that at my home-comming
Perturbin so my feest with your crying,
Quoð Theseus? have ye so grete envie
Of mine honour, that thus compleine and crie? 910
Or who hath you misbodid, or offended?
890 Now tellith me, that it may be amended,
And why that ye be clothid thus in blake?

The oldist Lady of them allè spake,
Whan she had fownid with a dedelie chere,
That it was ruthe her for to see and here:
She seidè, Lord, to whom Fortune hath given
Victory' and as a conquerour to liven,
Nought grevith us your glorie and honour,
But we besechin mercie and succour, 920
Have mercie on our wo and our distres,
890 Some drop of pitè through thy gentilnes,
Upon us wretchid wymin, let thou fall;
For certis, Lord, there n'is none of us all,

That

That she n'ath ben a Duchesse or a Quene,
 Now be we Catives, as it is wele sene.
 Thankid be Fortune, and her false whele,
 That none estate asurith to be wele.
 Now certis, Lord, to abide your presence,
 Here in this Temple of the Goddesse Clemence, 930
 We have ben weyting all this fourtenyght;
 Help us, Lord, sith it lyith in thi might.
 I wretch, which that wepe and weyle thus,
 Was whilome wyf to King Capanëus,
 That starfe at Thebis, cursid be the day;
 And allè we that ben in this aray,
 And makin all this Lamentacioun,
 We lostin all our husbondes at that toun,
 While that the Segè there about is lay;
 And yet now the old Creon (Welaway) 940
 That Lord is now of Thebis the Citie,
 Fulfillid of ire and iniquitie,
 He, for despite and for his tirannie,
 To doin the dede bodies villanie,
 Of all our Lordis which that ben yslaw,
 Hath all the bodyes on an hepe ydraw,
 And woll not suffre them by none assent
 Neither to ben buried, nowther ybrent;
 But makith houndes to ete them in dispite.
 And with that worde withoutin more respite 950
 They fallin gruf and cridin pitoussie,
 Have on us wretchid wymmen some mercie,
 And let our Sorow sink into thine herte.
 This gentil Duke down from his Courser sterte,
 With hertè pitous, whan he herde them speke,
 Him thoughtin that his herte wou'de al to breke,
 Whan he saw them so pitous and so mate,
 That whylome werin of so gret estate,
 And in his armis he them al uphent,
 And them comfortith in full gode entent, 960
 And swore his ooth, as he was a trew Knight,
 He wold doin so ferforthly his might,
 Upon the Tiraunt Creon them to wreke,
 That all the pepyl of Grece shuldè speke,
 How Creon was by Theseus y served,
 As he that hath his dethe ful wele deserved.
 And right anon withoutin more abode
 His baner he displayid and forth rode
 To Thebis ward, and all his host beside.
 No nerre Athenis wolde he go ne ride, 970
 Ne takin his ese fully half a day,
 But onward on his wey that night he lay:
 And sent anon Hippolita the Quene,
 And Emelie her yongè Sustir shene,
 Unto the Toune of Athenis to dwelle,
 And forth he ritte, ther n'is no more to telle.
 The red Statue of Mars with spere and targe
 So shinith in his white banner large,
 That alle the feldis glittrin up and doune:
 And by his banner borne is his pennon 980
 Of gold ful rich, in which there was ybete
 The Minotaur, which that he wan in Crete.
 Thus ritt this Duke, thus ritt this Conquerour,
 And in his host of chivalrie the flour,
 Tyl that he came to Thebis, and alight
 Feire in a felde, ther as he thought to fight.
 But shortlie for to spekin of this thing,
 With Creon, which that was of Thebis King,
 He fought, and slew him manly as a Knight
 In plain bataille; and put his folke to flight. 990
 And by assault he wan the Citie after;
 And rent adoune both wall, and sparre, and rafter;
 And to the ladies he restor'd ageyn
 The bonis of ther frendis that were fleyn;
 To don obsequies, as tho was the gife.
 But it were all too long for to devise
 The grete clamour, and eke the weymenting,
 That the Ladies madin at the brenning

Of the bodies, and the gretè honout
 That Theseus the nobil Conquerour 1000
 Doth to the Ladys, whan they from him went.
 But shortly for to telle is mine entent:
 Whan that this worthy Duke, this Theseus
 Hath Creon slaine, and wonne Thebis thus,
 Stille in that felde he toke all nyght his rest,
 And did with alle the Countrie as him lest.
 To ransake in the taas of bodys dede,
 Them for to strip of harneis and of wede
 The Pillours did their besinesse and cure,
 Aftir the bataille and discomfiture. 1010
 And so befell, that in the taas thei found
 Through grit with many grevous blodie wound
 Two yongè Knightis, ligging by and by,
 Both in armis same, wrought full richely.
 Of whichè two Arcitè hight that one,
 And that othir Knight hightè Palamon.
 Not fully quik, ne fully dede they were,
 But by their Cote-Armoures, and by their gere
 The Heraulds knew them best in speciall,
 As thei that werin of the blode riall 1020
 Of Thebis, and of Sustir two yborne;
 Out of the taas the Pillours han them torne,
 And han them caried soft into the tent
 Of Theseus, and he ful sone them sent
 To Athenis, to dwellin in prisoun
 Perpetuelly, them n'olde he ransoun.
 And whan this worthi Duke hath thus ydone,
 He toke his hoste, and home he goth anone,
 With laurell crounid, as a Conquerour;
 And there he livith in joy and honour 1030
 Terme of his life, what nedith wordis mo?
 And in a Toure in anguish and in wo
 Dwellith this Palamon, and eke Arcite
 For evir more, there may no gold them quite.
 Thus passith yere by yere, and day by day;
 Tyl it fell once in a morrow of May,
 That Emelie, that fayrer was to sene
 Than is the lilly upon the stalk grene,
 And fresher than the May, with flouris newe,
 For with the rose colour strofe hir hewe, 1040
 I n'ote which was the fayrer of them two;
 Er it was day, as was her wont to do,
 She was arisin; and all redie dight,
 For May woll have not sluggardy annight.
 The Seson prikkith every gentill herte,
 And makith it out of his slepe to sterte,
 And faith, aryse, and do May observaunce:
 This makith Emelie have remembraunce
 To don honour to May, and for to rise;
 Y clothid was she freshe for to devise, 1050
 Her yellow heer was broidid in a tresse;
 Behind her back, a yardè long I gesse;
 And in the gardyn, as the sunn up risfe,
 She romid up and down, and as she listè
 She gaðrith flouris party white and rede,
 To make a sotill garland for her hede;
 And as an Aungel hevynly she song
 The grete Tour, that was so thik and strong;
 [Which of the Castell was the chief Dongeon;
 Ther as the Knightis werin in Prifon, 1060
 Of which I toldè you, and tellin shall]
 Was evyn joynaut to the gardyn wall,
 There as this Emelie had her playing.
 Bright was the Sunn, and clere in the morning,
 And Palamon, this woful Prifonere,
 As was his wont, by leve of his gaylere
 Was up, and romid in a Chambr' on high,
 In which he all the nobill citie figh;
 And eke the gardyn, full of braunchis grene
 There as this freshe Emilia the Shene. 1070
 Was in her walk, and romid up and down;
 This sorowfull pris'oner, this Palamon
 D
 Goth

Goth in his chambre roming to and fro,
 And to himself compleyning of his wo;
 That he was born, ful ofte he seid alas!
 And so befel by aventure or caas
 That through a window, thik of many'a bar
 Of iren grete, and square as any spar,
 He cast his eyin on Emilia;
 And therewithall he blent, and cryid A!
 As though he stongin were unto the herte;
 And with that crie Arcit' anon up-stert,
 And seide, Cofin myne, what eylith The
 That art so pale, and dedly for to se?
 Why cridist'ow? Who hath The don offence?
 For Godd'is love take al in pacience
 Our Prison, for it may none othir be:
 Fortune hath geve us this Adversitie.
 Some wikk' aspect, or disposicion
 Of Saturne, by some constellacion
 Hath yeve us this; although we had it sworn,
 So stood the hevyn whan that we were born!
 We mote endure it: This is short and playn.
 This Palamon answerde, and seide agayn,
 Cofyn, forsoth of this opinion
 Thou hast a vaine imaginacion;
 This Prison causid me not for to crie,
 But I was hurt right now thorough min eye
 Into myne hert; that woll my banè be:
 The fairnesse of that Lady, that I fe
 In yondir Gardyn roming to and fro,
 Is cause of all my crying and my wo.
 I n'ore wher she be Womman or Godesse!
 But Venus it is sothly, as I gesse;
 And therewithall on knees adown he fyll
 And seide, Venus, if it be thy will,
 You, in this gardyn, thus to transfigure
 Before me forowfull wretchid cature,
 Out of this Prison help that we may scape;
 And if so be my destinie be shape,
 By eterne word to dyin in Prison,
 Of our lynage have some compassion,
 That is so low ybrought by Tirannie.
 And with that word, Arcitè gan espie
 Whereas the Lady romid to and fro:
 And with that sight her beauty hurt him so,
 That, if that Palamon was woundid fore,
 Arcit' was hurt as much as he, or more;
 And with a like, he seide pitoullie
 The fresh beautie, slayith me bodilie
 Of her, that romith in the yondir place
 And but I have her mercy and her grace,
 That I may seen her at the lestè wey,
 I n'am but dede: ther n'ys no more to sey.

This Palamon, whan he these wordis herde, Dispitoullly he lokid, and answerde
 Wher' seist'ow this in ernest or in play?

Nay, qð Arcit' in ernest by my fay:
 God help me so, me list full ill to pley.
 This Palamon gan knyt his browis twey,
 It were, qð he, to The no grete honour
 For to be false, ne to be a Traytour
 To me, that am thy Cofyn, and thy broðir
 Ysworne full depe, and ech of us to othir.
 That nevir for to dyin in the peyne
 Tyll that the deth departin shall us tweyne,
 Neither of us in love to hindir othir,
 Ne in none othir caas, my levè brothir;
 But that thou shuldist trewly furthir me
 In every caas as I shuld furthir The;
 This was thine Oth, and mine also certayn.
 I wot right wele thou dar'st it not withsain:
 Thus art'ow of my counseill out of doute,
 And now thou woldist falsly ben aboute
 To love my Lady; whom I love, and serve,
 And evir shall, till that myne herte sterfe.

Now certis, false Arcit', thou shalt not so;
 I lovid hir first, and tolde The my wo
 As to my Counseyle, and my broðir sworne
 To furthir me; as I have seide before;
 For which thou art y boundin, as a Knight
 To helpin me, if it lye in thy might,
 Or ellis art'ow false, I dare well sayn.

1080 This Arcitè full proudly spake agayn,
 Thou shalt, qð he, be rathir false than I:
 And thou art false. I tell the utterly;
 For Paramour, I loved her first er' thou;
 What wilt'ow sayn, thou wist it nought yet now
 Whethir she be a woman, or Godesse.

This is affection of Holynesse;
 And mine is love to an erthly creature
 For which I toldè The mine aventure
 As to my Cofyn, and my broðir sworne.
 1090 Suppose that thou lovidist her before,
 Wotist'ow wel the oldè clerkis saw
 That who shall give a Lovir any Law?
 Love is a gretter Lawè, by my pan,
 Than may be yeve to any erthly man;
 Therefore positive Law, and such decre,
 Is broke all day for love; in ech degre.
 1170 A man mote nedis love, maugre his hede,
 He may not fleen it, though he shuld be dede,
 Albè she maide, widow, or ellis wife.

And eke it is not likely all thy life
 To stondin in her Grace, no more than I:
 For wele thou wost, thy selfin verily,
 That thou and I ben damnid to prison
 Perpetuell, us gainith no ransom.
 We strive, as did the Houndis for the bone
 That fought al day, and yet ther part was none.
 1180 There came a Cur, while that they wer so wroth,
 And bare away the bone betwixt them both.
 And therfore atte a King's court; my broðir,
 1110 Ech man for himself, ther is none othir.
 Love if thou list; for I love, and ay shall;
 And soothly, lese broðir, this is all.
 Here, in this Prison, motè we endure,
 And everich of us take his aventure.

Grete was the strife and long betwixt them twey
 If that I haddè lesure for to sey:

1190 But to th' effect, it happid on a day
 (To tell it you as shortly as I may)
 A worthie Duke, that hight Perithous,
 (That felaw was unto Duke Theseus Sithin the day that they were childrin lite)
 Was come t' Athenes his felaw to visite,
 And for to play, as he was wont to do:
 For in this world he lovid nō man so:
 And he loved him as tenderly again,
 So wele they lovid, as old bokis sain,
 1200 That when that one was dede, soothly to tell,
 His felaw went, and sought him down in Hell.
 But of that Story list me not to write.

Duke Perithous lovid well Arcite,
 And had hym known at Thebis yere by yere,
 And finally at the request and prayer
 Of Perithous, withoutin ransom

Duke Theseus let him out of Prison
 Freely to gon, wher' that him list o'r all,
 In such a gise, as I you tellin shall.
 1210

This was the Foreward plainly to endite
 Betwixt Duke Theseus, and him Arcite
 That if so were, that Arcitè were found
 Evre' in his life, by day, or night, o flound
 In any Contre of this Duke Theseus
 And he were caught, it was acordid thus;
 That with a Swerde, he shuldè lese his hede.
 There n'as none othir remedie, ne rede,
 But takith his leve, and homeward him sped
 Let him be ware, his neck lyith to wed:

1220
How

How grette sorow suff'rith now Arcite?
 The deth, he felith through his herte smite.
 He wepith, wailith, cryith pitoullie,
 To slein himself he waitith privily.
 And seide, alas! the day, that I was borne.
 Now is my Prison worse than beforne!
 Now is me shape eternally to dwell
 Nought in Purgatorie, but right in Hell.
 Alas, that e'r I knew Perithous!
 For ellis had I dwelt with Thesèus,
 Fetterid in his Prison evir mo:
 Than had I ben in blifs, and not in Wo.
 Only the sighte of hir, whom that I serve,
 Though that I nevir may her Grace deserve,
 Wold have sufficid right ynow for me.
 O deerist Cosyn Palamon, q'ð he,
 Thine is the Victoite' of this Aventure,
 Full blisfull in Prison mayst thou endure,
 In Prison? nay certis in Paradys,
 Well hath Fortune to The turnid the Dice,
 That hast the sight of her, and I th' absence.
 Possible is [fyn thou hast her presence,
 And art a Knight, a worthy and an able,
 That by some caas, since Fortune is changable].
 Thou mayst sometime to thy desire attaine,
 But I that am exilid, and barraine
 Of allè grace, and in so grete despaire,
 That ther n'is water, erth, ne fire, nor aire,
 Ne cature, that of them y makid is,
 That may me hele, or done comfort in this,
 Well ought I serve in wanhope, and distresse.
 Farewell my life, my lust, and my gladnesse;
 Alas! why pleyne men so in commune
 Of purveyance of God; or of Fortune,
 That givith them full ofte in many a gise,
 Well bettir, than themselvin can devise.
 Some man desirith for to have richesse,
 That cause is of his murdre or siknesse.
 And some man wolde out of his prison faine,
 That, in his house, is of his meinye flaine.
 Infinite harmis ben in this matere!
 We wote not for what thinges we prayin here.
 We fare as he, that dronk is as a mouse,
 A drunken man wot well, he hath an house,
 But he n'ot whichè is the right wey thithir:
 And to a dronkin man the wey is slidir.
 And certis in this world so farin we.
 We sekin fast aftir felicitie,
 But we gon wrong full oftè trewily;
 Thus may we sayin all, and namelich I,
 That ween'd, and had a grete opinion
 That if I might escape fro the prison,
 Then had I ben in joy, and perfite hele;
 Ther now I am exilid fro my wele,
 Sith that I may non seen you Emilie
 I n'am but dede. Ther n'is no remedie.
 Upon that othir side, whan Palamon
 Wist, that his Cosin Arcite was gon,
 Such sorow makyth he, that the grete Tour
 Resownid of his yelling and clamour,
 The fetteris, upon his Shinnis grete,
 Wcrin of his bittir salt teris wete.
 Alas, q'ð he, Arcite Cosyn mine
 Of all our strife, God wot, the frute is thine.
 Thou walkist now in Thebis attè large
 And of my wo, thou yernist litil charge!
 Thou maist, sith thou hast wisdom and manhede
 Assemble all the-folk of our kinrede
 And make a war so sharp on this contrè;
 That by some aventure, or some treté,
 Thou mayst have her to Lady, and to wife,
 For whom that I must nedis lese my life.
 For as by way of possibilitie
 Sith thou art at thy large, of Prison fre,

1280

And art a Lord, grete is thine avantage
 More than is mine, that sterve here in a cage.
 For I may wepe and wayle, while that I live
 With all the wo, that Prison may me yeve,
 And eke with peyn, love yevith me also,
 That doublith all my turment, and my wo. 1300
 Therewith the fire of jelosie upstert
 Within his brest, and hent him by the hert
 So woodly, that he like was to behold
 The box-tree, or the ashin dede and cold;
 Then seid, O cruel Goddis! that governe
 This worlde, with binding of your word eterne,
 Y writtin in the Table' of Adamant,
 Your Parlement, and you eternè grant,
 What is mankynd more unto you yhold,
 Than is the shepe, that ronkith in the fold? 1310
 For slayn is man, right as an othir beste,
 And dwellith eke in Prison, and areste,
 And hath siknesse, and grete adversitie,
 And oftin timis guiltilese Pardè.
 What gouvernance is in this prescience
 That guiltilefs turmentith innocence?
 And encrefith thus allè my pennaunce,
 That man is boundin to his observaunce
 For Godd's sake to lettin of his will,
 Theras a beste may all his lustes fulfill, 1320
 And when a beste is dede he hath no paine,
 But aftir his dethe man mote wepe and plaine,
 Though in this worlde he have care and wo;
 Withoutin doutè it may stonidin so.
 The answer of this lete I to Divinis,
 But well I wot, that in this world grete pine is.
 Alas! I se a Serpent or a theef,
 That many a trew man hath don mischeef,
 Gon at his large, and wher him list may turn;
 But I mote ben in prisoun through Saturne, 1330
 And eke through Juno jelous, and eke wode,
 That hath destroyid well nygh all the blode
 Of Thebis, with his waste wallis wyde,
 And Venus sleeth me on that othir syde,
 For jelosie and fere of him Arcite.
 Now woll I flint of Palamon a lite,
 And let him in his prisone stillè dwell,
 And of Arcite forth I woll you tell.
 The Sommir passith, and the nightis long
 Encrefith doubil wyse the painis strong 1340
 Both of the lovir and the prisonere,
 I n'ot which hath the wofuller mistere.
 For shortly for to seyn, this Palamon
 Perpetuel is damnid to prison,
 In cheinis and in fett'ris to the deed;
 And Arcite is exilid on his heed
 For evirmore as out of that Contrè,
 Ne nevirmore shall he his Ladie se.
 You Lovers ask I now this question,
 Who hath the worse, Arcite or Palamon? 1350
 That one may se his lady day by day,
 But in prisoun mote he dwellin alway;
 That othir wher him list may ride or go,
 But sene his Ladie shall he nevir mo.
 Now demith as ye listè ye that can,
 For I woll tall my tale, as I began.
 Whan that Arcite to Thebis comin was,
 Full oft a day he swelt, and seide alas!
 For sene his lady shall he nevir mo;
 And shortly to concludin all his wo, 1360
 So mochill sorow nevir had cature,
 That is or shall be while the world may dure:
 His slepe, his mete, his drink is hym byraft,
 That lene he waxith and drie as a shaft:
 His eyin holow, gryllie to behold,
 His hew fallow, and pale as ashin cold:
 Solitary he was evir alone,
 And weyling all the nyght, making his mone:

And

And if he herd song or instrument,
 Than wold he wepin, he might not be stent. 1370
 So febyl were his Spirits and so low,
 And chaungid so, that no man couth him know,
 His speche, nothir his voice, tho men it herde,
 And in his gyre, for all the world he ferd,
 Nought comly, like to Lovers maladye,
 Of Eros, but raðir like to manie
 Engendrid of humours melancholik
 Beforn in his Cervellè fantastik,
 And shortly turnid was all upside doun
 Both habit eke and dispositioun 1380
 Of hym, this wofull Lovir Dan Arcite.
 What shuld I all dey of his wo endite?
 When he endurid had a yere or two,
 This cruel turment, and this peine and wo,
 At Thebis, in his Contre, as I seide,
 Upon a nyght in slepe as he him leide,
 Hym thought how that the wingid Mercury
 Beforn him stode, and bad him be mery,
 His slepe yerd in hond he bare upright
 An hat he werid on his heris bright. 1390
 Arayid was this God, as he toke kepe,
 As he was, whan that Argus toke his slepe,
 And seide him thus; to Athens shalt thou wend,
 There is The shapin of thy wo an end.
 And with that word Arcite awoke and stert;
 Now trewly how fore that evir me smert,
 Quoð he, to Athens ryght now woll I fare,
 Ne for the drede of deth shall I nought spare,
 To se my lady, that I love and serve,
 In her presence I ne reck nought to sserve. 1400
 And wyth that word he caught a grete myrour,
 And saw that chaungid was all his colour,
 And saw his visage all in othir kind,
 And right anon it ran him in his mind,
 That sithins his face was so disfigur'd
 Of Maladie, the which he had endur'd,
 He mighte wele, if that he bare him low,
 Livin in Athens evirmore unknow,
 And sene his lady well nigh day by day;
 And right anon he chaungid his aray,
 And clad him as a povir laborer,
 And all alone, save only a Squier,
 That knew his privy and all his caas,
 Which was disguisid porely, as he was;
 To Athens is he gone the nexte way,
 And to the Court he went upon a day,
 And at the gate he proffrid his servise,
 To drugge and draw what so men woll devise.
 And shortly of this mattir for to saine;
 He fell in office with a Chamberlaine, 1420
 The which that dwellyng was with Emilie;
 For he was wise, and sonè couth espy
 The thews of every servaunt that serv'd her;
 Wele couth he hewin wood, and watir bere:
 For he was yonge and mightie for the nones,
 And thereto he was stronge and big of bones,
 To don what any wight him can devise.
 A yere or two he was in this servise,
 Page of the chambir of Em'ly the bright,
 And Philostrat, he seide, that he hight; 1430
 But half so wele belov'd a man as he
 Ne was ther none in Court of his degre.
 He was so gentil of Condicioun,
 That throughout all the Court was his renoun.
 They seide, that it were a charite
 That Theseus woude enhansin his degre,
 And put hym in a wurshipful servise,
 There as he might his vertue exercise.
 And thus within a while his name is sprong,
 Both of his dedis, and of his gode tong, 1440
 That Theseus hath takin hym so nere,
 That of his chambre he hath made him squere:

And yafe him gold to mainteine his degre,
 And eke men brought him out of his Contre
 Fro yere to yere ful privilich his rent,
 But honestly and flyly he it spent,
 That no man wonderid how he it had,
 And thre yere in this wise his lyfe he lad,
 And bare hym so in pece, and eke in werre,
 There is no man that Theseus hath so derre. 1450
 And in this blifs levin I now Arcite;
 And speke I woll of Palamon a lite.
 In derkness horrible and strong prison
 This sevyn yere hath sittin Palamon,
 Forepinid, what for love, and for distres:
 Who felith double sore and hevynes
 But Palamon? That Love distreinith so,
 That wode out of his wit he goth for wo.
 And eke therto he is a Prisonere,
 Perpetuel, not only for a yere. 1460
 O who couth ryme in English propirly
 His Martyrdome? forsothe it am not I.
 Therefore I pass it lightly as I may.
 It befell that in the sev'nth yere, in May
 The third night, as old bokis to us saine,
 (That allè this story tellith more plaine)
 Were it by aventure, or destiny,
 (As when a thing is shapin, it mot be)
 That sone afir the midnyght Palamon,
 By helping of a frend brake his prison, 1470
 And fleeth the Cite fast as he may go,
 For he had giv'n his gailer drinkè so
 Of a Clarie, madin of certein wine,
 With Narcotise, and Opie of Thebes fine,
 That all the nyght, tho that men shulde him shake,
 The Gailer slept; they might him nat awake.
 And thus he fleith as fast as he may.
 The nyght was short and fast by was the day.
 That nedis cost he mote himselvin hide,
 And tyl a Grove, that was fast there beside, 1480
 With dredful fote then stalkith Palamon.
 For shortly this was his opinion,
 That in the Grove he wulde him hyde al day,
 And in the nyght then woude he take his way,
 To Thebis ward, his frendis for to pray,
 On Theseus to help him to warraye:
 And shortly ether he wuld lese his life,
 Or winnin Emily to ben his wife.
 This is th' effect, and his intention pleine.
 Now woll I turne to Arcite ageine, 1490
 That litil wist how nye that was his care,
 Tyl that Fortune had brought him in her snare.
 The mery lark, messengere of the day,
 Salewith in her song the morow gray,
 And firie Phebus rysith up so bright,
 That all the Orient laughith at the sight,
 And with his stremis dryith in the greves
 The silvir dropis hanging in the leves.
 And Arcite, that in the Court riall
 With Theseus is Squyir Principall, 1500
 Is rise, and lookith on the mery day,
 And to don his observauncis to May,
 Remembring of the poynt of his desire,
 He on his courser, startling as the fire,
 Is riddin to the feldis him to pley,
 Out of the Court, were it a mile or twey.
 And to the Grove, of which that I you told,
 By aventure his wey he gan to hold,
 To makin him a garlond of the greves,
 Were it of wodebine, or the hawthorne leves. 1510
 And lowde he song ayenst the Sonnè shene,
 May, with allè thy flouris, and thy grene,
 Welcome be thou, seide he, feire freshe May,
 I hope that I some grene thing gettin may.
 And from his Courser with a lusty herte
 Into the Grove full hastily he sterte.

And

And in a path he romid up and down,
 Ther as by aventure this Palamon,
 Was in a bussh, that no man myght him se,
 For sore afraied of his prisoun was he.
 1520 Nothing ne knew he that it was Arcite,
 God wot he wold have trowid that ful lite;
 But sothe is seide gon sithins manie yeres,
 That felde hath eyin, and the wode hath eres.
 It is ful fayre a man to bere him evin,
 For all day metè men at unset Stevin:
 Ful lityl wote Arcite of his felaw,
 That was so nye to herkin of his saw,
 1530 For in the bussh he sittith now ful still,
 Whan that Arcite had romid al his fill,
 And songin all the Roundell lustily,
 Into a studie he fell sodenly,
 As don thes lovers in ther queyntè gires,
 Now in the crop, and now down in the briers,
 Now up, now down, as boket in a well,
 Ryght as the Fryday, sothly for to tell,
 Now rainith it, and now it shinith fast,
 Ryght so gan gery Venus ovircast
 The hertis of her folk, right as her day
 Is gerifull, so chaungith she aray:
 Selde is the Fryday al the weke ylike.
 Whan that Arcite had song, he gan to sike,
 And set him down withoutin any more;
 Alas, qð he, the day that I was bore!
 How longè, Juno, through thy cruelte
 Wilt'ow weryin Thebis the Cite?
 Alas! ybrought is to Confusion
 The blode riall of Cadme' and Amphion;
 Of Cadmus, I seye, which was the first man,
 That Thebis built, or first the toun began,
 1540 And of that Citie first was crownid King;
 Of his lynage am I, and his ofspring,
 By very line, as of the stock riall:
 But now I am so catife, and so thrall,
 That he that is my mortal enemie,
 I serve him as his Squyir povirle.
 And yet doth Juno me well more shame,
 For I dare not be know by my own name:
 But theras I was wont to hight Arcite,
 Now hight I Philostrat, not worth a mite.
 1550 Alas thow fill Mars! alas thou Juno!
 Thus hath your ire our Lynage all fordoo,
 Saaf only me, and wretchid Palamon,
 That Thesèus martyrið in prifon.
 And ovir all, to sleen me uttirly,
 Love hath his fry dert so brenningly
 Stikid thorough my trewe and carefull herte,
 That shapid was my deth erst than my shert.
 Ye sleen me with your eyin Emily,
 Ye ben the causè wherfore that I dye:
 1560 Of all the remnaunt of myn othir care
 Ne sett I not the mount.unce of a tare,
 So that I couth do ought to your plesaunce.
 And with that word he fell down in a traunce,
 A long tyme, and afirward he upstert.
 This Palamon, that thought that through his herte
 He felt a colde Swerde sodeinly to glide,
 For ire he quoke, no longer wold he bide;
 And whan that he had herde Arcit's tale,
 As he were wode, wyth face all dede and pale,
 1570 He sterde him up out of the busshis thik,
 And seide, Arcite, thow false trayter wik,
 Now art'ow hent, that lov'st my lady so,
 For whom that I have al this peyn and wo,
 And art my blode, and to my counceill sworne,
 As I ful oft have tolde The heretoforne:
 And has bejapid here Duke Thesèus,
 And falsely chaungid hast thy name thus:
 I wold be dedde, or ellis thow shalt die,
 1580 Thou shalt not love my Ladie Emelie,

But I wold love hir only and no mo,
 For I am Palamon thy mortal fo.
 Though that I no wepin have in this place,
 But out of prisoun am aftar by grace,
 1590 I dredè nought that either thow shalt dye,
 Or thow ne shalt not lovin Emelie.
 Ches whiche thou wilt, for thow shalt not aftar.
 This Arcite, with full dispitous hert,
 Whan he him knew, and had his tale yherde,
 As fiers as Lyon drew he out his swerde, 1600
 And seide, by God that sittith above,
 Ne wer that thou art sike and wode for love,
 And eke thow no wepin hast in this place,
 1610 Thou shuldist nevir out of this grove pace,
 That thow ne shuldist dyin of myn hond.
 For I desie the suretie and the bond,
 Which that thow saist that I have made to the;
 What veray fole! think wele that love is fre:
 But I wold love her, maugre all thy might;
 For as moch as thow art a worthy Knight, 1620
 And willnist to dareyn here by bataile,
 Have here my trouth, to morow I n'll faile,
 Without witting of any othir wight,
 1630 That here I wold be foundin as a Knight;
 And bringin harneis right ynow for The,
 And ches the best, and leve the worst for me;
 And mete and drinkè this nyght wold I bring,
 Ynough for The, and clothes for thy bedding;
 And if so be that thow my Lady winn,
 And sle me in this wode, there I am in, 1640
 Thou maist wel have thy lady as for me.
 This Palamon answerde, I graunt it The;
 And thus they ben departid tyl a morow,
 Whan eche of them had leide his feith to borow.
 O Cupido out of all charite!
 O Reign that wuld'ft have no felaw with The!
 Full sothe is seide, that Love ne Lordship
 Will not his thankes have any felawship,
 We find that of Arcite and Palamon:
 Arcite is ridd anon into the towne: 1650
 And on the morow er it were day light,
 Full privily two harneis had he dight,
 Both sufficient and metè to darreigne
 The bataile in the felde betwixt them tweite:
 And on his hors alone as he was borne,
 He carieth all his harneis him beforne;
 And in the Grove, at tyme and place yset,
 That Arcite, and this Palamon ben met:
 To chaungin gan the colour of their face,
 Right as the hunter in the reign of Thrace, 1660
 That stondith at a gappè with a spere,
 When huntid is a lyon or a bere,
 And herith hym come rushing in the greves,
 And brekith both the bowis and the leves:
 1670 Thinks here comith my mortal enemie,
 Withoutin faile he mote be dede or I,
 For either I mote sea hym at the gappe,
 Or he mote sea me, if that me mislappè.
 So ferdin they in chaunging of their hew,
 As fer as everich of them othir knew: 1680
 Ther n'as no gode day, ne no falewing,
 But streight withoutin word or rehcrsing,
 Ev'rich of them helpid to atmè othir,
 As frendly as he wer his ownè broðer:
 And afir that with sharpè speris strong
 They foinin at eche othir wondir long:
 Thow mightist wenin that this Palamon
 In his fighting werin a Wode lyon,
 And as a cruel tigre was Arcite.
 As wild boris gan they to fight and fmite, 1690
 That frothin white as some for ire wode;
 Up to the ancle foughte they in ther blode.
 And in this wise I lete them fighting dwell,
 And forth I wold of Thesèus yon tell.

The destiny, Mynyſter general,
 That executith in the world o're al
 The purveiaunce, that God hath ſeide before,
 So ſtrong it is, that tho the world had ſwore
 The contrary thing by ye or by nay,
 Yet ſometime it ſhall fallin on a day,
 That nevir fill yet in a thouſand yere.
 For certainly our appetitis here
 (Be it of werre or pece, or hate or love)
 Are rulid allè by the ſight above.
 This mene I now by mighty Theſeus,
 That for to huntin is ſo deſirous;
 And namily at the grete hert in May,
 That in his bedde ther dawith him no day,
 That he n'is clad and redy for to ride
 With hunt and horn and houndis him beſide.
 For in his hunting hath he ſuch delite,
 That it is al his joy and appetite,
 To ben himſelf the grete hart's bane:
 For aſtir Mars he ſervith now Diane.
 Clere was the day, as I have told er this,
 And Theſeus with allè joye and blis,
 With his Hypolita, the fayir Quene,
 And Emelie, yclothid al in grene,
 On hunting ben they riddin roiallie,
 Unto the grove that ſtode ther full faſt by:
 In whych ther was a Hart, as men him told.
 Duke Theſeus the ſtreightè way hath hold,
 And to the Laund he ridith him full right:
 For thithir was the Hart wont t' have his flight;
 And ou'r a broke, and ſo forth on his wey;
 This Duke woll have a courſe at him or twey,
 With houndis ſuch, as him leſt to commaund;
 And when this Duke was come into the Laund,
 Undir the ſonne he lokid, and anon
 He was ware of Arcite and Palamon,
 That foughtin breme, as it were bullis two,
 The brightè ſwerdis went faſt to and fro
 So hideouſly, that with the leſtè ſtroke
 It ſemith that it wouldè fell an Oke.
 But what they werin, nothing he ne wote;
 This Duke his courſer with his ſporis ſmote,
 And at aſtert he was betwixt them two,
 And pullid out his ſwerde, and cryid, Ho,
 No more on peine of leſing of your hede;
 By mighty Mars he ſhall anon be dede,
 That ſmitith any ſtroke, that I may ſene;
 But tellith me what miſter men ye ben,
 That ben ſo hardie for to fightin here,
 Withoutin judge or othir officere,
 As though it were in liſtis royally.
 This Palamon anſwerid haſtily,
 And ſeidè, Sir, what nedith wordis mo?
 We have the dethe deſervid bothè two:
 Two woful wretchis ben we and Catives,
 That ben encombrid of our ownè lives;
 And as thou art a rightful Lord and judge,
 Ne geve us neither mercie nor refuge;
 But ſlea me firſtè, for Seinte Charite,
 But ſlea my felaw eke as well as me:
 Or ſlea him firſt, for though thou know it lite,
 This is thy mortal fo, this is Arcite,
 That fro thy land is baniſh'd on his hede,
 For which he hath deſervid to be dede,
 For this is he, that came unto thy gate,
 And ſeidè, that he hightè Philoſtrate;
 Thus hath he japid the full many'a yere;
 And thou haſt makid hym thy cheſè Squire:
 And this is he that lovith Emely.

For ſith the dey is come that I ſhall dye,
 I make plainly my Confession,
 That I am thilke woful Palamon,
 That hath thy priſon brokin wikidly,
 I am thy mortal fo, and it am I,

That ſo hote lovith Emely the bright,
 That I woll dye here preſent in her ſight; 1740
 Wherefore I aſke dethe, and my jewiſe,
 But ſlea my felaw eke in the ſame wiſe:
 For both we have deſervid to be ſlaine.

1670 This worthy Duke anſwer'd anon againe,
 Tnd ſeid, this is a ſhort Concluſion,
 Your own mouth by your own confeſſion
 Hath damnid you, and I woll it record;
 It nedith not to pine you with a cord,
 Ye ſhall be dede by mighty Mars the redde.

The Quene anon for very womanhedde 1750
 Gan for to wepe, and ſo did Emelie;
 And all the Ladys in the Companie.
 Grete pite was it, as it thought them al,
 That evyr ſoce a chance ſhuld beſal.

For gentlemen they wer of grete eſtate,
 And nothing but for love was this debate,
 And ſaugh their bloody woundis wide and fore,
 And all crydin at once both leſs and more,
 Have mercy, Lord, upon us wymin al,
 And on their bare knees adoun they fall, 1760
 And wold have kiſt his fete there as he ſtode,
 Tyl at the laſt aſlakid was his mode.

For pite rennith ſone in gentil hert;
 And though at firſt for ire he quoke and ſtert,
 He hath concludid ſhortly in a Claufe
 The trespas of them both, and eke the Cauſe;
 And although that his ire their gilt accuſed,
 Yet in his reſon he them both excuſed.

As thus: he thoughtè well that every man
 Woll help himſelf in love all that he can; 1770
 And eke delivir him out of priſon;
 And in his herte he had compaſſion
 Of wymin, for they wepe evir in oon;

And in his gentill hert he thought anone,
 And ſoft unto himſelf he ſeid, ſie, ſie
 Upon a Lord, that woll have no mercie;
 But be a Lyon both in word and dede,
 To them that ben in repentaunce and drede,
 As well as to a proud diſpitous man, 1780
 That woll maintainin that he firſt began.

That Lord hath lityl of diſcretion,
 That in ſoche caas can no diſtinction,
 But weighith pryde and humbles aſtir one;
 And ſhortly, when his ire was thus agone,
 He gan to lokin up with eyin light,
 And ſpake in place thes wordis all on hight.

The God of Love, ah benedicite,
 How mighty, and how gret a Lord is he!
 Againe his might there gainith no obſtacles,
 He may be cleped a God for his Miracles: 1790
 For he can makin at his ownè giſe
 Of every hert as that him liſt deviſe.

Lo here this Arcite, and this Palamon,
 That quietly were fro my priſon gon,
 And might have liv'd in Thebis rially,
 And wete I am their mortal enemy,
 And that their dethe is in my might alſo,
 And yet hath love, maugre ther eyin two,
 Y brought them hither bothè for to die;
 Now lokith, is not this a grete folie? 1800

Who may be a ſole, but if that he love!
 Behold! for God's love that ſittith above;
 Se how they blede! be they not well ara'd?
 Thus hath ther Lord, the God of Love, them pay'd,
 Ther wagis and ther fees, for ther ſerviſe:
 And yet they wepin for to ben full wiſe,
 That ſervith Love, for ought that may beſal.
 But yet this is the beſtè game of al,
 That ſhe, for whom they have this jolitye,
 Con them therefore as mochill thank as me. 1810
 She wote no more of allè this hote fare,
 By God, than wot a Cuckow, or an Hare;

But

But al mot ben assayid, hot and cold,
 A man mote ben a fole, or yonge or old,
 I wote it by my self ful yore agone :
 For in my tyme a Servaunt I was one ;
 And therefore sith I know of lov'is peine,
 I wote how fore it can a man distreine,
 As he that oft hath ben caught in his laas.
 I you forgeve all wholly this trespas, 1820
 At request of the Quene, that knelith here,
 And eke of Emely, my Sustir dere.
 And ye shall both anon unto me swere,
 That ye shall never more my Contre dere,
 Ne makin werre upon me night ne day,
 But ben my frendis in all that ye may :
 I yow forgeve this trespas every dele.
 And they hym swore his asking faire and wele,
 And hym of Lordship and of mercy prayde ;
 And he them grauntid grace ; and thus he sayde : 1830
 To speke of rial lynage and rychese,
 Though that she wer a quene, or a princefe,
 Eche of you both is worthie doutelefs,
 To weddin whan tyme is ; but nathelès,
 I speke as for my Sustir Emelie,
 For whome ye have this stryfe and jelousie,
 Ye wote your self, she may not weddin two,
 At onys, though ye fightin evirmo,
 But one of you, al be hym lothe or lese,
 He must go pipin in an ivie lese. 1840
 This is to say, she may not now have both,
 Ben ye never so jelouse, ne so wroth.
 And therefore I you put in this degre,
 That eche of you shall have his destine,
 As hym is shape ; and herkin in what wise ;
 Lo here your end of that I shall devise.
 My wyll is this, for flat conclusion,
 Withoutin any replication,
 If that you likith, take it for the best ;
 That everich of you shall go wher him lest, 1850
 Frely withoutin ransoume or daungere ;
 And this day fifty wekis, fer ne nere,
 Everich of you shall bring a hundrid Knights,
 Ar'md for the listis upon allè rights,
 Al redy to darrein here by bataile :
 And this behote I you withoutin faile.
 Upon my trouth, and as I am a Knyght,
 That whethir of you bothè hath that myght,
 That is to sey, that whethir he or thow
 May with his hundrid, as I spake of now, 1860
 Slea his contrary' or out of lyftis dryve,
 Him shall I geve Emilia to wyve,
 To whom fortune gevith so fayre a grace.
 The listis shall I do make in this place.
 And God so wisly on my soule rew,
 As I shall evin judge ben and trew.
 Ye shall noon othir endè wyth me make,
 That one of you shall be dedde or take.
 And yf ye thinkin this is well yseide,
 Seye your avise, and hold you well apeide : 1870
 This is your end, and your conclusion.
 Who lokith lightly now but Palamon ?
 Who springith up for joyè but Arcite ?
 Who couldè tell, or who couldè rightly' endite
 The joye that is y makid in that place,
 Whan Theseus had don so fayre a grace !
 But down on knees went every manner wyght,
 And thankid him wyth all ther hert and myght,
 And namily thes Thebans many' a sith.
 And thus with hopis gode, and hertis blith 1880
 They take ther leve, and homward gan they ride
 To Thebis ward, with his olde wallis wide.
 I trow men wouldin deme it negligence,
 If I forgett to tellin the dispence
 Of Theseus, that goth so besily
 To makin up the listis rially :

That soche a noble Theatre' as this was,
 I dare well say in all this world ther n'as.
 The circuite wherof was a myle about, 1890
 Wallid with stone, and dichid all about.
 Round was the shape in mannre' of a compas,
 Full of degrees, the height of sixty paas.
 That whan a man was sett on oo degre,
 He lettid not his felaw for to fe.
 Estward there stode a gate of marble white,
 Westward right soch anothir opposite ;
 And shortly to concludin, soch a place
 Was non in yerth, as in so lityl space.
 For in the Lond ther was no craftis man
 That Geometry' or Arithmetik can, 1900
 Ne portraitour, ne kervir of imagis,
 That Theseus ne gaf him mete and wagis,
 That Theater to make and to devise ;
 And for to don his rite and sacrifice,
 He Estward hath, upon the gate above,
 In wurship of Venus, Goddes of Love,
 Don make an Auter and an Oratory ;
 And on the westward side, in memory
 Of Mars, he makid hath right soch anothir,
 That costè largely did of gold a fothir.
 And Northward, in a turrut on the wall,
 Of alabaster white, and red corall,
 An Oratory riche was for to fe, 1910
 In worship of Diane of chastite,
 Hath Theseus don wrought in a nobill wife.
 But yet had I forgettin to devise
 The nobil carvings, and the purtreitures,
 The shape, the countenance, and the figures,
 That werin in the Oratorys thre.
 First then, in Venus temple thou mayst se, 1920
 Wrought on the wall full pitous to behold,
 The brokin slepis, and the sighis cold,
 The teris fault, and the sad weymenting,
 The fry strokis of the desiring,
 That Lov'is servaunts in this life enduren,
 The Othis, that ther Covenantes assuren,
 Pleasance, and hope, desire, folehardines,
 Beauty, and youth, baudrie, and eke ryches,
 Charmis, and force, lesinges, and flatterie, 1930
 Dispense, and besines, and jelousie,
 That wer'd of yelow goldis a garland,
 And had a Cuckow sitting on her hand ;
 Festes, Instrumentis, Carollis, and dauncis,
 Justis, array, and all the Circumstauncis
 Of Love, which I reknid, and rekin shall,
 By order, werin paintid on the wall ;
 And mo than I can make of mentioun,
 For sothly all the Mount of Citheron,
 Wher Venus hath hir principal dwelling,
 Was shewid on the wall in purtreying, 1940
 Wyth all the joye, and all the lustiness,
 Nought was forgett the Portreis Idleness ;
 Ne Narcissus the fayr, of yore agon,
 Ne yet the folye of King Solomon,
 Ne yet the gretè strength of Hercules,
 Th'enchautments of Medea and Circes,
 Ne of Turnus with his hardie Corage,
 The rych Cresus full catife in servage.
 Thus may ye sene, that wisdom ne ryches,
 Beautie, ne sight, ne strength, ne hardines, 1950
 Ne may with Venus holdin champartie,
 For as her list the world then she may gye.
 Lo all thes folk so caught wer in her laas,
 Tyl they for wo full oftin seyde alas !
 Suffisith here one example or two,
 Although I couth rekin a thoufand mo.
 And Venus Statue glorious to se
 Was makid fletyng in the largè See,
 And fro the Navill down all coverid was,
 With wavis grene, and bright as any glas. 1960
 A Citriole

A Citriole in her ryght hand had she,
And on her hede, full femely for to fe,
A rosey garlond, fresh and well smelling,
Above hir hede her Dovyis flittering:
Before her stou'd her sonne Cupido,
Upon his shuldris wingis had he two,
And blynd he was, as it is oftyn sene,
A bow he bare, and arowes bright and kene.
Why shuld I not as well you tellin all
The Purtreiture, that was upon the wall
Within the temple of great Mars the redde?
All paintid was the wall in length and brede,
Like to the Estris of the grisly place,
That hight the grete Temple of Mars in Thrace,
In thilke cold and frosty region,

Ther as Mars hath his Sov'rain Mansion.
First on the wall was paintid a forrest,
In which there wometh nowther Man ne best,
Wyth knotty-knarry-barrein treys old,
Of flubbis sharpe and hideous to behold,
In which there was a rombyll and a swough,
As though a storm shulde brestin every bough;
And downward from an hill undir a bent
There stode the temple of Mars armipotent,
Wrought all of burnyd stele, of which th' entre
Was long, and streight, and ghastly for to fe:
And therout came such a rage and avise,
That it made all the gatys for to ryfe.
The Northern light in at the doris shone,
For window on the wall ne was there none,
Through which men mightin any light discern.
The dore was al of Adamant eterne,
Yclenchid overthwart and endelong
With iron tough, for to makin it strong.
Every piller the tempyl to sustene
Was tonne grete of yren bright and shone.
Ther saw I first the derk ymagining
Of Felony, and all the Compassing;
The cruell ire, redde as any glede,
The pikpurse also, and eke the pale drede,
The smiler wyth the knyfe undir the cloke,
The shepin brenning with the blake smoke,
The treison of the murd'ring in the bedde,
The opin werre with woundis all bebledde.
Conteke with blodie knyves and sharp menace,
All full of chirking was that fory place.
The fleer of himself, yet saw I there,
His herte blode hath bathid all his here.
The naile ydrivin in the shode anyght,
With the cold deth, with mouth gaping upright,
Amiddis of the temple sat mischaunce,
With discomfort and fory countenance:
Yet saw I wodenefs laughing in his rage,
Armid compleint on theft and fers corage,
The Carrein in the bush, with throtycorve,
A thousand fleine, and not of qualme ystorve:
The tyrant with the prey by force yraft,
The town destroyid, ther was nothyng laft.
Yet saw I brent the Ships hoppolsteris,
The hunter straungid with the wild boris,
The Sow fretting the chyld right in the cradel,
The Coke scaldid for all his longe ladel.
Nought was forgett the infortunc of Mart,
The Cartir ovirridin by his Cart,
Undir the whele full low he lay adown,
Ther wer also of Marts divisoun,
The Barbour, and the Butchir, and the Smith
That forgoth sharpe swerdis on the stith:
And all above depeintid in a towr,
Saw I conquest sitting in gret honour,
With the sharpe swerde right ovir his hede,
Hanging but by a subtill twinid thred.
Depeintid was the slaughter of Julius,
Of cruel Nero, and Antonius,

Albe that thilke tyme they wer unborn,
Yet was their dethe depeintid ther befor.
By manacing of Mars, right by figure,
So was it shewid in the purtreiture,
As is depeintid in the Sterres above,
Who shall be dede or ellis fleine for love.
Suffisith one ensample in storys old,
I may not rekin them although I wold.
The Statue of Mars upon a Cart stode
Armid, and lokid grym as he were wode:
And o're his hede ther shinin two figures,
Of Sterris that ben clepid in Scriptures,
That one (Puella) rothir (Rubeus)
This God of Armis was arayid thus.
A woof ther stode before him at his fete,
With eyin red, and of a man he ete.
With sotill pensill peintid was this story
In redouting Mars, and of his glorie.

Now to the temple of Diane the chaf,
As shortly as I can I woll me haf,
To tellin you all the description;
Depeintid were the wallis up and down
Of hunting, and of shamefast Chastite;
There saw I how wofull Calisto, pite!
Whan that Diana grevid was with her,
Was tarnid fro a woman to a bere;
And aftirward was she made the Lodesterre,
Thus was it peintid, I can sey no ferre;
Her sone is eke a sterre, as men may fe.
There saw I Daphne turnid to a tre,
I menè not the Goddes Diane,
But Peneus doughtir, which that hight Daphne.

There saw I Actron a hert y makid,
For vengeance that he saw Diane all nakid:
I saw how that his houndis have him caught,
And fretin him, for that they knew him nought.
Yet peintid was a lityl furthirmore,
How Atalanta huntid the wyld bore,
With Meleager, and many othir mo,
For which Diana wrought them care and wo.
There saw I many othir wondir story,
Which me list not to draw in memory.
This Goddes on an hert full wele she sette,
With smale houndis all about her fete,
And undirnethe her fete she had a Mone,
Wexing it was, and yet shuld weine Sone.
In gaudy grene hir Statue clothid was,
With bow in hand, and arowes in a Caas.
Her eyin ay she kest full low adoun,
There Pluto hath his derke Region.
A womman travelling was her befor;
For that her childè was so long unborn,
Full pitoufly Lucina gan she cal,
And seide, help, for thou mayst best of al.
Well couth he purtray lively, that it wrought,
With many a florein he the hewis bought.

Now ben these Listis made, and Theseus,
That at his grete cost arayid thus,
The Temples and Theater every dele,
Whan 'twas done, it him likid wondir wele.

But stint I woll of Theseus alite,
And speke of Palamon, and of Arcite.
The day approachith of ther returning,
That everich shuld an hundrid Knightis bring,
The bataile to darrein as I you told:
And to Athenes ther Covenantes to hold,
Hath everich of them brought an hundrid Knightes,
Well armid for the werre at alle rightes,
And sikirly there trowid many a man,
That nevir fithins that the world began,
As for to speke of Knyghthode of ther hond,
As ferre as God hath makid se or lond,
N'as of so few, so noble a Company:
For every wight, that lovid chivalry,

And

And to his thanks wolde have a passing name,
 Hath prayid that he might be of that game, 2110
 And wel was hym that therto chosin was.
 For if there fell to morow suche a caas,
 Ye knowin wele that every lusty Knyght,
 That lovith Paramoures, and hath his myght,
 Were it in Englund, or were it else where,
 They woldin faine all willin to be there.
 To fight for Lady! ah benedicite!
 It were a lusty fight for men to fe!
 And ryght so fardin they with Palamon.
 With him ther wentin Knyghtis many one: 2120
 Some wolde ben armid in an haburgeon,
 And in a brestplate with a light gippon,
 And some wolde have a payre of platis large,
 And some wou'de have a Pruceheld, some a targe;
 Some wolde be armid on his leggis wele,
 And have an axe; and some a mace of Stele;
 There n'as none new gife, that it ne was old;
 Armid they werin, as I have you told,
 Everich after his Opinion.
 There mayst'ow see commyng with Palamon 2130
 Lycurgus himself, the grete King of Thrace;
 Blak was his berde, and manly was his face:
 The circles of the eyin in his hede
 They glowdin betwixt yelow and rede:
 And like a Lyon lokid he about,
 With kempid heiris on his browis stout:
 His limis grete, his brawn is herd and strong,
 His Shulderes brode, his armis round and long.
 And as the guise ywas in his Contre,
 Full high upon a char of gold stode he, 2140
 With four grete white bullis in the tracys;
 Instede of Cote Armure on his harneis,
 With yelow nayles, and bright as any gold;
 He hath a beri's skinn, coleblak for old.
 His longe here was kemped behind his bak,
 As any raven's fethre't shone for blak.
 A wrethe of gold armgrete, of hugè weight,
 Upon his hede set ful of stonis bright,
 Of fine rubys, and clere diamondes.
 About his Char ther wentin white alandes 2150
 Twentie and mo, as grete as any stere,
 To huntin at the Lyon, or wild Bere,
 And folowed him with Mosil fast ybound,
 Colleres of gold and torretes filid round.
 An hundrid Lordis had he in his rout,
 Armid full wele, with hertis stern and stout.
 With Arcite, (in Storys as men find)
 The grete Emetrius, the King of Inde,
 Upon a Stedè bay, trappid in Stele,
 Coverid with cloth of gold diaprid wele, 2160
 Came ridin like the God of armis Mars,
 His Cote Armure was of the Cloth of Tars
 Couchid with perlis white, and round, and grete;
 His Saddil was of brent gold new ybete,
 A Mantlet upon his Shulderes hanging,
 Bretfull of Rubys redde as fire sparkling.
 His crispè heir like ringis was yronne,
 And it was yelow, glitt'ring as the Sonne.
 His nose was high, his eyin bright citryn,
 Ruddy his lippes, his colour was sanguyn, 2170
 And a fewe freklis in his face yspreint
 Betwixt yelow, and somedele blak ymeint.
 And as a Lyon he his eyin kest.
 Of five and twenty yere his age I ghest.
 His berde was well begonnin for to spring,
 His throte was as a trompet thondiring.
 Upon his hede he wered of laurer grene
 A garlond freshe, and lustie for to sene.
 Upon his hond he bare for his delite
 An Egle tame, as ony lillie white. 2180
 And hundrid Lordis had he with him there,
 All armid, saaf their hedis, in ther gere,

Full rychely in allè manner thinges,
 For trustith wele, that Erlis, Dukes, and Kinges,
 Were ga'drid in this nobil company
 For Love, and for encrese of Chivalry.
 About this King ther ran on every part
 Full many a tame Lyon and Libart.
 And in this wyse these Lordis al and some Ben on the Sunday to the Citie come 2190
 Aboutin Prime, and in the Town alight.
 This Theseus, this Duke, this worthy Knyght,
 Whan he had brought them into his Cite,
 And innid them, eche aftir his degre,
 He festith them, and doth so grete labour
 To esin them and don them all honour,
 That yet men wenin that no mann'is wit
 Of none estat ne couth amending it.
 The minstrelcie, the service at the feste,
 The grete gestes also to the most and leste, 2200
 The ryche aray of Theseus Palleis,
 Ne who sat first or last upon the Deis,
 What Ladys fayrist ben or best daunfing,
 Or whiche of them can best dancin or sing,
 Ne who most felingly spekith of Love,
 Ne what haukes sittin on perchis above,
 Ne what houndes liggin on the floure adoun,
 Of all this now make I no mentoun;
 But of the effect that thinkith me the best,
 Now comith the point, herk'nith, if you lest. 2210
 The Sondag nyght, er day began to spring,
 Whan Palamon the Lark herdè sing,
 Although it were not day by houris two,
 Yet song the Lark, and Palamon right tho
 Wyth holy hert, and with an high corage
 He rose, to wending on his Pilgrimage,
 Unto the blisfull Cithera benigne,
 I mene Venus, honourable and digne
 And in her hour he walkith foorth apaas
 Unto the listis ther her temple was; 2220
 And down he knelith and wyth humble chere,
 And herte full fore, he seide as ye shull here.
 Fairist of faire, o Ladie mine Venus,
 Doughtir of Jove, and Spouse to Vulcanus,
 Thou gladir of the Mount of Citheron,
 For thilkè Love thou haddist to Adon,
 Have pitè of my bittir teris smert,
 And take my humble prayir at thine hert.
 Alas! I ne have no langage to tell
 The effect, ne the turment of mine hell; 2230
 Mine herte may mine harmis not bewray,
 I'am so confusid that I cannot saye,
 But mercie, Ladie bryght, that wotist wele
 My thought, and seest what harmis that I fele.
 Confidir this, and rue upon my fore,
 As wisly as I shall for evirmore
 Enforce my myght thy true Servaunt to be,
 And holdin werre alwey with chastite.
 That make I mine avow, so ye me help.
 I kepe not of armis for to yelp, 2240
 I ne ask not to morow victory,
 Ne renoun in this caas, ne vaine glory,
 Of prisè of Armis blowin up and doun:
 But I wolde have fully possessioun
 Of Emily, and dye in her Servise,
 Fynd thou the mannir how and in what wise.
 I rekè not, but it may betir be
 To have victory' of them or they of me,
 So that I have my lemman in mine armes.
 For tho so be that Mars is God of Armes, 2250
 Your vertue is so grete in heaven above,
 That if The list I shall wele have my Love.
 Thy temple shall I worship evir mo,
 And on thine aulter, where I ryde or go,
 I woll don sacrificè, and firis bete;
 And yef ye woll nat so my Lady swete,

F

Then

Then pray I you to morow with a spere
 That Arcite do me through the herte bere:
 Then reke I not, whan I have lost my life,
 Though Arcite winnin her to his wife.
 This is th' effect, and ende of my prayere;
 Yef me my Lady, blisfull lady dere.
 Whan th' Orison was done of Palamon,
 His Sacrifice he did, and that anon
 Full pitously with alle circumstaunces,
 Al telle I nat as now his observaunces.
 But atte last the Statu' of Venus foke,
 And made a signe, whereby that he toke
 That his prayere acceptid was that day.
 For though the signe shewid a delay,
 Yet wist he wele that grauntid was his bone,
 And with glad hert he went away ful sone.

The third hour in equal that Palamon
 Began to Venus tempyl for to gon,
 Uprose the Sunne, and uprose Emelye,
 And to the temple of Diane gan hie
 Her Maidins, that she thithir with her ladde,
 Full redily with them the fire they hadde,
 The incense, clothis, and the remnaunt al,
 That to the Sacrifice belongin shal:
 The hornys full of Melth, as was the gyse,
 There lakkid nought to don ther Sacrifice
 Smoking the tempyl, full of clothis faire;
 This Emely with herte debonaire
 Her body wisshè with watir of a well;
 But how she did het rite I dare not tell,
 But if it be ony thing in geheral,
 And yet it were a game to here it al,
 To him that menith well it were no charge,
 But it is gode a man be at his large.
 Her bright here was kempt and untressid all,
 A Corown, of a grene oke ceriall,
 Upon her hede was set full faire and mete:
 Two fris on the autler gan she bere,
 And did her thingis, as men may behold
 In State of Thebis, and these bokis old.
 When kindlid was the fire, with pitous chere
 Unto Dian she spake, as ye may here.

O chaste Goddess of the wodis grene,
 To whome both heaven, and erth, and se is sene, 2300
 Quene of the regne of Pluto derk and low,
 Goddess of Maidins, that mine hert hast know
 Full many' a yere, and wost what I desire,
 Ay kepe me from the vengeance of Thine ire;
 That Actæon aboutin cruilly;
 Chaste Goddess, well wotist Thou that I
 Desire to ben a Maidin all my life,
 Ne nevir woll I be ne Love, ne Wife:
 I am thou wost well of thy company
 A Maid, and love hunting and Venery, 2310
 And for to walkin in the wodis wild,
 And not to be a wife, and be with child,
 Nought woll I know the company of Man.
 Now help me, Lady, sith Ye may and can,
 For tho thre formis that Thow hast in The:
 And Palamon, that hath soche love to me,
 And eke Arcite, that lovith me so fore.
 This grace I prayin The withoutin more,
 As to send love and pece betwixt them two,
 And fro me turn away their hertis so,
 That all their hot love, and all their desire,
 And all their busy turment, and their fire
 Be queint, or turnid to an othir place.
 And if so be thou wolt do me no grace,
 Or if my destiny be shapin so,
 That I shall nedis have one of them two,
 As send me him, that most desirith me;
 Behold, o Goddess of clene chastite,
 The bittir teres, that on my chekis fall,
 Syn thou art Mayde, and kepir of us all, 2330

My Maydinhode thou kepe, and well conserve,
 And while I live a Maide I woll The serve.
 The fris bren upon the Autler clere,
 While Emelye was thus in her prayere:
 But sodenly she saw a thinge queint,
 For right anon on of the fris queint,
 And quikid ageyn; aftir that anon,
 That othir fire was queynt, and all ygone;
 And as it queint it made a whisteling,
 As don the wet brondis in their brenning, 2340
 And at the brond's end out ran anon
 As it were bloody dropis many one.
 For which so fore aghast was Emely,
 That she was well nie mad, and gan to crie:
 For she ne wistè what it signified,
 But only for the fere thus hath she cryed,
 And wept, that it was pite for to here.
 And therewithal Diana gan to' appere
 With bow in hond, right as an hunteress,
 And seide, Daughter, stint thine heviness, 2350
 Among the Goddis hie it is affirmed,
 And by eterne word written and confirmed,
 Thou shalt ben weddid unto one of two,
 That have for The so muchil care and wo:
 But unto whiche of them I may not tell,
 Farewell, for I ne may no longir dwell:
 The fris, which that on mine Autler bren,
 Shall The declarin, er that thou go hen,
 Thine aventure of Love, as in this caas.
 And with that word the arrowes in the Case 2360
 Of the Goddess clatterin fast and ring,
 And forth she went, and made a vanishing,
 For which this Emely astonied was,
 And seide, what amountith this, alas!
 I put me undir thy protection,
 Diane, and in thy disposition.
 And home she goth anon the nexte wey;
 This is th' effect, there n'is no more to sey.

The nexte hour of Mars folowing this,
 Arcite unto the temple walkid is 2370
 Of fiersè Mars, to don his Sacrifice,
 With all the rytis of his paynim wife;
 With pitous hert and hie devotion,
 Right thus to Mars he seide his Orison.
 O stronge God, that in the reignis cold
 Of Thrace honourid art, and God yhold,
 And hast in every reign, and every lond
 Of armis all the bridil in thine hond,
 And them fortunist, as The lest devise,
 Accept of me my pitous Sacrifice, 2380
 If it so be that my thought may deserve,
 And that my might be worthy for to serve
 Thy Godhede, that I may be oon of thine,
 Then pray I The to rue upon my pine,
 For thilk fore paine, and for thilk hotte fire,
 In which Thou brentist whilome for desire,
 Whan that thou usidist the fayre bewte
 Of fayre, yonge, freshe Venus for to se,
 And haddist her in thine armis at will,
 Although thou onys at a time misfill, 2390
 Whan Vulcanus had caught The in his laas,
 And found The ligging by his wife, alas!
 For thilke sorow, that was in thine hert,
 Have ruthe as well upon my painis smert.
 I am yonge, and unkonning, as thou wost,
 And as I trow with Love offendid most
 That evir was any livis cature.
 For she, that doth me all this wo endure,
 Ne rekith nevir wher I sinke or flete;
 And well I wote, er she me mercy hete, 2400
 I mote with strength winnin her in this place:
 And well I wote withoutin help or grace
 Of The, ne may my strengthe not availe;
 Then help me Lord to morow in bataille,

For

For thilke fire, that whilome brennid The,
As well as thilke fire now brennith me;
And do, that I may have the victory,
Mine be the travill, Thine be the glory.
Thy Sovereign Temple wold I most honour
Of any place, and alwey most labour
In thy plesaunce, and in thy craftis strong,
And in thy temple wold my banner hong,
And all the Armis of my Cumpany,
And evirmore untill the day I dy
Eterne fire I wold before The find,
And eke to this avow I wold me bind,
My berde, my heire that hongith low adoun,
That nevir yet ne felt offensoun
Of rasour ne of shere, I wold The geve,
And bin thy trow servaunt whyle that I live
Now, Lord, have ruth upon my sorowes fore,
Geve me the victory, I ask no more.

The prayere stint of Arcite the strong,
The ringis on the temple dore they rong,
And eke the doris clatterdin full fast,
Of which Arcite somewhat was aghast.
The fire brennin on the Aulter bright,
That it gan all the temple for to light:
And a swete smell anon the ground upyafe;
And Arcite anon his hond uphase,
And more incense into the fire he cast,
With othir rytis mo: And at the last
The Statue of Mars gan his hauberk ring:
And with that sound he herde a murmuring,
Full low and dim, that seide thus, Victory.
For which he yafe Mars honour and glory;
And thus with joy and hope well to fare
Arcite goth home lessid of his care,
As faine as foule is of the brighte Sunne,
And right anon soche a strife is begunne,
For thilke graunting, in the heven above,
Betwixt Venus, that Goddess is of Love,
And Mars the stern, the God Armipotent,
That Jupiter was busy it to stent;
Untill that pale Saturnus the cold,
That knew so many adventures of old,
Found in his old experience an Art,
That he full sone hath plesid every part.
And sothe is seide, Eld hath grete avauntage,
In Eld is both wyfedom, and usage,
Men may the old outgan, but not outrede;
Saturne anon to stintin strife and drede,
(Albeit that it be againe his kind)
Of all this strife he can remedie find.

My derer daughter Venus, qd Saturne,
My Course, that hath so wide for to turne,
Hath more powir, than wote any man.
Myn is the drenching in the See so wann,
Myn is the prisoun in the derke cote,
Myn is the strangling, hanging by the throte,
The murmure, and the churlis rebelling,
The groning, and privie empoysoning;
I do vengeaunce, and pleine Correction,
While I dwell in the sign of the Lyon.
Myn is the ruine of the highe halles,
The falling of the Towris, and the Walles,
Upon the Minours, or the Carpenteres,
I slough strong Sampson shaking the pilleres;
And myn ben also the Maladys cold,
The derk trefonnis, and the castis old;
My loking is Fathir of Pestilence.
Now wepe no more, I shall do diligence,
That Palamon, that is thine owne Knight,
Shall have his Lady, as thou hast hym right.
Though Mars shall help his Knight, yet natheless
Betwixt you twein it mote be sometime pees,
All be ye not of one Complexion,
That causith all day soche division:

I am thine ayel, redy at thy will,
Wepe no more, I wold thy lust fulfill.
Now wold I stintin of these Goddes above,
Of Mars, and of Venus Goddes of Love;
And pleyndly wold I tell you as I can,
The grete effect, for which that I began.

2480

Grete was the feste in Athenis that day,
And eke that lusty seson of that May
Made every wight to ben in soche plesaunce,
That all that Monday justin they and daunce,
And spendin it in Venus high servise:
But be the cause that they shuldin arise

2490

Erly, to se the grete and straunge fight,
Unto their reste wentin they at night.
And on the morow whan day gan to spring,
Of horse and harneis, noise and clattering

2420

There was in the hostelryes all about:
And to the Palleis rode there many a rout
Of Lordis upon Stedis and Palfreis;
There maystow se devising of harneis,
So uncouth, and so ryche, and wrought so wele

2500

Of goldsmithry, of braudry, and of stele,
The sheldis bright, testuris, and trapures,
Gold-hewin helms, hauberkis, and Cotearmures,
Lordis in Parementes on their Coursers,

2430

Knightis of retinue, and eke Esqueres,
Nailing of Speres, and helmis bokiling,
Gigging of Sheldis with Lainers lacing,
As there nede is that they were nothing idyl;
The foming Stedis on the goldin bridyl
Gnawing, and fast the Armureres also
With file and hamer riding to and fro:

2510

Yemen on fote, and commyns many one,
With shorte stavis, thik as they may gone:
Pipes, trompis, nakoners, and clariouns,
That in the bataille blowin blodie sowns,
The palleis full of pepil up and down,
Here thre, there ten, holding their questoun,
Devining of these Theban Knightis two,
Some seide thus, some seide it shulde be so.
Some heldin with him with the blake berde,
Some with the ballid, some with the thik heerd.

2520

He hath a sparth of twentie pound of weight.
Thus was the Halle full of devining,
Long aftir that the Sunne gan to spring.
The grete Theseus of his slepe gan wake,
With Minstralcie, and noyse that they make;
Held yet the chambir of his Palleis ryche,
Tyll that the Theban Knightis both ylich
Honourid weren, and to the place fett;

2530

Duke Theseus is at the window sett,
Arrayid as he were a God in Trone;
The pepil pressid thithirward full sone
Hym for to sene, and don him reverence,
And eke to here his heste and his sentence.

2460

An Herawd on a Scaffold made an oo,
Tyll all the noyse of the pepil was doo.
And whan he se the pepil of noyse still,
Thus shewid he the mighty Duk's will.

2540

The Lord hath of his hie discretion
Confidrid, that it were destruction
To gentill blode, to fightin in this wise,
Of mortal bataille, now in this emprise,
Wherefore to shapin that they shall not dye
He woldin his first purpose modifye.

2470

No man therefore, up payne of los of life,
No mannir shot, ne Polax, ne short knife,
Into the listis send, or thidir bring,
Ne short Swerd for to stik with point biting
No man ne draw, ne bere it by his side:

2550

Ne no man shall unto his felaw ride
But one cours, with a sharpe groundin spere:
Foin if hym list on fote, he it shall were.

And

And he that is at mischief shall be take,
And not slayn, but be broughtin to a Stake,
That shall ben ordeynid on othir side,
Thithir he shall be force, and ther abide.
And if so fall, that the chieftain be take,
On eithir side, or ellis sleen his make,
No lengir shall the turnementè last,
God spede you, goth, and leyith it on fast, 2560
With Swerdes and long macis fightith your fill,
Goth now your wey, this is the Lord's will.

The voycè of the pepil touchid heven,
So loudè cryid they with mery Steven,
God savè soche a Lord, that is so gode,
He willith no destruction of blode.
Up goon the trompis, and the melody,
And to the Listis ritt the Cumpany,
By ordinaunce throughout the Cite large,
Hangid with cloth of gold, and not with farge. 2570

Full like a Lord this nobil Duke gan ryde,
And those two Thebanis on eithir syde:
And afir rode the Quene and Emely,
And afir that anothir Cumpany
Of one and othir, afir their degre;
And thus they passin throughout the Cite,
And to the listis comin they bytime;
It n'as not of the day yet fully prime,
Whan set was Theseus full ryche and hie,
Hippolyta the Quene and Emely, 2580
And othir Ladys in degrees about:
Unto the Setis presith all the rout.

And westward through the gatis undir Mart
Arcite and eke an hundrid of his part
Wyth bannir redde is entrid right anon;
And the selve moment entrid Palamon
Is, undir Venus Estward in that place,
Wyth bannir white, and hardy chere and face.
In all the world to sekin up and down,
So evin without variatioun 2590

There n'as no where soche cumpanyis twey,
For there was none so wise, that coude seye,
That any had of othir avauntage
Of worthiness, ne of estat, ne age.
So evin were they chosin for to ghesse:
And into rengis tweyn fayr they them dres.
Whan that their namis rad were everichone,
That in their nombre gile were there none,
Tho were the gatis shut, and cryed was loude,
Do now your devir yonge Knightis proude. 2600

The Herawdes left their priking up and down,
Now ringin trompis loud and Clarioun,
There is no more to seyn but Est and West
In goth the sharpe spere sadly in the Rest
In goth the sharpe spore into the horse side;
There see Men who can just and who can ride!
There shiverin shaftis upon sheldis thik,
He felith through the hertè spone the prik,
Upspringith speris twenty fote on hight,
Out goth the swerdis as the silvir bright; 2610
The helmis they to hewin, and to shred,
Out brestith the blode with stern stremis red;
With mighty macis they the bones to brest,
He through the thikist of the throng gan threst,
There stomblin stedis strong, and down gon all,
He rollith undir fote as doth a ball.

He foinith on his fote with his tronchoun,
And he him hurtlith with his horse adoun.
He through the body born, and sith is take Maugre his hede, and brought unto the stake, 2620
As foreward was, right there he must abide.
Anothir had is on that othir side.

And sometime doth them Theseus to rest,
Them to refresh, and drinkin, if them lest.
Full ofte a day have these Thebanis two
Togethir met, and done eche othir wo;

Unhorfid hath ech othir of them twey;
There n'as Tigre' in the Vale of Galgophy,
Whan that her whelp is stolen whan it is lite, 2630
So cruill on the hunt, as is Arcite
For jelous hert upon this Palamon:

Ne in Belmarie there is no Lion
That huntid is, or for his hungir wode,
Ne of his prey desirith so the blode,
As Palamon to sle his foe Arcite:
The jelous strokis on their helmis bite,
Out rennith blode on both their sidis rede,
Sometime an end there is of every dede!
For er the Sunne unto the Westè went,
The strongè King Emetrius gan hent 2640
This Palamon, as he fought with Arcite,
And made his swerde depe in his flesch ybite.
And by the force of twenty is he take,
Unyoldin, and ydrawin to the stake.

And in the rescous of this Palamon
The strong King Lycurgus is born adoun:
And King Emetrius, for all his strength,
Is borne out of the saddle his swerd's length,
So smote him Palamon ere he were take;
But all for nought; he was brought to the stake: 2650
His hardy herte might him ne helpin naught,
He must abidin, whan that he was caught,
By force, and eke by Composition.

Who soroweth now but woful Palamon,
That mote no more gone again to fight?
And whan that Theseus had sene that sight,
He cryid ho: no more; for it is done,
Ne none shall lengir to his felaw gone.

I woll be a true judge, and not party,
Arcite of Thebis shall have Emely, 2660
That by his fortune hath her fayr ywonn.
Anon there is a noyse of pepil gonn,
For joy of this, so loud and hie withall,
It semid that the Listis shuldin fall.

What now can fayr Venus doin above?
What seith she now? what doth this Quene of Love?
But wepith sore for wanting of her will,
Till that her teris on the listis fill.

She seide, I am ashamid douteless;
Saturnus seide, fayr daughtir, hold thy pece, 2670
Mars hath his wyll, his Knight hath all his bone,
But by my hede thou shalt be esid sone.
The trompis with the loudè Minstralcie,
The Herawdis, that full loude yell and crie,
Ben in their wele, for joy of Dan Arcite.
But herk'nith me, and stintith noyse a lite;
Which a Miracle there befell anon.

The fiers Arcite hath of his helmè don,
And on a Courser for to shew his face
He prikith endlong in the large space, 2680
Loking upward upon his Emely,
And the ayen him cast a frendly eye,
(For wemyn, as to spekin in commune, Followin all the favour of Fortune)

And was allè his chere, as in his herte.
Out of the ground a fire infernall sterte
From Pluto sent, at request of Saturne,
For which his horse for fere began to turn,
And lepe aside, and foundrid as he lepe,
And er that Arcite may takin kepe, 2690
He pight him on the pomill of his hede,
That in the place he lay as he were dede.
His brest to brostin with his sadill bow;
As blake he ley as any Cole or Crow,
So was the blode yronnin in his face;
Anon he was ybrought out of that place,
With hert full fore to Theseus Palleis.
Tho was he corvin out of his harneis,
And in a bedde ybrought full fayr and blive, 2700
For he was yet in memory, on live,

And

And alwey crying aftir Emely.

Duke Theseus, with all his Cumpany,
Is comin home to Athenes the Cite,
With allè blifs, and grete Solempnite,
Albeit that this aventure was fall,
He wuldè not discumfortin them all.
Men seide eke that Arcitè shou'd not dye,
He shulde ben helid of his Maladye.
And of anothir thing they were as fayne,
That of them allè there was no man slayne; 2710
Al were they forely hurt, and namely one,
That with a Spere was thirlid his brest bone:
Two othir woundis hadde, two brokin armes,
Some of them haddin salves, and some had charmes,
Sondry fermacis of herbs, and eke Save,
They dronkin, for they wolde their livis save.
For which this nobill Duke, as he wele can,
Cumfortith, and honourith every man.
And made a grete revill all the long night,
Unto the straungè Lordes, as it was right. 2720
Ne there n'as holdin no discomforting,
But as is at justis or turnying:
For sothly there n'as no discomfiture,
For falling n'is not but an aventure:
Ne to beladde by force unto a stake
Unyoldin, and with twentie Knightis take,
One persone alone, without any mo,
And haryid foorth by arm and fote and too,
And eke his Stedè drivin foorth with staves,
With fotemen, bothè yemyn, and eke knaves, 2730
It was arrettid him no villany:
There may no Man clepin it cowardy.
For which anon Duke Theseus let cry
To stintin blive all rancour and envy.
They grete as wele of one side as of other,
And either side is like as other's brother:
And yafe them gestis aftir their degre,
And fully held a festè dayis thre.
And conveyid the Kingis worthily
Out of his Town a largè dayes journey. 2740
And home went every man the rightè wey,
There n'as no more but farewell, and gode dey.
Of this bataille I woll no more endite,
But speke of Palamon and of Arcite.

Swellith the brest of Arcite, and the fore
Encresith at his herte still more and more.
The clor'rid blode for any lech'is craft
Corrumpid, and is in his body laft,
That neithir veinè blode, ne ventousing,
Ne drinkis of herbis may ben helping,
By vertue expulsive or animall;
For thilkè vertue clepid naturall
Ne may the venim voidè ne expell.
The pipis of his lungs begun to swell,
And every lacert of his brest adoun
Is shent with venim and corruption.
Him gainith neithir, for to get his life,
Vomit upward, ne downward laxatife:
All is to borstin thilkè regioun,
Nature hath there no domination; 2760
And certainly where nature woll not wurch,
Farewell Phisike, go bere the Corse to chirch.
This all and some is Arcitè must dye,
For whiche he sendith aftir Emely,
And Palamon that was his Cofin dere:
Then seide he thus, as ye shull aftir here.

Nought may my woful Spirit in my herte
Declare oo point of all my sorowes smerte;
To you, my Lady, that I lovin most,
But I bequeth the servise of my ghost 2770
To you abovin every Creture,
Syn that my lyfe no lengir may endure.
Alas my wo! alas my peinis strong!
That I for you have sufferid so long.

Alas the dethe! alas mine Emily!
Alas departing of our Cumpany!
Alas mine hert'is quene! alas my wife!
Myn hert'is Lady, endir of my life!
What is the world? what askin men to have?
Now with his love, now in his coldè grave, 2780
Allone withoutin any cumpany.
Farewell my foe, farewell myn Emely,
And soft do take me in your armis twey,
For love of God, and herk'nith what I sey.
I have here with my Cofin Palamon
Had strife and rancour many' a day agon
For lufe of you, and for my jelosy:
And Jupiter my Soule so wisly gie,
To spekin of a Servaunt propirly,
With Circumstauncis all, and truily, 2790
That is to say, Trouth, Honour, and Knighthede,
Wisdomè, Humblefs, Estate, and hie Kinrede,
Fredome, and all that length to that Art
So Jupiter have in my Soule part,
As in this worldè right now know I none,
So worthy to be lov'd as Palamon,
That servith you, and woll don all his life,
And if that you shall evir ben a wife,
Forget not Palamon, the gentil Man.
And with that word his speche to faile began. 2800
For from his fete unto his brest was come
The cold of dethe, that hath him ovircome.
And yet moreovir for in his armes two
The vital strength is lost, and all ago,
And also th' intellect withoutin more,
That dwellith in his hertè sike and fore,
Gan failin, whan that his herte felt the dethe,
Duskid his eyin twey, and failith brethe.
But on his Lady yet cast he his eye,
His lastè worde was, Mercy Emily. 2810
His spirit chaungid housè, and out went there,
As I come nevir, I cannot tell where.
Therefore I stint, I am no Divinistre,
Of Soulis fynd I nought in this Registre.
Ne me list not chilk opinions to tell
Of them, though that they writin where they dwell.
Arcite is cold, there lat Mars his Soule gie.
Now woll I spekin forth of Emely;
Shright Emely, and howlith Palamon.
And Theseus his Sustir toke anon, 2820
Swouning, and bare her fro the Corse away.
What helpith it to tary forth the day,
To tellin how she wept both even and morue,
For in soche caas wymin have mochill sorue,
Whan that their husbonds ben fro them ago,
That for the more part they sorowin so,
Or ellis fallin in soche Malady,
That at the lastè certainly they dye.
Infinite ben the sorow, and the teres,
Of oldè folk, and folk of tendir yeres, 2830
In all the town for dethe of this Theban;
For him there wepith bothè child and man.
So grete a weping was there none certaine,
Whan Hector was ybrought all fresh yslaine
To Troy, alas! the pitè that was there,
Scratching of chekis, renting eke of here.
Why wuldist thou be dede, the wymin crie,
And haddist gold ynow, and Emilie?
There is no mann may gladdin Theseus,
Saving his agid fathir Ægeus, 2840
That knew this world'is transmutatioun,
As he had seynin it, both up and down,
Joy aftir wo, and wo aftir gladness,
And shewith him ensamples, and likenesse.
Right as there dyid nevir mann, q'ð he,
That he ne lived in Erth in some degre,
Right so ther livid nevir man, he seide,
In all this world, that sometime he ne deyde.

G

This

This world is but a throughfare full of wo,
And we ben pilgrimes passing to and fro.
Dethe is the End of every worldly fore.
And ovir all this yet seide he much more
To this effect, full wisely to exhort
The peple, that they shulde them recomfort.

Duke Theseus with all his busie cure
Castith about where that the Sepulture
Of gode Arcite, may best ymakid be,
And eke most honourable in degre.
And at the last he toke Conclufion,
That there as first Arcite and Palamon
Haddin for love the battaile them betwene,
That in the self same grove swete and grene,
There as he hadde his amorous desires,
His Complaint, and for Love his horte fires
He woude make a fire, in whiche the Office
Funerall he mightin all accomplissh,
And commaundid anon to hake and hew
The Okis old, and lay them all on rew,
In culpons, well arrayid for to brenne;
His officeres with swifte fote they renne
All ryght anon at his commaundement;
And aftir that Theseus hath ysent
For a large Beir, and it all orespradde
Wyth cloth of gold, the richest that he hadde.
And of the same sute he clothid Arcite,
Upon his hondis he put his gloves white,
Eke on his hede a Croune of laurer grene,
And in his hond a swerde full bright and kene.
He leyd him bare visagid on the bier,
Therewith he wept, that pite was to here. 2850
And for the peple shuld sein him all,
Whan it was day they brought him to the Hall,
That rorith of the crying and the sowne.
Tho gan this wofull Theban Palamon
With sotry berde, and ruggy ashey heres,
In clothis blake bedroppid all with teres,
And (passyng ovir weping Emily)
Was rufullist of all the Cumpany.
And in as much as the servise shulde be
The more nobil and ryche in his degre,
Duke Theseus lete forth the Stedis bring,
That trappid were in Stele all glittering,
And covered with the Armes of Dan Arcite:
Upon these Stedis grete and lilly white
Ther sattin folk, of whiche one bare his shelde,
Anothir his spere in his honde held:
The third bare with him his bow Turkis,
Of fine gold was the case and the harnais:
And ridin forth apafe with fory chere
Toward the grove, as ye shull aftir here. 2900
The noblist of the Grekes that werin there
Upon their shulderes carryid the biere
With a slake pace, and eyin redde and wete,
Throughout the Cite, by the Maistir strete,
That spradde was all with blake and wondir hie;
Right of the same is the strete ywrie.
Upon the ryght hond went old Ageus,
And on the othir side Duke Theseus
With Vessils in ther hond of gold full fine,
All full of hony, milk, and blode and wine. 2910
Eke Palamon with full grete Cumpany,
And aftir that came wofull Emily,
With fire in hond, as was that time the gyfe
To do the office of funerall Servise.
Hie labour, and full grete apparelling
Was at the servise, and the fire-making,
That with his grenè top the hevin wrought,
And twenty fadom of brede armis straught,
This is to feyne, the boughis were so brode,
Of fire first there was layde many a lode. 2920
But how the fire was makid up on hight,
And eke the namys how the treis hight,

As oke, firr, birch, asp, aldir, elm, poplere,
Willow, holm, plane, ash, box, cheften, and laurere,
Maple, thorn, beche, ewe, hasill, whipultre,
How they were feld, shall not be told for me.
Ne how the Goddis rennin up and doune,
Dissherite of their habitaoun,
In which they wonnid in rest and in pece,
The Nymphs and Fawns and Hamadryades. 2930
Ne how the bestis, ne the birdis all
Fleddin for fere, whan that the wode was fall:
Ne how the ground aghast was of the light,
That was not wont to se the Sunne bright;
Ne how the fire was couchid first with stre,
And then with drie stikis clovin a thre,
And then with grenè wode and spicerie,
And then with cloth of gold and with perie,
And garlondes hanging with many a floure,
The myrrhe, the incense, with the swete odoure. 2940
Ne how Arcite lay among all this,
Ne what rycheise about his bodie is,
Ne how that Emelie, as was the gife,
Put in the fire of funeral servise:
Ne how she sowned, whan made was the fire,
Ne what she spake, ne what was her desire:
Ne what Jewillis men in the fire cast,
Whan that the fire was grete, and brennid fast:
Ne how some cast their shelde, and some their spere,
And some their vestimentis which they were, 2950
And cuppis full of milk, and wine, and blode,
Into the fire, that brent as it were wode.
Ne how the Grekis with a hugè rout
Thryis did ridin all the fire about,
Upon the left hand, with a loud shourting,
And thrys on the right with speres clattering:
And thrys how the Ladys gan all to crie:
Ne how that led was homeward Emily:
Ne how Arcite is brent to Ashin cold:
Ne how that there theliche-wake was yhold, 2960
All that night long, ne how the Grekis play
The Wake-playis; ne kepe I not to say
Who wraistlid best nakid, with oyle anoint,
Ne who that bare him best in every point.
I woll nat tellin eke how that they gon
Home till Athenis, whan the play is don.
But shortly to the point then woll I wend,
And makin of my longè tale an end.
By process of time and by length of yeres
All flintid is the mourning and the teres 2970
Of Grekis, by one general assent.
Then semid me there was a Parliment
At Athenes on a certain point and caas,
And among the which pointis spokin was
To have with certaine Countrys Alliaunce,
And have of Thebanes fully Obeisaunce.
For whiche the nobil Theseus anon
Let sendin aftir gentil Palamon,
Unwist of him, what was the cause and why.
But in his blake clothis sorowfully 2980
He came at his commaundement on hie;
Tho sent Theseus aftir Emilie.
Whan they were sett, and hushid was the place,
And Theseus abidin hath a space,
Er anie word came fro his wise brest,
His eyin sett he there as was his lest,
And with a sadde visage he sighid still,
And aftir that right thus he seide his will.
The first movir of the causis above,
Whan that he first made the fair chaine of Love, 2990
Grete was th' effect, and hie was his entent,
Wele wist he why, and what thereof he ment:
For with that faire chainè of Love he bonde,
The fire, the aire, the watir, and the lond,
In certaine bondis, that they may not sice;
The same Prince, and the same movir, qð he,
Hath

Hath stablished in this wretchid world adoun
 Certaine of dayis and duratioun,
 To all that are engendrid in this place,
 Ovir the whichè day they may not pace,
 Alle mowin they yet tho dayis abregge,
 There nedith none authoriry to legge,
 For it is provid by experience
 But that me list declarin my sentence.
 Then may men by this order wele discern
 That thilk movir stable is and eterne.
 Wele may man know, but that he be a fole,
 That every part derivith from his whole.
 Nature hath not takin his beginning
 Of no partis, or cantill of a thing,
 But of oo thing that parfite is and stable,
 Descending so till it be corrupable.
 And therefore of his wise purveyaunce
 He hath so wele besett his Ordinaunce,
 That space of thingis and progressions
 Shullith endure ay by successions
 And not eterne ben, without any lye.
 This mayst'ow undirstond, and sene at eye;
 Lo! th'Oke; that hath so long a norishing
 Fro the time that he first ginnith to spring,
 And hath so long a life, as ye may se,
 Yet at the last ywaftid is the tre.
 Confidrih eke, how that the hardè stone
 Undir our fete, on which we trede and gone,
 Yet wastith, as it lyith in the wey.
 And the brode rivir sometime wexith dry.
 The grete Townis so wide do wane and wend;
 Than ye sene that all these thingis hath end.
 In man and woman se shall we also,
 That endith in one of these termis two,
 That is to fayn, in youthe, or ellis age,
 He mote be dede, a King as shall a Page,
 Some in his bedde, some in the depè See,
 Some in the largè felde, as ye may see;
 It helpith nought, all goeth that ilkè way;
 Then may you sene that all thingis mote dye.
 What makith this but Jupiter the King?
 That is the Prince and Causir of all thing,
 Converting al wita his propir will,
 From which it is derivid, sothe to tell.
 And here agaimst no creature on live
 Of no degre avaith for to strive.
 Then it is wisdom, as it thinkith me,
 To make a virtue of necessity:
 And take that wele, that we may not eschew,
 And namely that, that to us all is dew.
 And whofo grutchith ought, he doth folye,
 And rebill is to him that all may gye.
 And certeynly a mann hath most honour
 To dyin in his excellence and floure;
 When he is fikkir of his godè name:
 Than he hath don his frendes and him no shame.
 And gladdir ought his frendes be of his dethe,

Whan yoldin up with honour is his brethe,
 Than whan his name appallid is for age,
 And all forgottin is his Vassalage,
 Then it is best as for a worthy fame,
 To dyin, whan that he is most of name.
 The contrary of this is wilfulness.
 Why grutchin we? why have we hevyness,
 That gode Arcite, of chivalrie the flowr,
 Departid is, with duty and honour,
 Out of this foulè prison of this life?
 Why grutchin here his cosin and his wife
 Of his welfare, that lovith him so wele?
 Can he them thank? nay God wot ner' a dele,
 That both his Soule, and eke themself offend,
 And yet they mow their lustis not amend.
 What may I conclude of this long serie,
 But aftir wo I rede us be merie,
 And thankin Jupiter for all his grace;
 And er that we departin from this place,
 I rede that we makin of sorowes two
 O perfite joyè lastig evirmo.
 And loke now where most sorow is herein
 There woll I first at this time begin.
 Sustir, q'ð he, this is my full assent,
 With the avise here of my Parliment,
 That gentil Palamon your ownè Knight,
 That servith you with will, and hert, and might,
 And evir hath sithins you first him knew,
 That ye shull of your grace upon him rew,
 And take him for your husbond and your Lord?
 Lene me your hond, for this is our accord,
 Lete se now of your womanly pite;
 He is a King's brother's sonne parde,
 And though he were but a pore batchelere,
 Syn he hath servid you so many' a yere,
 And hadde for you so grete adversite,
 It muste ben confid'rid, levith me,
 For gentil mercie ought to passin right.
 Then seide he thus to Palamon the Knight,
 I row there nedith littil farmoring
 To makin you assent unto this thing,
 Come nere, and take your Lady by the hond;
 Betwixt them two was made anon the bond,
 That Matrimonie hight, or Maryage,
 By all the Counsaile of his Baronage.
 And thus with alle blis and melodye
 Hath Palamon yweddid Emilie.
 And God, that all this widè world hath wrought,
 Send him his Love, that it hath dère about.
 For now is Palamon in alle wele,
 Living in blis, in riches, and in hele,
 And Emilie him lovith tendirly,
 And he hir servith ay so gentilly,
 That nevir was there no word them betwene,
 Of Jelousie, or any othir tene.
 Thus endith Palamon and Emilie,
 And God save alle this fayre Cumpanie.

Here endith the KNIGHTES TALE. And followeth II. The MILLERS TALE.

II. The MILLER's TALE.

NICHOLAS a Scholar of Oxford, practiseth with ALISON, the Carpenter's Wife of Osney, to deceive her Husband; but in the end is rewarded accordingly. This is one of those Tales, that Lidgate (in his Prologue to the Story of the Siege of Thebes) says, are of ribauldrie

To makin laughtir in the Cumpany.

So, Reader, you know what you are to expect, read, or forbear, as you think fitting.

The PROLOGUE.

WHAN that the Knyght had thus his Tale ytold, In all the Cump'ny n'as there yong ne old, That he ne feide' twas a nobill Story, And worthy to be drawn in Memory: And namily the gentiles everichone. Our Hostè lough, and fware, so mote I gone This goeth aright, unboklid is the male, Let se now who shall tell anothir tale: For truely the game is right well begonn: Now tellith us, Sir Monk, if that ye conn Somewhat to quite with the Knight's tale. The Millere that for dronkin was all pale, So that unnethe upon his horse he sat, Ne n'old availin, neithir hode ne hat,	Ne abide no Man for his Curtesie, But in Pilat's voice he began to crie, And swore by armis, by blode, and by bones, I can a nobill tale for the nones. With which I woll now quite the Knight's tale. Our Host saw that he dronkin was of Ale, 20 And feide, abide, Robin, myn levè brother, Some better man shall tell us first another, Abide, and let us werkin thriftily. By Godd's Soule, qð he, that woll not I, For I will speke, or ellis go my way. 10 Our Host answerde, say on a Devil way, Thou art a fole, thy wit is ovircome; Now herk'nith, qð the Millere, all and some; But first I make my protestatioun, That I am dronke, I know it by my sounne, 30 And
--	---

And therefore if I mispakin or say,
Wite it the Ale of Suthwerke, I-you pray.
For I woll tell a Legend, and a life,
Both of a Carpentere, and of his wife.
How that a Clarke hath sett a Wright's Capp.

The Reve answerid, and seide, stint thy clapp,
Let be thy lewde dronkin harlottrie,
It is a sinne, and eke a grete follie
To apaire any man, or him defame,
And eke to bringe wivis in soche blame,
Thou maist ynow of othir thingis saine.
This dronkin Millere spake full sone againe,
And seide, my leve brothir Ofwold,
Whoso hath no wife, he is no Cokold.
But I say not therefore that thou art one,
There be full gode wivis many a one,
And ere a thousand gode aginst one bad,
Thou knowist thy self, but if thou be mad,
Why art thou angry with my tale now?
I have a wife parde as well as thou,
Yet n'old I, for all th' Oxin in my plough,
Takin upon me more than is ynow,
To demin of my self that I am one,
I woll belivin wele that I am none.
An husbond shuld not ben inquisitive
Ne of God's privite, ne of his wife.
For so he fynde Godd's foison there,
Of the remnaunt hym nedith not t'enquere.
What shulde I more sey, but that this Millere
He n'old his worde for no man forbere,
But told his churl's tale in this manere.
Me forthinkith, I shall reherse it here,
And therefore every gentil wight I pray,
For Godd's Love, demith not that I say
Of ill intent, but that I mote reherse
Their talis all, ben they betir or werse,
Or ellis falsin some of my matere.
And therefore whoso list it not to here,
Turn ov'r the lese, and chuse anothir tale,
For ye shall find ynow both grete and smale,
Of history, and thinges touching gentlines,
And eke Morality, and Holines.
Blamith not me, if that ye chuse amiss,
The Millere is a churle, ye know wele this.
So was the Reve, and Coke, and othir mo,
And Harlotry they toldin eke both two.
Avisith you, and put me out of blame,
And eke Men shulde not make ernest of Game.

The TALE.

Whilome there was dwelling in Oxinford,
A ryche gnoffe, that gestis held to bord,
And of his craft he was a Carpentere;
With him there was dwelling a pore Schol-

lere,
Had lernid Art, but all his fantasie
Was turnid now to lerne Astrology,
And couth a certein of Conclusions,
To demin by Interrogations,
If that men askid hym in certeine houres,
Whan that men shuldin have or drought, or shoures.
Or if men askid hym what shulde befall
Of every thing, I may not reckin all.

This Clark yclepid was Hend Nicholas;
Of dernè love he couth, and of Solas.
And thereto he was flie, and right prive,
And like unto a Maidin meke to se.
A chambre he had in that hostellerie
Alone, withoutin any Company,

Full fetously ydight with herbis sote,
And he himself as swete as is the rote
Of Licoris, or any Seduwall.
His Almagiste, and bokis grete and smale, 100
His Afterlagour, longing for his Art,
His Augrim stonis lying feire apart,
On shelvis al couched at his bedd's hede,
His presse y covrid with a folding rede,
And all above there lay a gay Sautrie,
On which he made on Nightis melodie,
So swetely that all the chambre rong,
And Angelus ad Virginem he song.
And aftir that he song the King's note,
Full oftin blessid was his mery throte. 110
And thus the swete Clark all his time spent
Aftir his frendis finding, and his rent.

This Carpentere had weddid new a wife,
Which that he lovid, as he did his life,
Of eightene yere, I ghesse, she was of age,
Jelouse he was, and kept her strait in Cage,
For she was wild and yong, and he was old,
And demid himself to ben a Cokold.
He knew not Cato, for his wit was rude,
That bad men weddin their similitude. 120
Men shuldè weddin aftir their estate,
For Youth and Eld is oftin at debate.
But sith that he was fallin in the snare,
He must endure, as othir folk, his care.
Faire was this yonge wife, and therewithall
As a wifill, her body gent' and small. 130
A Seint she werid, barrid all with silk,
A barmecloth eke as white as morow milk,
Upon her lendis, full of many a gore.
White was her Smok embroudid all before, 140
And eke behind, on her Colere about,
Of cole blak silk within and eke without.
The tapis of her white Volipere
Were of the same sure of her colere.
Her fillit brode of silk, and set full hie:
And sikirly she had a likerous eye. 70
Full smale ypullid were her browis two,
And tho were bent, and blak as any flo.
And she was moche more blisfull for to se,
Than is the newè Perienet tre, 140
And softir than the woll is of a wether;
And by her girdil hong a purse of lether,
Tassid with Silk, and perlid with Latoun,
In all this world to sekin up and down
There n'is no man so wise that couthè thence
So gay a Popelote, or so gay a wench.

Full brightir was the shining of her hue
Than in the Towre the Noble forgid new.
But of her song she was so loude and yerne
As any Swallow sitting on a berne. 150
Thereto she couthè skipp, and make a game,
As any kid or calfe foll'wing his dame;
Her mouth was swete as brakit or the meth,
Or horde of Applis layd in hay or heth.
Winfing she was as is a jolly Colt,
Long as a Mast, and upright as a bolt.
A broche she bare upon her low Collere,
As brode as is the bosse of a bokelere.
Her shoes were lacid on her leggis hie, 160
She was a Primrose, and a Piggisnie,
For any Lord to liggin in his bedde,
Or yet for any gode yoman to wedde.

Now Sir, and eft Sir, so befell the caas,
That on a day this Hende Nicholas
Fill with this yonge wife to rage and pley,
While that her husbond was at Oseney,
As Clerkis ben full sotill and full queint,
And privily he caught her by the queint,
And seide, I wis but that I have my will,
For derne Love, Love of The, Lemman, I spill: 170
H And

And heldin her fast by the hanchè bones,
 And seide, Lemman, love me well at ones,
 Or I woll dyin, as so God me save.
 And she gan spring, as a Colt in a trave.
 And with her hede she wryith fast away,
 And seide, I woll not kisse The by my fay.
 Why! let be, qð she, let be, Nicholas,
 Or I will crie out harrow and alas!
 D'away your handis for your curtesy.

This Nicholas gan mercy for to crie,
 And spake so fayr, and proffered him so fast,
 That she her love hym grauntid at the last:
 And swore her oth by Seint Thomas of Kent,
 That she wulde ben at his Commaundement,
 Whan that she may her leysure well espie.
 Mine husbond is so full of jelousie,
 But that ye waitin well, and ben privy,
 I wote right well, I n'am but dede, qð she,
 Ye mote ben full derne, as in this caas.

Nay thereof care you nought, qð Nicholas: 190
 A Clerk had lithirly besett his while,
 But if he couth a Carpenterè beguile.
 And thus they were accordid, and ysworne,
 To waite a time, as I have seide before.
 Whan Nicholas had done this every dele,
 And thakkid her about the Lendis wele,
 He kist her swete, then takith his Sautrie,
 And playith fast and makith Melodye.

Then fell it thus, that to the Parish Chirch
 (Christ's owne workis for to ywirch)
 This gode wife went upon a Holyday:
 Her forehede shone as bright as any day,
 So was it washyn, whan she lete her werke;
 Now was there of the Chirch a Parish Clerke,
 The which that was yclepid Absolon,
 Crull was his heere, and as the gold it shone,
 And stroutid as a fannè large and brode,
 Full straight and evin lay his jollie shode.
 His rude was redde, his eyin gray as gose,
 With Poul's windowes corvin on his shose. 210
 In hofin redde he went full fetously,
 Yclad he was full smale and propirly,
 All in a kirtil of a light wachet,
 Full fayre, and thikè ben the pointis fet.
 And thereupon he hadde a gay surplice
 As white as is the blosome on the rice.
 A merie childe he was, so God me save.
 Well couth he lettin blode, and clip, and shave,
 Or make a Chartre of lond, or acquitaunce,
 In twenty manir couth he trip and daunce, 220
 Aftir the Schole of Oxinfordè tho,
 And with his leggis castin to and fro:
 And playin songis on a smale ribible,
 Thereto he song sometime a loud quynible:
 And as well couth he play on a gitterne.
 In all the Toune n'as brewhouse, ne taverne,
 There as ony gay gille or tapstere was,
 That he ne visitid with his Solas.
 But sothe to sayne, he was somedeles squaimus
 Of fartying, and of spechè daungerous.

This Absolon, that was jolly and gay,
 Goeth with a Censir on a Holliday,
 Censing the wivis of the Parish fast,
 And many a lovely loke on them he cast;
 And namely on this Carpenter's wife:
 To loke on her hym thought a mery life,
 She was so propre, and swete, and licorous,
 I dare wele say, if she had ben a Mousè,
 And he a Catte, he woude her hent anon.

This Parish Clerk, this jolly Absolon,
 Hath in his hertè soche a Love longing,
 That of no wife toke he none offering,
 For curtesy, he seide, he wulde have none.
 The Mone, whan it was night, full bright yshone,

And Absolon his gitterne hath ytake,
 For Paramoures he thought for to awake,
 And forth he goth jelouse and amorous,
 Till he came to the Carpenter's house,
 A littil aftir the Cok had y crow,
 And drestid hym undir a shot window, 250
 That was upon the Carpenter's wall,
 He singith in his voyce gentil and small,
Now derè Lady, if thy will it be,

180 I pray you that ye welde rew on me,
 Full wele according to his gitterning;
 This Carpenterè awoke, and herd him sing,
 And spake unto his wife, and seide anon,
 What, Alifon, here thou not Absolon,
 That chauntith thus undir our bour's wall?
 And she answerde her husbond there withall, 260
 Yes God wot, John, I here it every dele.

This passith forth, what woll ye bet than wele?
 Fro day to day this jolly Absolon,
 So woith her, that him was wo begon.
 He wakith all the night, and all the day,
 He kembith his lockes brode, and made him gay,
 He woith her by menis and brocage,
 And swore that he wulde ben her ownè page;

He singith broking as as a Nightingale,
 He sent her Piment, Methe, and spicid Ale; 270
 And Wafris piping hote out of the glede;
 And for she was of toun, he proff'rid Mede,
 For some folk will be wonnin for rychese,
 And some for strokes, and some for gentilnesse.
 Sometime to shew his lightness and Maistry,
 He playith Heraudes on a Scaffold hie;
 But what availith him, as in this caas,
 So lovith she this Hendè Nicholas,
 That Absolon may blow the buk's horne,
 He ne had for his labour but a scorne. 280

And thus she makith Absolon her Ape,
 And all his ernist turnith to a jape.
 Full sothe is this Proverb, it is no lie,
 Men sayin thus alwey, that the nye fly
 Still makith the ferre lovè to be lothe:
 For though that Absolon be wode or wrothe,
 Because that he was ferrè from her sight,
 This nye Nicholas stode still in his light.
 Now bere The wele, thou Hendè Nicholas. 290
 For Absolon may waile and sing alas!

And so befell it on a Saturday,
 This Carpenterè was gone to Osenei,
 And Hendè Nicholas and Alifon
 Accordid were to this Conclusion,
 That Nicholas shall shapin him a wile
 This sely jelouse husbond to begyle:
 And if so be that the game went aright,
 She shulde slepe in his armis all nyght,
 For this was his desire, and hers also.
 And right anon withoutin wordis mo, 300
 This Nicholas no lengir wulde tary,
 But doth full soft into his chambir cary
 Both mete and drinkè for a dey or twey.

230 And to her husbond bade her for to sey,
 If that he askid after Nicholas,
 She shulde answer she n'ist not where he was;
 Of all that day she saw him not with eye,
 She trowith he was in some maladye.
 For for no crie, she or her Maid couth call,
 He n'old answer, for nought that might befall. 310

Thus passith forth all that ilk Saturday,
 That Nicholas still in his chambre lay;
 And ete, and drank, and slept, did what hym lest,
 Till Sunday, that the Sunnè goth to rest.

This sely Carpenterè hath grete merveile
 Of Nicholas, or what thing might him aile,
 And seide, I am adradd by St. Thomas,
 It standith not aright with Nicholas,

God shild, that he ne dyid sodeinly,
This world is now full tickle sikirly:
I saw to day a Corse borne to the Cherche,
That now on Monday last I saw him werch.
Go up, qð he unto his knave anon,
Clepe at the dore, and knock fast with a Stone,
Loke how he is, and tell me boldely.

This knave goith him up full sturdily,
And at the chambir dore while that he stode,
He cryith and knockith, as he were wode.
What ho! what do ye, Mastir Nicholas?
How may you slepit all this longè day?
But all for nought, he herde never a word:
An hole he found full low undir a bord;
There as the Catt was wont in for to crepe,
And at that hole he lokid in full depe,
And at the last he had of him a sight.

This Nicholas sat ay gaping upright,
As he had kykid on the newe Mone.
Adoun he goth, and told his Mastir sone;
In what array he saw this ilke Man.

This Carpenter to blissin him began,
And seide, now helpin us, Seint Frideswide.
A man wot littil what shall him betide.
This man is fallen with his Astronomy,
In some wodeness, or in some Agony.
I thoughtin ay wele how it shulde be,
Men shulde not know of God's privity.
Yea blessid be alwey the lewde man,
That nought but only his belesse can.
So ferde anothir Clerk with Astronomy,
He walked into the feldis for to pry
Upon the Sterres, to wete what shulde befall,
Tyll he was in a Marlepit yfall;
He saw not that. But yet by Seint Thomas
Me ruith fore on Hende Nicholas:
He shall be ratid for his studying,
If that I may, by Jesus Hevin King.

Get me a staff, that I may undirspore,
While that thou, Robin, hevist up the dore.
He shall out of his studying I ghesse.
And to the chambir dore he gan him dresse.
His knave was a strong Carle for the nones,
And by the haspe he heved it up at ones,
Into the flore the dore it fill anone.

This Nicholas sat ay as still as stone,
And evir gapid upward in the aire.
This Carpenter wend he was in despaire,
And hent him by the shulderes mightily,
And shoke him hard, and cryith pitoussly,
What, Nicholas! what who, now loke adoun: 370
Awake, and think on Crist's passoun.
I crouch The fro Elves, and fro wikid Wightes;
And therewith the Night spell he seide arightes,
On four halvis of the house about,
And on the Dreshfold of the dore without,
' Jesu Christ, and Seint Benedight,
' Blesse this house from every wikid Wight,
' Fro the Nights Mare, the wite Paternoster,
' Where wonnist thou Seint Peters Suttir.
And at the last this Hende Nicholas,
Gan for to fike fore, and seide alas! 380
Shall all this world be lost eftsonis now?
This Carpenter answerde, what sayist thou?
What? think on God, as we Men do that swink.

This Nicholas answerid, fetch me drink,
And aftir wolle I speke in privy
Of certeinethinges, that touchith The and me:
I wolle tell it none othir Man certeine.

This Carpenter goth doune, and cometh againe,
And brought of mighty Ale a large quart,
And whan that eche of them had dronk his part, 390
This Nicholas his chambir dore fast shet,
And down the Carpenter by him he sett,

And seide, John, Host mine, both lese and dere;
320 Thou shalt upon thy trowth swere to me here,
That to no wight thou shalt my Counsaile wrey,
For it is Crist's counsaile that I sey,
And if thou tell it Man, thou art forlore,
For this Vengeaunce thou shalt havin therefore,
That if thou wrye me, thou shalt be wode,
Nay Crist it forbid, for his holy blode, 400
Qð tho this sely man, I am no blabb,
Nay though I say't, I n'am not lese to gabb.
Say what thou wolt, I shall it never tell,
330 To child, ne wyfe, by him that harrowed hell.
Now, John, qð Nicholas, I wolle nat lie,
I have foundin in mine Astrologye,
As I have lokid in the Mone bright,
That now on Munday next, at quartir night,
Shal fall a raine, and that so wilde and wode,
That half so grete was never Noes fode: 410
This world, he seide, in less than half an houre,
Shall all be dreint, so hideous is the shoure:
Thus shall mankind drenche, and lese their life.
This Carpenter then seide, alas my wife!
440 And shall she drench? Alas myn Alison!
And for sorow he fell almost adoun,
And seide, n'is there remedy in this caas?
Yes, yes, full gode replied Hende Nicholas,
If thou wilt work aftir my lore, and rede;
Thou maist not werkin aftir thine own hede. 420
For thus saith Solomon, that was full trew,
Werk all by counsaile, and thou shalt not rew.
But if thou werkin wilt by gode counsaile,
350 I undirtake withoutin Mast or Saile,
Yet shall I favin her, and The, and me.
Hast'ow not herde how favid was Noe,
Whan that our Lorde had warnid him beforne;
That all the world with watir shuld be lorn?
Yes, qð the Carpenter, full yore ago.
Hast'ow not herde, qð Nicholas, also, 430
Of Noes sorow with his felaschip,
Er that he mighte get his wife to ship!
Him had levir, I dare well undirtake,
360 At thilkè time, than all his wetheres blake,
That she had had a Ship her self alone:
And therefore wost'ow what is best to done?
This askith haste, and of a hasty thing
Men may not preche, ne make long tarying.
Anon go get us fast into this Inne,
A knedyng trough, or els a Kimelyn, 440
For eche of us, but loke that they ben large,
In which men mowin swim as in a barge:
And han therein Viteiles sufficient
But for a day, sic on the remanent:
The watir shall allake, and gon away
Aboutin prime upon the nextè day.
But Robin may not wete of this, thy knave,
Ne eke thy Maide Gille I may not save:
Axe me not why? for though thou askè me,
I wolle not tellin Godd's privity. 450
Suffisith The, but if thy wits be mad,
To have as grete a grace, as Noe had:
Thy wife shall I well favin out of doute,
380 Go now thy way, and spede The here about.
But whan thou hast for her, and The, and me,
Ygertin us these kneding Tubbis thre,
Then shalt thou heng them in the rose full hie,
That no man of our purveiaunce espie.
And whan thou hast done thus, as I have seide,
And hast our viteile fayr in them yleyde, 460
And eke an Axe to smite the Corde atwo,
Whan than the watir cometh, that we may go,
And breke an hole on hie upon the gable,
Unto the gardin ward, ovir the stable,
That we may frely passin forth our way,
Whan that the grete shoure is gone away,

Then

Then shak thou swim as mery I undirtake,
 As doth the white duck aftir her drake.
 Then woll I clepe hoe Alifon, how John,
 Be mery; for the flode will pass anon.
 And thou wolt fayn, haile Maistir Nicholay,
 God morow, I se The well, it is day.
 And then we shall be Lordis all our life
 Of all the worlde, as was Noe and his wife.
 But of one thing I warnè The full right,
 Be well avisid on that ilke night
 That we ben entrid into the Ship's bord,
 That none of us ne speke nought a word,
 Ne clepe, ne crie, but ben in his prayere,
 For so to done it is Goddes own heft dere.
 Thy wife and thou mote hengin ferre a twinn,
 For that betwixt you there shall be no sinn,
 No more in loking, than ther shal in dede:
 This Ordenaunce is seide, Goe, God The spede.
 To morue' at night, when men ben al aslepe,
 Unto our knedyng tubbis woll we crepe,
 And sirtin there abiding Godd's grace:
 Go now thy way, I have no lengir space,
 To make of this no lengir sermoning:
 Men sayin, send thy wife, and say nothing.
 Thou art so wise, it nedith The not teche,
 Go, save our livis, that I The besече.

This sely Carpentere goth forth his way,
 Full oft he seide, alas! and welaway!
 And to his wife he told his privite,
 And she was ware, and knew it bet than he,
 What al this queintè cast was for to seye,
 But nathèless she ferde as she shuld dye,
 And seide, alas! go forth thy wey anone,
 Help us to scape, or we be dede eche one:
 I am thy trewe verry weddid wife,
 Go dere Spouse, and help to save our life.
 Lo what a grete thing is affection,
 Men may die of imagination,
 So depè may impressioun be take:
 This sely Carpentere begins to quake:
 Him thinkith verrily that he may se
 This Noës flode come waltring as the See,
 To drenchin Alifon his hony dere.
 He wepith, wailith, makith fory chere,
 He sikith with full many' a fory swough,
 He goeth, and gettith hym a kneding trough,
 And aftir that a Tubb, and a Kemelin,
 And privily he sent them to his Inne,
 And hing them in the rose full privily.
 With his own hand he made them ladders thre
 To climbin by the ronges, and by the stalkes
 Into the Tubbis hanging by the balkes.
 And them vitailid bothe trough and tubbe
 With brede and chese, and gode ale in a jubbe: 520
 Suffying right ynow as for a day.

But er that he hadde made all this aray,
 He sent his knave, and eke his wench also Upon his nede to London for to go.
 And on the Monday, when it drew to Nigh,
 He shut his dore withoutin Candil light.
 And dressid all thing as it shulde be,
 And shortely they clombin up all thre.
 They sittin still well nigh a furlong way,
 Now Pater noster, clum, seide Nicholay,
 And clum qð John, and clum seide Alifon:
 This Carpenter seide his devotion,
 And still he sett, and bidith his prayere,
 Awaiting on the raine, if he it here
 Tyll the dede slepe for wery businesse
 Fell on this Carpentere, right as I ghesse,
 About the Curfew time, or littil more:
 For travaile of his ghost he gronith sore,
 And eft he routith, for his hede mislay;
 And doune the laddir stalkith Nicholay,

And Alifon adoune ful soft she spedde,
 Withoutin wordis mo they went to bedde,
 There as the Carpentere was wont to lie,
 470 There was the revill, and the melodye.
 Thus lyith Alifon, and Nicholas
 In businesse and mirth; and in solas,
 Till that the bell of Laudes gan to ring,
 And Freris in the Chancell gon to sing.
 This Parish Clerk, the amorous Absolon,
 That is for love alwey so wo bygon, 550
 Upon the Monday was at Osenay,
 With Company him to disport and play;
 And askid upon caas a Cloysterere,
 480 Full privily, for John the Carpentere:
 And he drew him apart out of the Chirch,
 And seide, In'ote, I saw him here not wurch
 Sith Saturday, I trow that he bewent
 For timber, there our Abbot hath him sent.
 For he is wont for timber for to go,
 And dwellin at the graunge a day or two: 560
 Or ellis he is at his house certeine,
 Where that he be I cannot sothly saine.

This Absolon full jolly was and light,
 490 And thought, now is my time to walk all night,
 For sikirly I saw him not stirring
 About his dore, sith day began to spring.
 So mote I thrive, I shall, at Cock's crow,
 Full privily knokin at his Window,
 That stant full low upon his bowr's Wall:
 To Alifon I now woll tellin all 570
 My Love longing, for yet I shall not miss,
 That at the leste way I shall have her kisse.
 Some manir comfort I shall have persey,
 500 My Mouth hath itchid all this longe day;
 That is a sign of kissing at the leste.
 All night me mette that I was at a feste.
 Therefore I woll go slepe an hour or twey,
 And all the night then woll I walk and pley.
 Whan that the firste Cok hath crow anon,
 Uprist this jolly lovir Absolon, 580
 And him arrayith gay at point devise,
 But first he chewith greyns and licorice,
 To smellin sote, er he had kempt his here,
 510 Under his tonge a trew love knot he bare,
 For thereby wend he to be graciouse,
 Than romith to the Carpenter's house,
 And still he stant undir the shop window,
 Unto his brest it raught, it was so low:
 And soft he coughid with a semisoun.
 What do ye honycumb, swete Alifon? 590
 My fayre bird, and my swete Sinamome,
 Awakith, Lemman mine, spekith to me,
 Full litil thinkin ye upon my wo,
 That for your love I swelt there as I go.
 No wondir is although I swelt and swete,
 I mourne as doth the lamb aftir the tete.
 I wis lemman, I have soche love longing,
 That like a turtle trew is my mourning.
 I may not ete no more than doth a Maid.
 Go fro the Window, go, Jack sole, she saide; 600
 As help me God, and also swete Seint Jame,
 I love anothir, els I were to blame,
 Wel bet than The, by Jesu, Absolon:
 530 Go forth thy wey, or I woll cast a stone,
 And let me slepe, a twentie devil way.

Alas! qð Absolon, and welaway!
 That true love was evir so ill besett;
 Than kisse me since that it may be no bett,
 For Jesus love, and for the love of me;
 Wilt thou then go thy way therewith, qð she? 610
 Yes certis, Lemman, qð this Absolon.
 Make The redy, qð she, I come anon.
 And unto Nicholas she seide still,
 540 Now pece, and thou shalt laugh anon thy fill.

This

This Absolon doune sett him on his knees;
And seide, I am a Lord at all degrees,
For aftir this I hope there comith more.
Lemman thy grace, and swetè bird thy nore.
The window she undoth, and that in haste,
Have do, qð she, come off, and spede The fast, 620
Left any of our neighbours The elpie.

This Absolon gan wipe his mouth full drie:
Derk was the night as any pitch or cole,
And at the window she put out her hole;
And Absolon spedde neither bett ne wers,
But with his mouth he kist her nakid Ers,
Full favorly; as he was ware of this
Abak he stert, and thought it was amis:
For well he wist, a woman had no berde,
He felt a thing all rough and long yhered, 630
And seide, fy alas! what have I do?
Te he qð she, and clapt the window to.
And Absolon goth forth a sory paas.
A berde, a berde, seide Hendè Nicholas,
By Godd's Corpus this goth faire and well.
This Absolon yherde it every dell,
And on his lipp he gan for angir bite,
And to himself he seide, I shall The quite.
Who rubbith now, who frottith now his lips,
With dust, with fond, with straw, with cloth, with chips,
But Absolon? that saith full oft alas!
My Soule betake I unto Sathanas,
But me were levir than this toun, qð he,
Of this despight awrekin for to be.
Alas! qð he, alas! I ne had bleint;
His hottè love is cold, and all yqueint:
For fro the time that he had kist her Ers,
Of Paramouris he sett not a kers,
For he was helid of his Maladye,
Full oftè Paramoures he gan defye, 650
And wepe as doth a child, that is ybete.
A softè pace he went ovir the strete,
Unto a Smith, Men clepin Dan Gerveys,
That in his forge smythieth plough harneys,
He sharpiþ shares and cukeres bysly.
This Absolon knokith all esly,
And seide undo, Gerveys, and that anon;
What who art'ow? It am I Absolon.
What Absolon? for Christ's swetè tre,
Why rise ye so rath? ey benedicite!
What eyliþ you, some gay gerl, God it wote,
Hath broughtin you thus on the Meritote,
By Seint Neotes, ye wote what I mene.
This Absolon ne raught not of a bene
Of all his play, no word again he gaffe,
He haddè much more tow on his distaffe,
Than Gerveys knew; and seide, frend so dere,
The hottè Culter in the chimeney here
As lene it me, I have therewith to done:
And I wolk bring it The againe full sone.
Gerveys answerid, certis were it Gold,
Or in a pokè noblis al untold,
Thou shuldist it have, as I am trew Smyth;
Eye Christ's fore, what wolk ye don therewith?
Thereof, qð Absolon, be as be may,
I shall well tellin The to morrow day:
And caught the Culter by the coldè stele.
Full soft out at the dorè gan he stele,
And went unto the Carpenter's wall;
He coughid first, and knokid therewithall 680

Upon the window right as he did ere;
This Alifon answerid, who is there,
That knokith so? I warrant it a thefe;
Why nay, qð he, God wot, my swetè lefe;
I am thine Absolon, thine own derling;
Of Gold, qð he, I have The brought a ring;
My Mother gave it me, so God me save,
Full fine it is, and thereto well ygrave;
This wolk I givin The, if thou me kifs.

This Nicholas was risin for to piss, 690
And thought he wulde amending all the jape;
He shuldè kifs his Ers, ere that he scape:
And up the window did he hastily,
And out his Ers he put full privily,
Ovir the buttock to the hanchè bone.
And therewith spake this Clark, this Absolon;
Speke swetè bridde, I n'ote wher that thou art.

This Nicholas anon let fle a fart,
As grete as it had ben a thondir dent,
That with the stroke he was nye yblent: 700
And he was redy with his iron hote,
And Hende Nicholas in the Ers he smote.
Of goeth the skinne a hondisbrede about,
The hottè Culter brennid so his tout,
That for the smerte he wenid for to dye,
As he were wode for wo he gan to crye,
Help, watir, watir, help for Godd's hert.

This Carpenter out of his slombir stert,
And herde one crie Watir, as he were wode,
And thought alas! now comith Noës flode; 710
And set him up withoutin wordis mo,
And with an ax he smote the corde atwo,
And doune goth all, he found neither to sell
Nor brede, nor ale, 'tyll he come to the Sell,
Upon the flore, and there aswoun he lay.

Up stert than Alifon and Nicholay,
And cryid out an harrow in the strete,
The neighbouris allè, both small and grete,
In ronnè for to gawrin on this man,
That in a swounè lay both pale and wan, 720
For with that fall he brostin hath his arme,
But stondin he must unto his own harme.
For whan he spake, he was yborn adoune
With Hende Nicholas, and Alifon.
They toldin every man that he was wode,
He was aghastè so of Noës flode,
Through fantasy, that of his Vanity
He hadde him gettin kneding tubbis thre,
And hadde them hongid in the rose above,
And that he prayid them for Godd's love 730
To sittin in the rose par Cumpany.

The folk gan laughin at his fantasy,
And in the rose they kykin and they gape,
And turnid all his harmis into jape.
For whatsoe're this Carpenter answerde,
It was for nought, no man his reson herde.
With othis grete he was so sworne adoune,
That he was holdin wode in all the toun.
For evèriche Clerk anon held with other,
They seide, the mann is wode, my lewè brother, 740
And every wight gan laughin at this strife.

Thus swivid was the Carpenter's Wife
For all his keping and his jelousie.
And Absolon hath kist her nethir eye,
And Nicholas is scaldid in the tout;
The Tale is done, and God save all the rout.

The End of the MILLER's TALE. III. Followeth the REVE's TALE.

III. The REVE's PROLOGUE.

WHAN folk had laughid at this nice caas
 Of Absolon and Hendè Nicholas
 Divers folk hereof diversly they seide,
 But for the more part they laughin and pley'd:
 Ne at this Tale I saw no man him greve,
 But it werin only Oswold the Reve:
 Because he was of Carpenter's craft,
 A littil ire in his hert it last.
 He gan to grutch, and blamin it a lite,
 Sothly, qð he, full well couth I The quite,
 With blering of a proude Miller's eye,
 If that me list to speke of ribaudrie.
 But I am olde, me lust not play for age,
 Grafs time is done, my foddur is forage.
 This white topp writith mine oldè yeres,
 Myn hert is also mouldid as my heres,
 But if I fare as doth an opin-ers,
 That ilke fruit is evir lengir the wers,
 Tyll it be rott in Mullok or in Stre.
 We oldè men I drede so farin we,
 Tyll we ben rottin can we not be ripe:
 We hoppin alwey while the world woll pipe.
 For in our will there stikith ay a Naile,
 To have a horie hede, and a grene taile,
 As hath a leke, for though our myght be gonn,
 Our will desirith follie evr' in one.
 For when we may not done, than woll we speke,
 Yet in our ashin old is fire yreke.
 Four gledis han we, which I shall devise,
 Avaunting, lying, angir, covetise,
 And these four sparklis longin unto elde,
 Our oldè limmis now well ben unweld,

But will ne shall not failin, that is sothe;
 And yet have I alweie a Colt's tothe,
 As many' a yere as it is passid henn,
 Sith that my tap of life began to renn.
 For fikirly whan I was borne, anon
 Dethe drew the tap of life, and let it gon,
 And evir sith hath so the tap yronne,
 Till that almost all emptie is the tonne,
 The streme of life now droppith on the chimb,
 The sely tongue may evil ring and chime,
 Of wretchidnesse, that passid is full yore,
 With oldè folk save dotage is no more.
 Whan that our Host hade herde this Sermoning,
 He gan to speke as Lordly as a King,
 And seide, what amountith al this witt?
 What shall we speke al day of holy writt?
 The Devil I think made a Reve to preche,
 Or a Souter, a Shipman, or a Leche.
 Say forth thy tale, and tary not the time:
 Lo Depford! and it is half wey to prime;
 Lo Grenewich! that many a shrew is in;
 It were hye time thy Tale for to begin.
 Now, Sirs, then qð this Oswoldè the Reve,
 I pray you allè, that ye nought you greve,
 That I answeere, and somedell sett his houfe,
 For lesfull it is force with force to shoufe.
 This dronkin Millere hath ytold us here,
 How that begylid was a Carpenter,
 Peradventure in scorn, for I am one,
 And by your leve I shall him quite anone.
 Right in his Churl's termis woll I speke,
 I pray to God his neck mote he to breke,
 He can well in myne eyin sene a stak,
 But in his own he can nought sene a balk.

Thus endeth the PROLOGUE.

The

The REVE's TALE.

DENYSE SIMKIN the Miller of Trompington, deceiveth two Clarkes of Soller's-Hall in Cambridge, in stealing their Corn; But they so manage their Matters, that they revenge the Wrong to the full. This Tale is imitated from Boccace, Novell the 6th, Day the 9th. — This you may pass over if you please.

A T T E Trompington, not ferrè fro Cantabrigge,
There goth a broke, and ovir that a brigge,
Upon the whiche broke there stant a Mell,

And this is very sothe as I you tell.
A Miller was there dwelling many' a day,
As any peacock he was proud and gay.
Pipin he couth, and fishin, and nets bete,
And cuppis turn, and wrastle well and shete. 820
Ay by his belt he bare a long pavade,
And of a swerde ful trenchaunt was the blade.
A joly popere bare he in his pouch,
There n'as no man for peril durst him he touch,
A Shefeld thwitid bare he in his hofe,
Round was his face, and camised was his nose.
As pilid as an Apè was his skull,
He was a Markit beter at the full.
There was no wight, that durst hand on him legge,
If that he swore he shulde it fore abegge. 830
A thefe he was forsothe of Corne and Mele,
And that a flye, as usant for to stele.
His name was hotin Deynouse Simkin,
A wife he had comin of nobil kin:
The Parson of the Town her fathir was,
With her he gaff full many' a pann of brass,
For that Simkin shuld in his blode allie,
She was yfostrid in a Nonnerie:
For Simkin wulde no wife as he saide,
But she were well ynorished, and a Maide, 840
To savin his Estate of Yomanry.
And she was proude, and pert as is a Pie;
A full fayre sight was it to se them two;
On hollidayes befor her wulde he go,
With his tippit woundin about his hede,
And she came astir in a gite of rede,
And Simkin haddè hofin of the same.
There durstè no wight clepin her but Dame;
Was none so hardy, that went by the way,
That with her onys durst to rage or play,
But if he wuldè be slaine of Simkin,
With Pavade, or with knife, or bodekin.
For jelous folk ben per'lous evirmo,
Algate they wolde their wivis wendin so.
And eke for she was somedeles smoterlich,
She was as digne as watir in a diche,
And as full of hokir, and of bismare,
Her thoughtè that a Ladie shuld her spare,
What for her kinrede, and her nortirly,
That she had lernid in the Nonnery. 860
A doughtir haddè they betwixt them two,
Of twentie yere, withoutin any mo,
Saafing a child, that was of half yere age,
In cradle' it lay, and was a propir page.
This wenchè thik and well ygrowin was,
With Camise nose, and eyin gray as glas:
With bottokes brode, and brestis round and hic,
But right faire was her heire, I woll not lie.

The Parson of the towne, for she was faire,
In purpose was to makin her his heir,
Both of his Cattle', and of his Mesuage,
And straunge he made it of her Mariage:

His purpose was for to bestow her hie,
Into some worthie blode of Ancestrie,
For holie Chirch'is gode mote ben dispended
On holie Chirch'is blode that is descended.
Therefore he wolde his holie blode honour,
Though that he holie Chirch shuldè devour.
Grete sokin hath this Millere out of dout 880
With Whete and Malt of al the land about.
And namily there was a grete College,
Men clepith the Solere Hall of Cambrige,
There was their Whete and eke their Malt yground;
And on a day it happid in a stound
Sike lay the Manciple' of a Malady,
Men wendin wisly that he shuldè die;
For which this Millere stele both Mele and Corn
An hundrid time more than he did befor.
For there before he stalle but curtislie,
But now he was a thefe outrageouslye; 890
For whiche the Wardin chidde, and madè fare,
But thereof set the Millere not a tare,
He crakid, boftid, swore it was not so.

Then there weren there yonge pore Scholeris two,
That dweltin in the Hall, of which I say,
Testife they were, and lustie for to play:
And only for their mirth and revilyr,
Upon the Wardin bysily they cry
To geve them leve but for a litil stound
To gon to Mill, to se their Corn ygrownd: 900
And hardily they durstin lay their nek
The Millere sholde not stele them half a pek
Of Corn by sleight, ne them by forcè reve.
And at the last the Wardin gafe them leve:
John hight that one, and Alein hight that other,
Of oo toune were they both, that hightè Strother,
Fer in the North, I cannot tellin where.
This Alein makith redie all his gere,
And on a horse the Sak he cast anon.
Forth goth Alein the Clark, and also John, 910
With gode swerdis and bokleres by their side.
850 John knew the weie, him nedith not a guide;
And at the Mill the Sak adoun he layth;
Alein spoke first, Al hail Simkin in faith,
How farith thy faire doughtir, and thy wife?
Alein, welcome, qð Simkin by my life,
And John also: how now, what do ye here?
By God, Simkin, qð John, nede has no pere;
Him behoves serve himself that has no Swaine,
Or els he is a sole, as Clerk'is saine. 920
Our Manciple I hope he will be dede,
860 Swa werkis ay the wangis in his hede,
And therefore is I come and eke Alein,
To grind our Corn, and bere it home ageyn:
We pray you spede us home in that ye may.
It shall be don, qð Simkin, by my fay:
What will you done, while that it is in honde?
By God right by the hopper woll I stonde
Qð John, and se how-gates the Corn goth in,
Yet saw I nevir by my faðir kinn 930
How that the hoppir waggith to and fra;
Alein answerid, Johan, wilt thou sa?
Then woll I stonde benethè, by my Cròune,
And se how gates the Mele fallith adoune,

Into

Into the trough, that shall be my disport:
 Qð John, in fay, I may ben of your fort,
 I is as ill a Millere as is ye.

This Millere smylith at their nycite,
 And thought, Al this n'is done but for a wile,
 They wenin that no Man mowe them begyle; 940
 But by my thrift yet shall I blere their eye,
 For all their sleight in their philosophy,
 The more queint Clerkis that themselves they make,
 The more woll I stele whan I gin to take:
 Insted of flour yet woll I give them brann,
 The grettist Clerkes be not the wisist Men,
 As whilome to the Wolfe thus spake the Mare.
 Of all their Art ne count I nought a tare.
 Out at the dore he goth full privily,
 Whan that he saw his time, subtilly 950
 He lokith up and down, till he hath found
 The Clerkis horse, there as he stode ybound,
 Behind the Mill, undir a levisell:
 And to the horse he goth him faire and well,
 He slippith of the bridil right anon.
 And whan the horse was loos, he ginnith gon
 Toward the fenn, thereas wild Maris rimm,
 And forth, with whehe, thorough thik and thinn,
 This Millere goth again, no word he saide,
 But doth his note, and with these Clerkis plaide, 960
 Till that their Corn was faire and well yground;
 And whan the Mele was sakkid, and ybound,
 This John goth out and fynt his horse away,
 And gan to crie harrow and welaway!
 Our horse is lost, Alein, for Godd'is benes,
 Step on thy fete, Man, come forth all atenes:
 Alas! our Wardin hath his palfry lorn.

This Aleine all forgate both Mele and Corn,
 All was out of his mind of husbandry,
 What? whilk weye is he gon? he gan to crie. 970
 The wife came leping inward at a renn,
 She seide, alas! your horse goth to the fenn,
 With wilde Maris, as fast as he may go,
 Unthank come on his hand, that bound him so,
 And he that betir sholde have knit the rein;
 Alas! qð John, Aleine, for Crist'is peine
 Lay down thy swerde, and I woll myne alswa,
 I is full swift, God wote, as is a Raa:
 By Godd'is Saul, he shall not scape us both.
 Why ne haddest thou put the Caple' in the lath? 980
 Ill heile, Alein, by God thou is a sonne.

These sely Clerkis han full fast yronne
 Toward the Fenn, both Alein, and eke John:
 And whan the Millere saw that they were gon,
 He half a bushell of their flour hath take,
 And bad his wife done knede it in a Cake.
 He seide, I trow the Clerkis were afferde;
 Yet can a Millere make a Clerk'is berde,
 For all their Art, yet let them gon their weye,
 Lo where they gon! ye let the children pleye: 990
 They get him not so lightly by my crown.

These sely Clerkis rennin up and doune,
 With kepe, kepe, stand, stand, joffa, wardarier,
 Go whistle thou, and I woll kepe him here.

But shortly, till it was very night
 They couth not, though they diddin all their might,
 Their Capell catch, he ran away so fast,
 Till in a ditch they caught him at the last.

Wery and wett, as bestis in the reine,
 Cometh sely John, and with him cometh Aleine. 1000
 Alas qð John the day that I was born!
 Now are we driven till hethin and to scorn:
 Our Corn is stole, Men woll us folis call,
 Both the Wardin, and eke our Felowes all,
 And namily the Millere, welaway!

Thus plainith John, as he goth by the way
 Toward the Mill, and bayard in his hond;
 The Millere sitting by the fire he fond,

For it was night, and further might they not;
 But for the love of God they him besought 1010
 Of herborough and ese, as for their penny;

The Millere seide agen, if there be any,
 Soche as it is, yet shall ye have your part:
 My house is strait, but ye have lern'd by Art,
 Ye can by Argumentis make a place
 A mile brode, of but twenty fote of space.
 Let se now if this place may you suffice,
 Or make more rome with speche, as is your gife.

Now Simkin, seid this John, by Seint Cuthberde,
 Ay is thou mery, that is faire answerde. 1020
 I have herde say, men shuld take of twa thinges
 Swilk as he findis, or swilk as he bringes.
 But specially I pray The, hoste dere,
 Get us some mete and drink, and make us chere,
 And we will pay The trewly at the full:
 With emptie hand men may not hawkis tull,
 Lo here our Silvir redy for to spend!

The Millere to the towne his daughtir send
 For ale and brede, and rostid them a gose,
 And bound their horse he shuld no more get lose. 1030
 And in his own chambir he made a bedd
 With shetis, and with shalons faire yspredd,
 Not from his ownè bedd ten fote or twelve:
 His doughtir had a bedd al by her selve
 Right in the same chambir, full fast them by.
 It mighte ben no bett, and the cause why,
 There was no romir herbrough in the place.
 They soupin, and they spekin of solas,
 And dronkin evir stronge Ale at the best.
 Abountin midnight wente they to rest. 1040

Well hath this Millere vernishid his hede,
 Full pale he was, for dronkin, and nought redde,
 He galpith, and he spekith through the Nose,
 As he were in the quakk, or in the pose.

To bedde he goth, and with him goth his wife,
 As any jay she light was and jolife,
 So was her jolie whistle well ywert.
 The cradil at her bedd'is fete was sett
 Torockin, and to give the child to souk;
 And whan that dronkin was al in the Cruk, 1050
 To bedde went the doughtir right anon,
 To bedde goth Alein, and goth also John,
 There n'as no more, them nedid now no dwale,
 This Millere hath so wisely bibbid Ale,
 That as a horse he snortith in his slepe,
 Ne of his taile behind he toke no kepe.
 His wife bare to him a burdon full strong,
 Men mightin here them routing a furlong:
 The wenchè routith eke par Cumpany.

Alein the Clerk, that herde this Melodie, 1060
 He pokid John, and seide stepist thou?
 Herdist thou evir swilk a sang er now?
 Lo! swilk a complyn is betwixt them all,
 A wildè fire mote on their bodies fall!
 Who herk'nid evir swilk a ferly thing,
 Ye they shull have the flour of ill ending.
 All this lang night there tidith me no rest,
 But yet na force all shall be for the best.
 For, John, seide he, as evir mote I thrive,
 If that I may, yon wenchè woll I swive. 1070
 Some esement hath law yshapin us,
 For, John, there is a law, that sayith thus,
 That if a Man in one point ben agreved,
 That in anothir he shall be releved,
 Our Corn is stoln, sothely, it is no nay,
 And we have had an evil fit to day.
 And since I shall have none amendement
 Again my los, I woll have myn esement:
 By Godd'is Saul, it shall none othir be.
 This John answerde, Alein, avise The,
 The Millere is a per'lous Man, he seide,
 And if that he out of his slepe abreide,

He

He mighte don us bath a Villony ;
 Alein answerde, I count him nought a fie.
 And up he rift, and by the wenche he crept,
 This wenche lay upright, and full fast she slept,
 Till he so nye was, er she might espie,
 That it had ben to late for her to crie.
 And shortly for to sey, they were at one.
 Now pley, Alein, for I woll speke of John. 1090
 This John lay stille a furlong wey or two,
 And to himself he makith routh and wo ;
 Alas! qð he, this is a wikid Jape,
 Now may I say, that I is but an Ape ;
 Yet hath my felaw somewhat for his harme,
 He hath the Millere's doughtir in his arme,
 He auntrith him, and hath his nedis spedde,
 And I lie as a draffe sak in my bedde:
 And when this jape is told anothir day,
 I shall be hold a daffe, or a Cokney: 1100
 I woll arise, and auntir me perfay,
Unhardy is unfely, thus Men say.
 And up he rose, and softly he went
 Unto the cradyl, and in his arme it hent,
 And bare it softly to his bedd'is fete.
 Sone aftir that the wife her routing lete,
 And gan awake, and went her out to pifs,
 And came again, and gan the Cradyl mis.
 And gropid here and there, but she fond none;
 Alas! qð she, I had almost misgone, 1110
 I had almost gone to the Clark's bedde,
Eye benedicite, than had I foule yspedde.
 And forth she goth till she the Cradyl fond,
 She gropith alwey furthir with her honde,
 And found the bedde, and thought on nought but gode,
 Bicause that the Cradyl by it stode,
 And ne wist where she was, for it was derk,
 But faire and wele she crept in by the Clerk,
 And lyith stille, and wou'd have caught a slepe;
 Within a while this John the Clerk uplepe, 1120
 And on this gode wife he layith full fore,
 So mery' a fitt ne had she nought full yore:
 He prikid hard and depe, as he were mad.
 This jollie life hath these two Clerkis lad,
 Tyll that the thridè Cok began to sing.
 Alein waxt wery in the day dawning,
 For he had swonkin all the longè night,
 And seide, farewell, Malin, my swete wight,
 The day is come, I may no lengir bide,
 But evirmo, wherso I go or ride, 1130
 I am thine ownè Clerk, so have I hele.
 Now, dere Lemman, qð she, go and farewele,
 But er thou go, one thing I woll The tell,
 Whan that thou wendist homeward by the Mell,
 Right at the Entre of the dore behind,
 Thou shalt a Cake of half a bushill find,
 That was ymakid right of thine owne Mele,
 Which I did help my faðir for to stele.
 And, my gode Lemman, God The save and kepe,
 And with that word she gan almost to wepe. 1140
 Alein uprist, and thought er that it dawe,
 He wolde go crepin in by his felaw,
 And fond the Cradyl with his hond anon,
 By God, thought he, all wrong have I misgone,
 My hede is totty of my swink this night,
 That makith me, that I go nought aright:
 I wote by the Cradyl I have misgo,
 Here lyeth the Millere, and his wife also.
 And forth he goth on twenty devil wey,

Unto the bedde, there as the Millere lay. 1150
 Him wend have cropin by his felaw John,
 And by the Millere he crept in anon,
 And caught him by the nek, and soft he spake,
 And seide, thou John, thou Swin'is hede, awake,
 For Christ's Soule, and here a nobil game.
 For by that Lord, that callid is St. Jame,
 As I have thryis in this shortè night,
 Swivid the Miller's doughtir bolt upright:
 Whilst thou hast as a Coward layn aghast.
 Ye, fals harlot, then qð the Millere, hast? 1160
 A false Traytor, a false Clerk, qð he,
 Thou shalt be dede by Godd'is dignity;
 Who durstè ben so bold to disparage
 My doughtir, that is come of soche linage.
 And by the throte boll he caught Aleine,
 And he him hent dispitously againe,
 And on the nose he smote him with his fist,
 Down ran the bloody streme upon his brest,
 And in the flore with Mouth and Nose to broke, 1170
 They wallowen, as doth piggis in a poke,
 And up they gon, and doune ageine anon,
 Till that the Millere spurnid on a stone
 And doune he fell bakward upon his wife,
 That wist nothing of all this nycè strife,
 For she was fall aslepe a litil wight,
 With John the Clerk, that wakid had al night.
 And with the fall out of her slepe she braide,
 Help, holy Cross of Broholmè, she seide;
 In Manus tuas, Lord to The I call, 1180
 Awake, Simonde, the fende is on me fall.
 My hert is brokin, help, I na'm but dede,
 There lith one up my womb, one up my hedde.
 Help, Simkin, for these fals Clerkis do fight.
 This John stert up as fast as er he might,
 And graspid by the wallis to and fro,
 To find a staff, and she stert up also,
 And knew the Estris bett than did this John,
 And by the wall she fond a staff anon,
 And saw a litil shimiring of light, 1190
 For at an hole in shone the Monè bright,
 And by that light she saw them bothè two,
 But sikirly she n'ist not who was who,
 But as she saw a white thing in her eye;
 And whan she gan this white thing espie,
 She wend the Clerk had wered a Voliper,
 And with the staff she drew ay ner and ner,
 And wend have hit this Alein attè full,
 And smote the Millere on the pillid Skull,
 That doune he goth, and cryed harrow I dye;
 These Clerkis bete him wele, and let him lye, 1200
 And rayith them, and toke their horse anon,
 And eke their Mele, and on their weie they gon:
 And at the Mill-dore eke they toke ther Cake,
 Of half a bushill floure, full well ybake.
 Thus is the proud Millere right well ybete,
 And hath ylost the grinding of the Whete,
 And payid for the Soupir every dele,
 Of Aleine, and of John, that bete him wele.
 His wife is swivid, and his doughtir als,
 Lo soche it is a Millere to be fals! 1210
 And therefore this proverbe is saw full sothe,
Him dare not wenin wele that evil doth:
A Guilor shall himself begylid be.
 And God, that sittith hye in Majesty,
 Save al this Cumpany both grete and smale:
 Thus have I quitt the Millere in my Tale.

Thus endeth the REVE's TALE.

The COOKE's PROLOGUE.

THE Coke of London, while that the Reve spake,
 For joy he lough, and claw'd him on the bak :
 Aha, quoth he, for Christ's passion,
 This Miller hath a sharp conclusion
 Upon this argument of herbigage;
 Well seidè Solomon in his Language,
 Ne bring not ev'ry man into thyn hous:
 For herbouring by night is perillouse;
 Wele ought a man avifid for to be,
 Whom that he brought into his privite.
 I pray to God yeve me sorow and care,
 If evir sithin I hight Hodge of Ware
 Herde I a Millere bettir set a werke,
 He had a jape of malice in the derke.
 But God forbiddè that we stintin here,
 And therefore if that ye vouchafe to here
 A Tale of me, that am but a pore man,
 I wol you tellin, as well as I can
 A litil jape, that fell in our Citè.

1220

1230

Our hostè seid, Rogger, I graunt it The.
 Now tell on, Rogger, loke that it be gode.
 Full many' a pastie hast thou lettin blode;
 And many' a jack of Dovyr hast thou sold,
 That hath ben twice hot and twice cold.
 Of many' a Pilgrim hast thou Christ's curse,
 For of thy perfly yet fare they the worse,
 That they have etin in thy stobil goos,
 For in thy shop is many a flie loos.

1240

Now tell on, gentyl Rogger by thy name,
 But yet, I pray The be not wrath for game;
 A man may so full sothe in game and play.

Thou faist full sothe, qð Rogger, by my fay,
 But sothe play quade play; as the Fleming saith,
 And therefore, Herrie Bailie, by thy feith,
 Be thou not wroth, er' we departin here,
 Though that my Tale ben of an Hostilere.
 But nethèles, I wol not tell it yett,
 But er' we part, I wis, thou shalt be quit:
 And therewithall he lough, and made chere,
 And seid his Tale, as ye shull aftir here.

IV. The COKE's TALE.

The Description of an unthrifty Prentice, given to Dice, Women and Wine, wasting thereby his Master's Goods, and purchasing to himself Newgate. The most part of this Tale is lost, or never finished by the Author.

A Prentice whilom dwelt in our Cité,
And of the craft of Vitailers was he:
Galiard he was, as Goldfinch in a shaw,
Broun as a beri', a propre short felaw, 1260
With lokkis blake, and kempt full fetouslie;
Dauncin he couth ful wele and jolilie:
And he was callid Perkin Revellour.

He was as full of Love and Paramour,
As is the Hive full of the hony swete.
Well was the wench, that with him mightè mete.
At every Bridale wold he sing and hop,
He lovid bet the Taverns than the Shop.
For whan that any Riding was in Chepe,
Out of the shoppe thithir wold he lepe,
Till that he had of all the sighte ysene,
For sikirly, he wold not come agen,
But gathir him a meinie of his sort,
To hop and sing, and makè moch disport.
And there they fettè Stevin for to mete
To playin at the dice in such a strete,
For in the Cité n'as there no prentise
That fairer couth castin a pair of dice
Than Perkin couth, and thereto he was fre
Of his dispence, in place of privitie,
That found his master well in his chafare,
For oft timis he fond his box full bare.

For sikirly a Prentise Revellour
That hauntith dice, riot, or Paramour,
His mastir shall it in his shoppe abie;

Al have he no part of the Minstralcie.
For theft and roiot ben convertible,
Al can he play on getron or rebible,
Revill and trouth as in a low degre
Thei ben ful wroth all day, as men may se. 1290

This joly Printice with his mastre' abode
Till he were nigh out of his printishode,
Al were he snibbid both erli and late,
And sumetime led with revill to Newgate.
But at the last his Master him bethought
Upon a day when he his paper sought
Of a proverbe that sayith this same word,
Wele bett is rotten appyl out of horde

1270 Than that it should rottin all the remnaunt.

So fareth it by a riotous Servaunt. 1300
It is a moch less harm to let him pass,
Than he shend all the servaunts in the place;
Therefore his master gave him acquittance,
And bade him go with sorow and mischaunce.

And thus this jolly Prentice had his leve,
Now let him riot all the night, or leve.

And for there is no These without a Louke,
That helpith him to waftin and to souke 1280
Of that he bribè can, or borow may.

Anon he sent his bed and his array 1310
Unto a compere of his ownè sort,
That lovid dice, and revill and disport,
And had a wife, that held for countinaunce
A shop, but swifid for her sustinaunce.

This is all of the COOKE's TALE as yet found.

In some of the MSS is the History of Gamelyn under the Title of the Cooke's Tale; but it is not the Cooke's Tale that Lidgate saw, for that was, as he says, of Ribaldrie, as the abovesaid Tale favours of, and which in the MSS is joined to this by these Verses.

But hereof, Siris, I woll pass as, now,
And of yong Gamelyn I wol tell you.

Q^d the Cook.

V. COKE's

So many of the MSS have this Tale, that I can hardly think it could be unknown to the former Editors of this Poet's Works. Nor can I think of a Reason why they neglected to publish it. Possibly they met only with those MSS that had not this Tale in them, and contented themselves with the Number of Tales they found in those MSS. If they had any of those MSS in which it is, I cannot give a Reason why they did not give it a Place amongst the rest, unless they doubted of its being genuine. But because I find it in so many MSS, I have no doubt of it, and therefore make it publick, and call it the Fifth Tale. In all the MSS it is called the Cooke's Tale, and therefore I call it so in like manner: But had I found it without an Inscription, and had been left to my Fancy to have bestow'd it on which of the Pilgrims I had pleas'd, I should certainly have adjudg'd it to the Squire's Yeoman; who tho' as minutely describ'd by Chaucer, and characteriz'd in the third Place, yet I find no Tale of his in any of the MSS. And because I think there is not any one that would fit him so well as this, I have ventur'd to place his Picture before this Tale, tho' I leave the Cook in Possession of the Title.

V. COKE'S TALE of Gamelyn.

NOW lithin, and listinith, and Herkinith you aight,
 And ye shullin herè me tell
 You of a doughti Knight.
 Sir Johan of Boundis clepid was
 This ilke Knight's name,
 Wele coudin he of noriture,
 And eke of mochil game.
 Thre sonnis this Knight had, and with
 His bodi he them wan,

The Eldist was a mochè shrew,
 And sonè he began.
 His brotherin lov'd thir Faðir,
 And of him were agast;
 Th' Eldist deserv'd his Faðir's curse,
 And had it at the last.
 The godè Knighte his faðir did
 Ylive so long and yore,
 That Deth was comin him unto,
 And handlid him full fore.

10

20
The

The gode Knight ycarid moch,
 Sore fike there as he lay,
 How that his childerin shulde
 Lyvin after his day.
 He haddè ben widè where, but Noon Husbondè he was,
 Allè the londè, which that he had,
 It was verray purchas.
 And fayn he woldè that it were
 Dreffid among them all,
 That everich of them had his part
 As it mightè befall.
 Tho sent he into the Contrè
 Aftir wisè Knightis,
 To helpin dele his Londis, and
 Dreffin them to rightis.
 He sent them word by letteris
 That they shuld hyè blyve;
 If that they wol spekin with him
 While that he was on live.
 Sone as those Knightis herdin how
 Thus sekè that he lay,
 Tho haddè they no mannir rest
 Nothir by night nor day,
 Tyll that they comin unto him,
 There as he layd him still Upon his deth's bedde, for to Abidin Godd's will.
 Thus then saidin the gode Knight,
 Sekè there as he lay,
 Lordis, I warnè you forsothe,
 Withoutin any nay,
 I may no lengir livin here
 In this sorowful stound,
 For thorough Godd's will supreme
 Deth drawith me to ground.
 There ne was no one of them alle
 That herdin him aright,
 That thei ne haddè mochil routh
 Upon that ilke Knight:
 And seidè, Sir, for Godd's love,
 Ne dismayin you nought,
 God may don botè of bale
 Which that is now ywrought.
 Then answerid them the gode Knight,
 Sike there as he lay,
 Botè of bale God may send,
 I wote it is no nay.
 But I besèkè you Knightis
 Al for the love of me,
 Goith and dresth my Londis,
 Among my sonis thre.
 And frendis, for the love of God,
 Delith them nat amys,
 And forgettith not Gamelyn,
 My yongè Sone that is.
 Takith hedè unto that one
 As well as to that other,
 Seldome ye sein any heir
 That helpè woll his brother.
 Tho lettin they the Knighte liggin
 Which that was not in hele,
 And in thei wentin to counsaile
 His londis for to dele.
 For to delin them all to oon
 That was ther only thought,
 And for that Gamelyn yongist was,
 He shuldè havin nought,
 Al the londè which that there was
 They deltin it in two,
 And letè Gamelyn the yonge
 Withoutin londè go.
 And everich of them seidin
 Till othir fullè loude,

His bretherin mowe give him londe
 Whan that he godis koude.
 Whan they had delid the londis
 Aftir their ownè will,
 Tho camin they unto the Knight
 There as he lay full still,
 And toldin unto him anon
 How that they hadd ywrought,
 And the Knight there as he seke lay
 Ylikid it right nought.
 30 Then seidè the Knight angrily,
 I sware by Seint Martyn,
 For all that which ye have ydone,
 Yet is the londè myn.
 For Godd's love, my neighbouris,
 Standith ye allè still,
 And I woll delin my londè
 Aftir myn ownè will.
 40 Johan myn eldist Sone shall
 Y have plowis five,
 That was my faðir's heritage
 While that he was on live:
 And my middillist Sone shall Five plowis have of lond,
 That I holpè for to gettin
 With myn own rightè hond:
 120 And all myn othir purchafis
 Of landis and of Ledes,
 That I bequethè Gamelyn,
 And allè my gode Stedes.
 50 And I besèkè you, gode Men,
 That lawis con of lond,
 For Gamelyn's lovè that
 Thus my bequest may stond.
 Thus delid hath the gode Knightè
 His londè be his dai,
 Right upon his deth's bedde
 Sore fike there as he lay:
 And sonè aftirwerdis he 60 Lay as a stonè still,
 And dyid whan the tyme came,
 As it was Crist's will.
 Anon aftir that he was dede,
 And undir grafs ygrave;
 Tho sonè the eldir brothir
 Begylid the yongè knave:
 140 He token into his hondis
 His londis and his lede,
 And also Gamelyn himself
 To clothin and to fede.
 70 He clothid him and feddè him
 Evil and eke wroth,
 And letin his londis for fare
 And als his housis both;
 His parkis eke, and his wodis,
 And diddè nothyng wel,
 150 And sithin he it aboughtè
 On his own feire fell.
 So longè tyme was Gamelyn
 In his brother's hall,
 80 For the strenght of gode will
 They doutidin him all.
 There ne was none wight in that place
 Nothir yongè ne olde,
 That woldè wrathin Gamelyn,
 Were he nevir so bold.
 160 Gamelyn stode upon a day
 In his brother's yerde,
 And he began with his hondè
 90 To handilin his berde.
 He thoughtin upon his londis,
 That layin long unfawe;
 And also of his feire Okis,
 That doune were ydraw.

His Parkis werin al brokin,
 And al his Deir reved,
 Of allè his gode Stedis noon
 Was there with him beleved;
 His housis werein unhelid
 And full evilly dight;
 Tho thought this yongè Gamelyn
 It wentè not aright.
 Aftir camè his brothir in Ywalkyng statelich thare,
 And seidè unto Gamelyn,
 What? is our metè yare?
 Tho Gamelyn ywrothid hym,
 And swore by Godd'is boke,
 Thou shalt y go bake luke thy self,
 I wol not be thy Coke.
 How? brothir Gamelyn, qð he,
 Thus answerist me thou?
 Thou spakist nevir soche a word
 Yet, as thou doist now.
 By my faith seidè Gamelyn,
 Now me it thinkith nede,
 Of all the harmis that I have
 I nevir yit toke hede.
 My Parkis ben y brokin, and
 My Deir ben yrevèd,
 Of myn harnis, and my stedis
 Noght is there me beleved.
 Al that my faðir me bequethe
 Al goith now to shame,
 And therefore have thou Godd'is curse
 Brothir John by thy name.
 Than thus bespakin his brothir,
 That rapè was of vees,
 Stondith stillè, thou gadiling,
 And holdith right thy pees:
 Thou shaltè ben full faign to have
 Thy metè and thy wede,
 What spekist thou, thou Gadiling,
 Of lond, othir of lede?
 Then seidè to him Gamelyn
 The childè that was yinge,
 Christ'is Cursè mote he havin
 That clepith me Gadlyng:
 I am no wors gadlyng than The,
 Parde ne no wors wight,
 But born I was of a Lady,
 And gottin of a Knyght.
 Ne durst he not to Gamelyn
 Not oo fote ferthir go,
 But clepid to him his meinè,
 And seidè to them tho,
 Goith and betith wele this boy,
 And ravith him his wit,
 And let him lere anothir time
 To answerin me bett.
 Then seid the Chyld, yong Gamelyn,

 Christ'is cursè mote thou havin
 What? brother art thou myn,
 And if that I shall algatis
 Y betin be anon,
 Christ'is cursè mote thou havin,
 But that thou be that one.
 And right anon his brothir did
 In that his gretè hete
 Makin his meinè fett flavis,
 This Gamelyn to bete.
 Whan everich of them had a staff
 Into his hond nomin,
 Gamelyn was aware tho,
 He forsaugh them comin.
 Tho Gamelyn saugh them comin,
 He lokid ovir all.

And was ware of a pestil
 Stodè undir the wall.
 And Gamelyn was fully light,
 And thiðir gan he lepe,
 And droffe allè his brother's men
 Right sonè on an hepe.
 He lokid like a wild Lion,
 And laidin on gode wone.
 Tho whan his brothir seye that,
 He begannè to gonne.
 He fleigh up untill a loftè,
 And shet the dorè fast.
 Thus Gamelyn with his pestil
 Madè them all agast.
 Somè for Gamelyn's love,
 And some for his envie,
 Allè withdrawin them to halves,
 Tho he began to pleie:
 What now? seide Gamelyn, brothir,
 Evil motè ye the:
 Wollè ye beginnin contek,
 And than so sonè fle?
 Gamelyn fought his brothir tho
 Whithir he was yflowe,
 And saugh where that he lokid out
 At a solere windowe.
 Brothir tho seidè Gamelyn,
 Comith a litil nere,
 And I woll techin The a plaie
 Attè the bokillere.
 His brothir to hym answerid,
 And swore by Seint Richere,
 While the pestil is in thyn honde
 I woll comin no nere.
 Brothir, I woll makin The pece,
 I swere by Crist'is ore,
 Castith away the pestil tho,
 And wrathè The na more.
 I mot nedis, seide Gamelyn,
 Wrathè me at onys,
 For that thou woldist make thy Men
 To brekin my bonis.
 Ne had I haddin meyn and might
 In myn ownè twey armes,
 To have y pushin them fro me,
 They would have done me harmes.
 To Gamelyn tho seidin his
 Brothir, be thou not wrothe,
 For to sein The havin harme
 Me werin rightè lothe.
 I ne did it not, my brothir,
 But right for a fonding,
 For to lokin if thou were strong,
 And art so very ying.
 Come adoun then to me, qð he,
 And grauntè me my bone,
 Of oo thing I woll askin The,
 And we shull saughtè sone.
 Adoun then camin his brothir,
 That fikill was and fell,
 And was swithè right fore aghast,
 Of that ilkè pestil.
 He seidè, brothir Gamelyn,
 Askè me now thy bone,
 And loke that you-me blamè, but
 I grauntè it full sone.
 Tho seidin yongè Gamelyn,
 Brothir mynè, I wifs,
 And if we shullè ben at one,
 Thou must me grauntè this:
 Al that my faðir me bequethe,
 While that he was on live,
 Thou mustè do me it to have,
 If that we shull not strive.

That

That shalt thou have, Gamelyn,
 I swere by Crist's ore,
 Al that thy faðir The bequethe,
 Though thou woldist have more.
 Thy londè, that now lyith lie,
 Full well it shall be sowe,
 And thyne housis yraisid up,
 That now ben layd full lowe.
 Thus seide the Knight to Gamelyn,
 But only with his Mouth,
 And thoughtè but of falsenefs,
 As he right welè couth.
 The Knightè thoughtin on traïson,
 But Gamelyn on noon,
 And went, and kissid his brothir;
 And then they were at oon.
 Alas! for yongè Gamelyn,
 Nothing at all he wist,
 With swichè falsè traïson
 His brothir hath him kist.
 Lithinith, and lestinith, and
 Holdith you stille your tonge,
 And ye shall herin straunge talking
 Of Gamelyn the yonge.
 There happid to be there beside
 Tryid a wraistiling,
 And therefore there was ysettin
 A Ram, and als a ring.
 And Gamelyn was in a will
 To wendè thereunto,
 For to previn his mighte, and se
 What that he couthè do.
 Now brothir myne, qð Gamelyn,
 By holie Seint Richere,
 Thou mustè nedis lene to night
 Me a litil Courfere,
 That is freshe to the sporis,
 Upon him for to ride,
 I mustin on an Errand go
 A litil here beside.
 Be God, seide his brothir tho,
 Of Stedis in my stall
 Goith and chesith The the best,
 And sparith none of alle,
 Of Stedis or of Courferis
 That stondith 'hem beside,
 And tellith me, my gode brothir,
 Whithur thou wiltè ride.
 Here befidis, brothir, is
 Y cryid a Wraistling,
 And therefore shallè ben y sett
 A Ram, and als a ring.
 Mochè worship it were sothly,
 Brothir unto us all,
 Might I the ram, and als the ring,
 Bringin home to the Hall.
 A Stedè there was fadilid,
 Smarth was it and eke flete,
 Gamelyn diddin a peire of
 Sporis fast on his fete.
 He sat his fore in the stirrop,
 The Stedè he bestrode,
 And towardis the wraistiling
 The yongè childè rode.
 Tho Gamelyn the yongè was
 Riddin out at the Gate,
 The falsè Knight his own brothir
 Lökkid it aftir thate.
 And he besoughtin Jesu Christ,
 That is of Hevin King,
 That he mightè brekin his nek
 In that ilk wraistiling.
 Assone as Gamelyn cam there,
 The wraistling placè was,

He lightid down of the Stedè,
 And stodin on the gras.
 And ther he herd a Frankelyn
 Weloway for to sing,
 320 And beganin all bittirly
 His handis for to wring.
 Godè Man, seide Gamelyn,
 Why makist thou this fare?
 Is there no man that may you help
 Out of this nicè care?
 Alas! seide this Frankelyn,
 That evir I was bore,
 For tweiè stalworthè Sonis
 I wene I have forlore.
 330 A Champion is in the place,
 That has wroughtin me sorow,
 For he hath slayn my too Sonis,
 But if that God them borrow.
 I woldè givin ten poundis,
 Be Jesu Crist, and more,
 With the nonis I fond a man,
 To handilin him fore.
 410 Godè Man seide Gamelyn,
 Wilt thou this welè done,
 340 Holdè my hors, while that my Man
 Ydrawith of my shone.
 And help my Man also to kepe
 My clothis and my stede,
 And I woll into the place gon,
 And loke how I may spede.
 By God, seide the Frankelyn,
 It shall right so be don,
 I woll my filfin be thy man,
 To drawin of thy shone.
 350 And wendè you into the place,
 Swete Jesu Crist The spede,
 And dredè noght of thy clothis,
 Nor of thy godè Stede.
 Barefote and ungert Gamelyn
 Into the ringe came,
 Allè that werin in the place
 Hedin of him the name,
 430 How he durstin aventure him
 On him to don his might,
 360 That was so doughti a Champion
 In wraistling and in fight.
 Upstertè tho the Champion
 Full rapely right anon
 Towardis yongè Gamelyn
 He tho began to gon,
 And seide who is thy faðir,
 And who is eke thy Sire?
 440 Forsothè thou art a gret fole,
 For that thou camist hire.
 Anon Gamelyn answerid
 The stout Champion tho,
 Thou knewist full welè my faðir
 While that he couthè go:
 Whilis that he was on livè,
 I swere by Seint Martyn,
 Sir John of Boundis was his name,
 And I am Gamelyn.
 450 Felawe, seide the Champion,
 So evir mote I thrive,
 380 I knew right welè thy faðir,
 While that he was on live;
 And thy selfin, yonge Gamelyn;
 I wil that thou it here,
 Whilis thou wert a yongè boy,
 A mochè shrew thou were.
 Then seide yongè Gamelyn,
 And swore bi Crist's ore,
 460 Now am I oldir vox thou shalt
 Y findin me a more.

Be

Be God, seide the Champion,
 Welcome mote thou be,
 Come thou onys in my honde,
 Shaltin thou nevir the.
 It was welè within the night,
 And bright the Monè shone,
 Whan Gamelyn, and the Champion
 Togiðir gan to gon.
 The Champion castè tornis
 To Gamelyn that was prest,
 And Gamelyn stodin stillè,
 And bad him don his best.
 Then seidin yongè Gamelyn
 Unto the Champion,
 Now that I have fully provid,
 Many tornis of thine,
 Thou mostin, seide Gamelyn,
 Prove oon or two of myn.
 Gamelyn to the Champion
 Yede smartily anon,
 Of all the tornis that he coude
 He shewid him but one:
 And kest him on the listè side
 That thre ribbis to brak,
 And thereunto his left armè,
 That gaf a grettè crak.
 Then seide yongè Gamelyn
 Smertly to him anon,
 Shall it be holdin for a Cast,
 Or ellis go for none.
 Bi God, seide the Champion,
 Wheðir so that it be,
 He that ones comith in thyn hand
 Shallin he nevir the.
 Than seide the Frankelyn, that
 Thre Sonis there had lore,
 Bleffid be thou, yongè Gamelyn,
 That evir thou were bore.
 For now unto the Champion,
 This have I for to seie,
 This is the yongè Gamelyn,
 That taughtè The to pleie.
 Ayen answerde the Champion,
 That likid nothyng well,
 He is allè their Maistir, and
 His pleiè is right fell.
 Sithin that I wrastillid first
 It is agon full yore,
 But I was nevir in my life
 Handilid so before.
 Yongè Gamelyn stode in the place
 Allone withoutin ferk,
 And seide, if there be any mo,
 Let them comè to werk.
 The Champion which that painid
 Him to workin so fore,
 It semith by his Countinaunce
 That he willè no more.
 Gamelyn in the placè stode,
 Stillè as any stone,
 For to abidin wrastillin,
 But there ycomith none.
 There ne was none with Gamelyn
 That woldè wrastle more,
 For he handilid the champion:
 So wonderouly fore.
 Two Gentilmeinè that owned the place
 Come to Gamelyn, God geve them grace,
 And seide to him have done on,
 Thy hofin and thy shone,
 Forsothè at this time all
 This faire it is ydone.
 Tho seide to them Gamelyn
 So mote I well yfare,

I have not yet halvindele
 Yfoldè all my ware.
 Than seide the champion so broke,
 I may it welè swere,
 He is a fole that thereof bieth,
 Thou sellist it so dere.
 470 Tho seide to him the Frankelyn,
 That was in mochill care,
 Fellow, he seide, whi lakkist
 Thou so moche of his ware,
 Be Seint Jame, that in Galis is,
 That many Man has fought,
 Yet it is moche too godè chepe,
 That thou hastin ybought.
 550 Tho that the Wardinis werin
 Of that ilk wrastillin,
 480 Comin forth, and brought Gamelyn
 The ram, and als the ring.
 And thus wann yongè Gamelyn
 The ram and eke the ring,
 And wentè forth with mochil joy
 Homeward in the morning.
 His brothir se where that he come 560 With all the grettè rout,
 And bad the porter shute the gate,
 And holdin him without.
 490 The porter of his Lord's word
 Was so right fore agast,
 And stert anon unto the gate,
 And lokkid it full fast.
 Now lithinith, and lestinith,
 Bothè yongè and old,
 And ye shullin herè gamin
 570 Of Gamelyn the bold.
 Gamelyn comith thereunto
 For to have comin in,
 500 But all in vaine, the dore then was
 Y shitt fast with a pyn.
 Than seide yongè Gamelyn,
 Porter, undo the yate,
 For many a godè Mann's
 Sonnè stondith thereat.
 Then answerid him the porter,
 580 And swore by Godd's berde,
 Thou ne shalt, frendè Gamelyn,
 Comin into this yerde,
 510 Thou lyist, seide Gamelyn,
 So broukin I my Chynne.
 He smote the wikit with his fote,
 And brak away the pyn.
 The Porter streightwey saughè tho
 It might no bettir be,
 He sette fote on Erthè, and 590 Fast he began to fle.
 Bi my faith, seide Gamelyn,
 That travaile is ylore,
 520 For I am on fote as light as Thow, though thow had yswore.
 Gamelyn ovirtoke the Porter,
 And his teenè ywrak,
 And gert him full upon the nek,
 That he the bon to brak.
 And toke him by that oon armè,
 600 And threw him in a well,
 Seven hundrid fathom it was depe,
 As I have herdè telle.
 530 Whan Gamelyn the yongè thus
 Had yplayid his play,
 Allè that in the yerde were,
 Withdrewin them away,
 That dredin him full fore for
 The wreke that he wrought,
 And for the fayir company
 610 That he had thithir brought.
 Yonge

Yong Gamelyn yede to the gate,
 And letè it up wide,
 He letin in allè the rout,
 That gon woldin or ride.
 And seide, ye ben ywelcome
 Withoutin any greve,
 For we wol ben Maisteris here,
 And askè no Man leve.
 It n'as but yesterdai I laft,
 Seide yongè Gamelyn,
 In my brother's seleris
 Five tonn of right gode wyne.
 I willè not this Cumpany
 Partyn with me on twyn,
 And if ye will don aftir me,
 Whil any sope is inn.
 And if my brothir grutchith us,
 Or makith foulè chere,
 Othir for spence of mete and drink
 That we shull spendin here,
 I am the Ovircatorir
 And bere our Althir purse,
 He shallè have for his grutching
Santa Maria's Curfe.
 My brothir is but a nigon,
 I swere by Crist's ore,
 And we woll spendè largily
 That he hath sparid yore,
 And whoso that makith grutching
 That we do here ydwell,
 He shall go unto the Porter,
 Into the drawè Well.
 Sevin dayis, and sevin nightes
 Gamelyn held his fest,
 With mochè Solace that there was,
 And eke no mannir heste.
 All in a litil torrit his
 Brothir laydè ysteke,
 And saugh him waftin his godis,
 But durstè not to speke.
 Right erli in a morrowning
 Upon the eightè day,
 The gestis come to Gamelyn
 And woldè gon thir way.
 Lordis, tho seide Gamelyn,
 And wollin ye so hie?
 Allè the wyne is not yet dronk,
 So broukin I mine eye.
 Yonge Gamelyn in his hertè
 Was sorowfull and wo,
 Whan that his gestis toke their leve,
 And fro him woldè go.
 He woldè that they had dwellid,
 Lengir, and they seide nay,
 But bitaught Gamelyn to God,
 And bad him have gode dai.
 Thus madè Gamelyn his feste,
 And brought it well to end;
 And aftirward his gestis toke
 Levè their way to wend.
 Now lithinith, and listinith,
 And holdith you your tonge,
 And ye shullin herè gamin
 Of Gamelyn the yonge.
 Herkinith Lordilingis, and
 Listinith you aright,
 Whan al the gestis werin gon
 How Gamelyn was dight.
 Allè the while that Gamelyn
 Had hold his Mangerie,
 His brothir thought on him bewreke,
 With his false trecherie
 Tho whan that Gamelyn's gestes
 Y ridin were and gon,

Gamelyn stode anon alone,
 Frendè tho had he none.
 Tho aftir this full sone it fell
 Within a littil stound,
 That Gamelyn was takin, and
 Full hardly was he bound.
 Than forth comith the falsè Knight
 Out of the Solerè,
 620 And to Gamelyn his brothir,
 He goith fullè nere,
 And seidin unto Gamelyn,
 Who madè The so bold,
 For to destroyin and wastè
 The store of my household?
 Brothir, answerid Gamelyn,
 700 Now wrathè The right noght,
 For it is many day agon,
 Sithins it was ybought.
 630 For, Brothir, thou hastin haddè,
 I swere by Seint Richere,
 Of fiftene plowis of Londè,
 This full sixtenè yere;
 And of allè the bestis which Thou hastè forth ybredd,
 That my faðir to me bequethè
 Upon his deth'sisbedd;
 Of allè this full sixtene yere
 I gevè The the Prow,
 640 For the metè and the drinkè
 That we have spendid now.
 Than thus seide the falsè Knight, (Full evil mote he the) Herkinith, Brothir Gamelyn,
 What I woll gevin The.
 For of my body, brothir, heir
 Y gettin have I none,
 I wollè makin The my heir,
 I swerè by Seint John.
 650 Par mafay, seide Gamelyn,
 And if that it so be,
 And thou thinkist, as thou seyist,
 May God yeldin it The.
 Nothing wistè yong Gamelyn
 Of his brother's gile;
 And therefore he him begilid
 730 In verry littil while.
 Gamelyn, seidin he, o thing
 I nedis must The tell,
 660 Tho whan thou threwè my portter
 Into the drawè well,
 I sworè in that wrathè, and
 In that my gretè mote,
 That thou shuldist ybondè be
 Both hondè and eke fote:
 And therefore I besechè The,
 740 My brothir Gamelyn,
 Letith thou noght me be forsworn,
 As brothir art thou mine:
 But letith me ybindin The
 670 Both hondè and eke fote,
 For me to holdin myne avough,
 Right as I The behote.
 Brothir, tho seide Gamelyn,
 As so motin I the,
 Thou shaltè not ben forsworin
 750 For the lovè of me.
 Tho madin thei this Gamelyn
 To fitte, might he not stand,
 Tyll that he him ybondin had
 Both fote and also hand.
 The falsè Knight his brothir of Gamelyn was agast,
 And sentè aftir fetteris
 To fetterin him fast.
 M

His

His brothir madè leſingis,
 On him ther as he ſtode,
 And toldè them that comin in
 That Gamelyn was wode.
 Gamelyn ſtode to a poſt
 Y bondin in the Hall,
 And tho that ther ycomin in Lokid upon him all.
 Evir ſtode yong Gamelyn
 Evin bolte upright,
 But mete nor drink ne had he none
 Nowthir by day ne night.
 Tho ſeide yongè Gamelyn,
 Brothir myn, by my hals,
 Now I have wele eſpyid that
 Thou art a parti fals.
 Had I but wiſtè that treſon
 That thou haddiſt yfond,
 I woldin have gevin ſtrokis
 Or I had ben ybound.
 Gamelyn ſtode thus bondin
 As ſtill as any ſtone,
 For too dayis, and too nightis,
 And mete had he none.
 Then ſeide at laſt this Gamelyn
 That ſtode boundin ſtrong,
 Adam Spencer, methinkith that
 I faſte al to long;
 Therefore, Adam le diſpencer,
 Now I beſechè The,
 For the mochè lovè with which
 My faðir lovid The,
 If thou may comin to the kaies,
 Leſith me out of bond,
 And for-thi I woll departin
 With The of my fre lond.
 Than him anſwerid this Adam,
 Which that was the Spencer,
 I have yſervid thy brothir
 This full ſixtene yere,
 And if I ſhuldè letin you
 To gon out of his bourè,
 He woldin aftirwardis ſeye
 That I were a Traytour.
 Adam, anſwerid Gamelyn,
 So broukin I myn hals
 Thou ſhaltè findin my brothir
 At the laſt rightè fals:
 And therefore, brothir Adam, me
 Loſè out of my bonds,
 And I wollè departin with
 The of myn own fre londs.
 Upon ſo gode a forewardè
 Saidin Adam, I wiſ,
 I wollè doin thereunto
 Allè that in me is.
 Adam, tho ſeide Gamelyn,
 As ſo mowin I the,
 I woll holdè The Covenant,
 An thou too wollè me.
 Anon as Adam his Lordè
 To beddè was ygone,
 Adam tokè the kaies, and lat
 Gamelyn out anon.
 He unlokid yongè Gamelyn
 Both hondis and eke fete,
 On hope of the avauncement
 Which that he him behete.
 Then ſeide yongè Gamelyn,
 Thankid be Godd'is ſonde,
 For now that I am yloſid
 Both fote and alſo hond,
 Had I but etin a litil
 And thereto dronk aright,

760 There is none in this houſe that Shuld bindè me this night.
 Tho Adam tokè Gamelyn,
 As ſtill as any ſtone,
 And haddin him into the Spence
 Right rapily anon:
 And ſettin him to his Soupere
 840 Right in a privie ſtede,
 And badin hym do gladily,
 And Gamelyn ſo dede.
 770 Anon aſſone as Gamelyn
 Had etin wel and fine,
 And thereunto had ydrankin
 Well of the reddè wyne,
 Adam, ſeide yongè Gamelyn,
 Tell what is now thy rede,
 850 For me to go to my brothir,
 And gerdin of his hede.
 No Gamelyn, ſeidin Adam,
 It ſhallè not be ſo:
 780 But I can tellè The a rede,
 That is yworth the too.
 I wotè wele forſothè that,
 (And this it is no nay,)
 We ſhullin have a Mangerie
 Rightè upon Sunday,
 860 Of Abbotis and Priouris
 Full many here ſhal be,
 And othir men of holie Cherch,
 As I can tellè The.
 790 Thou ſhaltè ſtand up by the poſt,
 As thou were honde faſt,
 And I ſhall them leve unlok, that
 Away thou may them caſt.
 And whan that they have y etin
 And waſhin have their hondes,
 870 Tho thou ſhalt beſpekin them all
 To bring The out of bondes.
 And if that they will borrow The,
 That werin a gode game,
 800 Than werin thou out of priſon,
 And I als out of blame:
 But if that everich of them
 Sayè unto us nay,
 I ſhullè don anothir thing,
 I ſwere by this day.
 Thou ſhallè have a godè ſtaffe,
 And I woll have another,
 And Criſt'is curſe have that oon
 That faile ſhall that other.
 810 Ye for God ſeide Gamelyn,
 I ſay it right for me,
 If that I failin on my ſide,
 Than evil mote I the.
 If that we ſhullin algatis
 Aſſoile them of thire Synne,
 890 Warnith me, my brothir Adam,
 Whan that we ſhall begynn.
 Now Gamelyn, ſeidin Adam,
 By Sainte Charitè,
 820 I wolle warnè The befor,
 Whan that the time ſhall be.
 Whan that I twinkin upon The,
 Lokè for to be gon,
 And caſt away the fetteris,
 And come to me anon.
 Adam, ſeide yong Gamelyn,
 900 Y bliſſid be thy bones,
 That is a rightè gode counſaile
 Y gevin for the nones.
 830 If that they ſhullin wernè me
 To bring The out of bendes,
 I wolle ſettin gode ſtrokis
 Full right upon their lendes.
 The

Tho the Sondag was ycomin,
 And these folk to the feste,
 Faire they werein ywelcomid
 Bothè the leste, and meste.
 And evir as they at the Hall
 Dorè were comin in,
 They evèrich castin an eie
 On yongè Gamelyn.
 The falsè Knight his own brothir,
 So full of trecherie,
 Allè the gestis that there were,
 At that ilk Mangerie,
 Of Gamelyn his own brothir
 He toldin them with Mouth
 Allè the harmis and the shame,
 That e're he tellè couth.
 Tho they werein yservid streit
 Of Messis too or thre,
 Than seidè yongè Gamelyn,
 How do ye servè me?
 It ne is not wele yservid,
 Be God that alle made,
 That I shold sittin here fasting,
 And othir men make glade.
 The falsè Knightè his brothir
 Thereas that he ystode,
 Toldin to allè his gestis,
 That Gamelyn was wode.
 And Gamelyn there stodè still,
 And answerid right noght,
 But of Adam's wordis he
 Helde still in his thought.
 Tho Gamelyn began to speke,
 Right doulefully withall,
 Unto the grettè Lordis, that
 Y satyn in the Hall.
 My Lordlingis, tho seidin he
 For Crist's passion,
 Helpin to bringè Gamelyn
 Out of thilke prison.
 Than seidè to him an Abbot,
 (Sorow upon his cheke)
 He shallin havè Crist's curse,
 And Seintè Maries eke,
 That shall The out of this prison
 Beggyn owthir borow,
 But evir worthè hym full wele,
 That doth the mykil sorow.
 And anon astir that Abbot
 Than spakin anothir,
 I woldè that thyn hede were of,
 Though thou were my brothir.
 Allè that The shall borrowin,
 Motè them foulè fall,
 And thus yseidin allè they
 That werin in the Hall.
 Than seidè to hem a Priour,
 Evil mowin he thrive,
 It is grettè sorow and care,
 Boy, that thou art on live.
 On, on, seidè yongè Gamelyn,
 So broukin I my bone,
 Now that I havin espyid
 That frendis have I none.
 A cursid mot he worthè be,
 Bothè fleshe and blode,
 That evir doth to Priouris,
 Or Abbotes any gode.
 Anon Adam the dispencer
 Takin up hath the Cloth,
 And lokid unto Gamelyn,
 And saugh that he was wroth.
 Adam of the Pantrie at thilk
 Timè litil he thought,

And too godè Stavys unto
 The hallè dore he brought.
 910 Adam lokid on Gamelyn,
 And he was war anon,
 And cast awaie the fetteris,
 And began for to gon.
 Tho he camin unto Adam,
 He toke to the one staff,
 And begannin to werkè wele,
 990 And gode strokis he gaff.
 Gamelyn came into the hall,
 And Adam Spencer both,
 920 And lokid them all aboutin,
 As they haddè ben wroth.
 Gamelyn sprenith holi watir
 All with an okin spire,
 That some of them that stode upright
 Fillin into the fire.
 There was no mannir lewde Man,
 1000 That in the Hallè stode,
 That woldè doin Gamelyn
 Any thingè but gode.
 930 But thei stodè besidin, and Letè them bothè werch,
 For thei ne haddè no routhè
 Of Men of holi Chersch,
 Of Abbot, or of Priour, or
 Of Monk, or of Canon,
 That Gamelyn hath ovirtokè,
 1010 Anon they yedin down.
 There ne was none of them allè,
 That with his staff ymette,
 940 That he madè them ovirthrowe,
 And quyttè them his dette.
 Tho Gamelyn, seidè Adam,
 For Seintè Charite,
 Payith, I pray, gode liveray,
 And for the love of me:
 And I wolle kepin the dore,
 1020 So evir here I Masse,
 Er that they ben assoilyd
 Ther shallè noon ypassè.
 950 Doutè The noght, seide Gamelyn,
 While that we ben in fere,
 But kepè thou welè the dore,
 And I woll werkin here:
 Besturith The, gode Adam, and Ne lettith none yfle,
 And we shall tellè largily
 1030 How many here there be.
 To Gamelyn, seidin Adam,
 Doith them all but gode,
 960 For thei ben Men of holi chersch,
 Drawith of them no blode:
 Savith right welè the Coroune,
 And doith them no harmes,
 But brekith bothè their leggis,
 And sithin here thir armes.
 Thus Gamelyn and Adam hath 1040 Y wroughtin rightè fast,
 And pleidin with the Monkis tho,
 And madè them agast.
 970 Forth hiðir they comè riding
 Full jolily with Swaines,
 But home agen they werin ledde
 In cartis and in waines.
 Tho as they haddin all ydone,
 Than seidin a gray frere,
 1050 Alas! alas! my Lord Abbot,
 What diddè we now here?
 Tho that we hithir did ycome
 It was a coldè rede,
 980 Us had far bettir ben at home,
 With watir, and with brede.

While

While Gamelyn made Orderis
 Of Monkis and of Frere,
 Evir stodè his brothir stille,
 And madè foulè chere,
 Tho Gamelyn up with his staff,
 That he full welè knew,
 And grettin him upon the nek,
 That he him overthrewe,
 A litil above the girdil
 The riggin bone to braff,
 And sett him in the fetteris,
 There as he sattin arft.
 Sittith thou there, my brothir John,
 Tho seidè Gamelyn,
 For to colin thy hotte bodie,
 As I did colè myn.
 And swithe as they yhaddè wele
 Wrokin them on their fone,
 They askid for the watir, and
 They wislin them anon.
 What some of them for their lovè,
 And somè for their awe,
 Allè the servauntis servid
 Them of the bestè law.
 The Shereff was thennis away
 But about a five Myle,
 And all was toldin unto him
 Within a littil whyle,
 How Gamelyn and Adam had
 Ydon a sorry rès
 Boundin and woundin many Men
 Agen the King's pece.
 Eftsonis tho begannin sone,
 Striffè for to awake,
 And the Shiregereve about did
 Cast Gamelyn to take.
 Now lithinith, and lestinith,
 So God geve you gode fine,
 And ye shull herin a gode game
 Of yongè Gamelyne.
 Now four and twentie yongè Men,
 That holdin them full bold,
 Comin unto the Shiregereve,
 And seidè that they wold
 Both Gamelyn and eke Adam
 Y fettè be the way;
 The Shiregereve gafè them leve
 Tho, soth as I you say.
 Thes yongè Meinë hidin them
 Fast, woldè they not lynne,
 Tyll that they comin to the gate
 There Gamelyn was inne.
 They knokidin upon the gate,
 The Porter tho was nye,
 And lokid forth out at an hole,
 As Man that was full flye.
 The Porter had beholdin them
 But for a litil while,
 He lovid welè Gamelyn,
 And was adrad of gile,
 And forthi letè the wiket
 Y stondin fullè still,
 And askid them that stant without
 What ywas their will?
 For allè the gret Company
 Than spake bot one alone,
 Undo the gatis, porter, and
 Latè us in ygone.
 Then seidè to them the porter,
 So broukin I my chynne,
 Ye shullè sayin your Errand,
 Or that ye comin inne.
 Say to Gamelyn and Adam,
 If that their wille it be,

We wollè spekin here with them,
 Two wordis othir thre. 1130
 Fellow, seidè the porter tho,
 Stondith thou ther ystill,
 1060 And I woll wend to Gamelyn,
 To wetin of his wille.
 And in wentè the Porter tho
 To Gamelyn anon,
 And seidè, Sire, I warnè you,
 That here be come your fone,
 For lo! The Shiregerev's Men 1140
 Now ben all at the gate,
 For to ytekin you bothè,
 Shalle ye not escape.
 1070 Porter, tho seidè Gamelyn,
 So mote I welè the,
 I woll allowè The thy wordes,
 Whan I my timè fe.
 Go ageyn, porter, to the gate,
 And dwell with them a while,
 Awaiting, and thou shaltè fe, 1150
 Right sone, Porter, a gile.
 Adam, tho seidè Gamelyn,
 Lokè The to be gon,
 3080 We havè foomen at the gate,
 And frendis nevir one.
 It ben the Shiregerev's Men,
 That hithir ben comin,
 They ben yswore togiðeris,
 That we shull be nomin. 1169
 To Gamelyn seidè Adam,
 Hiè The righte belyve,
 And if I failè The this day,
 Than evil mote I thryve.
 1090 And we shullin so welcomè
 The Shiregerev's Men,
 That some of them, I trow, shall make
 Their beddis in the fen.
 Then thorough the posternè gate
 Yong Gamelyn out went,
 And a gode sturdie cartè staffe 1170
 In his hondè he hent.
 And Adam Spencer hentè sone
 Anothir grettè staffe,
 1100 For to helpe yong Gamelyn,
 And gode strokis he gaffe.
 Adam yfèllid hath his tweyne,
 And Gamelyn felled thre,
 The tothir fettè fete on erth,
 And fast began to fle.
 What? seidin Adam Spencer tho, 1180
 So evir hire I masse,
 I havè right gode reddè wyne,
 Pray drinkith er ye passe.
 1110 Nai nai by God, seidè they tho,
 Thy drink is nothing gode,
 It woldè makin Mann's brayne
 To lyin in his hode.
 Yong Gamelyn tho stodè still,
 And lokid him about,
 And faide, the Shiregereve comith 1190
 With a full grettè rout.
 Adam Spencer, seid Gamelyn,
 My rede it is now this,
 1120 Abidin we not lengir here,
 Lest we farin amys.
 I rede that we to Wode ygonn,
 Er that we be yfound,
 Betir is there losè for to gon,
 Than in the tounè ybound.
 Adam then tokè by the hond 1200
 This yongè Gamelyn,
 And echè of them to the othir
 Drankin a draft of wyne,
 And

And aftirwardis toke their courfe,
 And wente streight their way,
 Tho fond the Shiregereve the Nest,
 But in it was none ay.
 The Shiregereve lightid adoune,
 And went into the hall,
 And fond the Lord yfetterid,
 Full faste therewithall.
 The Shireve tho unfetterid
 Him righte sone anon,
 And sentin aftir a gode leche
 To hele his rigge bon.
 Lete we now this falsè Knight
 Lie in his mochill care.
 And tellè we of Gamèlyn,
 And lokè how he fare.
 Gamèlyn into the wild wode,
 Yftalkid is full stille,
 And Adam le dispencer it
 Ylikid but right ille,
 Tho Adam swore to Gamèlyn,
 And that be Seint Richere,
 Now I say that it is mery,
 To ben a dispencer:
 That muchè levire me werin
 The kays for to bere,
 Than walkin in this wildè wode,
 My clothis all to tere.
 Adam, seide yong Gamèlyn,
 Dismaye The right noght,
 For many a gode Mann's child
 In care is ybrought.
 As they thus in the wode stodin
 Ytalking both in fere,
 Adam herdè talking of Men,
 And nigh them thought they were.
 Tho Gamèlyn undir the wild
 Wodè lokid aright,
 Full sevin score of yongè Men
 He faugh right wel ydight;
 Allè were fattè at their mete
 In a compas about,
 Adam, tho seide Gamèlyn,
 Now havin ye no doute,
 For aftir balè comith bore,
 Thorough Godd'is grete might,
 Methinkith of mete, and of drink
 That I havin a fight.
 Adam le dispencer lokid
 Tho undir wodè bowe,
 And whan that he the metè faugh
 Tho he was glad inowe,
 For now he hopid unto God
 For to havin his dele,
 And he was full fore alongid
 Aftir a godè mele.
 Anon as he seide that word,
 Streight the Maistir outlawe
 Saugh Gamèlyn and Adam both
 Undir the wodè shaw.
 Lo! yongè Men, seide the Maistir
 Outlaw, by the gode rode,
 I am aware of some gestis
 Pray God sendin us gode.
 Loke! yondir be two yongè Men,
 That ben right wel adight,
 A peradventure they ben mo,
 Whofo lokid aright.
 Arisith up quick yongè men,
 And fettè them to me,
 For it is gode, that we wetin,
 What meinè that they be.
 Up thei stertin quik at that word
 Sevin fro the dinnere,

And they mettin with Gamèlyn,
 And Adam Dispencere.
 Whan that they werin ney to them,
 Than seide thus that one,
 Yeldith up to us, yongè men,
 Your bowis, and your fione.
 1210 Than seide to them Gamèlyn,
 That yongè was of elde,
 Full mochil sorow mote they have,
 That unto you shall yelde.
 I cursè woll none othir wight,
 But right mine ownè selve,
 1290 Tho ye may fettin unto you
 Fyve, and than be ye twelve.
 They herdin by his wordis that
 Gret might was in his arme,
 1220 And forthi there was none of them
 That woldè don him harme,
 But seidin unto Gamèlyn
 Right mildily and still,
 Comith aforin our Maistir,
 And say to him thy will.
 Yongè man, seide Gamèlyn,
 1300 Upon your leaute,
 Tellith what man your Maistir is,
 Which that ye with ybe.
 1230 Tho allè they answerid him
 At ones without lesing,
 Our Maistir is ycorounid
 Of Outlawis the King.
 Adam, seide yongè Gamèlyn,
 Go we in Crist's name,
 He may nothir metè nor drink
 1310 Y wernè us for shame,
 And if that he be hendè, and
 Comin of gentil blode,
 1240 He woll geve us both mete and drink,
 And doin us some gode.
 By Seintè Jame, seide Adam tho,
 What harme so that I gete,
 I will adventure me to the Dorè that I had mete.
 Tho Gamèlyn and Adam both 1320 Y wentè forth in fere,
 And they both gretè the Maistir
 Which that they fondè there.
 1250 Than seide to them the Maistir,
 That King was of Outlawes,
 What do ye seke, ye yongè Men,
 Undir the wodè Shawes?
 Yong Gamèlyn answerid tho
 The King with his Coroune,
 He mustè nedis walk in wodes,
 1330 That may not walk in tounè.
 Sire, we walkè not here in wodes
 Non harmè for to do,
 1260 But if peradventure we mete
 A Dere, to shete thereto,
 As meinè that ben right hungry,
 And mow no metè fynd,
 And very hardè ben bestad
 Undir the wodè lynd.
 1340 Of Gamèlyn's wordis tho
 The Maistir haddè routhe,
 And seide to them, ye shall have
 Inow, have God my trouthe;
 1270 Anon he baddè them sittin
 Downe, for to take rest,
 And baddè them etin and drink,
 And that too of the best,
 As they were eting and drinking
 Of the best wele and fine,
 Than seide the ton to the tothir,
 1350 This is yongè Gamèlyne.
 N
 Tho

Tho was the Maistir of Outlawes
 Into Counsaile nomin,
 And told how it was Gamelyn,
 That thithir was comin.
 Anon as he had herdin all
 How that it was befall,
 He madè Gamelyn Maistir
 Undir him o're them all.
 Within the third weke aftir this
 To him comith tiding,
 To the Maistir of Outlawis,
 Which that now was their King,
 That he shulde ycomin home,
 For that his pees was made;
 And of that joyfull tiding he
 Was wonderously glade.
 Tho seide he to his yonge men,
 The sothè for to tell,
 To me be comin tidingis
 I may no lengir dwell.
 Tho was yong Gamelyn anon
 Withoutin taryng,
 Made Maistir of Outlawis, and
 Y corounid their King.
 Tho was yong Gamelyn crounid
 The King of the Outlawes,
 And among them walkid a while
 Undir the wodè shawes.
 The falsè Knight his brothir now
 Was Shiregereve and Sire,
 And letè his brothir be endite
 For hate and for ire.
 Tho werin all his bondmeine
 Sory, and nothing glad,
 Whan that Gamelyn their lordè,
 Wolves hede was cryed and made.
 And sentin outè his meine
 Where they mightin him fynd,
 For to sekin yonge Gamelyn
 Undir the wodè lynd.
 To tellè to him tidingis
 The windè was ywent,
 And alle his gode revid was,
 And all his men yscent.
 Whan that they haddè hym foundin,
 On kneys they them sette,
 And adoun with their hode, and Gamelyn, their Lord, grette.
 They seidin, Sire, now wrathè not
 You for the gode rode,
 For we have brought you tidingis,
 But they be nothing gode.
 Now is thy brothir Shiregereve,
 And he hath the baillie,
 And thereto hath enditid The,
 And wolves hede doth The crie.
 Allas! tho seidè Gamelyn,
 That e're I was so slak;
 That I ne hadd brokin his neck,
 Whan I his riggè brak.
 Goith, and gretith you welè,
 My housbondis an wif,
 I wolle ben at the next Shire
 So havè God my lif.
 Gamelyn camè well redy
 Unto the nextè Shire,
 And there the falsè Knight his brothir
 Was bothè Lord and Sire.
 Gamelyn camè boldilich
 Into the motè hall,
 And put adoun his hode among
 The Lordilingis all.
 God favè you, Lordilingis,
 Which that now herè be,

But as for The, brokebak Shereve,
 Evil motè thou the.
 Why hastè thou doin to me
 That shame and villonie,
 For to latin enditè me, 1430
 And wolf's hede me crie?
 Tho thought the falsè Knight on him
 For to have ben awreke,
 And letè takin Gamelyn,
 Must he no more yspeke.
 Mightè there be no mannir grace,
 But Gamelyn, at last,
 Was into prisoun ycastin,
 And fetterid full fast.
 This Gamelyn hath a brothir
 That clepid was Sir Ote, 1440
 As gode and hend a Knight he was,
 As mightin gon on fote.
 1370 Right anon yede a Messager
 Unto that godè Knight,
 And toldin him altogethir
 How Gamelyn was dight.
 Anon as Sir Ote herdin had
 How Gamelyn was dight,
 He was right passing sory tho, 1450
 Ne he was nothing light.
 And letè saddle him a stede,
 And streit the weie he name,
 1380 And unto his tweie bretherin
 Right sonè there he came.
 Sir, seidè this Sir Ote unto
 The Shiregerevè tho,
 We ben but only thre brethren,
 Shall we be nevir mo,
 And thus hast thou yprisounid
 The bestè of us all: 1460
 Soche anothir brothir as thou
 Evil mote him befall.
 1390 Sir Ote, seidè the falsè Knight,
 Now letè be thy curs,
 By God, for these thi wordis he
 Shalle farin the wors.
 Now to the King's prisoun he
 Is lesfully ynome;
 And there he shall abidin 1470
 Untill the Justice come.
 But parde, seidè Sir Ote tho,
 Bettir it shall ybe,
 1400 I biddin him unto Maynprife,
 And that thou grauntè me,
 Untill the nextè sitting shall Come of deliveraunce,
 And than letè Gamelyn fairely
 Ystondin to his chaunce.
 Brothir, in soche a forewardè 1480
 I takin him to The,
 And by thy fa'ir's soulè,
 That The begat and me,
 1410 If that he be not right redy
 Whan that the justice sitte,
 Thou shaltè berin the judgement,
 For all thy grette witt.
 I grauntin it wele, seide Sir Ote,
 That it shall so ybe,
 Letith delivir him anon, 1490
 And takin him to me.
 Tho Gamelyn was delivered
 To Sir Ote his brothir,
 1420 And that night ydwellid in fere
 The ton with the tothir.
 On the morow seide Gamelyn
 Unto Sir Ote the hend,
 My brothir, he seidè, forsothe,
 I motè from The wend,

To

To lokin how my yongè Men
 In wode ledin their lif,
 And whethir that they livin now
 In joie or elles in strif.
 Be God tho answerid Sir Ote,
 That is a coldè rede,
 Now I se that alle the Cark
 Shall fallin on my hede;
 For whan that the Justice sittith,
 And thou be not yfound,
 I shall anon be takin, and
 In thy stede be ybound.
 Brothir, tho seide Gamelyn,
 Dismayè The right noght,
 For be Seintè Jame in Galis,
 That many man hath sought,
 If so that God Almighty hold
 Me my lif, and my wit,
 I wolle ben there right redy
 Whan that the justice sit.
 Than seide Sir Ote to Gamelyn,
 God shelde The fro shame,
 Comith whan that thou seist tyme,
 And bring us out of blame.
 Now lithinith, and lestinith,
 And holdith you right still,
 And ye shullè herin how that
 Gamelyn had his will.
 Anon Gamelyn wentin his Way undir the wode rise,
 And he yfondè there playing
 His yongè men of prise.
 Tho was this yongè Gamelyn
 In hert right glad inow,
 Whan that he fond his yongè men
 Undir the wode bow.
 Gamelyn and his yongè men
 Ytalkidin in fere,
 And they all haddè right gode game
 Their Maistir for to here.
 His men told him of Aventures,
 Which that they had yfound,
 And Gamelyn told them agen
 How he was fast ybound.
 All the while that Gamelyn was
 Outlaw, had he no curs,
 There ne was no man that for him
 Yferid ought the wors,
 But Abbotis and Priouris,
 And Monkis, and Chanon,
 In them forsothe ne last he noght,
 Whan er he might them nom.
 While Gamelyn and his yong men
 Y madè mirthis ryve,
 The falsè Knight his own brothir,
 Evil motè he thryve,
 For all this while he waft about
 Both one day and othir,
 On purpose for to hire the quest
 To hangin his brothir.
 Gamelyn stodin on a day,
 And round him he beheld
 The wild wodis, and the shawis
 Within the wildè feld,
 He thoughtin upon his brothir,
 How that he him behete,
 That he ywoldin be redy
 Whan that the justice sete,
 He thoughtin welè that he wolde
 Withoutin more delay
 Y comin afore the justice
 For to kepin his day.
 And seide to his yongè men,
 Now dighrith you full yare,

1500 For whan that the justice sittith
 We mote nedis be there.
 For I am undir a borow
 Until that I comin,
 And my brothir instede of me
 To prison shall be nomin.
 Be Seint Jame seide his yongè men, 1580
 And that thou rede thereto,
 Ordeinith how it shallè be,
 And it shall so be dō.
 1510 While Gamelyn was ycoming
 There that the justice satt,
 The falsè Knight his own brothir
 Forgattin he not that,
 To hire the meinè on his quest,
 To hangin his brothir,
 And though thei haddè not that oon, 1590
 He wolde han that othir.
 Tho comith yongè Gamelyn
 From undir the wode rise,
 1520 And he broughtin along with him
 His yongè men of prise.
 I se wele, seide Gamelyn,
 The justice is ysette,
 Go thou afor us, Adam, and
 Lokè how that it spette.
 Adam wentè into the Hall, 1600
 And lokid all about,
 And he saugh there ystondè tho
 Lordingis grette and stout,
 1530 And Sir Ote Gamelyn's brothir
 Y fetterid wele fast,
 Tho wentin Adam out of Hall,
 As he werin agast.
 Adam seide to Gamelyn,
 And to his felawes all,
 Sir Ote ystondith fetterid
 Within the motè hall.
 Seide Gamelyn, if God geve us
 Gràcè wel for to do,
 1540 He shallin it abegge anon
 That him broughtin thereto.
 Then seidin Adam dispencer,
 That lokkis haddin hore,
 Christ's curse motè he havin,
 That boundin him so fore,
 And if thou wiltè, Gamelyn, 1620
 Doin afir my rede,
 There is none in the Hallè, that Shall bere aweie his hede.
 1550 Adam, tho seide Gamelyn,
 We wolle not do so,
 We woll sle only the giltif,
 And lat the othir go.
 Iwill my selve into the hall,
 And hire the justice speke,
 And on all them that ben giltif 1630
 I wolle ben awreke.
 Lat none escapin at the dore,
 Take, yongè meinè, yeme,
 1560 For I wolle ben the justice
 This day domis to deme.
 Pray God spedè me this ilk dai
 At this my newè werke;
 And Adam, comith thou with me,
 For thou shalt be my Clerke.
 His meinè all answerid him, 1640
 And bad hym don his best,
 And if thou to us havè nede,
 Thou shalt fyndin us preft.
 1570 For we wolle stondin with The Whilis that we may dure,
 And but that we werkin manly,
 Payith us then no hure.

Yongè

Yongè Men, seidè Gamèlyn,
 So mot I wele y the,
 As ye a right trusty Maistir
 Shullè findin of me.
 And rightè thereat the justice
 Yfattin in the Halle,
 In wentè tho yong Gamèlyn,
 Boldly amonges them all.
 Gamèlyn letè unfettir
 His brothir out of bend,
 Than seidè to him Sir Otis,
 His brothir that was hende,
 Thou haddist almost, Gamèlyn,
 Dwellid away to long,
 For the questè is ygon out
 On me, that I shulde honge.
 Brothir, tho seidè Gamèlyn,
 God gevè me gode rest,
 This gode day they shull ben hongid,
 That ben upon the quest;
 And thereto the justice bothè,
 That is the juggle man,
 And eke the Sheriff our brothir,
 For through him it began.
 Than seidè yongè Gamèlyn,
 Unto the false justice,
 Now is thi powir at an end,
 You must nedis arise.
 Thou hast ygevin domis that
 Ben evil allè dight,
 I wollè settin in thi fete,
 And dressein them aright.
 But the justice fattin stille,
 And roosè not anon,
 And Gamèlyn with his swardè
 Clevid his chekè bone.
 Yonge Gamèlyn toke him in his
 Armis, and no more spak,
 But threw him ovir the barre,
 And his armè to brak.
 Durst no one unto Gamèlyn
 Sayè nothing but gode,
 For fere of the gret company
 That withoutin ystode.
 Gamèlyn fattè him adoun
 In the Justice's stede,
 (Herkenith now of the bourdè
 That Gamèlyn tho dede)
 And Sir Otè by him he satte,
 And Adam at his fete;
 And whan Gamèlyn the yong was
 Satte in the justice fete,
 He letè fettè the Justice,
 And his false brothir,
 And letè them come to the barre,
 The ton with that othir;
 Whan Gamèlyn had thus ydone,
 Haddin he tho no rest,
 Till that he had enquerid who
 Werin upon the quest,
 For to demin his brothir dere
 Sir Otè for to be honge,
 Er that he wistè which they were
 It thoughtè him full longe.
 But al so sone as Gamèlyn
 Wistè where that thei were,
 He diddè them everichone
 Fetterin fast in fere,
 And bringè them unto the barre,
 And fettè them in vewe;

By my faith, seidè the justice,
 The Sheriff is a shrewe.
 1650 Than seidè yongè Gamèlyn,
 Unto the false justice,
 Thou hastè gevè thy domis,
 Al of the worst assise;
 And the twelve Sifouris, that
 Werin of the inquest,
 They shullè ben hongid this day,
 So God geve me gode rest.
 Than seidè the Sheriff pitously,
 To yongè Gamèlyn,
 1660 My Lord, I criè The Mercie,
 Brothir artè thou myn.
 Therefore, seidè yongè Gamèlyn,
 Havè you Crist's Curse,
 For if thou werin Maistir yet
 Shuldin I farè worse.
 But for to makè short my tale,
 And not to tary longe,
 He ordeynid him there a quest
 Of his own men so strong.
 1670 The false Justice, and the Sheriff,
 Bothè were hongid hie,
 To weyvin there with the ropis,
 And with the windè drie.
 And als the twelve Sifouris,
 Sorow havè that rekk,
 Allè they werin yhongid
 Full fastè by the nekk.
 Thus endid hath the false Knight
 With all his trechèrie,
 1680 That evir haddè lad his life,
 In falseness and folie.
 He was hongid up by the nek,
 And nought by the purse,
 That was the Mede that he had haddè
 From his fa'ir's curse.
 Sir Otè was the eldist tho,
 And Gamèlyn was yonge,
 They wentin with their frendis, and Passidin to the King.
 1690 They madin pece with the Kingè
 Of the bestè assise,
 The King lovid Sir Otè wele
 And made him a Justice;
 Aftir the King made Gamèlyn
 Bothè in Est and West,
 The Chefe Justice and Ridere of
 Allè his fre forest.
 Alle his wight yongè Men the King
 Forgafin them their gilt,
 1700 And sithen in gode office the King
 Hath allè them ypilt.
 Thus has wan yongè Gamèlyn
 His londè and his Lede,
 And wrake of him his Enemies,
 And quyte them their mede.
 And Sir Otè his brothir dere
 Ymade him hath his heir,
 And sithin weddid Gamèlyn
 A Wife both gode and faire:
 1710 They lividin togidèr wele,
 Whilis that Christè wolde,
 And sithin that was Gamèlyn
 Ygravin undir Molde;
 And so shallè we allè here,
 May there no man yse;
 God bringin us unto the joie,
 That evir shull ybe.

Thus endith the Legend of GAMELYN, call'd the COKE's TALE, in all the MSS that I have seen, and have this Tale.

The Man of Lawes PROLOGUE.

OUR Hostè saw well how that the bright
Sunne
The' Ark of his artificial day had ronn
The fourthe partè, and eke half an houre more:

And though he were not depe expert in lore,
He wist wele that it was the eightene day
Of Aprill, that is Messenger to May;
And saw wele that the shadow of eche tre
Was in lengthè of the same quantite
As was the body' erect that causid it:
Therefore by the shadow he toke his wit,
That Phœbus, which that shone so clere and bright,
Degrees was forty fyve clombin of hight.

And for that dayè, as in Latitude,
It was ten of the Clok he gan conclude,
And sodeinly he plight his horse about,
Lordlinges, qð he, I warne you all the rout,
That the forth part of this day is agon,
Now for the love of God, and of Seint John,
Lesith no tyme, as ferforth as ye may,
Lordlinges, this tyme wastith both night and day,
And fleeth fro us whan privily sleeping,
And what through negligence in our waking,
As doth the streme, that turnith ne're ageyn,
Descending from the mountain to the plaine.
Wele can Senec, and many Philosophre
Bewailin tyme lost more than gold in Cofre.
For los of Cattle may recoverid be,
But los of timè shendith us, qð he,

It woll not come ageyn withoutin dred,
No more than will come Malkin's Maidinhede, 30
Whan she hath lost it in her wantonnefs.
Let us not mowlin thus in idlenefs.

Sir Man of Law, qð he, so have I blis,
Tell us a tale anon, as forewarde is:
Ye ben submittid through your fre assent
To stondin in this case at my judgement.
Acquittith now your self of your behest,
Than have you don your devyr at the lest.
Hostè, qð he, depardeux Ich assent,

To brekin forewarde is not mine entent; 40
Behest is dette, and I woll holdin faine
Al my behest, I can no bettir faine.
For soch law as Man gevith othir wight,
He shuld himself usin the same by right.
Thus woll our text; but nathèless certeine
I can right now no thrifty tale sayn
That Chaucer (though that he can but leudly
On Metris, and in riming craftily)
Hath seide them in soche English as he can,
Of olde tyme, as knowith many' a Man. 50
And if he have not seide them, levè brother,
In one boke, he hath seide them in another.
For he hath told of Loveres up and doune,
Mo than Ovid hath made of mentioune,
In his Epistilis, that ben full old.
What shuld I tellin them, sith they ben told?
In youth he made of Ceyx and Alcyon;
And sith he hath spokin of everichone

O

These

These nobil wivis, and these loveres eke,
 Whofo that will in his large volume feke,
 Clepid the Seintis Legend of Cupide:
 There may he fe the large woundis wide
 Of Lucrece, and of Babylon Thisbe,
 The swerd of Dido for her false Enee,
 The tree of Phillis for her Demophoon,
 The pleint of Deianire, and Hermion,
 Of Ariadne, and Hipsiphile;
 The barein Ille ystonding in the Se,
 Which that Leander dreint for his Hero,
 The teris of Helen, and eke the wo
 Of Briseis, and of Laodamia,
 The cruelty of the quene Medea.
 The litil childrin hanging by the hals,
 For thilk Jason, that was of love so fals.
 Of Hypermnestra, Penelope, Alcest,
 Your wivehode he commendith with the best.
 But certainly no word ne writith he
 Of thilk ensample wyke of Canace,

That lovid her own brothir sinfully:
 Of soche curfid Stories I say fye. 80
 Or els of Tyro Apolloneus,
 How that the curfid King Antiochus
 Biraft his doughtir of her Maidinhede;
 That is so horrible a tale to rede,
 Whan he her drew upon the Pavement.
 And therefore he of full avisement
 Nold nevir write in none of his sermons
 Of soche unkind Abhominations.
 Ne I woll non reherse, if that I may.
 But of my tale how shall I do this day? 90
 Me werin loth to be liknid doutles
 To Muses, that Men clepe Pierides,
 Metamorphoseos wot what I mene,
 But natheles I rechè not a bene,
 Though I comin astir him with hawbak,
 I speke in prose, and let him rimis make.
 And with that word he with a sobir chere
 Began his tale, as ye shall astir here.

Here endith the PROLOGUE.

VI. The Man of Lawe's TALE.

Lady Cunstance the Emperor's Daughter of Rome, after her Marriage with the Sowdan of Surrey, through the Malice of the Sowdan's Mother suffereth great Trouble and Misery with her young Child Maurice, but yet in the end is restor'd to comfort.

Hateful harme, Condition of Povert!
 With thirst, with cold, with hungir fore confoundid, 100

To askin help The shamith in thy hert,
 If Thou none ask, so fore art thou ywoundid,
 That very nede unwrappith all thy woundis hid,
 Mauge thy hede thou must for indigence
 Or stele, or beg, or borow thy dispence.

Thou blamist Crist, and seyst full bittirly,
 He misdepartith richis temporall,
 Thy neighbour eke thou writist sinfully,
 And seist thou hast to litil, he hath all, 110
 Parfay saist thou sometime he rekin shall,
 Whan that his tail shall brennin in the glede,
 For he ne helpith nedefull in their nede.

Herkin what is the Sentence of the wise,
 Bet is to dyin than have indigence,
 Thy self Neighbour wollin The to to dispise,
 If thou be pore, farewell thy reverence;
 Yet of the wise men take this Sentence,
 Alle the dayis of pore men ben wikk, 120
 Beware therefore er thou come at that prikk.

If thou be pore, thy brothir hatith The,
 And all thy frendis fleen fro The, alas!
 O rich Merchauntis, full of wele ye be,
 O noble prudent folk, as in this caas,
 Your baggis ben not filled with ambis aas,
 But with fice sink, that rennith for your chaunce,
 At Christmas then wele mery mow ye daunce.

Ye sekin Lond and See for your winning
 As wise folk ye knowin all the State
 Of reignes, ye ben fa'diris of tydinges,
 And talis bothin of pece and debate,
 I was right now of talis desolate,

130

Ne're that a Merchaunt, gone is many' a yere,
 Me taught a tale, the which ye shallin here.

In Surrey whilom dwelt a Cumpany
 Of champmen rich, and thereto sad and true,
 That wide were sentin their spicery,
 Clothis of gold, and Sattin rich of hew,
 Their chafare was so thrifty, and so new,
 That every wight hath dainty to chafare 140
 With them, and eke to sellin them their ware.

Now fell it that the Maistirs of that sort
 Han shapin them to Rome for to wend,
 Were it for chapmanhode, or for disport,
 None othir Messager woude they thithir send,
 But came themselfe to Rome, this is the end;
 And in soche place, as thought them advantage
 For their intent, there toke their herbigage.

Sojournid han these Marchauntes in that towne
 A certeine time, as fell to their plesauce, 150
 But so befell, that th' excellent renoune
 Of the Emperour's doughtir, Dame Cunstance,
 Reportid was, with every circumstance,
 Unto these Surrein Marchaunts, in soche wise,
 Fro day to day, as I shall you devise.

This was the comune voice of every Man,
 Our Emperour of Rome, Now God him se,
 A doughtir hath, that sin the world began,
 To rekin her godenefs, and her beaute,
 Was nevir soche anothir, as is she: 160
 I pray to God in honour her susteine,
 And wolde she were of all Europe the quene.

In her is high bewte withoutin pride,
 And youth withoutin grenehode or folie,
 To all her werkis vertue is hir gyde,

Humblets

Humbleſs in her hath ſlaine all tirannie,
She is a mirroure of all curteſy.
Her hert is very chambre' of holineſſe,
Her hond miniſter of fredome, and almes.

And all this voyce was ſothe, as God is true; 170
But now to purpoſe let us turn again;
Theſe Marchauntes had don fraught their ſhippis newe,
And whan they han this bliſfull Maidin ſene,
Home to Surrey ben they ywent agen,
And don their nedis, as they han done yore,
And livin wele, I can ſay you no more.

Now ſell it, that theſe Marchauntes ſtode in grace
Of him that was the Sowdan of Surrie:
For whan that they came from any ſtraunge place
He woldin of his benigne curtify 180
Make them gode chere, and beſſy eſpie
Tidinges of ſondry Londis for to lere,
The wondiris, that they might ſene or here.

Amongis other thingis ſpecially
Theſe Marchauntes have him told of Dame Cunſtance
So grete nobleſs, in erniſt ſeriously
That this Sowdan hath caught ſo grete pleaſaunce
To han her figure in his remembraunce,
And all his luſt, and all his beſy cure,
Was for to love her while his lif may dure.

Peraventure in that ilk large boke,
Which clepid is the Heven, ywrittin was
With ſterris, whan that he his birthè toke,
That he for love ſholde han his dethe alas!
For in the ſterres clerer than is the glas
Is writtin, God wor, whoſo couth it rede,
The dethe of every man withoutin drede.

In ſterris many' a Winter there before
Was write the deth of Hector, Achilles,
Of Pompey, Julius, or they were bore; 200
The ſtrife of Thebis, and of Hercules,
Of Sampſon, Turnus, and of Socrates,
The dethe; but that Men's wittis ben ſo dull,
That no wight can well rede it at the full.

This Sowdan for his privy Counſell ſent
And ſhortly of this matter for to pace,
He hath to them declarid his intent,
And ſeid certein but if he might have grace
To have Cunſtance, within a litil ſpace,
He n'as botdede; and chargid them to hie 210
To ſhapin for his lif ſome remedy.

And divers men divers thingis ſeidin,
And Argumentis caſtin up and doun,
Many' a ſubtill reſon forth they leydin,
They ſpeke of Magick, and Abusioun,
But finally, as in Concluſioun,
They cannot ſe in that none advantage,
Ne in none othir way, ſaaf Mariage.

Than ſawe thei therin ſoche difficulte,
By way of reſon for to ſpeke all plaine, 220
Becaufe that there was ſoche diverſity,
Betwenin both their lawis, that they ſain,
They trow that no Chriſtin prince woldè ſain
Weddin his child undir our lawe ſo ſwete,
That us was taught by Mahound our Prophete.

And he answerid, rathir than I leſe
Cunſtance, I woll be Chriſtinid doutleſs.
I mot ben hers, I may none othir cheſe,
I pray you hold your Arguments in pece,
Savith my lif, and be not rechileſſe 230

To gettin her, that hath my lif in cure,
For in this wo I may not long endure.

What nedith gretter dilatatioun?
I ſay by trefy and Embaſſadry,
And by the Pop's Mediatoun,
And all the Chirch, and all the Chivalry,
That in deſtruction of Maumetrie,
And in increſe of Chriſt's lawe dere,
They ben accordid, as ye ſhullin here.

How that the Sowdan, and his Baronage, 240
And all his Liegis ſhuld y Chriſt'nid be,
And he ſhall han Cunſtance in Mariage,
And certein gold, I n'ot what quantite,
And hereto find ſufficient ſurete;
The ſame accord was ſworn on either ſide;
Now, faire Cunſtance, Almighty God The gyde.

Now woldin ſome Men waitin, as I gheſſe,
That I ſhuld tellin all the purveiaunce,
That the Emperour of his nobilneſſe
Hath ſhapin for his doughtir Dame Cunſtance, 250
Wele may men know that ſo gret ordinaunce
May no man tellin in a little Claufe,
As was arrayid for ſo high a cauſe.

Biſhops ben ſhapin with her for to wend,
Lordis and Ladies, and Knightes of renoun,
And othir folk inow, this is the end,
And notifyd is throughout the toun,
That every wight with gret devotioun
Shuld prayin Criſt, that he this Mariage
Receive in gree, and ſpedin this voiage. 260

The day is comin of her departing,
I ſay the wofull fatal day is come,
That there may be no lengir tarying,
But forward they them dreſſin all and ſome;
Cunſtance, that is with ſorow all o'recome,
Full pale ariſt, and dreſſid her to wend,
For well ſhe ſeeth there is none othir end.

Alas! what wondir is it, though ſhe wept?
That ſhall be ſent to a ſtraunge Natioun,
Fro frendis, that ſo tendirly her kept, 270
And be boundin undir Subjeſtioun
Of one ſhe knoweth not his Condiſtioun.
Huſbondis ben all gode, and han ben yore,
That knowin wivis, I dare ſay no more.

Faſhir, ſhe ſaid, thy wretchid child Cunſtance,
Thy yonge doughtir, ſoft'rid up ſo ſoft,
And ye, my Moðir, my Soverayne pleaſaunce,
Ovir all thingis (out take Criſt on loſte)
Cunſtance your child her recommendith oft
Unto your grace, for I ſhall to Surrey, 280
Ne ſhall I nevir more ſee you with eye.

Alas! unto the barbary nation
I muſt anon, ſithin it is your will;
But Chriſt, that ſtarf for our redemption,
So geve me grace his heſtis to fulfill;
I wretchid woman no force though I ſpill,
Wymen are born to thraldom and pennaunce,
And to ben undir Mann's governaunce.

I trow at Troy, whan Pyrrhus brake the wall,
Of Ilion, or brent was Thebes Cite, 290
Nor Rome, for the grete harme of Hannibal,
That Romanes hath vanquiſhid timis thre,
N'as herde ſoche tender wepyng for pite,
As in the chambir was for her parting,
But forth ſhe mote, whether ſhe wepe or ſing.
O fers

O fers first moving cruill firmament
 With thy diurnal swegh that croudift aye,
 And hirlist all fro th' Est to th' Occident,
 That nat'rally wold hold anothir way,
 Thy crowding sett the heven in soche aray 300
 At the beginning of this fers voiage,
 That cruill Mars hath slaine this Mariage.

Infortunate ascendent tortuous,
 In which the Lord-is helpless fall'n, alas!
 Out of his Angle' into the derkist hous
 Of Mars, O occifer as in this caas,
 O feble Monc, unhappy ben thy paas,
 Thou knittist there thou n'art not receivid,
 There thou were well fro thence art thou weyvid.

Imprudent Empèrour of Rome alas! 310
 Was there no Philosophir in thy toun?
 Is no tyme bett than othir in soche caas?
 Of Voiage is there none Electioun?
 Namely to folk of high Conditoun
 Nat whan a rote is of a birth yknow?
 Alas! we ben too læaud, or too flow.

To Ship is brought this wofull fairè Maid
 Solempnly, with evèry Circumstaunce,
 Now Jesus Christ be with you al, she saide,
 Theren'is no more, but farewell faire Cunstance; 320
 She painith her to make gode Countenance;
 And forth I lete her saile in this manere,
 And toun I woll ageyn to my matere.

Explicit pars prima, sequitur pars secunda.

The Mo'ir of the Sowdan wel of vice
 Espyid hath her Sonn'is plaine entent,
 How he woll levin his old Sacrifice.
 And right anon she for her counsaile sent,
 And they ben comin to know what she ment,
 And whan assemblid was this folk in fere,
 She sett her doun, and seide as ye shull here, 330

Lordis, q'ð she, ye knowin everichone,
 How that my Sone on point is for to lete
 The holy lawis of our Alkoran,
 Gevin by God's Messinger Machomete,
 But one avowe to the Grete God I hete,
 Lif shall rathir out of my body stert,
 Er Machomet'is law out of my hert.

What shuld us tidin of this newè lawe
 But thraldome to our bodys and penaunce,
 And aftirward in hellè to be draw, 340
 For we renyid Mahound our Creaunce?
 But, Lordis, woll ye make me assuraunce,
 As I shall say, assenting to my lore,
 And I shall make us safe for evirmore.

They sworin and assentin every man,
 To live with her and dye, and by her stond:
 And everich in the best wise that he can
 To strengthin her shall all his frendis fond.
 And she hath this Emprise ytake in hond,
 Which ye shull here, that I shall you devise, 350
 And to them all she spakin in this wise.

We shull us first faine Christendom to take,
 Cold watir shall not greve us but a lite,
 And I shall soche a revill and fest make,
 That as I trow I shall the Sowdan quite:
 For though his wife be christ'nid nere so white

She shall have nede to wash away the rede,
 Though she a font of watir with her lede.

O Soudonnefs, rote of inquite,
 Virago, thou Semiram the second! 360
 O Serpent undir femininite,
 Like to the Serpent depe in helle ybound!
 O fainid woman, all that may confound
 Vertue and Innocence through thy Malice:
 Is bred in The a nest of every vice;

O Sathan envious, sithin thilk day
 That thou wert chasid from our heritage,
 Well knowist thou to wymen the old way:
 Thou madist Eve to bring us in servage,
 Thou wold for don this Christin Mariage, 370
 This instrument, so welaway the while,
 Makest thou of wymen, whan thou wolt begyle.

This Soudonnefs, whom I thus blame and warie,
 Lete privily her Counsaile gon their way;
 What shuld I lenger in this tale tarye?
 She ridith to the Sowdan on a day,
 And said him, that she wuld reny her lay,
 And Cristindome of prestis hondis fong,
 Repenting her she hethin was so long.

Beseching him to don her that honour, 380
 That she might have the Christin folk to fest,
 To plesin them I woll don my labour,
 The Sowdan said, I woll don all your hest,
 And kneling thankid her of that request.
 So glad he was, he n'ist not what to say,
 She kist her Sone, and home she goth her way.

Arrivid ben these Christin folk to lond,
 In Surrey, with a gret and solempne rout,
 And hastily this Sowdan sent his fond,
 First to his Mo'ir, than to th' reign about, 390
 And seide, his wife was comin out of dout,
 And praydin her to ryde agen the quene,
 The honour of his reign for to sustene.

Gret was the prefs, and rich was the aray,
 Of Surreians, and Romans met yfere,
 The Mo'ir of the Sowdan, rich and gay,
 Recevith her with all so glad a chere, 400
 As any Mo'ir mought her doughtir dere:
 And unto the next Cite there beside
 A softè paas solempnly they ryde.

Nought trow I the triumph of Julius,
 Of which that Lucan makith such a bofte,
 Ne was royaller, ne more curious,
 Than was th' assembling of this blisful hoste;
 But o this Scorpion, this wikkid ghost
 The Sowdonnefs, for all her flattering,
 Cast undir this full mortally to sting.

The Sowdan came himself sone aftir this,
 So rially, that wondir is to telle,
 He welcomith her with all joy and blifs, 410
 And thus in joy and mirth I lete them dwelle:
 The fruit of this mattere is for to telle.
 Whan time comin men thought it for the best,
 That revil stint, and men gon to their rest.

The time is come that this old Sowdannefs
 Ordainid hath the feste of which I told,
 And to the feste the Christin folk them drefs,
 And that in generall, both yong and old:
 And men may feste, and rialty behold, 420
 And deynties mo than I can you devise,
 But all to dere they bought it er they rise.

O Sowdan

O Sowdan, wo that thou art Succesfour
To worldly blis spreynid with bitternefs,
The end of joy is our worldly labour,
Wo occupith the fine of our gladnefs,
Harkin this Counsaile for thy sikirnefs:
Upon thy glad day have thou still in mind
Th' unware wo or harme that comteh behind.

For shortly to tellin at o word,
The Sowdan and the Christin everichone 430
Ben all to hew, and stikid at the bord,
But it were only Dame Cunstance alone,
This old Sowdonnefs, this accurfid Crone,
Hath with her frendis done this curfid dede,
For she her self woude all the Countre lede.

There ne was Surrein none that was converted,
That of the Counsaile of the Soudon wot,
That ne was all to hewe er he asterted,
And Cunstance han they take anon fore hot,
And in a Ship all steerilefs, God wot, 440
They han her fett, and bid her lerne to faile
Out of Surrey ayenward to Itaile.

A certeine trefour that she thithir ladd,
And sothe to faine of vitaille gret plentie
They han her geve, and clothis eke she had;
And forth she sailith in the saltè See.
O my Cunstance, full of benignity,
O Emperour's yongè doughtir so dere,
He that is Lord of fortune be thy stere.

She blessith her, and with full pitous voice 450
Unto the Crofs of Christ thus seide she,
O dere, o welefull Auter, holy croife,
Red of the lamb's blode, full of pite,
That wesh the world fro th' old iniquite,
Me fro the fend, and fro his clawis kepe,
That day that I shall drenchin in the depe.

Victorious tre, protection of true,
That only worthy werin for to bere
The King of hevin with his woundis newe,
The white lamb, that hurt was with a spere: 460
Flemere of fendis out of him and here,
On which thy lim is faithfully extenden,
Me kepe, and geve me might my life to menden.

Yeris and dayis fletè this Creture,
Throughout the See of Grece, unto the Straite
Of Marock, as it was her aventure;
On many' a fory mele now may she baite,
Aftir her deth full oftè may she waite,
Er that the wildè wavis wold her drive
Unto the place there she sholdè arrive. 470

Men mightin askin why she was not flaine
Eke at the feste, who might her body save?
And I answe're to that demaund againe,
Who favid Daniel in th' horrible Cave?
There every wight, were he maistir or knave,
Was with the lions fretted or he astert:
No wight, but God, that he bare in his hert.

God list to shew his wonderful miracle
In her, for she shold se his mighty werkis,
Christ which that is to every harm triacle, 480
By certeine menis oft (as knowin Clerkis)
Doth thing for certeine end that full derk is
To mann's witt, that for our ignorance
Ne cannot know his prudent purveiance.

Now sith she was not at the fest yslaw,
Who kepith her fro drenching in the See?

Who keptè Jonas in the fish's mawe
Till he was spoutid out at Ninive?
Well may men know it was no wight but he
That kept the peple Ebrak from drenching 490
With dry fete thorough the red See passig.

Who hath the four spirites of the tempest,
That powir han to annoy land and See,
Both North and South, and also West and Est;
Annoyith nothir See, ne land, ne tre:
Sothly the commander of that was he;
That fro the tempest ay this woman kept,
As well whan she awoke, as when she slept.

Where mightin this woman mete and drink have?
Thre yere and more how lastith her vitaille? 500
Who fed th' Egyptian Mary in the Cave,
Or in the desert (none but Christ Sans faile)
Five thousand folk, it was as grete marvaile
With loavis five, and fishis too to fede,
God sent his foisoun at her grettist nede.

She drivith forth unto our Ocean
Throughout the wildè see, till at the last
Undir an hold, that namin I ne can,
Fer in Northumberland, the wave her cast,
And in the sand her ship stikid so fast, 510
That thence n'olde it not for all the tide,
The will of Crist was, she shold there abide.

The Constable o'th' castle doune is fare
To sene this wreke, and all the ship he fought;
And found this wery woman full of care,
He found also the trefour she had brought,
And in her language mercy she besought
The life out of her body for to twynn,
Her to delivir of wo she was in.

A mannir Latin corrupt was her speche, 520
But algates thereby was she undirstond,
The Constable him list no lengir seche,
This wofull woman broughtin he to lond;
She knelith down, and thankith Godd's sond;
But what she was she wolde no man sey,
For foule ne faire, although she sholdè dey.

She seid she was so masid in the see,
That she forgate her mindè by her trouth;
The Constable of her hath soche pite,
And eke his wife, that they wepin for routh: 530
She was so diligent withoutin slouth
To serve and plese everichone in that place,
That all her love, that lokin on her face.

The Constable, and Hermigild his wife
Were Paynims, and that Countre every where,
But Hermigild lovid her as her life,
And Cunstance hath so long sojourned there,
In Orisons, with many bittir tere,
Till Jesu hath convertid through his grace
Dame Hermigild, Constables of that p.ace. 540

In all that lond no Christin durst arout,
All Christin folk ben flemed fro that Countre,
Through Painims that conquerid all about
The Plagis of the north by lond and See;
To Walis fled the Christianite
Of olde Britons dwelling in this Ile,
There was their refuge for the menè while.

But yet n'as Christin Britons so exiled,
But there was some still in their privite
Honourid Crist, aad hethin folk begiled; 550
And nie the Castle soche there dwellid thre,

That

That one of them was blind, and might not se,
But it were with thilk eyin of his mind,
With which men sein aftir they ben blind.

Bright was the Sunne, as in the Sommer's day,
For which the Constable, his wife also,
And Cunstance han ytakin the right way
Toward the see, a furlong wey or two,
To playin, and to romin to and fro,
And in their walk this blindè man they met, 560
Crokid and old, with eyin fast yshet.

In the name of Christ, cryed this blind Bretonn,
Dame Hermigild geve me my sight again,
This lady wax afraid of the sounne,
Lest that her husbond, shortly for to fain,
Wold her for Jesus Christ's lore have flaine.
Till Cunstance made her bold, and bid her werch
The will of Crist, as doughtir of his Cherche.

The Constable was abashed of that sight,
And seide, what amountith all this fare? 570
Cunstance answer'd, Sir, it is Crist's might,
That helpith folk out of the fend's snare:
And so ferforth she gan our law declare,
That she the Constable, er it was eve,
Convertid hath, and on Crist made him leve.

This Constable was nought lord of this place
Of which I speke, there as he Cunstance fond,
But kept it strongly many' a winter space,
Undir Alla King of Northumberland,
That was full wise, and worthy of his hond, 580
Again the Scottis, as men may well here;
But tourn I woll again to my mattere.

Sathan, that evre' us waitith to begile
Saw of Cunstance all her perfectiounne,
And cast anon how he might quite her wele,
And made a yong Knight, that dwelt in the tounne,
Love her so hote of foule affectiounne,
That verily him thought that he shold spill,
But he of her might onis have his will.

He woith her, but it availith nought, 590
She wold do no sin by no mannir wey,
And for despite he compassed in his thought
To makin her a shameful dethe to dey,
He waitith whan the Constable' is away.
And privily upon a night he crept
To Hermigild's chambir while she slept.

Werie for-wakid in their Orisons
Slepith Cunstance and Hermigild also,
This Knight through Sathanas temptaciouns
All softly is unto the bedd ygo, 600
And cut the throte of Hermigild atwo;
And laid the bloody knife by Dame Cunstance,
And went his wey, there God geve him mischance.

Sone aftir cometh this Constable again,
And eke Alla, that King was of that Lond,
And saw his wife dispitously yflaine,
For which he wept, and full oft wrang his hond,
And in the bedd the bloody knife he fond,
By Dame Cunstance, alas! what might she sey?
For very wo her wit was all away. 610

To King Alla was told all this mischance,
And eke the time, the where, and in what wise,
That in a Ship was fondin this Cunstance,
As heretofore ye han me herd devise;
The King's hert for pite gan agrise,

Whan he beheld so benign a Creture,
Fallen in disese, and in misaventure.

For as the lamb towards his deth is brought,
So stant this innocent before the King,
This false Knight that hath this trefoun ywrought 620
Berith her in hond, she hath don this thing,
But nathelès there was a gret murnyng
Emong the folk, that said they cannot ghes
That she had don so grete a wikidnes.

For they han sene her evir so vertuous,
And loving Hermigild right as her life,
Of this bare witness everich in the house,
Save he that Hermigild slew with his knife;
This gentill King hath caught a grete motife
Of this witness, and thought he wold enquire 630
Depir in this cause, the trowth for to lere.

Alas! Cunstance, thou hast no champion,
Ne fightin canst thou not, so welaway!
But he that starft for our redemption,
And bond Sathan that lyith there he lay,
So be thy stronge champion this day.
For but if Crist Miracle' upon The kithe,
Withoutin gilt thou shalt be flaine aswithe.

She set her doun on knees, and thus she said, 640
"Immortal God, that savidist Susanne
"Fro false blame, and thou mercifull maide,
"Mary I menè, doughtir to Seint Anne,
"Biforne whose child Angelis sing Ofanne,
"If I be gilty of this felonie,
"My succour be, or ellis shall I die.

Have ye not sene some time a pale face
Emong the prees, of them that hath ben lad
Toward his deth, where as him gat no grace,
Right soche a colour in his face he had,
The men might know his face that was bestad 650
Emongis all the facis in the rout,
So stont Cunstance, and lokith her about.

O Quenis, living in prosperite,
Dutcheßes, and ye ladys everichone,
Havith some ruthe on her adversite,
An Emperour's doughtir here stont alone
She hath no wight, to whome to make her mone,
O blode roiall, that stondith in this drede,
Fer ben thy frendis at thy gretift nede.

This Alla King hath soche Compassioun. 660
(As gentil hert is ay full of pite)
That from his eyin ran the watir doune:
Now hastily do fett a boke, qð he,
And if this Knight woll swerin how that she
This woman slough, yet woll we us avise,
Whom that we woll, that shall ben our Justice.

A Briton boke writt with Evangelis
Was fett, and on this boke he sware anon,
She giltif was; and in the mene whilis
A hond him smote upon the nekk's bone, 670
That doun he fell at onis as a stone;
And both his eyin braß upon his face,
In sight of every body in that place.

A voice was herd in gen'rall audience,
That seide, thou hast slaunderid giltless
The daughtre' of holy Cherch in high presence,
Thus hast thou don and yet I hold my pece.
Of this Marvaile agast was all the prese,
As masid folk they stod in everichone
For drede of wreck, save Dame Cunstance alone.
Grete

Grete was the drede, and eke the repentaunce
Of ~~them~~ that haddin wrong suspectioun
Upon this fely innocent Cunstance,
And for this marvaile in Conclufioun,
And by Cunstance's Mediatioun,
The King, and many othir in that place,
Conuertid was, thankid be Godd's grace.

This fals Knight was yllaine for his untruth,
By the judgement of King Alla' hastily,
And yet Cunstance had of his deth grete ruthe; 690
And aftir this, Jesus of his mercy
Made King Alla weddin full solempnly
This holy maide, that is so bright and shene,
And thus hath Christ madin Cunstance a Quene.

But who was wofull, if I shall not lie,
Of this wedding, but Donoyeld? no mo,
The King's Moðir, full of tirannie,
Her thought her curfid hert would braſt atwo,
She wold not that her ſonne had doin ſo:
Her thought it a deſpight that he ſhould take 700
So ſtraunge a Creture for to be his Make.

Me liſt not of the chaff ne of the ſtre
Makin ſo long a tale as of the Corn,
What ſhuld I tellin of the rialte
Of that wedding, or which courſe goth befor,
Who blowith in a trompe, or in an horn.
The fruit of every tale is for to ſay
They etin, drinkin, daunce, ſingin, and play.

They gon to bedd as it was ſkill and right,
For though that wivis ben full holy things, 710
Yet they muſt take in paciencce anight
Soche neceſſaries as yben pleſings
To folk that han yweddid them with rings,
And lay a lite their holineſs aſide
As for the time, it may no bett betide.

On her he gat a knave child anon,
To a Biſhop, and his Conſtable eke
He toke his wife to kepe, whan he is gon
To Scotland ward, his fomen for to ſeke.
Now Cunſtance, that is ſo humbil and meke, 720
So long is gon with thik child till that ſtill
She halt her chambre' abiding Criſt's will.

The time is come, and a Knave child ſhe bare,
Mauritius at font ſtone they him call,
This Conſtable doth forth a Meſſinger,
And wrote unto his king that clepid Alle,
How that this bliſſfull tidings is befall,
And othir tidings nedefull for to ſaie,
He takes the lettre' and forth he goth his waie.

This Meſſinger to don his advantage, 730
Unto the King's Moðir ridith ſwithe,
And ſalvith her full faire in his language,
Madam, qð he, ye may be glad and blithe,
And thankin God an hundrid thouſand ſithe,
My Lady Quene hath Knave child without dout
To joy and bliſs of all this reign about.

Lo here the letters ſelid of this thing,
That I mote bere in all the haſte I may;
Yeve ye well ought unto your ſonne the King,
I am your ſervant both by night and day, 740
Donegild answerde as at this time nay,
But here I woll all night thou take thy reſt,
To morow woll I ſay The what I leſt.

This Meſſinger drank ſadly ale and wine,
And ſtolin were his letters privily

Out of his box, while he ſlept as a ſwine;
And counterfittid was full ſubtilly
Anothir letter wrote full ſinfully
Unto the King direct of this mattere
Fro his Conſtable, as ye ſhullin here. 750

The letter ſpake the Quene deliv'rid was
Of ſo horrible a findiſh Creture,
That in the Caſtle none ſo hardy was
That any while durſtin therein endure:
The Moðir was an elf by aventure
Y come by charmis or by forcerie,
And every wight hatith her cumpany.

Wo was the King whan he the letter ſene,
But to no wight he told his ſorow ſore,
But with his ownè hand he wrote agene 760
Welcome the ſond of Criſt for evirmore
To me, that am new lernid in his lore:
Lord, welcome be thy luſt, and thy pleaſaunce,
My luſt I put all in thine ordinaunce,

Kepith this child, all be it foule or faire,
And eke my wife unto my home coming;
Chriſt, whan him liſt may ſendin me an heir
More greable than this to my liking;
This letter he ſeled privily weping,
Which to the Meſſinger was takin ſone, 770
And forth he goth, there is no more to done.

O Meſſinger fulfilled of dronkinneſs,
Strong is thy breth, thy limmis faltrin aye,
And thou ſtill bewrayiſt all ſecretneſs,
Thy mind is lorne, thou jangliſt as a jaye,
Thy face is tournid in a new aray,
There dronkinneſs reignith in any rout,
There n'is no counſaile hid withoutin dout.

O Donegild, I have none Engliſh digne
Unto thy malice, and thy tyrannie, 780
And therefore to the fend I The reſigne,
Let him enditin of thy traitery,
Fie! Manniſh fie! O nay by God I lie,
Fie fendith Spirit! for I dare wel tell
Though thou here walk, thy ſpirit is in hell.

This Meſſinger came from the King againe
And at the King's Moðir's houſe he light,
And ſhe was of this Meſſinger full faine,
And pleſid him in all that ere ſhe might, 790
He dronk, and well his girdle undir pight,
He ſlepith, and he ſnortith in his gile,
All night, untill the ſonne gan to ariſe.

Eft were his letters ſtolin everichone,
And counterfittid letters in this wiſe,
The King commands his Conſtable anon
On pain of hanging on a high Jewiſe,
That he ne ſhouldè ſuffrin in no wiſe
Cunſtance within his relme for to abide
Thre dayis, and a quarter of a tide.

But in the ſame ſhip as that he her ſond, 800
Her and her yongè ſonne, and all her gere
He ſhoulde croudin, and puttin fro the londe,
And charge her that ſhe nevir eft come there,
O my Cunſtance, well may thy goſt have fere
And ſleping in thy dreame ben in pennaunce
Whan Donegild caſt all this ordinaunce.

This Meſſinger, on morrow whan he woke,
Unto the Caſtle holdith the next way,
And to the Conſtable the letter toke,

And

And whan that he this pitous letter feie, 810
Full oft he feide alas and welaweie!
Lord Crist, qð he, how may this world endure?
So full of finn is many a Creture.

O mighty God, if that it be thy will,
Sin thou art rightful judge, how may it be
That thou wilt suffer innocence to spill,
And wikid folk reign in prosperite?
O Gode Cunstance, alas! so wo is me,
That I mot ben thy tormentour, or deie,
On þam'is deth, there n'is none othir weie. 820

Wepin both yong and old in all that place,
Whan that the king this curfid letter sent,
And Dame Cunstance with a dedly pale face
The fourthe day toward her ship she went,
Nathéles she takith in gode entent
The will of Crist, and kneling on the strond
She seide, Lord, aye welcome be thy sond.

He that me kepid from that false blame
While I was on the lond, emongis you,
He can me kepe fro harme and eke fro shame, 830
In the salt See, although I see not how:
As strong as evir he was he is now.
In him I trust, and in his Moðir dere,
That is to me my faile and eke my stere.

Her litil child lay weping in her arme,
And kneling pitouly to him she saide,
Pece litil Sonne, I woll do The no harme,
With that the kercheffe off her hede she braide,
And ore his litil eyin she it laide,
And in her arme she lullith it full fast, 840
And unto heaven her eyin up she cast.

Moðir, qð she, and Maidin bright Mary,
Sorth is that thorough woman's eggement
Mankind was lorn, and damnid aye to die,
For which thy child was on thy crosse yrent,
Thy blisfull eyin saw all his turment,
Then is there no comparifon betwene
Thy wo, and any wo man may sustene.

Thou saw thy chyld yslein before thyn eyn,
And yet livith my litil child parfay; 850
Now lady bright, to whom all wofull cryen,
Thou glory of womanhode, thou faire May,
Thou havin of refuge, bright Sterre of day,
Rewe on my child, that of thy gentilnes
Ruist on every rufull in distrefs.

O littil child alas! what is thy gilt
That nevir wroughtist finn as yet parde?
Why woll thyn harde faðir have The spilt?
O mercy dere Constable, qð she, 860
As let my litil child dwell here with The,
And if thou dost not savin him fro blame,
So kifs him onis in his faðir's name.

Therewith she lokith bakward to the lond,
And saide, farewell my husbond ruthles;
And up she rist, and walkith down the strond,
Toward the ship, her follows all the prefs,
And ay she prays her child to hold his pece,
And takith leve, and with holy entent
She bleffith her, and to the ship she went.

Vitailid was the ship, it is no drede, 870
Habundantly for her a full long space,
And othir necessities that shold nede,
She had ynow, herried be Godd'is grace;
Wind and wethir Almighty God purchase,

And bring her home, I can no bettir say,
But in the See she drivith forth her way.

Alla the King came home sone aftir this Unto this Castle of which I you told,
And askith where his wife, and his child is; 880
The Constable gan at his hert wax cold,
And plainly all the manner him ytold,
Ye han herd, I can tell it no better,
And shewed the King his fele, and his letter:

And seide, Lord, as ye commaundid me
On peine of deth, so have I done certene:
This Messinger turmentid was till he Must beknowin, and tellin plat and plaine
Fro night to night in what place he had laine.
And thus by witty subtil enquerung
Imagin'd was by whome this harme gan spring.

The hond was knowin that the letter wrot,
And all the venim of this curfid dede,
But in what wise certainly I n'ote,
Th' effect is this, that Alla out of drede
His Moðir slow, that may men plainly rede,
For that she traytour was t' her Allegeaunce,
Thus endith old Donegild with mischance.

The sorrow that this Alla night and day
Makith for his child, and his wife also,
There is no tonguè that it tellin may; 900
But now woll I unto Dame Cunstance go,
That steth in the See in paine and wo,
Five yere and more, as likid Crist'is sond
Er that her ship approchid unto lond;

Undir an Hethin Castle at the last,
(Of which the name in my text I not find)
Cunstance and eke her child the See upcast,
Almighty God, that savith all mankind,
Have on Cunstance, and on her child some mind,
That fallin are in hethin hond eftfone, 910
In point to spill, as I shall tell you sone.

Doun from the Castill comith many' a wight
To gaurin on this Ship, and on Cunstance,
But shortly fro the Castill on a night
The Lord'is Steward, God geve him mischance,
A thefe that had renyid our Creance,
Came to the Ship alone, and seide he shold
Her Lemman be, whethir she wold or n'old.

Tho was the wretchid woman wo bygon,
Her child and she cryid full pitouly, 920
But blisfull Mary halpe her anon,
And with her strogling well and mightily
The thefe fell ovir the bord sodeinly,
And in the See he drenchid for vengeance,
And thus hath Crist unwemmid kept Cunstance.

O foule lust of Luxury, lo thine end,
Not only that thou faintist Mann'is mind,
But verily thou wilt his body shend,
The end of thy werk, or thy lustis blind 930
Is complaining, how many men may find
That not for werk sometime, but for th'entent
To donn this finn, ben either slaine or shent?

How may this wekè woman have the strenght,
Her to defend against this renagate?
O Goliath, unmesurable' of length,
How mightin David make The so amate?
So yong, and of armure so desolate
How durst he lokin on thy dredful face?
Well may man sene it is but Godd'is grace.

Who

Who gave Judith corage and hardinefs
To slaine him Holofernes in his tent,
And to deliver out of wretchidnefs
The peple' of God? I fay for this intent
That right as God spirit and vigour sent
To them, and favid them out of mischaunce,
So sent he might and vigour to Cunfstance.

Forth goth her fhip thorough the narrow mouth
Of Jubalter and Cept, ydryving ay
Sometimis North, and sometime Weft and South,
And sometime Eft, full many werie day, 950
Till Chrift's Mothir, bleffid be fhe ay,
Hath fhapin thorough her endlefs godenefs
To make an end of all her hevinefs.

Explicit fecunda pars, & fequitur pars tertia.

Now let us ftint of Cunfstance but a throw,
And fpeke we of the Roman Empèrour,
That out of Surrey hath by letters know,
His flaughtered Chriftin folk, and difhonour
Done to his daughter by a falfe traytour,
I mene the curfid wikid Sowdonnefs,
That at the feftle let flene both more and lefs. 960

For which this Empèrour hath sent anon
His Senatour, with royall ordinaunce,
And othir Lordis, God wot, many one,
On Syrreians to takin high vengeaunce,
They brennin, flen, and bring them to mischaunce,
Full many' a day, but shortly this is th' end,
Homeward to Rome they fhapin them to wend.

This Senatour returns with victory,
To Romeward, failing full rially,
And met the fhip driving, as faith ftoory,
In which Cunfstance fettin full pitoufly, 970
Nothing ne knew he what fhe was, ne why
She was in foche aray, ne fhe nill fey
Of her eftate, although fhe fhouldè dey.

He bringith her to Rome, and to his wife
He gave her, and her yongè Sonn alfo,
And with the Senatour fhe lad her life.
Thus can our Lady bringin out of wo
Wofull Cunfstance, and many othir mo.
And longè time dwellid fhe in that place, 980
In holy werkis evir, as was her grace.

The Senatour's wife her Aunt ywas,
But for all that fhe knew her ne'er the more;
I woll no lengir tary in this caas,
But to King Alla, which I fpake of yore,
That for his wife wepith, and flikith fore,
I woll return, and let I woll Cunfstance
Undir the Senatour's governaunce.

King Alla, which that had his Mo'ðir flaine,
Upon a day fell in foche repentaunce, 990
That if I shortly tellin fhall and plaine,
To Rome he comith to receive pennaunce,
And put him in the Pop's Ordinaunce,
In hie and low, and Jefu Crift befought
Forgeve his wikid werkis that he wrought.

The fame anon thorough Rome tounè is born,
How Alla King fhall come in pilgrimage,
By Herbingers that wentin him beforin,
For which the Senatour, as was ufage, 1000
Rode him againe, and folk of his linage,
As well to shew his hie magnificence,
As to doin any King reverence.

940 Grete cherè doth this nobil Senatour
To King Alla, and he to him alfo,
Everich of them doth othir honour,
And fo befell, that in a day or two
This Senatour is to King Alla go,
To feftle, and shortly if I fhall not lie,
Cunfstance's Sonn went in his company.

Some fayin at the request of Cunfstance 1010
This Senatour had lad this child to feftle,
I may not tellin every circumftaunce
Be as be may, there was he at the left:
But fothe it is, right at his Mo'ðir's hefte
Biforn Alla, during the met's fpace,
The child ftode, loking in the King's face.

Alla King hath of the child gret wondir,
And to the Senatour he faide anon,
Whose is that faire child, that ftondith yondir?
I n'ot, q'ð he, by God, and by St. John: 1020
A Mo'ðir he hath, but ne fa'ðir non,
That I of wot; but shortly in a ftound
He told Alla how that the child was found.

But, God wot, q'ð the Senatour alfo,
So vertuous a liver in my life
Ne faugh I nevre' as fhe, ne herd of mo
Soch worldly woman, maidin ne of wife,
I dare well fay fhe had levir a knife
Thorough her brest, than ben a woman wik,
There is no man couth bring her to that prik.

Now was the child as like unto Cunfstance
As poffible is cature for to be,
King Alla hath the face in remembraunce
Of Dame Cunfstance, and thereon muftid he Yeve that the child's Mo'ðir was not fhe, 970
That is his wife, and privily he fight,
And fped him fro the table all he might.

Parfay him thought the fantom in his hede,
And oughtin demin of skilfull judgment
That in the saltè See his wife is dede; 1040
And aftirward he made this argument,
What wot I if that Crift hath hithir sent
My wife by See, as well as he her sent
To my Countre fro thence that fhe was went?

And aftirnone home with the Senatour
Goth Alla, for to fe this wondir chance,
This Senatour doth Alla grete honour,
And haftily he sent aftir Cunfstance;
But trustith wele her luftith not to dance.
Whan that the wifte wherefore was that foud,
Unneth upon her fete fhe mightè ftoud,

Whan Alla faw his wife, faire he her grete,
And weptè that it was ruth for to fe,
For at the first loke that he on her fete,
He knew well verily that it was fhe, 990
And for forow as dumb ftant as a tre:
So was her herte yfhet in her diftrefs,
Whan fhe rememberid his unkindnefs.

Twyis fhe fownid in his ownè fight
He wept, and him excufith pitoufly, 1060
Now God, q'ð he, and his hallowis bright,
So wifly on my Soule havin mercy,
That of your harme as giltilefs am I,
As is Maurice my Sonne, fo like your face,
Ellis the fend me fetch out of this place.

Long was the fobbing, and the bittir paine,

Q

Er

Er that their wofull hertis mightin cese,
 Grete was the pitè for to here them plaine,
 Thorough which plaintis gan their wo encrese.
 I pray you all my labour to relese, 1070
 I may not tell their wo untill to morow,
 I am so werie for to speke their sorow.

But finally, whan that the soth is wist
 That Alla giltilefs was of her wo,
 I trow an hundren timis ben they kist,
 And soche a blifs is there betwixt them two,
 That save the joy, that lastith evirmo,
 There is no ylike, that any cature
 Hath sene or shall while the world may endure.

Tho prayid she her husbond mekily 1080
 In the relese of her long pitous paine
 That he wold pray her faðir specially,
 That of his Majesty he wold encline
 To vouchafin some day with him to dine.
 She prayid him eke, he shold by no way
 Unto her faðir no word of her say.

Some woldè fey, how that the Child Maurice
 Doth this message untill the Empèrour;
 But as I gesse, Alla was not so nice
 To him, that was of so sov'rain honour, 1090
 As he that is of Christen folk the flour,
 To send a child, but it is bet to deme
 He went himself, and so it may wele seme.

The Empèrour hath grauntid gentillie
 To come to dinner, as he him besought;
 Redy he came, and lokid besilie
 Upon the child, and on his daughter thought.
 Alla goth to his inn, and as him ought Arrayid for this feste in every wise,
 As ferforth as his conning may suffice. 1100

The morow came, and Alla gan him dres,
 And eke his wife, the Emperour to meet.
 And forth they ride in joy, and in gladness,
 And when she saw her Faðir in the street,
 She light adown, and fallith him to feet;
 Faðir, qð she, your yongè child Cunstance
 Is now full clene out of your remembrance.

I am your daughter Cunstance tho, qð she,
 That whilom ye han sent unto Surrye,
 It am I, Faðir, that in the salt See
 Was put alone, and dampnid for to dye:
 Now, my gode Faðir, I you mercy crye,
 Send me no more unto non Hethinesse,
 But thankin my Lord here of his kindnesse,

Who can the pitous joy ytellin all
 Betwixt them thre? Sith they ben thus ymett:
 But of my Tale makin an end I shall;
 The day goth fast, I wol no lengir lett.
 To dinner than thes glad folk them ysett
 In joy and blifs at mete I lete them dwell, 1120
 A thousand fold well more than I can tell.

This child Maurice was sithin Empèrour
 Made by the Pope, and livid Christinly;
 To Christ's Church he diddin grete honour;
 But I lete all this Story passin by,
 Of Cunstance is my Tale specially.
 In oldè Roman gestis men may find
 Mauric's life; I bere it not in mind.

This King Alla, whan he his timè fey
 With his Cunstance, his holy wife so swete, 1130
 To Eng lond ben they comin the right wey:
 Where as thei live in joy and in quite,
 But littil while it lastith, I you herte,
 Joy of this world. For time woll not abide,
 Fro day to night, it changith as the tide.

Who evir lived in soche delite a day
 That him ne mevid either Conscience,
 Or ire, or talent, or some kyn affray,
 Envy, or Pride, or Passion, or offence?
 I ne say but for this end and sentence,
 That littil while in joy, or in plesaunce
 Lastith the blifs of Alla with Cunstaunce.

For Deth, that taketh of hie and low his rente,
 When passid was a yere even as I gesse,
 Out of this world this King Alla hath hente;
 For whome Cunstance hath full grete hevinesse
 Now let us prayin God his Soule to blesse.
 And Dame Cunstance, thus finally to fey,
 Toward the Town of Rome goith her wey.

To Rome is commin this holy cature, 1150
 And findith there her Faðir whole and sound;
 Now is she scapid all her aventure:
 And whan that she her Fathir hath yfound
 Down on her knees, she fallith to the ground,
 Weeping for tendirnesse in her hert blith,
 And herryeth God an hundred thousand sith.

In vertue, and in holy alm'isdede
 Thei livin, and nevir asunder wende,
 Till deth departith them, this life thei lede.
 Now farith well, my Tale is at an end.
 Now Jesu Christ, that of his might may send Joy aftir wo; governe us in his grace
 And kepe us allè, that ben in this place.

Thus endeth the Man of Lawe's TALE. And next follows the SQUIER's PROLOGUE.

The SQUIER'S PROLOGUE.

OUR Host upon his stirups stode anon,
And seide, gode men, herk'nith everichon,
This was a thrifty tale for the nones,
Sir Parish priest, qð he, for Godd'is bones,
Tell us a Tale, as was thy forward yore,

I se well that ye lernid men in lore
Can mochil gode, by Godd'is dignity.

The Parlon him answerd, benedicite!
What ails the man so sinfully to fwere?

Our Host answerde, o Jenkin, be ye there? 10
Now gode Men, qð our Host, herk'nith to me,
I smell a loller in the wind, qð he,
Abidith for Godd'is digne passioun,
For we shull have a predicationn,

This loller here woll prechin us somewhat.

Nay by my faðir's soule, that shall he nat,
Saidè the Squier, here shall he not preche,
He shall no gospel glosin here ne teche.
We levith all in the grete God, qð he,
He woldè sowin some difficulte, 20
Or springin some Cokkle in our clene corn,
And therefore Host, I warnè The befor:
My jolly body shall a tale now tell,
And I shall klinkin you so mery' a bell,
That I shull wakin all this Cumpany,
But it shall not ben of Philosophy,
Ne of Phisik, ne termis queint of law;
There is but litil Latyn in my maw.

The

The SQUIER'S TALE.

The King of Araby sendith to Cambuscan, King of Sarra, a Horse and a Sword of rare qualite, and to his Daughter Canace a Glas and a Ring; by the virtue whereof she understandeth the Language of all Fowles. Much of this Tale is either lost, or else never finished by Chaucer.

T Sarra in the lond of Tartary
A There dwelt a King that warrid on Ruffy,
 Through which there dyid many a doughty
 Man;

This nobil King was callid Cambuscan
 Which in his time was of so grete renoune,
 That there n'as no where, in no regioun,
 So excellent a Lord in alle thing:
 Him lakkid nought that longid to a King.
 As of the Sect, of which that he was born,
 He kept his law, to which that he was sworn;
 And thereto he was hardy, wise, and rich,
 And pitous, and just, alwey yliche;
 True of his word, benign, and honourable
 Of his Corage, as any Centre stable,
 Yong, fresh, and strong, of armis desirous,
 As any bachelor of all his house.

A fair person he was, and fortunate,
 And alwey kept so well royall estate,
 That there was no where soche another Man.

This noble King, this Tartre Cambuscan,
 Had two sonnys on Eltheta his wife,
 Of which the eldist hightin Algarisse:
 That othir was yclepid Camballo.

A daughter had this worthy King also,
 That yongist was, and highte Canace;
 But for to tellin you all her bewte
 It lith not in my tongue, ne my conning,
 I dare not undertake so high a thing,
 Mine English eke is insufficient,
 It must be a Rhetor full excellent,
 That couth his colours longing for that art,
 If he shold her describe in any part.
 I am none soche, I mote speke as I can.

And so befell, that whan this Cambuscan
 Hath twenty winter born his diademe,
 As he was wont fro yere to yere, I deme,
 He lete the feste of his Nativity
 Do cryn thorough Sarra his city,
 The last Idus of March, after the yere
 Phæbus the Sunne full jolly was and clere:
 For he was nigh his exaltation.

In Mart's face, and in his Mansion
 In Aries, the cholerick hot signe,
 Full lusty was the weðir and benigne,
 For which the foules agen the Sunne shene,
 What for the Seson, and the yonge grene,
 Full loudè songin their affections,
 Them semid to han gettin protections
 Agen the swerd of winter kene and cold.

This Cambuscan, of which I have you told,
 In royall vestiments sit on his deis,
 With Diademe, full high in his paleis,
 And held his feste so royall and so riche,
 That in this world ne was there none itliche:
 Of which if I shold tell all the array,
 Then wolde it occupy a Sommer's day:
 And eke it nedith not for to devise
 At every coursè the order of service.
 I woll not tellin now of their straunge sews,
 Ne of their Swans, ne of their heronsews,

Eke in that lond (as tellin Knightis old)
 There is some mete, that is full dainty hold, 90
 That in this lond men retche of it but small;
 There is no man that may reportin all.

I woll not tarry you, for it is prime,
 And for it is no frute, but los of time;
 To my first purpose woll I have recourse.

And so befell, that aftir the third course,
 While that the King sat thus in his Noblay,
 Herk'ning his Ministrelis their thingis play
 Beforn him at his bord deliciously;

In at the hallè dore full sodeinly 100
 40 There came a Knight upon a stede of brafs,
 And in his hond a brode mirroure of glas,
 Upon his thomb he had of gold a ring,
 And by his side a nakid swerd hanging:
 And up he ridith to the hiè bord,
 In all the hall ne was there spoke a word,
 For marveile of this Knight, him to behold
 Full besily they waitin yong, and old.

This straunge Knight, that come thus sodeinly,
 All armid, save his hede, full royally, 110
 50 Salued the King and Quene, and Lordis all,

By ordir, as they sittin in the hall,
 With so hie reverence and obeisaunce,
 As well in Spechè as in Countinaunce,
 That Sir Gawayn with his old Curtisy
 (Although he come agen out of Fairy)
 He coude him nought amending with no word.

And aftir this beforn the hiè bord
 He with a manly voice saide his message
 Aftir the forme usid in his language 120
 60 Withoutin vice of syllable or letter,

And for his tale sholdin seme the better,
 Accordant to his wordis was his chere;
 As techith art of speche them that it lere.
 All be it that I cannot sowne his stile,
 Ne can I not climbin so high a stile,
 Yet say I that as to comune intent,
 Thus moche amountith all that er he ment,
 If so be that I have it in my mind;

He saide; The King of Araby and Inde, 130
 70 My Liege Lord, on this so solempne day
 Salewith you as he best can or may.

And sendith you, in honour of your feste,
 By me, that am redy at al your heste,
 This Stede of brafs, that esily and well
 Can in the space of a day naturell;

That is to say, in four and twenty hours,
 Where so you list, in drought or in shours,
 Berin your body into every place,
 Into which your herte willith to pace, 140

80 Withoutin wem of you, through foule or faire,
 Or if you list to flein in the aire,
 As doth an Egle, whan him list to fore,
 This same stede shall bere you evirmore,
 Withoutin harme, till you ben there you lest,
 Though that you slepin on his bak and rest,
 And tourn agen with writhing of a pin;
 He that it wrought couð full many a gin;

He

He waitid many' a Constellation;
Er he had don this operation;
And knew ful many fele, and many bond.

This Mirroure eke, that I have in my hond,
Hath soche a might, that men may in it se
Whan there shall fall any adverfite
Unto your reigne, or to your self also,
And opin se who is your frend or fo:
And ovir all, if any lady bright
Hath set her hert on any manir wight,
If he be false, she shall the trefoun se,
His newe love, and all his subtilte
So opinly, that there shall nothing hide.

Wherefore agen this lusty Sommer tide,
This Mirroure, and this ring, that ye may se,
He hath sent to my Lady Canace,
Your excellent doughtir that now is here.
The vertues of this ring if ye woll here,
Are these; that if she list it for to were
Upon her thomb, or in her purse it bere,
There is no foule that fleith undir heven
That she ne shall wele understond his steven,
And know his mening opinly and plain;
And answer him in his language againe.
And every grafs that growith upon rote
She shall wele know, and whom it woll do bote,
All be his wounds nevir so depe and wide.
This nakid swerd, that hangith by my side
Soche vertue hath, that what man so ye smite,
Thorough his armure it woll kerve and bite,
Were it as thik, as is a braunchid Oke:
And what man that is woundid with the stroke 180
Shall ne'r be whole, till that you list of grace
To stroke him with the plat in thilke place
There he is hurt, that is as moche to saine,
Ye motè with the platè swerd againe
Strokin him in the wound, and it woll close,
This is the very soth withoutin glose:
It failith not while it is in your hold.

And whan this Knight hath first his Tale ytold;
He ridd out of the Hall, and down he light;
His Stede, which that shone as the sunnè bright, 190
Stant in the Court as still as any stone;
The Knight is to his chambir lad anon,
He is unarmed, and to the mete ysette,
And all these presents full rich ben yfett,
That is to saine, the swerd, and the mirroure,
All born anon was unto the high tower,
With certeine officers ordeyned therefore;
And unto Canace the ring is bore
Solempnly there as she satt at the table;
But sikirly withoutin any fable,
The horse of brafs that may not be remewed 200
It stant as it were to the ground yglewed;
There may no man out of the place it drive
For non engine, or winlas, or polive,
And gode cause why, for they ken not the craft,
And therefore in the place they han it laft,
Tyll that the Knight hath taught them the mannere
To voidin him, as ye shull afir here.
Grete was the pres, that swarmid to and fro
To gaurin on this hors that stondith so,
For it so high was, and so brode and long,
So well proportionid for to ben strong,
Right as it were a stede of Lumbardy,
So horfly therewith, and so quick of eye;
As it a gentil Polish Courser were:
For certis fro his taile unto his ere
Nature ne art ne coude him nought amend:
In no degree as all the pepil wende,
But evirmore their most wondir it was,
How that it coude gon, and was all of brafs. 210
It was of Fairie' as the pepil semid,
Divers folk diversly they han demid,

150 As many hedes as many wittes ther bene:
Thei murmur, as doin a swarm of Bech,
And madin skilles afir their fantabes
Reherfing of the oldè poetries,
And said it was ylike the Pegase,
The horse that hadde wingis for to fle;
Or els it was the Grekis horse Sinon
That broughtin Troyè to destruction 230
As men may in the oldè gestis rede.
My hert, qð one, is evirmore in dredè,
I trow some men of armis ben therin,
160 That shapin them this cite for to win:
It were right gode that soch thingis wer know.
An othir rownid to his fellow low;
And seid, he lied; for it was rathir like
An apperaunce, ymade by some magike.
As joglours playin at these festis grete
Of sundry thoughts, thus jangle thei and tretè, 240
And as leaud pepil demith commonlie
Of thingis, that ben made more subtille
Than thei can in ther leandness comprehend
170 They demin gladly to the baddir end.

And some of them wondrin on the mirroure;
[That born was up into the Maister towr]
How men mightin in it such thingis se,
An othir seid, certis it might wele be Naturally by compositiouns
Of angles, and of flie reflectiouns, 250
And seide that at Rome was soch an one;
Thei spak of Alcen, and Vitellion
And Aristote, that writith in their lives,
Of quaint mirrouris, and of perspectives;
As knowin thei that han their bokis herde.

And othir folk han wondrid on the swerde,
That wold so percin thorough every thing;
And fall in spech of Telephus the King,
And of Achilles for his quynè spere
For he couð with it bothe hele and dere 260
Right in soche wise, as men may with that swerde;
Of which right now you have your selfis herde.
They speke of fundri harding of metall,
And speke of Medicinis ther withall
And how and when it sholdin hardnid be
Which is unknowin algate unto me.

Tho spekin thei of Canace's ring,
And seidin all, that soch a wondir thing
Of craft of ringis herde thei nevir non,
Save that he Moïsis, and King Salomon 270
Haddin a name of cunning in soch art;
Thus sayn the peple', and drawin them apart.

But nathèless some seidin that it was 200 Wondir to makin of Fern afhin glas,
And yet is glas nought like afhin of fern,
But for that thei han knowin it so ferm.
Therefore thei cesin jangling and there wondir.

As fore some wondir on the cause of Thundir,
On ebb and flode, on gosomor, and mist, 280
And on all thing; till that the cause is wist.

Thus janglin thei, and demin and devise;
Till that the King gan fro his bord arise;
Phebus hath left th' angle Meridionall
And yet ascending was the beste royall, 290
The gentill Lyon, with his Aldrian.
Whan that this Tartar King, this Cambuscan
Rose from his borde, there as he fate full hie.
Befornè him goth the loud Minstralcie,
Till thei came to his chambre' of Paramentes,
There as they sounin diverse instrumentes 295
That it is like a Hevin for to here,
Now dancin lustie Venus children dere;
For in the Fish ther Ladie fate full hie,
And lokith on them with a frendly eye.

This nobill King is fate upon his Trône
This strangir Knight is fet to him full sone,

R

And

And on the daunce he goth with Canace.
 Here is the revill, and the jollitie,
 That a dul man n'is able to devise,
 He must have knowin love and her service,
 And bene a festlich-man, as fresh as May,
 That shoulde you devisin soch array,
 Who couthè tell you the form of dauncis
 So uncouth, and soch fresh countinauncis,
 Such subtil lokinges, and dissimulinges
 For dred of jelous menes appercevings?
 No man but Lancelot, and he is dede,
 Therefore I pafs of all this lustyhede.
 I say no more, but in this jollinefs
 I lete them, till men to suppir them drefs.

The Steward biddith spicis for to hye,
 And eke the wine in all this melodye,
 The Usheres and the Squiris ben ygone:
 The spicis and the wine is come anon.
 Thei ete and drink, and whan that had an end,
 To the Tempil, as reson was, they wend;
 The service done, thei suppin all by day,
 What nedith to rehersin their array?
 Ech man wot wele that at a King's feste
 Is plenty to the most and to the leste,
 And daintis mo than ben in my knowing.

And aftir suppir goth this nobill King
 To sene this horse of brafs, with all his rout
 Of Lordis, and of Ladies him about,
 Soch wondring there was on this horse of brafs,
 That sithin the grete Sege of Troyè was,
 There as men wondrid on an horse also,
 Ne was there soch a wondring as was tho.
 But finally the King askith the Knight
 The vertue of this coursere and the might,
 And prayid him to tell his governaunce;
 The horse anon gan forth to trip and daunce,
 Whan that this Knight laid hold upon his reine,
 And seide, Sir, there is no more to seine,
 But when you list to ridin any where,
 You motè trill a pin stant in his ere,
 Which I shall tellin you between us two Ye motè nempne' him to what place also,
 Or to what Contrè, that you list to ride;
 But when you come there as you list t'abide,
 Bid him descend; and trill anothir pin;
 [For therin lyth th' effect of all that gin]
 And he wol down descend, and done your will,
 And in that place he woll abidin still,
 Though all the world had the contrary sworne,
 He shall not thennis be throwin, ne borne.
 Or if you listin bid him thennis gone,
 Trill this pin, and he woll vanish anon
 Out of the sight of every mannere wight,
 And come agen, be it by day, or night,
 Whan that you list to clepin him agene,
 In soch a gise, as I shall to you seine,
 Betwixtin you and me, and that full sone.
 Ride when you list, there is no more to done.

Enfourmid whan the King was of the Knight,
 And hath concevid in his wit aright,
 The mannir and the form of all the thing,
 Full glad and blith, this nobil doughty King
 Repairith to his revill as before;
 The bridyl is unto the Towr yborn,
 And kept emong his jewelles lefe and dere;
 The horse vanishith: I n'ot in what mannere,
 Out of there sight, ye get no more of me.
 But thus I lete in lust and jollitie
 This Cambuscan, and his Lordis festing,
 Till wele nighè the day began to spring.

Explicit pars prima, & sequitur secunda pars.

The noris of digestion, the slepe
 Gan on them wink, and bad them to take kepe,

That mete and drink, and labour wol have rest,
 And with a galping mouth them all he kest: 370
 And seide it was time to ly adoun
 For blode was in his exaltatioun.
 Cherishith blode, natur's frend, qð he,
 Thei thankin him, galping by two by thre,
 And every wight gan drawin him to rest,
 As slepe them bade; thei toke it for the best.

Thei dremis shall not now be told of me,
 Ful wer their hedis of Fumositie,
 That causith dremes, of which there is no charge.
 Thei slepin soundly, til it was prime large. 380
 The moste part, but it were Canace,
 [She was full mesurable' as wymin be.]

For of her faðir had the toke her leve,
 And gon to rest sone aftir it was eve;
 Her leste not appallid for to be,
 Nor on the morrow unfeistlich to se:
 And slepte her first slepe, and then awoke.
 For soche a joy she in her herte toke
 Both of her queint ring, and of her mirroure,
 That twenty timis she chaunged her colour: 390
 And in her slepe, right for impressioun,
 Of her mirroure she had a Vision.

Wherefore ere that the Sunne gan up to glide,
 She clepid her Maistressis her beside,
 And seide, that her leste for to arise,
 These oldè wymen, that ben gladly wise
 As is their Maistress, answerde her anon,
 And seide, Madam, whiðir wol ye gon
 Thus erli? for folk ben allè at rest;
 I wol, qð she, arisin, for me lest 400
 No lengir for to slepe, but walk about.

Her Maistress clepith wymen a grete rout,
 And up they risin well nie ten or twelve,
 Upristh the fresh Canace her selve,
 As jolly and as bright as the yong Sunne,
 That in the ram up four degrees is runne;
 No higher was he whan she redy was,
 And forth she walkith esly a pace,
 Arayid for the lusty seson fote,
 For to play lightly, and to walk on fote, 410
 Not with but five or six of her meynè,
 And in a trench ferre in the Park goth she.
 The Vapor, which that fro the erthè glode,
 Makith the sunne to seme ruddy and brode,
 But nathelefs it was so faire a sight,
 That it made all their hertis for to light;
 What for the seson, and for the morning,
 And for the foulis that she herdè sing,
 For right anon she wistè what they ment,
 Right by their song, and knew all their intent. 420

The knottè why that every tale is told,
 If it be taryed till the lust be cold
 Of them that han it herk'nid aftir yore,
 The favour passith ere lengir the more
 For the fullomness of prolixite,
 And by the same reson, as thinkith me,
 I sholde unto the knottè condescend,
 And makin of her walking sone an end.

Amid a tre, for dry as white as chalk,
 As Canacè was playing in her walk, 430
 There satt a Faucon ovre' her hede ful hie,
 That with a pitous voice so gan to crie,
 That all the wode resoundid of her cry,
 And betin had her self ful pitously
 With both her wingis, till that the rede blode
 Ran endelong the tre there as she stode,
 And evir and anon she cryed and shrighit,
 And with her bek her selfin so she pight,
 That there ne was Tigre ne cruil beste,
 That dwellith or in wode, or in forest, 440
 That n'old han wept, if that they wepin coude,
 For sorow of her, she shrighit ay so loude.

For

For there was nevyr yet no man on live,
If that he couȝ a Faucon well describe;
That herd of soche anothir for fairenefs
As well of plumage as of gentilnefs
Of shape, of allè that might rek'nid be,
A Faucon peregrine than semid she
Of fremde lond, and evirmore as she stode.
She swoundid now and now for lak of blode; 450
Till well nie is she fallin from the tre.

This King's faire doughtir, this Canace,
(That on her finger brought the queintè ring
Through which she undirstode well every thing
That any foule may in his Leddin saine,
And couȝ answere in his Leddin againe).
Hath undirstondè what this Faucon seyde,
And well nye for the routh almost she deyde,
And to the tre she goeth full hastily,
And on this Falcon lokith pitously, 460
And held her lappe abrode, for well she wist
The Falcon muȝt yfallin fro the twist,
Whan that she swoundid next, for lak of blode;
A long while there to waitin her she stode,
Till at the last she spake in this manere
Unto the hauke, as ye shull astir here.

What is the cause, if it be for to tell,
That ye ben in this furiall peyne of Hell?
Q^{uod} Canace unto this Hauke above.
Is this for sorue' of deth or los of love?
For as I trow these ben the causis two,
That causin most in gentill hertis wo.
Of othir harme it nedith not to speke,
For this your self upon your self you wreke,
Which provith wele that either ire or drede
Mote ben encheson of your cruill dede,
Sin that I se none othir wight you chafe,
For love of God so doth your selfe grace.
Or what may be your help? for West or Est
I nevyr saw er now no bird ne beste
That fardè with himself so pitously;
Ye sle me with your sorow verily,
I have of you so grete compassioun;
For Godd's love come from the tre adoune,
And as I am a King's doughtir trewe,
If that I verily the causis knew
Of your disefe, if it lay in my might
I wolde amend it er that it were night,
As wisly help me the grete God of kind,
And herbis eke shall I right now yfind
To helin with your hurtis hastily.

Tho shright this Falcon yet more pitously
Than er she did, and fell to ground anon,
And lyth aswound as dede as any stone,
Till Canace hath in her lapp her take,
Unto the time she gan of swoune awake,
And astir that she gan of swoune abreyd,
Right in the Hauk's Leddin thus she seyde.

That pite rennith sone in gentil hert
(Feling his similitude in peins smert)
Is provid al day, as men may it se,
As wel by werk, as by authority;
For gentil hert kepith ay gentilnefs,
I se well that ye have of my distres
Compassion, my fairist Canace,
Of very wymenly benignity,
That Nature in your principles hath sett;
But for none hope for to farin the bett;
But for to obey unto your hert fre,
And for to make others beware by me,
As by the whelp chastised is the Lion,
Right for that cause and that conclusion;
While that I have a leysure, and a space,
Mine harme I woll confessin er I pacc.
And evir while that one her sorow told,
That othir wept, as she to watir wold.

Till that the Falcon bad her to be stil,
And with a sigh thus she seide her til.

There I was bred, alas! that ilke day,
And fostrid in a rock of Marble gray, 520
So tendirly, that nothing ailid me,
I ne wist not what was adversity,
Till I couȝ fly full hie undir the Sky.
Tho dwelled a Tercellet me faste by,
That semid a well of all gentilnesse;
Al were he full of trefon and falseness,
It was so wrappid undir humble chere,
And undir hew of trowth, in soche mannere,
Undir plefaunce, and undir bisy paine,
That no wight couȝ have wend that he couȝde saine,
So depe in graine he dyid his coloures;
Right as a Snake hidith him undir floures,
Till he may se his tyme for to bite:

Right so this God of Lov's hypocrite
Doth his Ceremonies and Obeyfaunce,
With his dissimuling, and faire semblaunce,
That sounith into gentilnefs of Love,
As in a tomb is allè faire above,
And undir is the Corse, soche as ye wot;
Soche was this hypocrite both cold and hote. 540

And in this wise he servid his intent,
That, save the fend, none wiste what he ment,
Till he so long hath wepid and complained,
And many'a yere his service to me fained,
Till that my hert too pitous, and too nice
All innocent of his cruil Malice,
For ferdè of his deth, as thoughtè me,
Upon his Othis, and his Suretie
Grauntid him love, on this Condition;
That evirmore mine honour and renoun 550
Were savid both privily, and apert.

That is to say, that astir his desert
I gaf him all myn hert, and all my thought,
God wote, and in none othir wise nought;
And toke his hert in chaunge of mine for ay;
But soth is said gon sithin many' a day,
A trew wight and a thefe thinkith not one.
And whan he saw the thing so farr ygone,
That I grauntid him fully all my love,
In soche a gyfe, as I have seide above; 560
And gevin him my trewe hert as fre
As he swore he gavin his hert to me,

Anon this Tigre, full of doublenesse,
Fell on his knees, with so devout humblefs,
With hie reverence, and eke by his chere
So like a gentil lovir, of manere
So ravishid, as it semid, for joy,
That nevyr Troylus, Paris of Troy,
Ne Jason certis, ne none othir Man
Since Lamech was, that aldirfirst began 570
To lovin two, as writin folk befor,

Ne nevyr sith the first Man was yborn
Ne couth Man by the twenty thousand part
Counterfete the Sophismis of his Att;
Ne were worthy t' unbokle his galoche,
There doublenes or faining shold approche;
Ne so couth thank a wight as he did me.
His manir was a hevyn for to se

To any woman were she ner' so wise,
So paintid he his chere at point devise; 580
As well his wordis as his Countinaunce;
I so lovid him for his obeyfaunce,
And for the trowth I demid in his hert,
That if so were that any thing him smert,
Al were it ne're so lite, and I it wist,
Methought I felt deth at my herte twist.
And shortly so ferforth this thing is went
That my will was his will's instrument,
That is to sey, my will obeyed his will,
In all thingis, as ferre as reson fil,

Keping

Keping the boundis of my worship evir,
Ne nevir had I thing so lese ne levir
As him, God wot, ne nevir shul no mo.

This last th lengir than a yere or two
That I supposid of him nothing but gode.

But finally, thus at the last it stode,
That fortune woldè that he must ytwirn
Out of that placè, which that I was inn.
Wher' me was wo, it is no question,
I cannot make of it description.

But o thing dare I tellin boldly,
I know what is the peine of deth thereby,
Soche harme I felt, that he ne might beleve.
So on a day of me he toke his leve,
So sorowfully, I wend verily

That he had felid as moche harme as I,
Whan that I herd him spake, and saw his hewe,
But nathèlès I thought he was so trewe,
And eke that he reparin shold againe,
Within a litil while, sothe to faine,
And reson wold also that he shold go
For his honour, as oftin happith so,

That I made vertue of necessity,
And toke it well, sith that it nedes must be:
As best I might I hid from him my sorow,
And toke him by the hond St. John to borow,
And seide him thus, lo! I am yours al,
Beth soche as I have ben to you and shal.
What he answerde it nedith not reherce,
Who can say bett than he, who can do werse? 620
Whan he hath all well said, than hath he done,
Therefore behovith him a full long sponè
That shall ete with a fend, thus herd I say.

So at the last he mote forth on his way,
And forth he fletth till he came there him left,
Whan it come him to purpose for to rest,
I trowe he haddin thilke text in mind.

That every thing repairing to his kind
Gladith themselves, thus faine men as I gesse,
Men love of propir kind new-fanglenesi, 630
As birdis don, that men in cagis fede,
For though thou night and day take of them hede,
And straw their cagis fair and soft as silk,
And geve them sugar, hony, brede, and milk,
Yet right anon as that his dore is up,
He with his fete will spurn adoun his cup,
And to the wode he wold, and wormis ete,
So new-fangle bein they of their mete,
And lovin novilries of propir kind,
No gentilnes of blode ne may they bind. 640

So ferd this Tercelet, alas the day!
Though he were gentil born, and fresh and gay,
And godely for to se, humble and fre,
He saw upon a time a kite yfle,

And sodeinly he lovid this kite so,
That all his love is clene fro me ygo,
And hath his trouth yfalsid in this wife;
Thus hath the Kite my love in her servise,
And I am lorn withoutin remedy.

And with that word this Falcon gan to cry, 650
And swounid oft in Canace's barme;
Grete was the sorow for that Faucon's harme,
That Canace, and all her wymen made,
They n'ist how that they might her Faucon glade!
But Canace home bereth her in her lapp,
And softily in plaisters gan her wrapp,
There as she with her bek had hurt her selve.

Now cannot Canace but herbis delve
Out of the ground, and makin salvis new
Of herbis pretioufe, and fine of hew, 660
To helin with the Hawk fro day to night
She doth her besinefs, and all her might.
And by her bedd's hede she made a mew,
And coverid it with velvettis blew,
In sign of trouth that is in woman sene,
And all without the mew is paintid grene,
In which were paintid all these false foules,
As ben these tidifes, Terceletes, and Oules,
Right for despite were paintid them beside Pyes, on them for to cryin and to chide. 670

This leve I Canace her Hawk keping;
I wol no more as now speke of her ring,
Till it come eft to purpose for to faine
How that this Falcon got her love againe,
Repentant, as the story tellith us,
By Mediation of Camballus,
The King's Sone, of which I have you told.
But hennisforth I woll my purpose hold
To speke of Aventures, and of Battailes,
That yet was nevir herd so gret Mervailis. 680

First woll I tell you of King Cambuscan,
That in his time many a Cite wan,
How that he wan Thedora to his wife;
And aftir wol I speke of Algarfise,
For whom full oft in grete peril he was,
Ne had ben holpin but by th' hors of bras:
And aftir wol I speke of Camballo,
That fought in listis with the brethrin two,
For Canace er that they might her winn.
And there I left I woll againe beginn.

Explicit Pars secunda.

Apollo whirlith up his Chare so hie,
Till that the God Mercurius the flie.

There can no more be found of this TALE, which hath been sought for in diverse places, say all the Printed Books that I have seen, and also MSS.

Here followeth the words of the Marchaunt to the Squier, and the words of the Host to the Marchaunt.

IN Faith, Squier, thou hast The well yquit,
And gently too, I praise well thy wit,
Qð the Marchaunt, considering thy youth,
So felingly thou spekest, I The alouth
As to my dome, there is none that is here
Of Eloquence that shallè be thy pere,
If that thou live, God give The right gode chance,
And in vertue send The perseverance. 700
For of thy speking I have grete deinte,
I have a Sonne, and by the Trinity
I had levir than twenty pounds worth lond
(Although it now were fallin in my hond)
He were a Man of soche discretioun
As that ye ben, fie on possessioun!
But if a Man be vertuouse withall.
I have my Sonne snybbid, and yet I shall;
For he to vertue listith not t' entend,
But for to play at dice, and for to spend, 710

And lese all that he hath, is his usage,
And he had levir to talk with a page,
Than to commune with any gentle wight,
Where he might lernin gentilnes aright.
Straw for your Gentilnesies, qð our Host,
What, Marchaunt? parde, Sir, full well thou wost
That eche of you mote tellin at the lest,
A tale or two, or brekin your behest.
That know I well, qð the Marchaunt, certein, 720
I pray you have me not in no disdain,
Though I to this Man speke a word or two.
Tell on thy Tale withoutin wordis mo.
Gladly, Sir Host, qð he, I woll obey
Unto your will, now herk'nith what I say,
I woll you not contrary in no wise
As ferre as my wittis wollin suffice,
I pray to God that it may plesin you,
Than wote I well that it is gode ynow.

Thus end the words of the Host, and the Marchaunt, and here follows the Marchaunt's Prologue.

The MARCHAUNT's PROLOGUE.

Weping, and wailing, care and othir sorow,
I have ynow bothevin and eke morow, 730
Qð the Marchaunt, and so have othir mo,
That weddid be, I trow that it be so.

For well I wot it farith so by me,
I have a wife the worst that mayin be,
For though the fendè couplid to her were,
She wold him ovirmatch I dare well swere.
What shold I you reherfin in speciall
Her high Malice? She is a Shrew at all.

There is a long and a large difference
Betwixtè Grisild'is grete pacience
And of my wife the passing cruilty,
Were I unbondin al so mote I The
I woldin nevir eft come in the snare.
We weddid Men live in sorow and care,

Assay whoso woll, and he shall yfind
That I say sothe; by St. Thomas of Inde,
As for the more part, I say not all,
God sheldè that it sholdin so befall.

Ah gode Sir Host, I have yweddid be,
These Monthis two, and more not parde, 750
And yet I trow, that he, that all his life
Hath weddid ben, although men shold him rise
Into the herte, ne couth in no manere
Tell so moche sorow as that I now here
Couth tellin of my wiv'is cursednes.

Now, qð our Host, Marchaunt so God The blefs,
Syn ye ben so moch knowin of that art,
Full hertily I pray you tell us part.

Gladly qð he, but of myn ownè fore
For forry hert I tellin may no more.

Here endith the PROLOGUE.

The

The MARCHAUNT's TALE.

Old January marrieth young May, and for his unequal Match receiveth a foul Reward.

Hylom there was dwelling in Lombardy
A worthy Knight that born was at Pavy,
In which he lived in grete prosperity,
And sixty yere a wifeles Man was he,
And followed ay his bodily delite

On wymen, there as was his appetite:
As don these folis that ben seculeres.
And whan that he was past of sixty yeris,
Were it for holines, or for dotage,
I cannot say, but soche a grete corage
Had this same Knight to ben a weddid Man;
That day and night he doth all that he can
To espy where that he weddid may be,
Praying our Lord to grauntin him that he
Mightin once knowin of that blisfull life,
That is betwixt an husbond and a wife:
And for to live undir that holy bond,
With which God the first man and woman bond.

None othir life, seid he, is worth a bene,
For wedlock is so esy and so clene,
That in this world it is a Paradise.
Thus saith this old Knight that was so wise,
And certainly, as soth as God is King,
To take a wife it is a glorious thing,
And namely whan a Man is old and hore;
Than is a wife the frute of his trefore,
Than shold he take a yong wife and a faire,
On which he might engendrin him an heir,
And lede his life in joy and in solace,
Whereas these bachelers singin alas!
Whan that they find any adversite
In love, which n'is but child's vanite.
And trewly it sittin well to be so,
That bachelers han oftin peine and wo,
On brotill ground they bildin brotilnes,
They find freilty, when they wene sikirnes.
They live but as livin the birds and bests
In liberty, and undir nice arrests,
There as a weddid Man in his estate
Livith a life blisfull and ordinate,
Undir the yoke of marriage ybound
Well may his hert in joy and blis habound,
For who can be so buxome as a wife,
Who is so trew, and eke so attentife,
To kepe him sike and wele, as is his make?
For wele ne wo she will him not forsake,
She n'is not wery him to love and serve,
Though that he ly bedrid untill he sterve;
And yet some clerkis saine it is not so.
Of which Theophrast is one of tho.
What force though Theophrast listith to ly?
Ne take no wife, qð he, for husbondry,
As for to spare in household thy dispenche,
A trew servaunt doith more diligence,
Thy godes to kepe, than doth thine ownè wife;
For she woll claymin half part all her life,
And if that thou be sike, so God me save,
Thy very frendis, or thy own trew knave
Woll kepe The bett than she, that waitith ay
Aftir thy gode, and hath don many' a day.
And if thou take a wife that is untrew
Full oftin time it shall The forely rew.
This sentence, and an hundrid fithis worse
Writith this man there God his bonis curse,

But take no kepe of all soche vanity,
Defyith Theophrast, and herk'nith me.
A wife is Godd's gestè verily,
All othir mannir gestis hardily,
As londis, rentis, pasture, or commune,
Or movables, all ben gestes of fortune,
That passin as a shadow on a wall,
But drede it nought, if plainly speke I shall,
A wife woll last, and in thine house endure
Well lengir than The list peraventure.
Marriage is a full grete Sacrament,
He whichè hath no wife I hold him shent,
He liveth helpeles, and all desolate.
(I speke of folk in seculer estate)
And herkin why I say not this for nought,
The woman was for mann's help ywrought,
The highè God, whan he had Adam maked
And sawè him alone all belly naked,
That God of his grete godenefs seide than,
Let us now make an help unto this man,
Like to himself, and then he made him Eve;
Here ye may se, and hereby may ye preve,
That a wife is mann's help and comfort,
His paradise terrestre, and his disport:
So buxom, and so vertuouse is she,
They mote nedis livin in unity,
One flesh they ben, and two soules, as I gesse,
Have but one hert in wele and in distresse.
A wife! Seint Mary benedicite!
How may a man havin adversite
That hath a wife? Certis I cannot sey
The blis and joy, that is betwixt them twey,
There may no tongue tellin, or hertè think.
If he be pore, she helpith him to swink,
She kepith his gode, wastith nevre' a dele,
All that her husbond lust her likith wele;
She saith not onis nay, when he saith ye.
Do this, saith he; all redy Sir, qð she.
O blisful ordir of wedlok pretious,
Thou art so mery, and so vertuous,
And so commendid and approvid eke,
That every man that halt him worth a leke,
Upon his bare knees oughtin all his life
Thankin his God, that him hath sent a wife,
Or pray to God daily him for to send
A wife, to last unto his liv'is end.
For than his life is sett in sikerness,
He may not be decevid, as I gesse,
So that he werk aftir his wiv'is rede,
Than may he boldly berin up his hede.
They ben so trew, and therewithal so wise,
For which, if thou wilt werchin as the wife,
Do alwey so as wymen woll The rede.
Lo! how that Jacob, as these Clerkis rede,
By gode counsaile of his Mo'ir Rebek,
Boundin the kidd's skin about his nek,
For which his fa'ir's benifon he wan.
Lo! Judith, as the story tellin can,
By her wife counsaile Godd's peple kept,
And slew huge Holofernes while he slept.
Lo Abigail! by counsaile how that she Savid her husbond Nabal, whan that he Shold have ben slaine; and loke! Hester also
By gode counsaile deliverid out of wo

The

The peple' of God, and made him Mordoché
Of Alsueré enhansid for to be.

There n'is nothing in gree superlatife
(As saith Senec) above an humble wife,
Suffer thy wiv'is tunge, as Caton bid,
She shall commaund, and thou shalt suffer it,
And yet she wolle obey of curtesy.

A wife is kepir of thine husbondry,
Well may the sike man wailin and wepe,
Thereas there n'is no wife the houte to kepe.
I warn The, if that wisely thou wilt werch,
Lovith thy wife, as Christ lovith his Chérch.
If thou love thy self well, thou lovest thy wife,
No man hatith his flesh, but in his life
He fosstrith it, and therefore bid I The Chérish thy wife, or thou shalt never the.
Husbond and wife, what men so jape and play,
Of worldly folk holdin the sikir way,
They ben so knit, there may no harme betide,
And namily upon the wiv'is side.

For which this January', of which I told,
Considerid hath in his day'is old
The lusty life, the vertuous quite,
That is in Marriag'is hony swete,
And for his frendis on a day he sent,
To tellin them th' effect of his entent,
With sobir face his tale he hath them told.
He said, gode frendis, I am hore and old,
And almost, God wot, on the pitt'is brink,
Upon my soule now somewhat must I think,
I have my body folily dispended,
Blessid be God, it shall ben amended,
For I wolle ben certein a weddid Man,
And that anon, in all the haste I can,
Unto some maidin faire, of tendir age,
I pray you shapith for my mariage,
All sodeinly, for I wolle not abide,
And I wolle sondin to spy on my side
To whome I may be weddid hastily.
But forasmoche as ye ben mo than I,
Ye shall rather soche a thing espyin
Than I, where me best were to allyin.
But one thing warn I you, my frendis dere,
I wolle none old wife have in no manere,
She shall not passin sixtene yere certeine,
Old fish, and yong flesh wolle I have full faine.

Bett is, qd he, a pike, than a pik'reel,
And bett than old beef is the tendir veel.
I n'ill woman of thirty wintir age,
It n'is but bené stalk, and grete forage.
And eke these olde wivis, God it wote,
They connin so moche craft in Wad'is bote,
So mochil brokin harm whan that them list,
That with them shold I never live in rest.
For sondry Scholis makith sotill Clarkis,
Woman of many Scholis half a Clark is.
But certainly a yong thing may men gye,
Right as men may warm wax with hondis plie.
Wherefore I say you plainly in a clause
I n'ill none old wife have right for this cause:

For if so were I had some soche mischance
That in her I ne cou'd have no plesance,
Than shold I lede my life in advoury,
And so freight to the Devill whan I dye.
Ne children shuld I none on her gettin,
Yet hadd I levir houndis had me etin,
Than that my heritage sholdin yfall
Into straunge hondes, and this I tell you all
I dote not, I wote well the causis why
Men shold weddin, and furthir more wot I
There spekith many man of marriage
That wote no more of it than doth my page,
For which causis man shoude take a wife,
If he ne may not livin chast his life;

890 Take him a wife with grete devotion
Bicause of lesfull procreation
Of childrin to th' honour of God above,
And not only for paramour or love,
And for they shuldin lechery eschue,
And yeeld their dettis whan that they be due,
Or for that eche of them shold help othir
In misfir, as a sustir shold a brothir,
And live in chastity full heviny.

But, Siris, by your leve that am not I,
For, God be thankid, I can make avaunt
900 I fele my limmis stark and suffisaunt
To don all that a man belongith to.
I wote my selvin best what I may do.
Though I be hore, I fare as doth a tre
That blossomith er that frute ywox be:
The blossom'd tre is neithir drie ne dedd,
I felin no where hore but on my hedd:
My herte and my limmis ben as grene
As laurell is thorough the yere to sene.
And sithin ye han herd all mine entent,
910 I pray you to my will ye wolle assent.

Diverse men diversly havin him told
Of Marriage many ensamplis old,
Some blamith it, some praisith it certeine:

But at the last, shortly for to saine
(As all day fallith altercation Betwixt frendis in disputation)
920 There fel a strife betwixt his brethrin two,
Of which that one was clepid Placebo,
Justinus sothely callid was the other.

Placebo said, O January brother,
Full litil nede han ye my lord so dere
Counsaile to ask of any that is here,
But that ye ben so full of sapience,
That you ne likith for your hie prudence
To wayvin fro the words of Salomon,
This word sayith he unto everichone,
1000 Workith all thing by counsaile, thus saied he,
And then ne shalt thou not repentin The.
But though that Salomon speke soche a word,
390 Mine own dere brothir, and my lefist Lord,
So wisly God bringin my soule to rest,
I holde your own counsaile for the best.
For brothir myn, of me take this motife,
I have ben now a Courtman all my life,
And God wote though I now unworthy be,
I have ystondin in full grete degre
1010 Abovin Lordis of full high estate,
Yet had I ner' with none of them debate,
I never them contraryid truely,

940 I wote wele that my Lord can more than I;
What that he saith I hold it firm and stable,
I say the same, or ellis thing semblable;
A full grete sole is any Councillour,
That servith any Lord of high honour,
That dare presume, or onis thinkin it,
That his counsaile shold pass his lord'is wit.
1020 Nay Lordis be no folis by my fay,
Ye havin your selve spokin here to day
So hie sentence, so holi, and so well,
950 That I consent, and confirm every dell
Your wordis all, and your opinion,
By God there n'is no man in all this toun.
Ne in all Italie couth bett have saide;
Christ hold him of this Counsaile well apaid!
And trewily it is an high corage
For any man that is slopin in age
1030 To take a yong wife, by my fa'ir kin,
Your hert hongith upon a jolly pin;
Doth now in this mattere right as ye left,
For finally I hold it for the best.

Justinus, that aye stille sat and herd,
Right in this wise to Placebo answerd.

Now

Now brothir mine be pacient I pray,
 Sith ye have seid, and herk'nith what I say;
 Senec among his othir wordis wife
 Saith that a man oughtin him well avise,
 To whom he gevith his lond or carell;
 And sith I ought avise me right well
 To whome I geve my godes away fro me,
 Moche more I oughtin well avise be
 To whome I geve my body, for alweye
 I warne you well, it is no child's playe,
 To take a wife without avisement,
 Men must enquirin, this is mine assent,
 Wheðir she be wise, sober, or dronkelew,
 Or proud, or any othir ways a shrew?
 A chider, or a waster of thy gode,
 Or rich or pore? Or els a man is wode,
 Al be it so that no man findin shall None in this world that trottiþ whole in all;
 Ne man ne best, soch as men can devise,
 But nathelès it ought ynow suffice
 With any wife, if so were that she had
 Mo thewis gode than are her vicis bad.
 And al this askith leifure to enquire,
 For God wote I have wept many a tere
 Full privily sithin I had a wife,
 Praise whofo woll a weddid mann's life,
 Certein I find in it but cost and care,
 And observauncis of all blissis bare;
 And yet God thank my neighbouris about,
 And namily of wyemen a grete rout
 Sain that I havin the most stedfast wife,
 And eke the mekist one that berith life.
 But I wote best where wringith me my shoe,
 Ye may for me right as ye lust to do,
 Aviseþ you, ye ben a man of age,
 How that ye entrin into mariage,
 And namely with a yong wife and a faire,
 By him that made watir, fire, erth, and air,
 The yongist man that is in all this rout
 Is byfy ynow to bring it about,
 To have his wife alone, ytrustith me,
 Ye shullin not plesin her yeris thre,
 This is to saine, to doin her plesaunce,
 A wife askith full many observaunce.
 I pray you that you be not ill apaid.
 Qð January', and haft'ow alle said?
 Straw for thy Senec, and for thy proverbs,
 I count it not worth a pannir of herbs
 Of schole termis, full wiser men than thou,
 As thou haft herd, assentith it right now.
 To my purpose: Placebo, what say ye?
 I say it is a cursid man, qð he,
 That lettith Matrimony sikirly.
 And with that word they risin sodeinly,
 And ben assentid fully that he shold
 Be weddid whan him list, and where he wold.
 High fantasy, and this curiosnes
 Fro day to day gan in the soule emprefis
 Of January' about his mariage,
 Many fair shape, and many faire visage
 There passith thorough his hert night by night,
 As whofo toke a mirrour polished bright,
 And sett it in a common market place,
 Than shold he se many a figure pace
 By this mirrour, and in the samè wise
 Gan January in his thought devise
 Of Maidins which that dwellin him beside,
 He wist not where that he might best abide.
 For if that one had bewte in her face,
 Anothir stant so in the peplis grace
 For her sadnes and her benignite,
 That of the peple gretist voice had she.
 And some were rich, and haddin a bad name,
 But nathelès betwixt ernist and game

He at the last appointid him in one,
 And let al othir from his hert ygone,
 And chese her of his own authority,
 For love is blind all day, and may not se.
 And whan that he was in his bedde brought,
 Her portreyd in his hert, and in his thought,
 Her bewte fresh, and her age so tendir,
 Her middle smale, her armes long and slendir,
 Her wise governaunce, and her gentilnes,
 Her womanly bering, and her sadnes, 1120
 And whan he was on her condescendid,
 Him thought his choice might not ben amendid.
 For whan that he himself concludid had,
 Him thought ilk othir mann's wit so bad,
 That impossible it were to reply
 Against his choice, this was his fantasy.
 His frendis sent he to at his instaunce,
 And prayith them to don him that plesaunce,
 That hastily they wold unto him come,
 He wold abregge their labour al and some, 1130
 Nedith no more for them to go ne ride,
 He was appointid there he wold abide.
 Placebo came, and eke his frendis sone,
 And aldirfirst he bad of them a bone,
 That none of them none argumentis make,
 Agenst his purpose that he hath ytake,
 Which purpose was plesaunt to God, seid he,
 And very ground of his prosperite.
 He seid, there was a Maidin in the toun,
 Which that for bewte haddè grete renoune, 1140
 Al were it so she were of smale degre,
 Suffisith him her youth, and her bewte.
 Which Maid he said he wold her have to wife,
 To lede in ese and holines his life,
 And thonkid God that he might han her all,
 And that no wight his blis departin shall.
 And prayith them to labour in this nede,
 And shapin, that he failith not to spede.
 For then he seide his spirit was at ese,
 That is, qð he, nothing may me displese, 1150
 Save o thing prikith in my Conscience,
 The which I woll reherce in your pefrence.
 I have, qð he, herd say full yore ago,
 There may no man have perfite blissis two,
 That is to sey in yerth, and eke in heven,
 For though he kepe him from the finnis seven,
 And eke from every braunch of thilkè tre,
 Yet is there so perfite prosperite,
 And so grete ese and lust in mariage,
 That aye I am agast now in mine age, 1160
 That I shall ledin so mery a life,
 So delicate withoutin wo or strife,
 That I shall have my hevin on erth here,
 For sithin very heven is bought so dere
 With tribulation and grete pennaunce,
 How shold I then living in soche plesaunce
 As alle weddid men don with their wivis,
 Come to the blis there Crist eterne on live is?
 This is my drede, and ye my brethrin tweie
 Affoilith me this question I you prey. 1170
 Justinus, which that hatid his foly,
 Answerd anon right in his japery,
 And for he woldin his long tale abregge,
 He woldin none authority allegge,
 But seid, Sir, so there be none obstacle
 Othir than this, God of his miracle
 And of his mercy may so for you werch,
 That er ye han your rights of holy Cherch;
 Ye may repent of weddid mann's life,
 In which ye sain is neither wo ne strife; 1180
 And ellis God forbid but if he sent
 A weddid man the grace him to repent,
 Well oftin rather than a single man;
 And therefore, Sir, the best rede that I can,
 T Despeirith

Despeirith not, but have in memory
 Paraunter she may be your Purgatory.
 She may be Godd's mene, and Godd's whip,
 Than shall your Soule up to the Hevin skip
 Swifter than doth an arrow out of bow.
 I hope in God hereaftir ye shall know
 That there n'is none so grete felicite
 In mariage, ne nevir none shall be,
 That you shall let of your Salvation;
 So that ye use, as skill is and reson,
 The lustis of your wife attemp'rately,
 And that ye plesse her nat too am'rousfly,
 And that ye kepe you eke from othir Sinn,
 My tale is don, for my wit is but thinn.
 Beth not aghast hereof my derè brothir,
 But wade we fro this mattir to anothir.

The Wife of Bath, if ye woll undirstand
 Of Mariage, which ye now have in hand,
 Declarith full well in a litill space.

Farith now well, God have you in his grace.

And with this word Justin and his brothir
 Han take their leve eche one of the othir.
 For whan they saw that it must nedis be,
 They wroughtin so by wise and sie tretie,
 That she, this Maidin, which that May did hight,
 As hastily as evir that she might
 Shall weddid be to this January;
 I trow it were too long you to tary,
 If I told you of every scrite and bond
 By which she was feoffid in all his lond,
 Or for to herkin of her rich array.
 But finally ycomin is the day,
 That to the Cherchè both tway ben they went
 For to receive the holy Sacrament;
 Forth came the preest with stole about his nek,
 And bad her be like Sara and Rebek,
 In wifdome and in trouth of Mariage,
 And said his Orisons, as is th' usage,
 And crouchid them, and bad God shold them blefs,
 And made all sikre ynow with holiness.

Thus ben they weddid with solempnite,
 And at the feste sittith both he and she,
 With othir worthy folk upon the deis,
 All full of joy and blifs is the Paleis,
 And full of instruments, and of vitale,
 And the most deintyist of al Itaile.
 Beforn him stode soche instruments of sounne,
 That Orpheus, ne of Thebes Amphioune
 Ne madin nevir soche a melody,
 At every cours came the loud Minstralcie,
 That nevir Joab trompid for to here,
 Neither Theodamas yet half so clere,
 At Thebis, whan the Cite was in dout.
 Bacchus the wine them skinkith al about,
 And Venus laughith blith on every wight,
 For January was become her Knight,
 And woldin both assayin his corage,
 In liberty, and eke in mariage;
 And with her firebrond in her hond about
 Dauncith before the bride, and all the rout.
 And certainly I dare well say right this,
 Hymeneus, that God of wedding is,
 Saw nevir so mery a weddid Man.

Hold thou thy pece thou Poet Marcian,
 That writist us, that ilk wedding mery
 Of Philology, and of Mercury,
 And of the Songis that the Muses song,
 Too smale is both thy pen, and eke thy tonge
 For to descrivin of this Mariage,
 Whan tendir youth hath weddid stouping age,
 There is soche mirth, as may not be writtin,
 Assayith your selve, than may ye wittin,
 If that I lie, or non, in this mattere.
 May that sittin with so benign a chere,

That her to behold it semed a Feirie,
 Quene Hester lokid ner with soch an eye,
 On Asluere, so meke a loke hath she. 1260
 I may you not devise al her bewte,
 But thus moche of her bewte tell I may,
 That she was like the bright morow of May,
 Fulfillid of all bewte and plesauce.
 Tho January' is ravished in a traunce,
 At every time he lokid in her face,
 But in his hert he gan her to menace,
 That he that night in his arms wold her streine,
 Harder than evir Paris did Helein. 1270

But nathèless yet had he grete pite,
 That thilkè night offendin her must he.
 And thought alas! o the tendir cature!
 Now woldè God she mightin well endure
 All my corage, it is so sharpe and kene,
 I am aghast she shall it not sustene,
 But God forbid, that I did all my might;
 Now woldè God that it were waxin night,
 And that the night wold lastin evirmo,
 I wold that all these peple were ago. 1280
 And finally he doth al his labour
 As he best mightin saving his honour,
 To haste them fro the mete in sotill wife,
 The time ycame that reson was to rise,
 And aftir that men dauncin and drink fast,
 And spicis al about the house they cast,
 And full of joy and blifs is every man,
 Al but a Squire that hightin Damian,
 Which karfe before the Knight many a day,
 He was so ravished on his lady May, 1290
 That for the very peine he was nye wode,
 Almost he swelt and swoundid where he stode.
 So sore hath Venus hurt him with her brand!
 So fresh she was, and thereto so licand!
 And to his bedde he went him hastily,
 No more of him at this time speke I,
 But there I let him wepe ynow and pleine,
 Till the fresh May woll rewin on his peine.

O per'lous fire, that in the bedstrow bredeth,
 O foe familier, that his service bedeth! 1300
 O servaunt traytour false in holy hew,
 Like to the adder sly in bosome trew!
 O January dronkin in plesauce!
 (God sheld us all from your iniquitaunce
 Of Mariage) se how this Damian,
 Thine owne Squire, and eke thine own born Man,
 Entendith for to doen The villany!
 God graunt The thine homely foe to espie!
 For in this world n'is a werse pestilence
 Than homely foe, al day in thy presence. 1310

Perfourmid hath the Sunne his Ark diurne,
 No lengir may his body here sojourn,
 On th' Horison, as in that Latitude,
 Night with his mantill, that is derk and rude,
 Gan for to sprede the Hemisphere about;
 For which departid is the lusty rout
 Fro January with thonk on every side,
 Home to their housis lustily they ride,
 There as they don their thingis as them list,
 And whan they saw their time they gon to rest. 1320
 Sone aftir this lusty January
 Woll go to bedd, he woll no lengir tary,
 He drinkith Ipocras, clary, vernage,
 And spicis hot, to encrese his corage,
 And lectuaries had he then full fine,
 Soche as the cursid Monk Dan Constantine
 Hath writtin in his boke De Coitu,
 To ete them all he n'old nothing eschew.
 And thus to his privy frendis said he,
 For Godd's love, as sone as it may be, 1330
 Let void all this house in curteis wise sone;
 Men drinkin, and the Travers drew anone.

So hastid January', it must be done.
The bride was brought to bed as still as stone;
And whan the bed was with the Preeft yblessed,
Out of the chambir every wight them dresled.
And January' hath fast in his armes take
His freshe May, his paradise, his make,
He lullich her, he kisth her full oft,
With the thik bristles of his berde unsoft,
Ylike the skinn of houndfish, sharp as brere,
(For he was shave al new in his manere)
He rubbith her upon her tendir face,
And sayid thus, alas! I mote trespace
To you my spouse, and you gretely offend,
Or time come that I woll adoun descend.
But nathelès consid'rith this, qð he,
There n'is no werkman, whatsoere he be,
That may both werkin well and hastily,
This woll be don at lesure perfetely,
It is na force how longe that we play,
I trow in wedlok coupiid ben we tway,
And blessid be the yoke that we ben in,
For in our Actis we may do no sinn.
A man may do no sinn with his own wife,
Ne hurtin himself with his ownè knife,
Now we han leve to play us by the law.

Thus labourith he till the day gan daw.
Than takith he a fopp of fine clarie,
And upright in his bedd than sittith he.
And aftir he singith full loud and clere,
And kist his wife, and makith wanton chere,
He was all Coltish full of ragerie,
And full of gergon as a fleckid Pie.
The slakè Skin about his nekkè shakith
While that he song, so chauntith he and crakith.
But God wot what May thoughtin in her hert,
Whan she him saw upsitting in his Shert,
In his night capp, and with his nekk all lene,
She praisith not his playing worth a bene.
That seide he thus, my resting woll I take,
Now day is come, I may no lengir wake.
And down he laid his hedd and slept till prime,
And aftirward whan that he saw his time
Upristh January. But freshe May
Holdith her chambir unto the fourth day
As usage is of Wivis for the best:
For every labour sometime mote have rest,
Or ellis long time may he not endure.
That is to sayin no living cature
Be it or fish, or beste, or bird, or man.

Now woll I speke of wofull Damian,
That langurith for love, as ye shull here.
Therefore I speke to him in this manere.
I say, o fely Damian alas!
Answere to this demand as in this case,
How shalt thou to thy lady freshe May Tellin thy wo? She woll alwey say nay.
Eke if thou speke, she woll thy wo bewray;
God be thine help, I can no bettir say.

This sike Damian in Venus fire
So brennith, that he dyith for desire;
For which he put his life in aventure,
No lengir might he in this wise endure.
But privily a pennir gan he borow,
And in a lettir wrote he all his sorow,
In mannir of a Compleint or a lay,
Unto this feire and freshe lady May,
And in a purse of silk hong on his Shert
He hath it put, and laid it at his hert.

The Mone, that at nonetide that ilke day
(That January' had weddid freshe May)
Out of Taurus was into Cancer gliden,
So longe hath she in her chambir biden,
As Custom is unto these noblis all,
A bride shall not etin in the Hall,

Till dayis four othir thre at the leste
Ypassid ben, then let her go to feste.

On the fourth day complete fro none to none,
Whan that the highè Mass was now ydone, 1410
In hallè satt this January' and May,
As freshe as is the brightè Sommer's day.
And so befell how that this gode Man
Remembrith him upon his Damian,
And seide, St. Mary! how may this be
That Damian entendith not to me?
Is he ay sike? or how may this betide?
His Squiris, which that stodin him beside,
Excusid him becaufe of his sikeness,
Which lettid him to do his besines. 1420
None othir Cause might makin him tary.

That me forthinkith, qð this January,
He is a gentill Squyir by my trouth,
If that he dyed it were grette harme and routh,
He is as wise, discrete, and as secre
As any man I wote of his degre,
And thereto manly, and eke servisable,
And forto ben a thrifty man right able.
But aftir mete as sone as evre' I may
I woll my self him visit, and eke May, 1430
To don him al the comfort that I can.
And for that word him blessid every man,
That of his bounty, and his gentilness
He wold so comfortin in his sikeness
His Squyir, for it was a gentil dede.

Dame, qð this January, take gode hede
That aftir mete, ye and your wymen all
Whan ye han ben in chambir out of hall,
That ye all gon to see this Damian,
Doth him disport, he is a gentill Man, 1440
And tellith him, that I woll him visite
Have I nothing but restid me a lite.
And spede you fast, for I wollin abide
Till that ye slepin fast here by my side.
And with that word he gan to him to call
A Squyir, that was Marshall of his hall,
And told him certeine thingis that he wold.

This freshe May hath streight her wey yhold
With all her wymen unto Damian,
And by his bedd'is side down sat she than, 1450
Comforting him as godely as she may.

This Damian, whan that he his time say,
In secret wise his purse, and eke his bill, (In the which he had writtin all his will)
Hath put into her hond withoutin more,
Save that he sighid wondrous depe and fore,
And softly to her right thus sayid he,
Mercy, and that ye discovir nat me,
For I am dede, if that this thing be kid.
This purse hath she within her bosome hid, 1460
And went her wey, ye get no more of me,

But unto January come is she,
And on his bedd'is side she satt full soft,
He takith her, and kisth her full oft,
And lay'd him down to slepe, and that anon
She fainid her as tho' that she must gon
There as ye wot, that every wight hath nede,
And whan she of this bill hath takin hede,
She rent it all to cloutis, and at last
Into the privy softly she it cast. 1470

Who studyith now but faire freshe May?
Adoun by old January she lay,
That slept, till that the cough hath him awaked,
Anon he pray'd her to stripp her all naked,
He wold of her, he seid, have some plesaunce,
And seid, her clothis did him encombraunce.
And she obeyith, be she lese or lothe;
But lest that precious folk be with me wroth,
How that he wrought I dare not to you tell,
Or if she thought it Paradise or Hell. 1480

But

But I shall let them werkin in their wife,
Till Evefong ring, and that they must arise.

Were it by destiny, or aventure,
Were it by influence, or by nature
Of Constellation, that in soche estate
The hevin stode that timè fortunate,
(Was for to put a bill of Venus werkes,
For al thing hath a time, as sayin Clerkes)
To any womman for to get her love,
I cannot say; but the grete God above,
That knowith that no act is causeles,
Demith of all; for I woll hold my pece.

But soth is this, how that this freshe May Hath takin soch empreffion that day
Of pite of this sike Damian,
That from her herte she ne drivin can
The remembraunce for to doin him ese.
Certein thought she, whom that this thing displese,
I reke not, for of this I him assure,
I lovin him best of any cature,
Although he no more haddin than his Shert.

Lo! pite rennith sone in gentill hert.
Here you may se how excellent Franchise
In wymen is, whan they them nar' avise.
Some Tiraunt is, as there ben many one,
That hath a hert as hard as any stone,
Which wold have let him stervin in the place,
Well rathir than have grauntid him that grace,
And her rejoisid in her cruill pride,
And rekid not to ben an homicide.

This gentill May, fillid of all pite,
Right so of her hond a lettir wrote she,
In which she grauntid him her very grace,
There lakkith nought but only time and place,
Where that she mightin to his lust suffise,
For it shall be right as he woll devise.

And whan she saw her time upon a day,
To visite Damian goth this faire May,
And sotilly this letter down she thrust
Undir his pillow, rede it if him lust,
She toke him by the hond, and hard him twist,
So secretly, that no wight of it wist,
And bid him ben all whole, and forth she went,
To January, whan he for her sent.

Uprifith Damian the next morow,
Al passed is his sikeness, and his sorow,
He kembith him, and promith him, and piketh,
And doth all that his lady list and liketh.
And eke to January he goth as low
As evir did a dogge for the bow,
He is so plesant unto every man,
For craft is allè, whofo that it can,
That every wight is faine to speke him gode,
And fully in his lady's grace he stode.
Thus lete I Damian about his nede,
And in my tale right forth woll I procede.

Some Clerkis holdin that felicite
Stont in delite, and therefore certein he,
This nobill January with all his might,
In honest wife as longith to a Knight,
Shope him to livin full deliciously,
His housing, his array, as honestly
To his degre, was makid as a kinges;
And among othir of his honest thinges
He had a gardin wallid all with stone,
A fairer garden wote I no where none,
For out of dout I verily suppose
That he that wrote the Romaunt of the Rose
Ne couth of it the bewte well devise,
Ne Priapus ne mightin not suffice,
Though he be God of gardins, for to tell
The bewte of the gardin and the well,
That stont undir a laurere alwey grene,
Full oftin time King Pluto and his Quene

Proserpina, and allè her fayrie
Disportin them, and makin melodie
About that well, and dauncid as men told.

This nobil Knight, this January the old,
Soch deinty hath in it to walk and play
That he woll suffir no wight bare the kay, 1560
Save he himself, and for the smale wicket
He barin alwey of silver a Cliket,
With which, whan he him list he wold unshet,
And whan that he wold pay his wife her dett
In Somir seson, thithir wold he go,
And May his wife, and no wight but they two,
And thingis which that were not don abed,
They in that gardin perfourmid and sped.
And in this wise many a mery day
Livid this January and this freshe May; 1570
But worldly joy may not alwey endure
To January, ne to no cature.

O sodein hap! O fortune unstable!
Like to the Scorpion decevable,
That flat'rist with thy hede whan thou wolt sting,
Thy taile is dethe through thy envenoming.
O brotill joie! O swete poison queint!
O Monster, that so sodeinly canst peint
Thy gilts undir the hew of stedfastness,
That thou decevist both the more and less! 1580
Why hast'ow January thus deceived?
And haddist him for thy full frend received,
And now thou hast biraft him both his eyn,
And he for sorow desirith to dyen.

Alas this nobil January so fre!
He wepith and he wailith pitously,
Amid his lust, and his prosperity
Is woxin blind, and that all sodeinly,
His deth therefore desireth he uttirly;
And therewithal the fire of jelousie 1590
(Lest that his wife shold fall in some foly)
So brent his herte, that he woldin faine
That some man bothè him and her had slaine!

For ne astir his deth, ne in his life
Ne wold he that she werin love ne wife,
But evir live a widdow in wedes blake,
Sole, as the turtle that hath lost her make.
But at the last astir a month or rway
His sorow gan to swage, the soth to say,
For whan he wist it might none othir be, 1600
He paciently toke his adverfity:
Save out of all dout may he not forgone
That he was jelous evirmore in one,
Which jelousy was so outrageous,
That ne in Hall, ne in none othir house,
Ne in none othir place, nevir the mo
He n'old suffir her nothir ride ne go,
But if that he had hond on her alwey,
For which full oftin wepith freshe May,
That lovith Damian so benignly, 1610
That she mote either dyin sodeinly,
Or els mote she have him all at her left,
She waitith whan her hert sholdin to brest.

Upon that othir side, this Damian
Becomin is the sorowfullist man
That evir was, for neither night ne day
Ne might he speke a word to freshe May,
As to his purpose, of no such matere,
But if that January must it here,
That had a hand upon her evirmo. 1620
But nathèless by writing to and fro
And privy signis wist he what she ment,
And she knew all the signes of his entent.
O January! what might it The availle
Thou mightest se as ferr as Shippis saile?
For as gode is a blind decevid be,
As be decevid whan a Man may se.

Lo!

Lo! Argus which that had an hundrid eyen,
For all that evir he couth pore and pryn,
Yet was he blent, and God wote so ben mo, 1630
That wenin wisly that it n'is not so.
Pafs ovir is an ese, and say no more.

This freshe May, of which I speke of yore,
In warm wax hath imprintid thilkè cliket,
That January bare of that smale wicket,
By which into his gardin oft he went,
And Damian, that knew all her entent,
The Cliket counterfitted privily.
There n'is no more to say, but hastily
Some wonder by this Cliket shall betide, 1640
Which ye shall herein, if ye woll abide.

O Noble Ovid! Soth sayst thou, God wote,
What sight is it, if love be long and hote,
That he n'll find it out in some manere?
By Pyramus and Thisbe men may lere;
Though they were kept full long streight ovir all,
They ben accordid rowning through a wall;
There n'is no wight couth find out soch a sight.
But now to purpose; ere the dayis eight
Were passid, er' the Month July befill, 1650
That January hath caught so grete a will Through egging of his wife him for to play
In his gardin, and no wight but them twey,
That in a morow to this May said he,
Rise up my wife, my love, my Lady fre,
The turtle voice is herd, my lady swete,
Wintir is gon with all his rainis wete,
Come forth now with thyn eyin columbine,
How fairer ben thy brestis than is wine!

The gardin is enclosid all about, 1660
Come forth my white spouse, out of allè dout
Thou hast me woundid in my hert, o wife,
No spot in The there n'as, in all thy life,
Come forth, and let us takin our disport,
I chese The for my Wife, and my Confort.
Such oldè lewd wordis than usid he;
And unto Damian a sign made she,
That he shold go before with his cliket;
This Damian hath opened this wicket,
And in he stert, and that in soche manere, 1670
That no wight might it se, nor might it here.
And still he satt undir a bush anon;
This January as blind as is a stone,
With May in his hondè, and no wight mo,
Into his freshe Gardin is he go,
And clappid to the Wicket sodeinly.

Now wife, qð he, there n'is but thou and I,
Thou art the cature that I best do love,
For by that Lord, that sitt in Heven above,
I had moche levir dyin on a knife, 1680
Than The offendin, my dere and trew wife;
For Godd'is sake, think how that I The chese,
Nought for no Covetise of godes douteles,
But only for the love I had to The;
And though that I be old, and may not se,
Be to me trew, and I woll tell you why,
Certis thre thingis shall ye win thereby.

First love of Crist, and to your self honour,
And all mine heritage both toun and toure,
I give it you, make chartirs as ye list,
This shall be don to morow er Summe rift. 1690
So wisely God my Soule bringin to blifs;
I pray you on this Cov'enant ye me kifs,
And that I be jelouse wite me nought,
Ye ben so depe imprintid in my thought,
That whan I do consider your bewte,
And therewithall th'unlikely eld of me,
I may not certis, though I sholdin dye
Forbere to ben out of your Company,
For very love; this is withoutin dout;
Now kisse me wife, and let us rome about.

This freshe May, whan she these wordis herd,
Benignly to January answer'd,
But first and forward she began to wepe,
I havin, qð she, a soule for to kepe,
As well as ye, and also mine honour,
And also of wivehode thilk tendir flour,
Which that I have ensurid in your hond,
Whan that the preste to you my body bond.
Wherefore I woll answer in this manere, 1710
By the gode leve of you my Lord so dere.

I pray to God, that nevir daw that day,
That I ne sterve, as soule as woman may,
If evir I do to my kinn that shame,
Or els that I empairin so my name,
That I be false, and if I do that lak,
Do stripe me, and put me in a sak,
And in the next river do me to drench.
I am a gentilwoman, and no wench,
Why speke ye thus! but Men ben aye untrew, 1720
And wymen have reprofe of you aye new,
Ye can none othir communing, I leve,
But speke to us of untruff and repreve.

And with the word she saw where Damian
Sat in the bush, and knele he began,
And with her fingers signis madin she
That Damian shold climb upon a tre,
That chargid was with frute, and up he went,
For verily he knew all her entent,
And every sign that she couth ymake, 1730
Well bett than January her own make.
For in a letter she had told him all
Of this matere how that he worchin shall.
And thus I let him sittin in the pery,
And January and May roming full mery.

Bright was the day, and blew the firmament,
Phœbus of gold doun hath his stremis sent,
To gladin every flour with his warmnes,
He was that time in Gemini I ghes,
But littil fro his declination 1740
Of Cancer Jovis exaltation.
And so bifell in that bright morow tide,
That in the gardin on that farthir side
Dan Pluto that is the King of Fayrie,
And many' a lady in his Company,
Following his wife the quene Proserpina,
Which he ravished out of Sicilia
Eche aftir othir right as on a line,
While that she gað'rid flouris in a Mede, 1750
In Claudian ye may the story rede,
How in his grisly Cart he did her sett.

This King of fayrie adoun him hath sett,
Upon a bench of Turvis fresh and grene.
And right anon thus seide he to his quene;
My wife, qð he, that no wight may say nay,
The' experience so provith every day
The treson, which that woman doth to man;
Ten hundrid thousand storys tell I can,
Notable of your untrouth, and brotilnes.

O Salamon richist of all riches, 1760
Fulfillid of Sapience, and worldly glory,
Full worthy ben thy words of Memory,
To every wight that wit and reson can,
Thus praisith he the bounty of a Man.

Among a thousand Men yet found I one,
But of all wymen found I nevir none.
Thus saith that King that knew your wikidnes.
And Jesus filius Sirach as I ghesse
Ne spekith of you but feld reverence.
A wildè fire, a corrupt pestilence 1770
So fall upon your bodys yet to night.
Ne se you not this honourable Knight,
Bicause alas! that he is blind and old,
His ownè Man shall makin him Cokold.

1700

U

Lo

Lo where he sitt the lechour in the tre!
Now woll I grauntin of my Majesty
Unto this old and blind and worthy Knight,
That he shall han ayen his eyin sight,
Whan that his wife wold don him villony,
Than shall he knowin all her harlotry,
Both in represe of her and othir mo.

Ye shall, qð Proserpine, and woll ye so?
Now by my Moðir's Ceres soule I swere
I shall give her sufficient answere,
And allè wymen astir for her sake,
That though they were in any gilt ytake,
With face bold they shullin themselves excuse,
And bere them down that wolde them accuse.
For lak of aniwere none of them shall dyen,
All had ye se the thing with both your eyen, 1790
Yet shall we so visage it hardily
And wepe, and chide, and swere so sotilly,
That ye shullin ben as lowde as gees.
What rekith me of your Authorities?
I wote well that this Jew, this Solomon,
Fond of us wymen folis many one,
But though that he ne fond no gode woman,
Yet hath there yfond many' anothir man,
Wymen full trew, full gode, full vertuous,
Witness of those that dwell in Christ's house, 1800
With Martyrdome they provid their Constaunce;
And Romain Gestis makin remembraunce
Of many' a verrey trewe wife also,
But Sir ne be nought wroth all be it so,
Though that he said he fond no gode woman,
I pray you take the sentence of the Man,
He mentè thus, that in Sov'raigne bounte
N'is none but God that sit in Trinite.

Eye, for verrey God that ne is but one.
What makin ye so moche of Solomon? 1810
What though he made a temple Godd's house?
What though he werin rich and gloriouse?
So made he eke a temple of false Goddis,
How might he don a thing that more forbod is?
Parde, as faire as ye his name emplaister,
He was a Lechour, and an Idolalter,
And in his eld the very God forsoke,
And if that God ne had, as faith the boke,
Sparid him for his faðir's sake, he shold
Have lostin his reign sonir than he wold. 1820
I sett right nought of all the Villony
That ye of wymen write a butterfly.
I am a woman, nedis mote I speke,
Or ellis swell till that my hert to breke.
For sith he said that we ben jangleris,
As evir mote I brouke both my tressis,
I shall not sparin for no curtisy
To speke them harm that wold us villony.

Dame, qð this Pluto, be no lengir wroth,
I give it up, but sith I swore mine oth, 1830
That I wold grauntin him his sight ayein,
My word shall stond, that warne you I certein:
I am a King, it sett me not to lie,
And I, qð she, the quene am of fairie,
Her answer she shall have I undirtake.
Than let us no mo wordis hereof make,
Forsothe I woll no lengir you contrary.

Now let us turn again to January,
That in this gardin with this faire fresh May 1840
Singith merryir than the Popingay,
You love I best, and shall, and othir none;
So long about the Alleys is he gone,
Till he was comin against thilk pery,
Whereas this Damian sittith full mery,
On high emong this freshe levis grene.
This faire fresh May, that is so bright and shene,
Gan for to sike, and said alas my side!
Now Sir, qð she, for ought that may betide

I must have of these peres that here I se,
Or I mote dyin, so fore longith me 1850
To etin of the smale peris grene.
Help for her love that is of Hevin quene!
I tell you well a woman in my plight
May have to frute so grete an appetite,
That she may dyin but that she it have.

Alas! qð he, that I ne' had here a knave,
That couð climbin, alas! alas! qð he,
For I am blind. Ye, Sir, no force, qð she,
But woldin ye vouchsafe for Godd's sake 1860
The pery in your armis for to take,
For well I wote that ye mistrustin me,
Then wold I climbin well ynow, qð she,
So I my fote might sett upon your bak.
Forsoth, said he, in me shall be no lak,
Might I you helpin with mine hert's blode.
He stoupith doune, and on his bak she stode,
And caught her by a twist, and up she goth.
(Ladys, I pray you that ye be not wroth,
I cannot glose, for I am a rude Man)

And sodeinly anon this Damian 1870
Gan pullin up the smok, and in he throng
A grete tent, and a thrifty, and a long,
She seide, it was the meryist fit
That evir in her life she was at yet;
My Lord's tent servith me nothing thus,
It foldith twifold by swete Jesus,
He may not swivin nothing worth a leke,
And yet he is full gentil and full meke:
This is levir to me than Evin song.

And whan that Pluto had sene this grete wrong, 1880
To January he gave again his sight,
And made him se as well as er he might.
And whan that he had caught his sight againe,
Ne was there nevir man of thing so faine,
But on his wife his thought was evirmo,
Up to the tre he cast his eyin two,
And saw how Damian his wife hath dressed
In soche mannir it may not ben expressed,
But if I wold spekin uncurtily. 1890
And up he gaf a roring and a crie,
As doth the Moðir whan the child shall die,
Out, help, alas! harrow, he gan to crie,
For sorow almost he began to die,
That his wife was swivid in the pery.

O strongè lady hore, what doist thou?
And she answerid, Sir, what aylith you?
Have pacience and refon in your mind,
I have you holpin of both your eyen blind,
Up perill of my soule I shall not lien,
As me was taught to help you to your eyen, 1900
Was nothing bettir for to make you se
Than stroggle with a man upon a tre.
God wote I did it in full gode entent.

Stroggle, qð he, ye algate in it went
As stiff, and eke as round as any bell,
It is no wondir though thy belly swell,
Thy smok upon his brest it lay so theche,
That still methought he pointid on the breche:
God geve you both on sham's deth to dien,
He swivid The, I saw it with mine cyen, 1910
Or ellis be I hongid by the halfe.

Than is, qð she, my Medicinè false,
For certainly if that ye mightin se,
Ye wold nat say these wordis unto me.
Ye han some glimm'ring, and no perfite sight.

I se, qð he, as well as er' I might,
Thonkid be God, with both myn eyin two,
And by my trouth methought he did The so.

Ye Masin, ye Masin, gode Sir, qð she,
This thank have I for that I made you se!
Alas, qð she, that evre' I was so kind!

Now Dame, qð he, let all pafs out of mind,
Come

Come doune my lefe, and if I have misfaid,
God help me so as I am ill apaid.
But by my fað'ris soule I wend to have sene
How that this Damian had with The lien,
And that thy smok had lyn upon his brest.

Ye Sir, qð she, ye may wene as ye left;
But, Sir, a man that wakith out of slepe
He may not sodeinly well takin kepe
Upon a thing, ne se it perfutely,
Tyll that he be adawid verily.
Right so a Man, that long hath blindè be,
Ne may not sodeinly so well yse
First whan the sight is newcomin ageine,
As he that hath a day or two ysene,

1930

Till that your sight establisthed be a while,
There may full many a sight you begyle.
Beware, I pray you, for by hevin King
Full many' a man wenith to se a thing,
And it is all anothir than it semith,
He that misconceivith full oft misdemith.
And with that word she lept down fro the tre;
This January, who is glad but he?
He kissith her, he clepith her full oft,
And on her womb he strokith her full soft,
And to his paleis home he hath her lad.
Now, gode Men, I pray you, beth ye all glad;
Thus endith now my Tale of January,
God blefs us all and his Moðir Mary.

1950

1950

Thus endith the MARCHAUNT's TALE.

The

Here followeth the Wife of BATH's PROLOGUE.

EXperience, though none Authority
Were in this world, is right ynow for me,
To speke of wo that is in Mariage;
For, Lordings, sith I twelve yere was of age,
Thankid be God, that is eterne on live,
Husbondes at Chirch dore have I hadde five,
For I so oftin have yweddid be.
And all were worthy men in their degre.
But me was told not long ago, I wifs,
That sithin Crist went nevir but onis
To wedding in the Cane of Galile,
That by the ilk ensample taught he me,
That I ne shold weddid be but onis;
Lo! herk here a sharp word for the nonis,
Beside a Well Jesu both God and Man
Speke in represe of the Samaritan.
Thou hast haddè five husbondis, qð he,
And that ilke Man which that now hath The
Is not thy husbond; thus seid he certeine,
But what he ment thereby I cannot saine.
Well! but I ask a point; why the fift man
Was none husbond to the Samaritan?
How many might she have in Mariage?
Yet herd I nevir tellin in mine age
Upon this numbir true definitioun,
Men may devine; and glosin up and doune;
But well I wote expres withoutin lye,
God bad us for to wex and multiplie.
That gentle text can I well undirstond,
Eke well I wote he said that mine husbond
Shold leve faðir, moðir, and take to me,
But of none numbir mentioun made he,
Of Bigamy or of Octogamy,
Why shold men spekin of it villony?
Loke here the wise Man King Salomon!
I trow that ' had wivis mo than one,

As woldè God it lefull were to me,
To be refreshid half so oft as he,
Which gest of God had he for all his wivis,
No man hath soche, that in this world on live is. 40
God wote, this nobil King, as to my wit,
The first night had many a mery fit,
With eche of them so well was him alive.
Blessid be God that I have weddid five,
Welcome the sixt whan that evir he shall,
For sith I may not kepe me chaste in all, 10
Whan my husbond is fro the world ygon,
Some christin man shull weddè me anon.
For than th' Apostle saith that I am fre
To wedde a God's half where it likith me. 50
He saith that to be weddid is no sinne,
Bettir 'tis to be weddid than to brinne.
What rekith me, though folk say villony
Of shrewd Lamech, and of his bigamy?
I wot Abraham was a holy man,
And Jacob eke, as ferr as I here can,
And eche of them had wivis mo than two,
And many othir holy man also.
Where can you say in any manir age 60
That evir God defendid mariage
By exprefs words? I pray you tellin me,
Or where commaundid he virginite?
I wote as well as ye it is no drede,
Th' Apostle, whan he spake of Maidinhede,
He seidè thereof precept had he none,
Men may counsaile a woman to ben one, 30
But counsailling is no commaundement;
He put it in our ownè juggement.
For haddè God commaundid Maidinhede
Than had he dampnid wedding out of drede. 70
And certis if there were no fede yfow,
Virginitie, than whereof shold it grow?

Poule

Poule ne durst not commaundin at the lest
 A thing, of which his Maistir gafe non hest.
 The dart is set up for Virginite,
 Catch whofo may, who rennith best let se.
 But this word is not take of every wight,
 But there as God list geve it of his might.
 I wote well the Apostel was a Maid,
 But nathelès though that he wrote and saide
 He wold that every wight were soch as he;
 Al n'is but counsaile to Virginite.
 And for to ben a wife he gafe me leve
 Of Indulgence, so n'is it to repreve
 To wedde me, if that my Makè dy,
 Without exception of Bigamy.
 Al were it gode no woman for to touch,
 He ment as in his bed, or on his couch:
 Perill is for fire and tow to assemble,
 Ye know what this ensample may resemble.
 This is the Al, he held Virginity
 More profitith than wedding in freilte.
 Freilte clepe I, but if that he and she
 Wold ledin all their life in chastite.
 I graunt it well, and I have none envy
 Though Maidinhede preferr to Bigamy.
 It them likith to ben clene body' and ghost,
 Of mine estate I n'll makin no bost.
 For well ye know a lord in his household
 Hath not evèry Veffil all of gold.
 Some ben of tre, and don their Lord servise,
 God clepith folk to him in sondry wise,
 And everich hath of God a propir gift,
 Some this, and some that, as him listith shift.
 Virginity is grete perfection,
 And Continance eke with devocion.
 But Crist that of perfection is well,
 Bad not every wight he shold go and sell
 All that he had, and geve it to the pore,
 And in soch wise follow him and his lore.
 He spake to them that wold live parsitely,
 And Lordings, by your leve that am not I;
 I woll bestow the flour of all myn age
 In th' Actis and the frute of Mariage.
 Tell me also to what Conclusioun
 Were members made of generacioun?
 And of so parsite wise, and why ywrought?
 Trustith right well they were not made for nought,
 Glose whofo woll, and sayin up and doun
 That they were makid for purgacioun
 Of Urine, and soch othir thingis smale,
 And eke to know a female from a male
 And for non othir cause: what say ye no?
 Experience wote well it is not so,
 So that the Clerkis be not with me wroth,
 I say that they were ymakid for both;
 This is to sain, for office and for ese
 Of engendring, there we not God displese.
 Why shold men ellis in their bokis sett
 That man shold yeldin to his wife her dett?
 Now wherewith shuldin he make his payment,
 If he ne us'd his sely instrument?
 Then were they makid upon a Creture
 To purge Urine, and eke for engendrure.
 But I say not that every wight is hold,
 That hath soch harneis as I to you told,
 To gon and usin them to engendrure,
 Then shuld men take of chastity no cure,
 Crist was a Maid, and shapin as a Man,
 And many' a Seint sithin the world began,
 Yet livid they in parsite chastite,
 I n'll not vye with no virginite.
 Let them with brede of purist whete be fed,
 And let us wivis ete our barly bred.
 And yet with barly bred Mark tell us can,
 Our Lord Jesu refreshid many' a Man.

In soche a state as God hath clepid us
 I woll persevere, I n'am precious,
 In wivehode woll I use mine instrument
 As frely as my makir hath it lent. 150
 If I be daungerous God geve me sorow,
 Myn husbond shall it have both eve and morow,
 That whan him list come forth and pay his dett,
 An husbond woll I have, I woll not let, 80
 Which shall be both my dettour, and my thrall,
 And have his tribulatioun withall,
 Upon his flesh, while that I am his wife,
 I have the powir during all my life
 Upon his propir body, and not he,
 Right thus the Apostel taught unto me, 160
 And bad our husbonds for to love us well,
 All this sentence me likith every dell.
 Up stert the Pardoner, and that anon,
 90 Now Dame, qð he, by God and by St. John
 Ye ben a noble prechir in this case.
 I was about to wed a wife, alas!
 What shold I buy it on my flesh so dere?
 Yet had I levir wed no wife two yere.
 Abide, qð she, my tale is not begon;
 Nay thou shalt drinkin of anothir ton, 170
 Er that I go, shall favir worse than Ale,
 And whan that I have toldè forth my tale
 Of tribulatioun in Mariage,
 100 Of which I am expert in all myn age,
 This is to say my self hath ben the whip,
 Than mayst'ow chese The wheðir thou wolt sip
 Of thilkè ton, that I shall set abroch,
 Beware of it er thou to nere aproch,
 For I shall tell ensamplis mo than ten,
 Whofo woll not beware by othir men, 180
 By him shall othir men correctid be,
 These same wordis writith Dan Ptolome.
 Rede in his Almagest, and take it there.
 110 Dame I wold pray you, if yout will it were,
 Seidè this Pardoner, as ye began
 Tellith forth your tale, and spare for no man,
 And techin us yong men of your praktike,
 Gladly, qð she, if that it may you like.
 But that I pray to all this Cumpany,
 If that I speke aftir my fantasy, 190
 As take it not a grese of that I say,
 For mine entent is not but for to play.
 Now Sirs, then shall I tellin forth my tale,
 120 As evir mote I drinkin wine or ale
 I shall say soth. Of husbonds that I had Thre of them werin gode, and two were bad.
 The thre that were gode men were rich and old,
 Unnethis mightin they the Statute hold
 In which they were ybondin unto me,
 Ye wot well what I mene of this Parde. 200
 As God me help, I laugh whan that I think
 How pitously a night I made them swink.
 But by my fay, I told it of no store,
 130 They had me geve their londs, and their trefore,
 Me nede no kengir to do diligence
 To win their love and do them revèrence.
 They lovid me so well, by God above,
 That I ne told no dainty of their love,
 A wife woman woll besy her anion
 To gettin their love, there as she hath none. 210
 But sith I had them wholly in mine hond,
 And that they had gevin me all their lond,
 What shold I takin kepe them for to plesse,
 140 But if it were for my profit and ese?
 I sette them a work so, by my fay,
 That many night they songin welaway.
 The bacon was not fett for them I trow
 That some men have in Essex at Donmowe.
 I governed them so well aftir my law,
 That eche of them full blisfull was, and saw, 220
 X To

To bringè me gay thingis fro the fayre,
They were full faire, whan that I spoke them faire,
For God it wot I chid them spitously.
Now herk'nith how I bere me propirly.

Ye wise wivis that can undirstonde,
Thus shall ye speke, and berin them on honde,
For half so boldily there can no man
Swerin and lyin as a woman can.

I say not this by wivis that ben wise,
But if it be whan they them misavise,
A wife wife shall, if that she can her gode,
Berin them in hond that the Cow is wode,
And takith witness of her owne Maide
Of her assent, but herk'nith how I saide.

Sir old Keynarde, is this then thyne aray,
Why doth my neighbour's wife gon so gay?
She is honourid ovr' all where she goth.
I sett at home, I have no thrifty cloth.

What dost thou Sirra, at my neighbours house?
Is she so fair? art thou so amorous?
What rownst'ow with our maid? benedicite!
Sir old lechour, letin thy japis be.

And if I have a gossip, or a frend
Withoutin gilt, thou chidist as a fend,
If that I walk or play unto his house.
Thou commist home as dronkin as a mouse,

And prechist on thy bench with evil prefe
Thou feist to me it is a grete mischefe
To weddin a pore woman for costage,
And if that she be rich of high parage,

Then saist thou 'tis a very turmentry
To suffir her pride and melancolie;
And if that she be fair, thou very knave,
Thou saist that every hollour woll her have.

She may no while in chastity abide,
That is assailid upon everich side.
Thou saist some folk desire us for riches,
Some for our shape, and some for our faireness,

And some for she can either sing or daunce,
Some for gentilness, some for daliaunce,
Some for their hondis and their armis smale.
Thus goth all to the devil by thy tale.

Thou saist men may not kepe a Castil Wall,
It may so long assailid ben ovre' all.
And if that she be foule, thou saist that she Covitith every man that she may se.

For as a Spaniell she woll on him lepe,
Till that she find some man that woll her chepe.
Ne none so grey a gosse goeth there in Lake,
As sayst'ow, that woll ben without her Make.

And saist it is a hard thing for to weld
A wight, that no man woll his thankis held.
Thus saist thou Lorell whan thou gost to bed
That no wise man nedith for to wed,

Ne no man that entendith unto heven;
With wilde thondir dent, and fire leven
Motè thy wikid neke be all to broke;
Thou saist that dropping housis, and eke smoke,

And chiding wivis makin men to fle
Out of their own housis; ah benedicite!
What ailith soch an old man for to chide?
Thou saist we wivis woll our vicis hide

Till we be weddid, then we will them shew.
Well may this be a proverb of a shrew.
Thou saist that oxin, assin, horse and hounds
They ben assayid all at diverse stounds,

Basins and lavers, er that men them bye,
Sponis, stolis, and all soche husbondry,
And so be pottis, clothis, and arays,
But folk of wivis makin none assays,

Till they be weddid, oldè dotard shrew,
And sayst how than we woll our vicis shew.
Thou saist also that it displeisith me,
But if that thou wilt praisin my bewte,

And but thou pore alwey upon my face,
And clepin me faire Dame in every place;
And but thou make a fest on that ilk day
That I was born, and make me fresh and gay;
And but thou don to my nourice honour,
And unto my chambir within my bour,

And to my ta'cr's folk and his allies,
Thus sayist thou, old barrill full of lies.
And again of our Apprentise Jenkin,
For his crisp here shining as gold so fine,

And for he squirith me both up and doun,
Hast thou ycaught a false suspectioun,
I n'll him not, though thou were dede to morow;
But tell me this, why hidist thou with sorow
The keyis of thy chest away from me?

It is myn gode as well as thyne parde.
Wenst'ow to make an Idiot of our Dame?
Now by the Lord that callid is St. Jame,
Thou shalt not both although thou werin wode
Be Maistir of my body and my gode.

That one thou shalt forgon maugre thyn eyen.
What helpith on me to' enquere or spien.
I trow thou woldist lok me in thy chest.
Thou shuldist say, wife go where as The list,
Take your disport, I woll leve no talis,

I know you for a gode wife, Dame Alis.
We love no man that takith kepe or charge
Where that we go; we woll ben at our large.
Of allè men yblessid mote he be
The wise Astrologir Dan Ptolome,

That saith this Proverb in his Almagest,
Of allè men his wisdom is the best
That rekith not who hath the world in hond.
By this Proverb thou shalt wele undirstond,
Have thou ynow, what nede The reke or care

How merily that othir folk do fare?
For certis, oldè dotard, by your leve,
Ye shullin have queint right ynow at Eve.
He is to gret a niggard that woll werne
A man to light his candle' at his lanterne;

He shall have never the less light parde,
Have thou ynow, thou darist not plaine The.
Thou saist also, that if we make us gay
With clothis, or with precious aray,
That it is perill of our chastite.

And yet with wordis thou must enforce The,
And say these wordis in th' Apostle's name,
In habite made with chastite and shame
Ye wymen shold apparill you, qð he,
And not in tressid here, and gay perre,

As perle, ne with goldè, ne clothis rich.
Aftir the text, ne aftir the rubrich,
I woll not werch as mochill as a gnat.
Thou saidist als that I was like a Cat,
But whofo wold sengin the Catt's skinne,

Than woldè the Cat dwellin in his inne:
And if the Catt's skinne be slick and gay,
She n'll not dwell in house for half a day,
But forth she woll or any day be dawed,
To shew her skinn, and gon a Catrewawed.

This is to say, if I be gay, Sir Shrew,
I woll renn out my borill for to shew.
Sir oldè sole, what helpith The to spien?
Though thou play Argus with his hundrid eyen
To be my wardè corps as he can best,

In faith he shall not kepe me but me lest,
Yet couth I make his berd, so mote I the.
Thou sayist eke that there be thingis thre,
The which thinges gretely troublin all the erth,
And that no wight ne may endure the ferth.

O lese Sir Shrew, Jesu shortin thy life,
Yet prechist thou, and saist an hatefull wife
Rek'nid is for one of these mischauncis;
Ben there then none othir resembrauncis,

That

That ye may likin your parables to,
 But if a fely wife be one of tho?
 Thou lik'nist eke a woman's love to hell,
 To barrin lond, where watir may not dwell.
 Thou lik'nist it also to wildè fire,
 The more it brens, the more it hath desire
 To consume any thing that brent would be.
 Thou saist, right as wormis shendin a tre,
 Right so a wife destroyith her husbond,
 This knowin they that ben to wivis bond.
 Lordings, right thus as ye have undirstonde
 Bare I stilly myne old husbond on hond,
 That thus they seidin in their dronkinnesse,
 And all was false, but that I toke witnesse
 Of my man Jenkin, and my neice also.
 O Lord, the pyne I did them and the wo,
 And that full gilleles by Godd's swete pine,
 For as an horse I couth both bite and whine,
 I couth compleine though I were in the gilt,
 Or ellis oftintime I had ben spilt.
 Yet whofo to Mill comith first, first grint,
 I pleinid first, and so was our war stint.
 They were full glad t' excusin them full blive
 Of what they agilt nevir in their live.
 Of wenchis wold I berin them on hond
 Whan that for fike unnethis might they stond.
 Yet tiklid, I his herte, for that he
 Wenid I had of him so grete cheerte;
 I swore that all my walking out by night
 Was for to espy wenchis that he dight:
 Undir that colour had I mochill mirth.
 For all soch wit is give us in our birth,
 Deceipt, weping, spinning God hath ygive
 To wymen kindly while that they may live.
 And thus of o thing I may avaunt me,
 At th' end I had the best in ech degre
 By sight, or force, or by some othir thing,
 As by continuall murmur or grutching.
 Namely abedd had they mochill mischaunce;
 There wold I chide, and don them no plesaunce;
 I wold no lengir in the bed abide,
 If that I felt his arm ovir my side,
 Till he had made his ransom unto me;
 Then wold I let him do his nicete.
 And therefore every man this tale I tell,
 Wive whofo may, all bein for to sell,
 With empty honds men may no haukis lure;
 For winning wold I all his lust endure,
 And make me than a fainid appetite,
 And yet in bacon had I no delite,
 That made me that I evir wold him chide;
 For though the Pope had sittin him beside,
 I wold not sparin them at their own bord,
 For by my trouth I quit him word for word,
 As help me very God omnipotent,
 Though I right now should make my Testament;
 I ne him ow a word but it n'is quitt,
 I broughtin it about so by my witt,
 That they must give it up as for the best,
 Or ellis had we nevir ben at rest.
 For though he lokid as a wode lioun,
 Yet shold he fail of his Conclusioun.
 Than wold I say, now gode lese takin kepe,
 How mekily lokith Wilkin our Shepe,
 Come nere, my Spouse, and let me kifs your cheke,
 Ye sholdin be all pácient and meke,
 And havin a swete spicid Conscience,
 Sith ye so preche of Job's pácience,
 Suff'rith alwey sith ye so well can preche.
 And but ye do, certeine we shall you teche
 That it is raire to have a wife in pece
 One of us two mote obeyin doutlefs,
 And sithin a man is more resonable
 Than woman is, ye mote ben suffirable.

What elith you to grutch thus, and to grone?
 Is it for you wold have my queint alone?
 Why take it all, lo! have it every dell,
 Peter I shrew you but ye love it well,
 For if I woldè sell my bellè chose
 I couth walkin as fresh as any rose;
 But I woll kepin it for your own tothe;
 Ye be to blame by God I say you sothe. 450
 Soch mannir wordis haddè we on hond.
 Now woll I spekin of my fourth husbond.
 My fourth husbondè was a Revelour,
 This is to say he had a Paramour,
 And I was yong, and full of ragery,
 Stubbourn, and strong, and jollie as a Pie.
 Lord how couth I daunfin to an harp smale,
 And sing, I wis, as any Nightingale!
 Whan I had dronk a draught of swetè wine.
 Metellus the foule chorle and the swine; 460
 That with a staff biraft his wife her life
 For she dronk wine, though had I ben his wife,
 Ne shuld he nought have daumtid me fro drink.
 And astir wine of Venus must I think.
 All so sikir as cold engendrith hail
 A lico'rous Mouth must have a lecherous taile.
 In wymen vinolent is no defence.
 This knowin lechours by experience.
 But o Lord Crist! whan it remembrith me
 Upon my youth, and on my jollite, 470
 It tiklith me about the herte rote,
 Unto this day it doth my herte bote,
 That I have had my world as in my time,
 But Age alas! that all woll undermine,
 Hath me biraft my bewte and my pith
 Let go, farewell, the Devill go therewith.
 The flour is gon, there n'is no more to tell,
 The bran, as I best can, now mote I sell.
 But yet to be right mery wol I fond,
 Now forth to tellin of my fourth husbond. 480
 I say I had in my hert gret despite
 That he of any othir had delite,
 But he was quitt by God and by St. Joce,
 I madin him of the same wode a Croce,
 Not of my body in no foul manere,
 But certainly I madin folk soche chere
 That in his own grefe made I him to frie,
 For angir, and for very jelousie.
 By God, on erth I was his Purgatory,
 For which I hope his soule is now in glory. 490
 For God it wote he sat full oft and song
 Whan that his shoe full bittirly him wrong.
 For there was none save God and he that wist
 In many wise how sore that I him twist.
 He dyed whan I came fro Jerusalem,
 And lyith in grave undir the Rode beme.
 All ne is not his tomb so curious
 As was the Sepulture of Darius;
 Which that Apelles wrought so sotilly;
 It is but waste to bury preciously; 500
 Let him farewell, God geve his Soule gode rest:
 He is now in his grave and in his chest.
 Now of my fift husbondè woll I tell,
 God nevir lett his soul comin to Hell.
 And yet was he to me the moste shrew;
 That fele I on my ribbis all by rew,
 And evir shall unto my ending day.
 But in our bed he was so fresh and gay,
 And therewithal he couth so well me glose;
 Whan that he wold he had my bel e chose, 510
 That though he had me bere on every bone,
 He couthè winne agen my love anon.
 I trow I loved him the bett, for that he Was of his love so daungerous to me.
 We wymen have, if that I woll nor lie.
 In this straunge mattere a queint fantasy;

Waitid

Waitin what thing we may not lightly have Thereaftir all day woll we crie and crave,
Forbid us thing, and that desirin we,
Prefs on us hard, and then wollin we fle,
With daunger utter we all our chaffare,
Grete prefs at Markit makith dere the ware,
And to grete chepe is hold at littil price.
This knowith every woman that is wise.

My fift husbonde, God his soule blefs,
Which that I toke for love, and no richese,
He sometime was a Clerk in Oxinford,
And had left schole, and went at home to bord
With my gossip ydwelling in our tounne,
God have her soule, her name was Alisoune.

She knew my hert, and eke my privity
Bett than our Parish preest, so mote I the,
To her bewrayid I my Counsaile all,
For had my husbond pist against the wall,
Or done a thing that shold have cost his life,
To her and to anothir worthy wife,
And to my neice, the which I lovid well,
I wold have told his Counsaile every dell,
And so I did full oftin, God it wote,
That made his face full oftin rede and hote,
For very shame, and blamid him for he
Had told to me so grete a privite.

And so bifell it, that once in a Lent
So oftin time I to my Gossip went,
For evir yet I lovid to go gay,
And for to walk in March, Aprill, and May,
Fro hous to hous to harkin sondry tales,
That Jenkin Clerk, and my Gossip Dame Ales,
And I my self into the feldis went.

My husbond was at London all that Lent,
I had the bettir leysir for to play,
And for to se, and eke for to be seye
Of lusty folk, what wist I where my grace
Was shapin for to ben, or in what place?
Therefore made I my Visitations
To Vigilis and to Processions,
To prechings eke, and to Pilgrimagis,
To plays of Miracles, and Mariagis,
And werid on me my gay skarlit gites,
These wormis, ne these moughtis, ne these mites
Upon my parrill fret them nevre a dell,
And wost'ow why? for they were usid well.

Now woll I tell forth what happid to me;
I say that in the feldis walkid we,
Till trewly we haddin soche daliaunce
This Clerk and I, that of my purveiaunce
I speke to him, and seide how that he
If I were widow shold weddin me.
For certainly I say for no bostance,
Yet was I nevir without purveiance
Of Mariage, ne of othir thingis eke;
I hold a Mous'is wit not worth a leke
That hath but one hole for to stertin to,
And if that failin than is all undo.
I bare him on hond, he had chantid me,
My Dame taught me forsoth that forlilte,
And eke I said I mete of him all night,
He wold have slaine me as I lay upright,
And all my bedd was full of very blode,
And yet I hope that he shold do me gode,
For blode betok'nith gold, as I was taught;
And all was false, I dremid of him naught,
But as I folowed ay my Dam'is lore,
As well of that as othir thingis more.

But now Sir --- let me se --- what shall I saine?
Aha! by God I have my tale againe.
Whan that my fourth husbond was on the bere,
I wept algate and madin sory chere,
As wivis motin, for it is usage,
And with my kerchefe cov'rid my visage,

But for that I was purveid of a Make
I wept but small and that I undirtake.
To chirch was my husbond born on morow
With Neighboures that for him madin sorow.
And Jenkin eke our Clerk was one of tho,
As help me God, whan that I saw him go
Aftir the bere, methought he had a paire
Of leggis and of fete so clene, so faire,
That all my hert I gave unto his hold.
He was I trow but twenty winter old,
And I was forty, if I shall say sothe,
And yet I had alwey a Colt'is tothe.
Gaptoth't I was, and that became me well,
I had the print eke of Dame Venus sele.

As help me God, I was a lusty one,
And faire, and rich, and yong, and well bigon.
And trewly as my husbondes told me
I had the bestè queint that mightin be.
For certis I am full Venerian.

In feling, and my hert is Marcian.
Venus me gaf my lust and lic'rroufness,
And Mars gaf me my sturdie hardiness.
Mine ascendant was Taure, and Mars therein,
Alas! alas! that evir love were sinn.

I folowed ay mine inclination
By vertue of my Constellation,
That madin me that I couth not withdraw
My chambr' of Venus from a gode felaw.
Yet have I Mart'is mark upon my face,

And also in anothir privy place.
For God so wisse by my Salvation
I lovid nevir by discretion,
But evir folowid mine appetite,
All were he short, or long, or blak, or white,

I toke no kepe so that he likid me,
How pore he was, ne eke of what degre.
What shold I say? but at the Month'is end
This joly Clerk Jenkin, that was so hend,
Hath weddid me with grete solempnite.

And to him gaf I all the lond and fee
That evir was me geven theretofore.
But aftirward repentid me full fore.

He n'olde suffir nothing of my list,
But by God he smote onis with his fist,
For that I rent out of his boke a lese,
That of that stroke myn eris waxin dese.
Stubborn I was as is a lioness,

And of my tonge a very jangleress,
And walk I wold as I had done befor
Fro house to house, altho' he had it sworn.
For which full oftin timis wold he preche,

And me out of oid Roman gestis teche,
How that Sulpicius Gallus lest his wife,
And her forsoke for term of all his life
Nothing but for opin hede he her saye
Loking out at his dore upon a day.

Anothir Roman told he me by name,
That for his wire was at a Sommir game
Without his weting, he forsoke her eke.
And than wold he upon his Bible seke.

That ilke proverb of Ecclesiast,
Where he commaundith and forbiddith fast
Man shall not suffre' his wife roill about.

Than wold he sayin thus right out of dout,
*Whoso byldith his house all of Salows,
And prikith his blind horse ovir salows
And suff'ith his wife for to seche hallows,
Is worthy to ben honged on the gallows.*

But all for nought, I settè not an hawe,
Of his proverbis, ne of his old Sawe.

Ne wold I not of him correctid be,
I hate him that my vicis tellith me,
And so do mo of us, God wot, than I,
This made him wode with me, all uttirly,

I n'old

I n'old forbere him in no mannir caas.

Now woll I fay you sothe, by St. Thomas;
Why that I rent out of his boke a lefe,
For which he smote me that I was defe.
He had a boke, that gladly night and day,
For his disport he wold redin alway,
Yclepid Valerie and Theophrast,
At whichè boke he lough alwey full fast;
And eke there was a Clerk sometime in Rome,
A Cardinall, that hightin Seint Jerome,
That made a boke agenst Jovinian,
In which boke there was eke Tertullian,
Chrysippus, Trotula, and Helowis,
That was an Abbess nat ferr fro Paris.
And eke the Parables of Salomon,
Ovid's art, and bokis many one,
And all these were boundin in one Volome;
And every night and day was his Custome
(Whan he had leysir and vacatioun
From othir worldly Occupatioun)
To redin in this boke of wikid wivis,
He knew of them mo Legendis and livis
Than ben of gode wymen in the bible;
For trustith wele it is impossible
That any Clerk wold speke gode of wivis
But if it be of holy Seintis livis.
Ne of none othir woman ner' the mo,
Who paintith the Lion tellith me who?
By God if wymen haddin writtin Stories
As Clerkis han within their Oratories,
They wold have writt of Men more wikidness,
Than all the mark of Adam may redrefs.
The childrin of Mercury and Venus
Ben in their working full contrarious,
Mercury lovith wisdome and science,
And Venus lovith riot and dispence.
And for their diverse disposition
Eche fallith in other's exaltation.
And thus God wot Mercury' is desolate
In Piscis, where Venus is exaltate.
And Venus falls where Mercury is rais'd,
Therefore no Woman of no Clerk is prais'd.
The Clerk whan he is old, and may nought do
Of Venus werkis worth his olde shoe,
Than sit he doune, and write in his dotage
That wymen cannot kepe their Mariage.
But now to purpose, why I tolde The
That I was betin for a boke parde.

Upon a night Jenkin that was our Sire
Redde on his boke as he sat by the fire
Of Eve first, that for her wikidness
Was all mankind brought unto wretchidness,
For which that Jesu Crist himself was slaine,
That boughtin us with his hert's blode againe.
Lo! here exprefs of wymen may ye find,
That woman was the los of all Mankind.
Tho radd he me how Sampson lost his heers,
Sleping his Leman cut them with her sheers,
Thorough which trefoun he lost both his eyen.

Tho radd he me, if that I shall not lyea
Of Hercules, and his Dejanire,
That causid him to set himself on fire,
Nothing forgat he the care and the wo,
That Socrates had with his wivis two.
How that Xantippe cast pifs on his hede,
This fely man sat still as he were dede,
He wipid his hede, no more durst he saine,
But er the thondir stint there comith raine.
Of Pasiphaë that was Quene of Crete,
For shrewdness him thoughtin that tale so swete.
Fye speke no more, it is a grisly thing
Of her horrible lust and her liking.
Of Clytemnestra for her lechery,
That falsely made her husbond for to die.

He radd it with well gode devotion.
He told me eke for what occasion
Amphiaraus at Thebis lost his life,
My husbond had a Legend of his wife,
Eryphyle, that for an ouche of gold
Hath privily unto the Grekis told
Where that her husbond hid him in a place,
For which he had at Thebis sory grace.
Of Lima told he me, and of Lucie,
They both madin their husbonds for to dye,
That one for love, that othir was for hate.
Lima her husbond on an Evin late
Poysonid had, for that she was his so,
Lucy licorous loved her husbond so,
That for he shold alwey upon her think,
She gave to him soche a love mannir drink,
That he was dede er it werin morow,
And thus Algatis husbonds hadde sorow.

Than told he me how one Latumeus
Compleinid to his felow Arius,
That in his gardin growid soche a tre,
On which he seidin that his wivis thre
Hongid themself for hertis despitous.
O Leve brothir, qð this Arius,
Gevin me a plant of this blisfull tre,
And in my gardin plantid shall it be.

Of latir date of wivis hath he redd,
That some han slaine their husbondis in bedd,
And let their lechour dight them all the night,
While that the Cors lay on the flore upright.
And some had drivin Nalis in their braine
Whilis they slepe, and thus they have them slaine.
Some have gevin them poyson in their drink.
He spake more harm than any hert may think.

And therewithall he knew mo Proverbis
Than in this world growith grafs or herbis,
Bett is, qð he, thyne habitation
Be with a Lion or a foule dragon,
Than with a woman using for to chide.
Bett is, qð he high in the rose t' abide,
Than with an angry wife down in an house,
They ben so wikid and contrarious.

They hatin that their husbonds lovin ay;
He said, a woman cast her shame away,
Whan she cast of her smok, and farthir mo
A fair woman but she be chaste also,
Is like a gold ring on a sow's nose.
Who wolde wenin, or who couth suppose
The wo that in myne hert was and the pine?
And whan I saw that he wold nevir fine
To redin on this curtid boke all night,
Al fodeinly thre levis have I plight.

Out of his boke, right as he radd, and eke
I with my fist so toke him on the cheke
That in the fire he fell bakward adoun,
And up he stert, as doth a wode lioun,
And with his fist he smote me on the hede
That on the flore I lay as I were dede.
And whan he saw how stillè that I lay,
He was agast, and wold have fled away,
Till at the last out of my swoune I braid.

O hast thou slaine me, false thefe, I said,
For my londè thus hast thou murd'rid me?
Er I be dede yet woll I once kifs The.
And nere he came, and knelid fair adoune,
And seide, dere Sustir, swete Alisoune,
As help me God I shall The nevir smite,
That I have done it is thy self to wite:
Forgeve it me, and that I The besেকে;
And yet eftsones I bitt him on the cheke,
And seide, thefe, thus moche am I bewreke,
Now woll I dye, I may no lenglir speke.
But at the last with mochill care and wo
We fell accordid by our selvin two,

Y

He

He gaf me all the bridill in mine hond
 To have the governaunce of house and lond,
 And of his tongue, and of his hond also,
 And made him brenn his boke anon right tho.
 And whan that I had gottin unto me
 By Maistry all the Soveraignty,
 And that he seidin, myn own trewe wife
 Do as thou list the term of all thy life
 Kepe thyne honour, and kepe eke myne estate,
 Aftir that day we nevir had debate.
 God help me so, I was to him as kind
 As any wife fro Denmark unto Inde,
 And also true, and so was he to me,
 I pray to God, that sitt in Majesty
 To blissin his soule for his mercy dere.
 Now woll I say my tale if ye woll here.

The frere ylough whan he had herd all this,
 Now, Dame, qð he, so I have joy and blifs,
 This is a long preamble of a tale.
 And whan the Sompnour herde the frere gale,
 Lo! qð this Sompnour, by Goddes armis two
 A frere woll intermete him evirmo,

Lo! godè men, a fly and eke a frere
 Woll fall in every dish and eche matere.
 What spekest thou of Preambulation?
 What? amble' or trot, either pece or sit doune,
 Thou lettist our disport in this matere.

Ye, wolt thou so, Sir Sompnour, qð the Frere, 840
 Now by my fay, I shall ere that I go
 Tell of a Sompnour soche a tale or two,
 That all the folk shall laughin in this place.

Now doin, els, frere, I beshrew thy face,
 Qð this Sompnour, and I beshrewè me
 But if I tellin talis two or thre
 Of freris, ere I come to Sittingbourne,
 That I shall make thine hertè for to mourne,
 For well I wot thy pacience is gon.
 Our Hostè cryid pece, and that anon, 850
 And seidè, let the Woman tell her tale,
 Ye farin as folk that dronk ben of Ale:

Doe Dame tell forth your tale, and that is best.
 All redy Sir qð she, right as you left,
 If I have licence of this worthy frere.

Yes, Dame tell forth your Tale, I woll it here.

Here ends the PROLOGUE of the Wife of BATH.

The Wife of BATH's TALE.

A Bachelor of King Arthur's Court is enjoin'd by the Queen, upon pain of Death, to tell what thing it is, that women do most desire. At length he is taught it by an old Woman, whom he is enforc'd to marry.

IN the old dayis of the King Arthure
 (Of which the Bretons spekin grete honour)
 All was this lond fulfillid of Fayry,
 The Elquene with her jolly Cumpany 860

Daunsid full oft in many a grene mede,
 This was the old Opinion, as I rede,
 I speke of many hundrid yere ago,
 But now can no man se none elis mo.
 For now the grete charity and prayers
 Of Limitours, and othir holy Freres,
 That serchin every lond, and every streme,
 As thik as motis in the Sunnè beme,
 Blessing halls, chambirs, kitchinis and boures,
 Cities, borroughs, castilis, and hie toures,
 Thorpis and barnis, shipins and dairys,
 This makith that there ben now no fayrys.
 For there as wont to walkin was an Elf
 There walkith now the Limitour himself,
 In Undirmelis and in Morrownings,
 He saith his Mattins and his holy thinges,
 As he goth in his Limitatioune,
 Wyemen may now go safely up and doune,
 In every bush, and undir every tre
 There n'is none othir Incubus but he,
 And he ne will don them no dishonour.

And so befell it that this King Artour
 Had in his house a lusty bachilere,
 That on a day came riding fro th' rivere,
 And happid that alone as he was born,
 He saw a Maidin walking him befor,
 Of which Maidin anon maugre her hede
 By very force he raft her Maidinhede.

For which oppression was soche clamour,
 And soche persute unto the King Artour, 870
 That damnid was this Knight for to be dede,
 By course of law, and shuld have lost his hede,
 Peraventure soche was the Statute tho,
 But that the quene and othir ladys mo
 So longè prayid the King of his grace,
 Tyll he his life hath grauntid in that place,
 And gave him to the quene all at her will
 To chese wheðir she wold him save or spill.
 The Quene thankith the King with all her might,
 And aftir this thus spake she to the Knight, 900
 Whan that she se her-time upon a day;

Thou standist yet, qð she, in soche aray,
 That of thy life yet hast'ow no surtie,
 I graunt The thy life if thou canst tell me
 What thing it is that wyemen most desiren
 Beware and kepe thy nekkè bone from iren.
 And if thou canst tell it me not anon,
 Yet woll I geve The leve for to gon
 A twelvemonth and a day to seke and lere
 And answere suffisaunt in this matere, 910
 And surety woll I have er that thou pass
 Thy body for to yeldin in this place.

Wo was the Knight, and sorowfully sikith,
 But what? he may not don all as him likith.
 And at the last he chose him for to wend
 And come agen right at the yer's end,
 With soche answere as God wold him purvey.
 Taking his leve he wendith forth his wey.
 He sekith every house and every place,
 Whereas he hopith for to findin grace 920

To

To lern what thing the wymen lovin most.
 Yet he ne couth arrivin in no Coste
 Whereas he might findin in this matere
 Two Creturis according both yfere.
 Some said that wymen lovid best richese,
 Some seide honour, and some said jollines,
 Some rich aray, some seidin lust abedd,
 And oftime to be widow, and ywedd.
 Some said that our hert is mostly esid,
 Whan that we ben flatterid and presid.
 He goth full nie the sothe, I woll nat lie,
 A man shall winn us best with flattery,
 And with attendance, and with besinefs
 Ben we ylimid both the more and less.
 And some men say how that we lovin best,
 For to ben fre, and don right as us lest,
 And that no man repreve us of our vice,
 But say that we be wise, and nothing nice,
 For trewily there n'is none of us all,
 If any wight wöll claw us on the gall,
 That we n'll kik for that he saith us sothe.
 Assay, and he shall find it, that so doth.
 For be we ne're so vitious withinn.
 We woll be holdin wise, and clene from sinn.
 And some men sain, that grete delite have we
 To ben holdin stabill, and eke secre;
 And in o purpose stedfastly to dwell,
 And not bewrayin thing that men us tell.
 But that tale is not worth a rake stele,
 Parde we wymen konnin nothing hele.
 Witniss of Midas; Woll ye here the tale?
 Ovid amongis othir thingis smale
 Saith Midas had undir his longè heres
 Growing upon his hede two As's eris;
 The whiche vice he hid as best he might
 Full sotilly from every mann's sight,
 That safe his wife there wist of it no mō;
 He loved her most, and trustid her also,
 He prayid her that unto no creature
 She shold not tellin of his disfigure.
 She swore him, not for all the world to winn
 She n'old not do that villony, ne sinn,
 To make her husbond have so foule a name,
 She n'old not tell it for her owne shame,
 But natheless her thoughtin that she dide,
 That she so long sholdin a Counsaile hide,
 Her thought it swoll so fore about her hert,
 That nedily some word she must astert,
 And sith she durst tellin it to no man
 Doune to a Marris faste by she ran,
 Tyll she came there her hert was on a fire,
 And as a bittorn bumpith in the mire,
 She laid her mouth unto the watir doune,
 Bewray me not thou watir with thy soun,
 Qð she, to The I tell it, and no mo,
 Mine husbond hath long As's eris two.
 Now is mine hert all whole, now it is out,
 I might no lengir kepe it out of dout.
 Here mow ye se, though we a time abide,
 Yet out it mote, we can no Counsaile hide.
 The remnaunt of the tale if ye woll here,
 Redith Ovid, and there ye may it lere.
 This Knight of which my tale is specially,
 Whan that he saw he might not come thereby,
 That is to say, what wymen lovin most,
 Within his hert sorowfull was his gost.
 But home he goth, he mightin not sojourne,
 The day is come that homewards must he turne,
 And in his way it happid him to ride
 In all his care undir a forest side.
 Whereas he saw upon a daunce ygo
 Of Ladys four and twenty, othir mo.
 Towards the daunse he drowe him full yerne
 In hope that he some wisdom there shold lerne.

But certainly er he came fully there
 Vanishid was the daunse he wist not where.
 No creature saw he there that berin life,
 Save on the grene sitting he saw a wife,
 A foulir wight there may no man devise,
 Again the Knight the old wife gan arise, 1000
 And said, Sir Knight, here forth lyith no way,
 Tellith me what you sekin by your say.
 Peraventure it may the bettir be,
 930 These old folk konnin mochil thing, qð she.
 My lefe Mōðir, qð this Knight, certeine
 I n'am but dede, but if that I can seine
 What thing it is that wymen most desire,
 Couð ye me wisse, I wold well quite your hire.
 Plight me thy trouth, here in my hond, qð she,
 The next thing that I requirin of The 1010
 Thou shalt it do, if it be in thy might,
 And I woll tell it you er it be night.
 Have here my trouth, qð the Knight, I it graunt;
 940 Then qð the wife, I may me well avaunt
 Thy life is safe, for I woll stond thereby,
 Upon my life the quene woll say as I.
 Let se which is the proudest of them all
 That werith or a kerchief or a call,
 That dare say nay, of that I shall you teche.
 Let us go forth withoutin lengir speche. 1020
 Tho rownid she a pistil in his ere;
 And bad him to be glad, and have no fere.
 Whan they ben comin to the Court, this Knight
 950 Said he had hold his day as he had hight;
 And redy was his answer, as he said.
 Full many noble wife, and many maid,
 And many widow, for that they be wise,
 (The quene her self sitting as a Justice)
 Assemblid ben his answer for to here:
 And aftirward this Knight was bode appere. 1030
 To every wight commaundid was silence,
 And that the Knight shold tell in Audience
 What thing that worldly wymen lovin mest.
 960 This Knight ne stode not still as doth a beste,
 But to this question anon answerde,
 With manly voice, that all the Court it herd.
 My liege Lady, generally, qð he,
 Wymen desirin to have sovereignty
 As well ovir their husbonds as their love;
 And for to ben in Maistry them above. 1040
 This is your most desire, though ye me kill,
 Doth as you list, I am here at your will.
 In all the Court ne was there wife ne maide,
 970 Ne widow that contrary'd what he said,
 But seid he was worthy to have his life.
 And with that word upstertin the old wife,
 Which that the Knight found sitting on the grene,
 Mercy qð she, my sovereign lady quene,
 Er that your Court departin do me right.
 I taught this answer unto thilke Knight, 1050
 For which he plightid me his trouthe there,
 The first thing that I wold of him requere,
 He wold it do, if it lay in his might.
 Before this Court than pray I The Sir Knight;
 Qð she, that thou me take unto thy wife,
 For well thou wost, that I have kept thy life.
 If I say false, say nay upon thy say.
 This Knight answerde alas! and welaway!
 I wot right well that soche was my behest,
 For Godd's love chesith a new request. 1060
 Take all my gode, and let my body go.
 Nay, qð she, then I shrew us bothin two.
 For tho that I be foule and old and pore,
 990 I n'old for all the metal nor the ore
 That undir erth is grave, or lith above,
 But if that I thy wife were and thy love.
 My love, qð he, nay my Damnation!
 Alas! that any of my Nation

Sholdin

Sholdin evir so foule disparaged be.
But all for noght, the end is this, that he Constrainid was, and nedis must her wedd,
And takith this old wife, and goth to bedd.

Now woldin some men fain peraventure
That for my negligence I do not cure
To tellin you the joy, and the array
That att the feste was that ilke day.
To the which thing I shortly answe're shall
I say there was no joy, nor feste at all.
There n'as but heviness, and mochil sorow,
Full privily he wed her on a morow,
And all day aftir hid him as an Oule,
So wo was him, his wife lokid so foule.
Grete sorow haddè this Knight in his thought,
Whan he was with his wife abed ybrought,
He wallowith, and tornith to and fro;
His olde wife lay smiling evirmo;
And said, o dere husbond, o benedicite,
Farith every knight with his wife as ye?
Is this the law of King Arthur's house?
Is eche Knight of his love thus daungerous?
I am your own true love, and eke your wife,
I am she which that said hath your life,
And certis yet did I you ne'r unright.
Why farin ye with me thus the first night?
Ye fare like a man that has lost his witt.
Ey! what is my gilt? for God's love tell it,
And it shall be amendid if I may.

Amendid, qð this Knight, alas! nay, nay.
That wold not ben amendid nevir mo.
Thou art so lothely, and so old also,
And thereto commin of so low a kind,
That no wondir though I wallow and wind.
So woldè God, qð he mine hert might brest.

Is this, qð she, the cause of your unrest?
Yea certeinly, qð he, no wondir is.
Now Sir qð she I couð amend all this
If that me list, er it were dayis thre.
So well ye might you berin unto me.

But for ye spekin of soche gentilnes,
As is descendid out of old richess,
That therefore shullin ye be gentilmen,
Soch arrogance n'is not worthy an hen.
Lo! who that is most vertuous alwey
Privy and apert, and most tendith aye
To dō the gentle dedis that he can,
Takith him for the grettist Gentilman,
Crist wold we claim of him our gentilnes,
Not of our Elders for their old richess.
For though they geve us all their heritage,
For which we claime to ben of high parage,
Yet may they noght bequethin for no thing
To none of us their vertuous living,
That made them Gentilmen ycallid be,
And bad us folow them in soche degre.

Full well can the wise Poet of Florence,
That hight Dantes, spekin in this sentence.
Lo! in soch manir rime is Dantes tale,
Full seld uprisith by his braunchis smale
Prowess of Man, for God of his godeness
Wold that we claim of him our gentilnes.
For of our Elders may we nothing claime
But temp'rall thingis that may hurt or maime.
Eke every wight wot this as well as I,
If gentilnes were plantid nat'rally
Unto a certeine linage doune the line,
Privy' and apert, than wold they nevir fine
To don of gentilnes the faire Office,
They mightin do no Villony ne vice.

Take fire, and bere it to the derkist house,
Betwixt this, and the Mount of Caucasus,
And let men shet the doris, and go thenne,
Yet wold the fire as faire lyin and brenne

As twenty thousand men might it behold,
His office natural ay wold it hold,
Up perill of my life till that it dye.
Here may ye sein well how that gentrye
Is not annexid to possession,
Sithin folk ne don their operation
Alway as doth the fire, lo! in his kind.
For God it wot men may full oftin find 1150
A lord's sonne don shame and Villony,
And he that wold have prise of his gentry,
For that he was born of a gentle house,
And had his Elders noble, vertuous,
And n'ill himself doin no gentill dedis,
Ne follue' his gentil Auncitre that ded is,
Ne n'is not gentill, be he Duke or Erle,
Fy Villain! sinfull dedes makith a cherle.
For gentilnes n'is but the renomie
Of thy Ancestors for their high bountie, 1160
Which is a stronge thing for thy persone,
Thy gentilnes comith fro God alone.
Then comes our very gentilnes of grace
It was nothing bequethe us with our place.
Thinkith how noble, saith Valerius,
Was thilke King Tullus Hostilius
That out of povert rose to high nobless!
Redith Senec, and redith eke Boece,
There shall ye sene exprefs, that it no drede is
He is gentill, which that doth gentill dedis. 1170
And therfore, dere Husbond, I thus conclude
All were it that mine Auncetirs were rude
Yet may the High God, and so hopin I
Grauntin me grace to livin vertuously.
Than am I gentill, whan that I begin
To livin vertuously and levin Sinn.

Now thereas ye of povert me repreve,
The hie God, on whom that we beleve,
In wilfull povert chese to lede his life,
And certis every man, maidin, and wife 1180
May undirstond, that Jesu Hevin King
Ne wold not chese a vicious living.

Glad povert is an honest thing certeine,
This wold Senec, and othir Clerkis saine.
Whofo wold hold him paid of his povert,
I hold him rich, all had he not a Shert.
He that covitith is a full pore wight,
For he wold han what is not in his might,
But who nought hath, ne covitith to have
Is rich, although men hold him but a knave. 1190
Juvenal saith of povert merrily,
Very povert it singith propirly.

The pore man whan he goith by the way
Before the thevis he may sing and play.
Povert is hatefull gode; and as I gesse
A full grete bringir out of besinesse,
A grete amender eke of Sapience,
To him that takith it in pacience.
Povert is this, although it seme elenge,
Possession, that no wight wold chalenge. 1200
Povert full oftin whan a man is low
Makith himself, and eke his God to know.
Povert spectacle is, as thinkith me,
Through which one may his very frendis se.
And therefore sin that I do you not greve
Of my povertie, no more me repreve.

Now, Sir, of Eld ye eke reprevid me,
And certis, Sir, though none authority
Were in no boke, ye gentles of honour
Saine that men shold an oldè wight honour, 1210
And clepe them fathir for your gentilnes,
And Authors shall I findin, as I gesse.

There as ye saine, that I am foule and o'd,
Than drede you noght to ben a Cokewold.
For filth and elth also, so mote I the,
Ben grete Wardeinis upon chastite.

But

But nath̄eles since I know your delite,
 I shall fulfyll your worldly appetite.
 Chese now, q̄ð she, one of these thingis twey,
 To have me foule and old till that I deye, 1220
 And be to you a true and humble wife,
 And nevir you displese in all my life,
 Or ellis woll you have me yong and faire,
 And take your aventure of the repaire
 That shall come to your house because of me,
 Or in some othir place, as well may be?
 Now chese your selfin whethir that you liketh.
 This Knight avisith him, and sore he siketh,
 But at the last he said in this manere.
 My Lady, and my love, and wife so dere, 1230
 I puttè me in your wise governaunce,
 Chesith your self which may be most plesaunce,
 And most honour to you and me also.
 I do no force the whethir of the two.
 For as you likith it suffisith me.
 Than have I got the Maistery, q̄ð she,
 Since I may chese to govern as I lest;
 Yea certis, wife, q̄ð he, I hold it best.
 Kifs me, q̄ð she, we be no lengir wroth,
 For by my trowth I woll be to you both, 1240

This is to say, to be both faire and gode,
 I pray to God that I mote stervin wode,
 But I to you be all so sad and trew,
 As evir was wife sith the world was new.
 And but I be to morow faire to sene
 As any Lady, Emperess, or Quene,
 That is betwene the Est and eke the West,
 Doth with my life, q̄ð she, right as you lest.
 Cast up the Courtain, and loke how it is.
 And whan this Knight saw apertly all this, 1250
 That she so faire was, and so yong therto,
 For joy he hent her in his armis two.
 His hertè bathid in a bath of blifs,
 A thousand times arow he gan her kifs,
 And she obeyid him in every thing
 That moughtin doen him plesure or liking,
 And thus they livid to their livis end,
 In perfite Joy: And Jesu Crist us send Husbondis meke, and yong, and fresh abed,
 And grace to ovirlive them that we wed. 1260
 And I pray to God to shortin their lives
 That woll not be governid by their wives,
 And old and angry nigards of dispence,
 God send them sone a very pestilence.

Thus endith the Wife of BATH's TALE.

Here

Here beginneth the FRERE's PROLOGUE.

T His worthy Limitour, this noble Frere,
 He made alwey a manir louring chere
 Upon the Somner, but for honeste
 No villeynous word yet to him spake he.
 But at the last he said unto the wife,
 Dame, q̃ he, God geve you a right gode life,
 Ye have here touchid, all so mote I the,
 In schole mattir a grete difficulte.
 Ye han said mochill thing right well I say.
 But Dame, here as we ridin by the way
 Us nedith not to spekin but of game,
 And let Autoritys a Godd's name
 To preching, and to schole eke of Clergy.
 But if it like unto this Company
 I woll you of a Somner tell a game,
 Parde ye may well knowin by the name
 That of a Sompnour may no gode be said,
 I pray that none of you be ill apaid;

A Sompnour is a rennir up and doun
 With Maundements for fornicatioun,
 And is ybete at every toun's end.
 Tho spake our Host, as Sir ye shuld ben hend
 And curteis, as a man of your estate.
 In this Company we woll no debate.
 Tellith your tale, and let the Sompnour be.
 Nay, q̃ the Sompnour, let him say to me
 What so him list, whan it come to my lot
 Parde I shall him quittin every grote.
 I shall him tellin which a grete honour
 It is to be a flattering Limitour,
 And eke of many othir manir crime,
 Which nedith not reherfin at this time,
 And of his Office I shall tell I wis.
 Our Host answerid, Pece, no more of this.
 And aftirward he said unto the Frere,
 Tell forth your tale my levè Maistir dere.

Here endeth the FRERE's PROLOGUE.

The

The FRERE's TALE.

A Sompnour and the Devil meeting on the way, after conference, become sworn brethren, and to Hell they go together. A covert invective against the bribery and corruption of the Spiritual Courts in those days.

Hilome there was dwelling in my Contre
 An Archdecon, a man of high degre,
 That boldly diddin execution
 In punishing of fornication,
 Of Witchcraft, and eke of baudery,
 Of Defamation, and advoutrie
 Of Chirch gerevis, and of testaments,
 Of Contracts, and of los of Sacraments,
 Of Usurie and Simonie also,
 But certis lecheroures did he mœch wo,
 They sholdè singin if they werin hent;
 And smale tythirs they werin foule yshent,
 If any person wold upon them pleyne,
 There might astert them no pecunial peyne.
 For smale tithis and eke small offering
 He made the peple pitously to sing.
 For er the Bishop caught them with his hoke,
 They werin in the Archdekin's boke.
 And than had he through his jurisdiction
 Pôwir to don on them correction.
 He had a Sompnour redy to his hond,
 A flyir boy was there none in Englonde,
 For subtilly he had his espiale,
 That taught him where that he might him availe. 40
 He coude spare of Lechours one or two
 To techin him to four and twenty mo.
 For though this Sompnour wode were as an hare,
 To tell his harlotry I wold not spare.
 For we ben out of his Correction,
 They han of us no jurisdiction.
 Ne nevir shall in term of all their lives.
 Peter, so ben the wymen of the Stives,
 Qð this Sompnour, yput out of our cure.
 Pece with mischaunce, and with misaventure, 70
 Saidin our Host, and let him tell his tale.
 Now tellith forth, and let the Sompnour gale,
 Ne sparith not, myn ownè Maistir dere.
 This falsè thefe, this Sompnour, qð the frere,
 Had alwey bauldis redy to his hond,
 As any hauke to lure in Englonde,
 That tellith him all the secre they knew,
 For their acquaintance was not come of new.
 They werin his approvirs privily,
 He toke himself a grete profit thereby:
 His Maistir knew not alwey what he wan,
 Withoutin Maundement a lewde Man
 He couth summon up peyne of Crist's curse,
 And they were inly glad to fill his purse,
 And madin him grete festis at the Nale,
 And right as Judas haddè pursis smale,
 And was a thefe, right soche a thefe was he,
 His Maistir haddè but half his duty.
 He was, if I shall gevin him his laude,
 A thefe, and eke a Sompnour, and a baud.
 He had eke Wenchis of his retinue,
 That whethir Sir Robert, or els Sir Hew,
 Or John, or Rafe, or whofo that it were,
 That lay by them, they told it in his ere.
 The Wenchis and he were of one assent,
 And he wold fetch a fainid Maundement,
 And summon them to the chaptir both two,
 And pill the Man, and let the Wenchè go,
 Than wold he say, frend, I shall for thy sake
 Do strikin her out of our letteres blake, 100
 Thou dare no more, as in this cafe travaille,
 I am thy frend, there I may The availe.
 For certeine he knew of bribery's mo
 Than possible is to tell in yeris two.
 For in this world n'is there Dog for the bow
 That can an hurt dere from an whole one know
 Bett than the Sompnour knew a fly letchour,
 Or an Avoutir, or a Paramour;
 And for that was the frute of all his rent,
 Therefore on it he sett all his entent. 110
 And so bifell, that once upon a day,
 This Sompnour, wayting evir on his pray,
 Rode to summon an old wife, a ribibe,
 Faining a Cause for he wold have a bribe.
 And happid that he saw befor him ride
 A gay yoman undir a forest side,
 A bow he bare, and arrows bright and shene,
 He had upon him a Courtpie of grene,
 An hat upon his hede with frengis blake,
 Sir qð this Sompnour, haile, and wele o'retake. 120
 Welcome, qð he, and every gode felaw,
 Whithir ridest thou undir this grene wode shaw,
 Saidè this yoman, wiltow ferr to day?
 This Sompnour him answerid and said nay.
 Here fast by, qð he, is all mine entent
 To ridin for to raisin up a rent,
 That longith unto my Lord's duty.
 Art thou then a bailif? I am qð he,
 He durst not then for very filth and shame
 Say that he was a Sompnour, for the name. 130
 Depardeux qð this bailif, lefe brother,
 Thou art a bailif, and I am another.
 I am unknowin as in this Countre,
 Of thine acquaintaunce I woldè pray The,
 And eke of brothirhode, if that thou list,
 I have both gold and silvir in my chest,
 If that ye hap to come into our Shire
 All shall be thine right as thou wolt desire.
 Graunt mercy, qð this Sompnour, by my faith.
 Everich in othere's hond this trouth ylayeth, 140
 For to be swornè breth'rin till they dye;
 And with that word they ridin forth their way.
 This Sompnour with that was so full of jangles,
 As full of venome ben the wariangles,
 And ay enquering upon every thing.
 Brothir, qð he, where may be your dwelling,
 Anothir day if I sholdè you seche?
 This yoman him answer'd in softe speche;
 Brothir, qð he, ferre in the North Countre,
 Where as I hope sometime I shall The se, 150
 Er we depart I shall The so well wifs,
 That of my house shaltin thou nevir miss.
 Now, Brothir, qð the Sompnour, I you pray,
 Techin me, while we ridin by the way
 (Sith that ye ben a bailif, as am I)
 Some sotiltie, and tell me faithfully
 In mine office how that I may most winn:
 And sparith not for Conscience ne Sinn,
 But, as my brothir, tell me how don ye.
 Now by my trouth, my brothir dere, said he, 160
 As

As I shall tellin The a faithful tale,
My Wagis ben full streit, and eke full smale.
My Lord is hard to me, and daungerouse,
And mine office is full laborouse;
And therefore by extortion I leve,
Forsothe I take all that men woll me geve,
Algate by flight, or apert violence,
From yere to yere I winn all my dispence,
I can no bettir tellin faithfully.

Now certis, qð this Sompnour, so fare I,
I sparin not to takè, God it wot,
But if it be too hevy, or too hot,
That I may get in Counsaile privily,
No mannir conscience of that have I,
N'ere mine extortion I might not live,
Of soche japis wollin I not be thrive;
Stomach ne Conscience ne know I none,
I shrew all these shrift faders everichone.
Well be we met by God and swete Seint Jame.
But levè brothir tellith me thy name,
Quoðe this Sompnour, in this menè while.

This Yoman gan a litil for to smile,
Brothir, qð he, wolt thou that I The tell?
I am a fend, my dwelling is in Hell,
And here I ride about my purchasing,
To wetin whare I may get any thing,
My purpose is th' effect of all my rent,
Loke how thou ridist for the same intent,
To winnin gode, thou rekist never how.
Right so fare I, for ridin woll I now
Unto the world's ende for a prey.

Ah! qð this Sompnour, benedicite! what say?
I wenid ye were a yoman trewly,
Ye have a mann's shape, as well as I.
Have ye a figure then determinate
In hellè, there ye ben in your estate?

Nay certainly, qð he, there have we none,
But whan us likith we can take us one,
Or ellis make us seme, that we ben shape,
Sometimis like a man, or like an ape,
Or like an angel can I ride or go,
It is no wondir thing tho it be so.
A lousie juggler can decevin The,
And yet parde can I more craft than he.

Why, qð the Sompnour, ride ye than or gone
In sondry shape, and not alwey in one?

Forthat, qð he, we will us soche form make,
As is most able our preys for to take.
What makith you to have all this labour?
Full many a Cause, levè Sir Sompnour,
Seide this fend, but allè thing hath time,
The day is short, and it is passid prime,
And yet ne wan I nothing in this day,
I woll entend my winning, if I may,
And not entend our wittis to declare,
For, brothir mine, thy wittes ben all to bare,
To undirfond, although I wold tell The;
But for thou axist why labourin we?
For sometime ben we Godd's instruments,
And menis to don his commaundements,
What so that him lust upon his cretures,
In divers acts, and in divers figures.
Withoutin him we have no might certeine,
If that him list to stondin there ageyne.
And sometime, at our prayir, han we leve
Only the body, not the Soule, to greve;
Witness of Job, to whom we diddin wo;
And sometime have we might of bothè two,
This is to faine, of body and soule eke;
And sometime we ben fust'rid for to seke
Upon a man, and don his soule unrest,
Not his body, and all is for the best:
Whan he withstondith our temptation,
It is a cause of his Salvacion,

Albeit that it was not our entent,
He shold be safe, but that we shold him hent.
And sometime we be servaunts unto man,
As to the Archibishop Seint Dunstan,
And to th' Apostel servaunt eke was I.

Yet tell me, qð this Sompnour, feythfully,
Makin ye you new bodies thus alwey
Of Elements? The fend answerid nay.
Sometime we faine, and sometime we arise
With dede bodys, and that in sondrie wise.
And spekin as renably, faire, and well,
As did the Pythones to Samuell.
And yet do some men say it was not he,
I do no force of your divinite.

But o thing warne I The, I woll not jape,
Thou wolt algatis wete how we be shape.
Thou shalt hereaftirward my brothir dere,
Come where The nedith not of me to lere,
For thou shalt by thyne own experience
Conn in the chair the rede of this sentence,
Bettir than Virgil while he was on live,
Or Dantes also: now let us ride blive,
For I woll holdin company with The,
Tyll it be so that thou forsakè me.

Nay, qð this Sompnour, that shall not betide,
I am a yoman, that is knowen full wide,
My trowth I woll hold to The in this caas,
For though thou were the Devil Sathanas,
My trowth I wollin hold unto my brothir,
As I am sworn, and eche of us till othir,
For to be trewè brothir in this caas.

And, brothir, we gon on to our purchase.
Take thou the part, that men wollin The geve;
And I woll mine, and thus shall we both leve:
And if that eithir havin more than other,
Let him be trew, and part it with his brother.

I graunt it, qð the Devil, by my fay.
And with that word they ridin forth their way.
And right at th' entring of the toun's ende
(To which the Sompnour shope him for to wend)
They saw a Cart, that chargid was with hay,
The which a Cartir drove forth on his way.
Depe was the way, for which the Cart still stode.
This Cartir smote, and cryde as he were wode,
Heit Scot, heit Brok, what spare ye for the nones?
The fend you fetch, qð he, body and bones,
As ferforth as ye were evir yfoled,
So mochil wo as I have for you tholed:
The Devil have it all, horse, cart, and hay.

Qð this Sompnour, here shall we have a prey,
And nere the fend he drew, as nought ne were,
Full privily, and rownid in his ere,
Herkin, my brothir, herkin by thy feyth,
Herist thou not how that the Cartir feyth?
Hent it anon, for he hath geve it The,
Both hay and cart, and eke his Caples thre.

Nay, qð the Devil, God wot ne'r a dele,
It is not his entent trustith me wele,
Ask him thy self, if thou throwist not me,
Or ellis stint a while, and thou shalt se.
This Cartir thakid his horse on the croup,
And they begonnin to draw and to stoupe:
Heit now, qð he, that Jesus Crist you blefs,
And all his honyd werk both more and less,
That was well ytwight, my own liard boy,
And I pray God save The and Seint Eloy.
Now is my Cart out of the Slough parde.
Lo! brothir, qð the fend, what told I The!
Here may ye sein, myn own derè brother,
The Carle spake o thing, but he thought another.
Let us go forth aboutin our viage,
Here winn I nothing upon cariage.
Whan that they comin somewhat out of toun,
This Sompnour to his brothir gan to roun,

Brothir,

Brothir, qð he, here wonnith a rebek,
That had almost as lese to lese her nek,
As for to geve a penny of her gode:
I woll have twelve pence though that she were wode,
Or I woll Sompne her to our office;
And yet, God wot, of her I know no vice,
But for thou canst not, as in this Countre,
Winnin thy cost, ensample take of me.

This Sompnour clappith at the wedow's gate,
Come out, he seide, thou old veritrate,
I trow thou hast some Frere or preeft with The.

Who clappith seid this wife, benedicite!
God save you, Sir, what is your swete will,
I have, qð he, of Summons here a bill,
Upon paine of cursing loke that thou be
To morow before our Archdekin's knee,
To answir to the court of certeine thinges.

Now the Lord Jesu, qð she, King of Kinges
So wisely helpin me, as I ne may,
I have ben like, and that many a day,
I may not go so ferr, qð she, ne ride,
But I be dede, so prikith it my side.
May I not ask a libell, Sir Sompnour,
And answere give there, by my Procutour,
To soche thing as men wold apposin me?

Yes, qð this Sompnour, pay anon--- let se
Twelve pence to me, and I woll The acquite,
I shall no profite have thereof but lite,
My Maistir hath the profit and not I.
Come off, and let me ridin hastily.

Geve me twelve pence, I may no lengir tary.
Twelve pence, qð she, o Lady Seint Mary
So wisely help me out of care and sinn,
This wide world though that I shold it winn,
Ne have I not twelve pence within my hold.
Ye knowin well that I am pore and old,
Kith your almis on me a pore old wretch.

Nay than, qð he, the foule fend me fetch,
If I Th' excuse, though thou sholdist be spilt.

Alas! qð she, God wot I have no gilt.
Pay me, qð he, or by the swete Seint Anne
I woll streight bere away the newe panne,
For dett which that thou qwist me of old,
Whan that thou madest thy husband a Cokold,
I paid at home for thy Correction.

Thou liest, qð she, by my Salvacion.

310 I nevir was er now widow ne wife
Sompnid unto your Court in all my life,
Ne nevir n'as I but of body trewe,
Unto the Devil rough and blake of hew
Geve I thy body, and my pan also.

And whan the Devil herdin her curse so
Upon her knees, he said in this manere,
Now Mabily myn owne Moðir dere,
Is this your will in earnest that ye say?

The Devil, qð she, fet him er he dye,
And pann and all, but he woll him repent.

Nay, nay, old Stote, that is not mine entent,
Qð this Sompnour, for to repentin me,
For any thing, that I have had of The,
I wold I had thy smok and every cloth.

Now, brothir, qð the Devil, be not wroth, 370
Thy body, and this pann is mine by right,
Thou shalt with me to Helle yet to night,
Where thou shalt knowin of our privity,
More than a Maistir of Divinity.

330 And with that word the foule fend him hent,
Body and Soule he with the Devil went,
Where that Sompnours havin their heritage,

And God, that madin aftir his image
Mankind, savin and gyde us all and some,
And leve these Sompnours gode men to become. 380

Lordings, I couth have told you, qð this frere,
Had I had leysure of this Sompnour here,
Aftir the text of Crist, of Poul and John,
And of othir Doctours many an one,
Soche peinis, as your hertis might agrise,
Al be it so no tonge may it devise,
Though that I might a thousand wintir tell
The peynis of that cursid house of Hell.

But for to kepe us fro that cursid place
Wakith, and prayith Jesu of his grace
To kepe us fro the temptour Sathanas. 390

Herk'nith this word, beware as in this caas,
The Lioun sittith in await alway
To flea the innocent, if that he may.

Disposith ay your hertis to withstond
The fend, that The wold makin thrall and bond. 350

He may not temptin you ovir your might,
For Crist wold be your champioun and knight,
And prayith that this Sompnour him repent
Of his misdede, er that the fend him hent. 400

Thus endeth the FRERE's TALE.

A a

Here

Here beginneth the SOMPNOUR's PROLOGUE.

T His Sompnour in his stirops high he stode,
Upon this Frere he star'd, his hert was wode,
That like an aspin lese he quoke for ire.
Lordings, qð he, but o thing I desire

And you beseche, that of your curtesy,
Sithins ye han herd this false frere ylye,
As suff'rith me I may my tale ytell.

This Frere ybostith, that he knowith Hell,
And God it wot that it is litil wonder,
Freris and Fendis ben but little' asonder.
For parde ye han oftè time here tell
How that a Frere ravishid was to hell
In spirit onis by a Visioun,
And as an Angell led him up and doune
To shewin him the peynis that were there,
In all the place yet saw he not a Frere.
Of othir folk he saw ynow in wo.
Unto the Angell spake the Frere tho.

Now Sir, qð he, han freris soch a grace
That none of them shall come unto this place? 420

Yes, qð this Angell, many millioun.
And unto Sathanas ladd he him doune.

And now hath Sathanas, said he, a taile
Brodir than of a Carike is the saile.

Hold up thy taile, thou Sathanas, qð he;
Shew forth thyn erse, and let the Frere se
Where is the nest of Freris in this place.

And er that half a forlong wey of space,
Right so as bees swarmin out of an hive,
Out of the Devil's erse they gan to drive,
Twenty thousand Freris all on a rout,
And throughout Hell they swarmid all about,
And come agen as fast as they might gon,
And into his erse they crepte everichone.
He clapt his taile agen, and lay full still.

430

This fryir whan he lokid had his fill
Upon the turment of this sory place,
His spirit God restorid of his grace
To his body agen, and he awoke,
But nathèless yet for fere still he quoke,
So was the Devil's erse ay in his mind!
That is his herytage of very kind.

440

God save you all, save this accurfid Frere,
My Prologue woll I end in this manere.

The

The SOMPNOUR's TALE.

A Begging Fryer coming to a Farmer's house, who lay sick, obtaineth of the sick Man a certain Legacy, which must be equally divided among his Convent. A requital to the Fryer, shewing their coufenage, loytering, impudent begging, and hypocritical praying.

Ordinges, there is in Yorkfhire, as I gheffe,
A marishe Contre callid Holdernesfe,
In which there went a Limitour about,
To preche, and eke to beg it is no dout.
And so bifell that on a day this Frere

Had prechid in a Chirche in his manere, 450
And specially abovin every thing
Excitid the pepill in his preching
To Trentallis, and to geve for Godd's sake
Wherewith men mightin holie housis make,
There as divine servise is honourid,
Not there as it is wastid and devourid:
Ne there it nedith not for to be geve;
As to Possessioners, that may els leve,
Thonkid be God, in wele and haboundaunce.
Trentalls, qð he, deliverith fro Penance 460
Ther frendis soulis, as well olde as yonge,
If so that they ben hastily yfonge,
Not for to holde a Preeft jolie and gay,
(He fingith not but o messe in a day)
Delive'rith out, qð he, anon the Soules,
Full hard it is with Fleshe-hoke, or with Oules
To ben yclawid, or to brenne or bake,
Now spede you hastily, for Crist's sake.
And whan this Frere had said al his entent,
With Qui cum Patre forth away he went. 470
Whan folk in Chirche had yeve him what 'hem left,
He went his way, no lengir wolde he rest,
With scrip and tippid staffe, ytuckid hie:
In every house he gan to pore and prie,
And beggid mele, and chese, or ellis corne.
His felaw had a staffe tippid with horne,
A pair of Tables, alle of ivory,
A Poyntell polishid full fetously,
And wrote alwey the namis as he stode
Of alle the folk, that yave 'hem any gode 480
Askauncis, as if he wolde for 'hem prey.
Yeve us a Bushell Whete, or Malt, or Rey,
A Godd's Kichell, or a trip of Chese,
Or ellis what ye list, I may not chese,
A Godd's half-peny, or a Masse-peny,
Or yeve us of your Brawn, if ye have any,
A Dagon of your blanket, leve Dame,
Our Sustir dere; lo, here I write your name,
Bacon, or bese, or such thing as ye find.

A sturdie Harlot went them ay behind, 490
That was ther Host's man, and bare a sacke,
And that men yave 'hem laid it on his backe.
And whan he was out at the dore anon
He playned away the namis everichone,
That he before had writtin in his Tables,
He servid 'hem with nyfles and with Fables.

Nay, there thou lyist, Sompner, qð the Frere.
Pece, qð our Hoste, for Crist's Moðir dere,
Tell forth thy tale, and spare it not at all.
So thrive I Host, qð he, and so I shall. 500
So long he went fro house to house, till he Came to a house there he was wont to be
Refreshid more than in an hundrid placis,
Sore sik lay the gode Man, whose the place is,
Bedrid upon a couchè low he lay;
Deus hic, qð he; O Thomas frend, gode Day,

Seidè this Frere, all curtisly and soft;
Thomas, qð he, God yeld it you, full oft
Have I upon this Bench farin full wele,
Here have I etin many' a mery mele: 510
And fro the Bench he drove away the Catte,
And layed adoun his potent, and his hatte,
And eke his scrip, and set him soft adoun.
His felaw was go walkid in the Toun
Forth with his knave, into that Hostelrye
Whereas he shope him that ilke night to lie.

O my dere Maistir, qð this sike Man,
How have ye farin sithin March began?
I saw you not this fortnight day and more.

God wote, qð he, laboured have I full fore, 520
And specially for thy Salvacion

Have I saied many precious Orison,
And for our other frendis, God 'hem blefs!
I have this day ben at your Chirche at Messe,
And saied a Sermon after my simple witte,
Not alle after the Text of Holie writte,
For it is harde to you, as I suppose,
And therefore I woll teche you alle the Glose.
Glosing is a glorious thing certaine,
For Lettir slayith, as we Clerkis saine. 530

There have I them taught to ben charitable,
And spend ther gode there it is resonable.
And there I saw our Dame, ah where is she?

Yonder in the yard I trow that she be
Seidè this man, and she woll come anon.

Eye, Maistir, ye be welcome, by St. John,
Seidè this wife, how fare ye, hartily?

This Frere arisith up full curtisly,
And her embracith in his armis narow,
And kissith her swetely, and chirkeith as a sparow 540
With his lips; Dame, qð he, I fare right wele,
As he that is your servaunt every dele,
Thankid be God that you have soule and life,
Yet sawe I not this day so faire a Wife
In alle the whole Chirche, so God me save.

Yea, God amend alle faultis, Sir, qð she,
Algatis welcome be ye, by my fay.
Graunt mercy Dame, that have I found alway,
But of your grete godeness, and by your leve,
I wold you prayin that ye n'old you greve, 550
I woll with Thomas speke a litil throwe,
These Curates ben full negligent and slowe
To gropin tenderly a Mann's Conscience,
In shrift and preching is my diligence,
And to studie on Peter's words and Poul's,
I walke to fishin Christen-mennis soules,
To yeldin Jesu Crist his propre rent,
To sprede his wordis is alle mine entent.

Now by your feith, dere Maistir mine, qð she,
Chidith him wele now for Saint Charite, 560
For he is aye angrie as a Pisse-Mire,
Though that he have all that he can desire,
Though I him wrie on night, and make him warme,
And over him lay my leg or mine arme,
He gronith like our bore that lyeth in stye,
Othir disport of him right none have I;
I may not plese him in no mannir caas.

O Thomas, je vous die, Thomas, Thomas, This

This makith the fend, thus must be amended,
Ire is a thing that God highly defended,
And thereof woll I speke a word or two.

Now Maistir, qð the Wife, ere that I go,
What woll ye dine? I woll go thereabout.

Now Dame, qð he, je vous die sans dout,
Have I not of a Capon but the Liver,
And of your white bred nought but a shiver,
And aftir that a rostid pigg'is hedde,
(But I n'old for me that no beste were dedde)
Than hadde I ynow for my suffisaunce,
I am a man of litil sustenaunce,
My spirit hath his fosting in the Bible,
My bodie is so redie and penible
To wakin, that my stomach is distroied,
I praye you, Dame, that ye be nought annoied,
Though I so frendly you my Counsaile shew,
By God, I n'old have told it but to few.

Now Sir, qð she, but one word er I go,
My child is dedde within these wekis two,
Some aftir that ye went out of this toun.
His Dethe I saw by Revelatioun
Sayid this Frere, at home in our Dortour,
I dare well saye, that within half an hour
Aftir his Dethe I saw him bore to blisse
In my Visioun, so God my soule wisse;
So did our Sexten, and our Fermerere,
That have ben true Freris these fifty yere,
Thei may now, God be thankid of his lone,
Makin ther Jubile, and walke alone.

And up I rose, and alle our Covent eke,
With many a tere trilling on our cheke,
Withoutin noyse, or clattering of Belles,
Te Deum was our song, and nothing elles,
Save that to Crist I bad an Orisoun,
Thanking him of my Revelatioun;
For Sir and Dame, trustith ye me right well,
Our Orisouns ben more effectuell,
And more we se of Crist's secret thinges
Than borell folk, albeit they were Kinges.
We live in poverty and Abstinence,
And borell folk in richesse and dispence
In mete and drink, and in ther foul delite,
We have this world's lust al in despite.

Lazar and Dives livid diversly,
And diverse guerdons haddin they thereby.
Whoso woll praye, he must fast and be clene,
And fatte his soule, and make his body lene.
We fare as saith the' Apostel, clothe and fode
Suffisith us, though thei be not full gode.

The clenenes of the fasting of us Freres
Makith that Crist acceptith of our Prayers.
Lo! Moises fourtie days and fourtie night
Fastid, ere that the High God of his might Spake with him in the Mountain of Sinai,
With emptie womb, fasting many a day
Recevid he the Lawe, that was written,
With Godd's finger; and Hely, well ye witten,
In Mount Oreb er he had any speche
With the hie Godde, that is our soul's leche,
He fastid long, and was in contemplanche.

Aaron, that had the Temple in governaunce,
And eke the othir Prestis everychone,
Into the Temple whan thei shuldin gon,
To pray for the pepill, and do servise,
They n'oldè drinkin in no mannir wise
No kind of drink, that dronkin might 'hem make,
But there in abstinence did praye and wake,
Lest that they deidin; take hede what I say,
Sobre ben thei that for the pepil pray,
Ware what I say; ynow for it suffiseth,
Our Lord Jesu, as holie Writ deviseth
Yave us ensample of fasting and prayers;
Therefore we Mendicantes, we sely Freres

Ben weddid to Povert and Continenche,
To Charite, Humbleffe, and Abstinence,
To Persecucion for Rightwisenesse,
To Weping, Misericorde, and Clenenesse.

And therefore may ye sein that our prayers
(I speke of us, we Mendicantes, we Freres)
Ben to the high God more acceptable
Than yours with your festis at your table. 650

Fro Paradise first, if I shall not lie
Was Man out chafid for his gluttonie,
And chafst was man in Paradise certaine.
But herkin now, Thomas, what I shall saine;
I have no text of it, as I suppose,
But I find it in mannir of a glose:

That specially our swete Lorde Jesus
Spake this by Freris, whan he saidin thus,
Blessid be thei, that pore in spirit ben I
And so forth all the Gospel may ye sene 660
Whethre' it be liker our professioun,

Or theirs, that swimmin in possessioun.
Fy on ther pomp! and on ther gluttony!
And eke on ther leudnesse! I them desye.

Methinkith they ben like Jovinian,
Fat as a whale, and walking as a swan,
Al vinolent as botill in the spence:
Ther Prayir is of littil reverence,
Whan they for soulis say the Psalm of David,
Lo! bouffe, they saine, Cor meum eructavit. 670

Who soloweth Crist's Gospel and his lore
But we, that humble be, and chaste, and pore,
Werkers of Godd's worde, and not auditours?
Therefore right as an Hauke upon his fours
Upspringith in the eire, right so the prayers
Of charitable, chaste, and besy Freres
Makin their fours to Godd's eris two.

Thomas, Thomas, so mote I ride or go,
And by that Lord that clepid is Saint Yve,
Ne thou our broðir were, thou shuldst not thrive. 680
For in our Chapter pray we day and night
To Crist, to sendin The both helth and might Thy body for to weldin hastily.

Got wote, qð he, nothing thereof fele I,
As helpe me Crist, as in a fewè yeres
Have I spendid on diverse mannir Freres
Full many' a pound, yet fare I ner the bet,
Certaine my gode have I almost beset.
Farewell my gold, for it is all ago.

The Frere answerde, O Thomas, dost thou so? 690
What nedith The diverse Freris to seche?
What nedith him, that hath a parfit leche
To sechin othir lechis in the toun?

Your inconstaunce is your confusioun.
Hold ye me then, and eke all our Covent
To prayin for you insufficient?
Thomas, that jape ne is not worth a mite,
Your maladie is for we have too lite;
A, yeve that Covent four and twenty grotes,
And yeve that Covent half a quarter otes, 700
And yeve that Frere a peny', and let him go:
Nay, nay, Thomas, it may be nothing so.
What is a farthing worth partid in twelve?

Lo! eche thing that is onid in himselve
Is more strong, than when it is so yskattered;
Thomas, of me thou shalt not be yflattered:
Thou woldist have our labour all for nought.
The high God, that alle this world hath ywrought,
Saieth that the workman is worthy his hire.
Thomas, of your tresour I naught desire 710
As for my self, but that all our Covent
To pray for you is ay so diligent,
And for to buildin up Crist's owne Chirch;
Thomas, if ye woll lernin for to wurch
Of building up of Chirchis, maie ye find,
If it be gode, in Thomas life of Inde.

Ye

Ye liggin here full of angir and ire,
With which the Devill fet your hert on fire,
And chidin here this hōlie Innocent,
Your wife, that is so meke and pacient;
And therefore trow me, Thomas, if you lest,
Ne chide not with thy wife, as for the best;
And bere this word away now by thy faith
Touching soche thing, lo! what the Wiseman saith,
Within thy house ne be thou no Lion,
To thy subjects do thou no oppressioun,
Ne makin not thy aquentaunce to fle.
And, Thomas, yet estsonis warne I The;
Beware of hir that in thy bosome slepeth,
Ware of the Serpent, that so slyly crepeth
Undir the grasse, and stingith subtilly;
Beware, my sonne, and herkin patiently,
That twentie thousand men have lost their lives
For striving with ther Lemmans and ther Wives.
Now sith ye have so hōly a meke Wife,
What nedith you, Thomas, to makin strife?
There n'is, I wis, no serpent so cruell
Whan men tredde on his taile, ne half so fell,
As woman is, whan she hath caught an ire;
Verry vengeance is then all her desire.

Ire is a sinn, one of the gretest of seven;
Abominable to the King of Heven,
And to himself it is destruccion.
This every leud Vicar and Parfoune
Can say, how ire engendrih homicide;
Ire is, in sothe the executour of pride.
Of ire right couth I say soche mochil sorow,
That my tale shulde lastin till the morow,
And therefore praye I God, both day and night,
To' an irous man that he send litil might!
It is grete hartte, and certis grete pite,
To set an irous man in high degre.

Whilome there was an irous Potestate,
As saith Senec, that during his estate
Upon a day out riddin Knightis two;
(And as Fortune wouldin it shulde be so)
That one of 'hem came home, the othir nought;
Anon the Knight before the judge is brought,
That seide thus, thou hast thy felaw slaine,
For which I deme The to the dethe certaine;
And to anothir Knight commaundid he,
Go, lede him to the dethe, I chargè The.
And happid, as thei wentin by the weye
Toward the place there where he shuldin deye;
The Knight came, which Men wenid had be dede,
Then thoughtin they it was the bestè rede
To ledin 'hem bothe to the judge againe.
Thei seidin, Lord, lo! the Knight hath not slaine
His felawe; here he stant, whole and alive.
Ye shulle be dede, qð he, so mote I thrive;
This is to sayin both one, two, and thre.
And to the first Knight right thus spakin he,
I dampnid The, thou must algate be dedde,
And thou also must nedis lese thine hedde;
For thou the cause art why thy felaw dyeth;
And to the thirde Knight right thus he seyth,
Thou hast not don what I commaundid The;
And thus he did them slayin allè thre.

Irous Cambyfes was eke dronkelewe,
And ay delitid him to ben a shrewe.
And so bifell, a Lord of his meine;
That lovid well vertuous moralite,
Saied on a day betwixt 'hem two right thus;
A Lord is lost, if he be vicious;
And dronkenesse eke is a foule record
Of any man, and namely of a Lord;
There is full many' an eye, and many' an ere Awaiting on a Lord, and he n'ot where;
For Godd's love drinkith more temp'erately;
Wine makith a man to lese wretchidly

His mind, and eke his limmis everychone.
The reverse shalt thou se, qð he, anon,
And preve it by thine owne experience,
That wine ne doth to folk no soche offence;
There n'is no wine berevith me my might
Of honde, ne fote, ne of my eyin sight:
And for despite he dronke mochill the more
An hundrid timis than he did before.
And right anon this cursid irous wretch;
This Knight's sonne let before him fetch,
Commaunding him he shulde before him stond,
And sodainly he toke his bowe in honde,
And up the string he pullid to his ere,
And with an arrow slough the child right there.
Now whithre have I a sikir hand or none,
Qð he, is alle my might and mind agone?
Hath wine berevin me myn eyin sight?
What shulde I tell the answer of the Knight?
His sonne was slaine, there is nō more to say.
Beware therefore with Lordis how ye play,
Sing Placebo, and I shall, if I can;
But if it be unto a porè man,
To a porè man men shulde his vicis telle,
Not to a Lord, though he shulde go to Helle.

Lo! Irous Cyrus, that ilke Persian,
How he destroyid the River Gisan!
For that an horse of his was dreint therein,
Whan that he went Babilon for to winne;
He madin that the river was so smale,
That men might ride, or wade it over alle.
Lo! what sayed he, that so welle techin can?
Ne be no felawe to none irous man,
Ne with no wode man walkin by the way,
Lest thou repent; I wolde no ferthir say.
Now, Thomas, lese broðir, leve thine ire,
Thou shalt me find as just, as is a Squire;
Hold not the Devil's knife ay in thine hert,
Thine angir doth The alle too fore smerte;
But shew to me alle thy Confessioun;

Nay, qð the sike man, by Saint Simeon;
I have be shrive this day of my Curate,
I have him told alle wholly myn estate,
Nedith no more to speke of it, qð he,
But if me leste of my humility.
Yeve me than of thy gold to make our Cloyster,
Qð he, for many' a muscle, and many' an oyster,
Whan othir men have ben full well at ese,
Have ben our fode, our Cloyster for to reyse:
And yet, God wot, unnethe the fundament
Parfourmid is, ne of our pavèment
There is not yet a tile within our wones;
By God, we owin fourtie pound for stones.
Now helpe, Thomas, for him that harrowed Helle,
For ellis mote we alle our bokis felie;
And if men lak our Predicatioun,
Than goth this world all to destruccion.
For whoso woll us from the world bereve,
So God me savin, Thomas, by your leve,
He wold bereve out of this world the Sonne!
For who can teche, and werchin as we conne?
And that is not of litil time, qð he,
But sithin Hely was, or Helise,
Han Freris ben, that find I of recorde
In Charite, ythonkid be our Lord.

Now, Thomas, help us, for Saint Charite.
And down anon he fitte him on his kne.
This sike man woxin nie wode for ire,
He woldin that the Frere had ben a fire
With alle his false Dissimulatioun.

Soche thinges as ben in my possessionne,
Qð he, that may I give ye, and none other,
Ye saine me thus, how that I am your brother.
Yes certis, qð this Frere, trustith me wele,
I toke our Dame our letter, and our sele.

B b

Now,

Now, qð he, welle, and somewhat shalle I geve
Unto your holie Covent, while I leve,
And in thyne honde thou shalt it have anon,
On this condicioun, and othir none,
That thou depart it so, my levè brother,
That every Fryer have as moche as other:
This shalt thou swere on thy professioun,
Withoutin fraude, or cavillatioun.

I swere it, qð the Fryer by my faith,
And therewithall his hond in his he layth,
Lo! here my faith, in me shalle be no lack.
Than put thy honde adoun right by my back,
Seidè this man, and gropin well behind,
Benethe my buttoke, there shaltin thou find
A thing, that I have hid in privite;
Ah! thought this Frere, that shalle ygo with me. 880
Adoune he shofth his honde unto the clift,
In hope to findin there some gode gift.
And whan this sike man feltin this Frere
About his towell groping here and there,
Amid his hand he let the Frere a farte;
There n'is no Capell drawing in a Carte,
That might have let a farte of soche a soun.

The Frere upstert, as doth a wode lioun;
Ah! false Churle, qð the Frere, for Godd'is bones,
This hast thou in despite doe for the nones. 890
Thou shalt abie this farte, if that I maie.

His meinë, which that herd of this affray,
Came leping in, and chafid out the Frere,
And forth he goeth with a full angrie chere,
And fette his felawe there as laye his store,
He lokid as he were a wildè Bore,
He grintid with his tethe, so was he wrothe!
A sturdie pace doune to the Courte he goth,
Whereas there woned a man of grete honour,
To whome that he was alwey Confessour. 900
This worthie man was Lord of that village;
This Frere ycame, as he were in a rage,
Whereas this Lorde satte eting at his borde,
Unnethis might this Frere spekin o worde,
Till at the last he seidè, God you se.

This Lord gan loke, and said benedicite!
What now, Frere John? What manir world is this?
I se right welle, that something is amis.
Ye loke as though the wodde were full of thevis,
Sittè down anon, and telle me what your greve is, 910
And it shalle be amendid, if I maie.

I have, qð he, had a despote to day,
God yelde it you, adoun in your village,
That in this worlde there n'is so pore a page,
That he n'old have abominacioun
Of that I have receid in your toun.
And yet ne grevith me nothing so fore,
As that the oldè Churle with lokkis hore
Blasphemid hath our holie Covent eke.

Now, Maistir, qð the Lord, I you besেকে: 920
No Maistir, Sir, qð he, but servitour,
Though I have had in scholis that honour,
God likith not that men us Rabbi calle,
Nothir in market, ne in your large halle.

No force, qð he, but telle me alle your grefe.
Sir, qð this Frere, an odious mischefe
This day betidde to myn ordre and me,
And so per consequence to eche degre
Of holie Chirche, God amendin it sone.

Sir, qð the Lorde, we wot what is to done, 930
Distemper you not, ye ben my Confessour,
Ye be the salte of the erthe, and the favour,
For Godd'is love your pacience now holde,
Tell me your grefe; and he anon him told,
As ye han herde before, ye wore well what.

The Ladie of the House ay stille ysatte,
Till she had herdin what the Frere had sayed.
Eye, Godd'is Mothir qð she, blifsfull Maide!

Is there nought ellis? telle me faithfully.
Madame, qð he, how thinkith ye thereby? 940
How me thinkith? qð she, so God me spede,
I say a Churle hath done a Churl'is dede.
What shulde I say, God let him nevir the,
His sike hedde is alle fulle of vanite,
I holde him in a mannir of frensie.

Madame, qð he, by God, I shalle not lie,
But I in othir wise may ben awreke,
I shalle defame him ovre' alle where I speke,
That false blasphemour, which that chargid me
To part it, that wolle not departid be, 950
To every man ylike much, with mischaunce!

The Lorde satte stille, as he were in a traunce,
And in his herte he rollid up and doune
How that his Chorle had ymaginacioun
To shewin soche a probleme to the Frere,
Nevir erst or now herde I soche matere,
I trowe the Devill put it in his mind,
In alle Arismetrike there shalle no man finde
Byforne this day of soche a questioun,
Who shulde make a demonstracioun 960
That every man shulde have ylike his parte
As of the soun or favour of a Farte?
O nice, proudè Churle, I shrewe thy face.

Lo! Sir, qð the Lorde, with hardè grace,
Who evir herde of soche a thing er now?
To every man ylike? tellin me how?
It is impossible, it may not be.
Eye nice Churle! God let him nevir the.
The rombling of a farte, and every soun,
N'is but of aire reverberacioun, 970
And ay it wastith lyte and lyte away,
There is no man can demin by my fay,
If that it were departid equally.

What? lo my Churle! lo, yet how shrewdely
Unto my Confessour to day he spake!
I holde him certaine a Demoniak.

Now ete your mete, and let the Chorle go playe,
Let him go hange himself a Divell way.

Now stode the Lord'is Squyr at the borde,
That carst his mete, and herdè worde by worde 980
Of alle this thing, of whiche I have you sayed.

My Lord, qð he, be ye not ill apayed,
For I couth tellin for a gowne of cloth
To ye, Sir Frere, so that ye be not wroth,
How that this farte shulde evin delid be Among your Covent, if it likith The.

Telle, qð the Lorde, and thou shalt have anon
A gown of cloth, by God, and by Saint John.

My Lord, qð he, when the weðir is faire 990
Withoutin winde, or perturbing of ayre,
Let bring a cartwhele here into this halle,
But loke to that it have its spokis alle.
Twelve spokis hath a cartwhele comynly.

And bring me then twelve Freris, wot ye why?
For thirtene is a Covent, as I ghesse.

Your Confessour here for his worthinesse
Shalle parfourme the nombir of his Covent.
Than shalle they knele adoune by one assent,
And to every spok's-end in this manere
Full sadly layin his nose shalle a Frere. 1000

Your nobill Confessour there, God him save,
Shalle holde his nose upright into the nave;
Then shalle this Churle, with belie stiffe and tought,
As any Tabour, hither ben ybrought,
And fette him on the whele right of this Carte,
Upon the Nave, and make him let a Farte,
And ye shulle se, up perill of my life,
And by prefe which that is demonstratife,
That equally the soun of it wille wend,
And eke the stink, unto the spokis end. 1010

Save that this worthie man, your Confessour,
(Because he is a man of grete honour)

Shalle

Shalle have the first frutis, as refoun is,
 The noble usage of Freris is this,
 The worthiest man of them shalle first be served,
 And certainly he hath it well deserved.
 He hath to day taught us so mochill gode
 With preching in the Pulpit there he stode,
 That I may vouch-safe, I sayin for me,
 He haddè the first smelle of fartis thre,
 And so well all his brethrin hardily,

He berith him so faire and holilie.
 The Lorde, the Ladie, eche man fave the Frere,
 Seidè that Jenkin spake in this matere
 As well as Euclid cou'de, or Ptolomie;
 Touching the Chorle thei saied, that subtiltie
 And high wit made him spakin as he spake,
 He n'is no fole, ne no Demoniakè;
 1020 And Jenkin hath ywonne a newè Goune;
 My Tale is done, we ben almost at tounè, 1030

Here endith the SOMPNOUR's TALE.

Here

Here followeth the Clerk of Oxenford's PROLOGUE.

IR Clerk of Oxenford, our Hoste saide,
Yeride as coye and stille, as doth a Maide
That were new spousid sitting att the borde;
This day ne herde I of your mouthe a
worde:

I trowe you studie about some sophime,
But Salomon saide that all thing hath time.
For Godd's sake as beth of better chere,
It is no time now for to studie here.
Telle us some mery talè by your faye,
For what man that is entrid into playe
He nedis mote unto that playe assent.
But prechith not as Freris don in Lent,
To makin us for our olde sinnes to wepe,
Ne that thy talè make us not to slepe.
Telle us some mery thing of adventures,
Your termis, colouris, and your figures
Kepe them in store till so be ye endite
High Stile, as whan men unto Kingis write,
Spekith so plaine at this time, I you praye,
That we may understondin what you saye.

This worthie Clerke benignly him answerde,
Hoste, qd he, I am under your yerde,
Ye have of us as now the governaunce,
And therefore wolke I do you obeysaunce,
As ferre as resoun askith, hardily.
I wolke you telle a talè, whiche that I
Lernid at Padow of a worthie Clerke,

As preved is by his wordes, and by his werke.
He is now dede, and nailid in his cheste,
I praye to God to sende his soule gode rest! 1060
Frauncis Petrarke, the Laureate Poete,
Hightin this Clerke, whose Rhetorike so swete
Enlumined Itaille of Poetrie,
As Livian did of Philosophie,
Or Law, or othir arte particulere;
But Dethe, that wolke not suffir us dwelle here
But as it were the twinkling of an eye,
Them both hath slaine, and allè we shall deye.

But for to tellin of this worthie man,
That taught me this tale, as I first began; 1070
I say that he first with hie stile enditeth
(Ere he the bodie of his talè writeth)
A Proheme, in the whiche descrivith he Piemont, and of Saluce the Countre,
And spekith of Apennine hillis hie,
That ben the boundis of West Lumbardie;
And of Mount Vesulus in specialle,
Whereas the Po out of a wellè smalle
Ytakith his first springing and his sours,
That Estewarde evre encrestith in his cours 1080
To Emelleward, to Ferare, and Venise,
The whiche a longe time werin to devise,
And truily, as to my judgèment,
Methinkith it a thing impertinent,
Save that him leste so convey his matere.
But this is his tale, as ye shullin here.

The

The Clerke of OXENFORD's TALE.

Walter the Marquis of Saluce proveth the Pacience of his Wife Grifild by thre most sharp Trialls.

Here is upon the West side of Itaile,
Doun at the rote of Vesulus the cold,
A lustie plaine, habundaunt of Vitaile,
Where many' a toun and toure thou may'st behold, 1090

That foundid were in time of Faðris olde,
And many' an othir delectable fight,
And Saluces this noble countre hight.

A Marquis whilome Lorde was of that londe,
As were his worthie Elders him before,
And obeyfaunt ay redie to his honde
Were alle his Liegis, bothe lesse and more,
Thus in delite he lived, and hath don yore,
Beloved and dradd, through favour of Fortune,
Both of his Lordis, and of his Commune. 1100

Therewith he was (to speke of his Lynage)
The gentillist yborne of Lumbardie,
A faire perfone, and stronge, and yonge of age,
And full of honour and of curtisie,
Discrete ynough his contre for to gye,
Save in some thingis that he was to blame,
And Walter was this yonge Lord's name.

I blame him thus, that he confidrid nought
In time coming what mightin him betide,
But on his present lust was alle his thought, 1110
And for to hauke and hunt on every side
Well nigh all othir curis let he slide,
And eke he n'old (and that was worst of alle)
Weddè no wife, for ought that might befall.

Only that pointe his peple bare so fore
That flockmele on a day they to him went,
And one of 'hem, that wisist was of lore,
(Or ellis that the Lorde wolde best assent
That he sholde telle him what his peple ment, 1120
Or ellis cou'de he shew wele soche matere)
He to the Marquis sayed as ye shulle here.

O noble Marquis, your humanite
Assurith us, and gevith hardinesse
As oft as time is of necessite
That we may to you tell our hevinesse,
Acceptith now, Lorde, of your gentilnesse,
That we with pitous hertes unto you plaine,
And let your eris not my voice disdaine.

Alle have I not to done in this matere
More than anothir man hath in this place, 1130
Yet forasmuch as ye, my Lorde so dere,
Have alwey shewid me favour and grace,
I dare the bettir axe of you a space
Of audience, to shewin our request,
And ye, my Lorde, to done right as ye leste.

For certis, Lorde, so wele us likith you,
And all your werke, and aye have done; that we Ne cou'de not our own self devisin how
We might more livin in felicity,
Save one thing, Lorde, if that it your wille be, 1140
That for to be a weddid man you leste;

Then were your peple' in soveraine hert's reste.

Bowith your neck undir the blisfull yoke
Of Sovèrantie and not of servise,
Which that men clepin spousaile or wedloke,
And thinkith, Lorde, among your thoughtis wife,
How that our dayes passin in sondrie wise,
For though we slepe, or wake, or runne, or ride,
Aye fleith time, it woll no man abide.

And tho your grene youthe flower growith as yet, 1150
In crepith age alwey as stille as stone,
And dethe menasith every age, and smite,
In eche estate, for there escapith none,
And also certaine as we know echone
That we shulle dye, and uncertaine we alle
Ben of that day that dethe shall on us falle:

Acceptith than of us the true entent,
That nevir yet refusidin your heste,
And we wolle, Lorde, if that ye wolle assent,
Chese you a wife in short time, at the leste 1160
Borne of the gentillist, and of the mest
Of all Itaile, so that it ought seme
Honour to God and you, as we can deme.

Delivir us out of this besy drede,
And take a wife, for the high Godd's sake,
For if it so befall (as God forbede)
That through your dethe your lynage sholde yflake,
And that a straunge successour sholdin take
Your heritage, O wo were us on live!
Wherefore we pray you hastily to wive. 1170

Ther mekè prayir, and ther pitous chere
Madè the Marquis herte to have pite,
Wollin ye, qð he, myne owne pepill dere,
To that I nevir erst thought constraine me?
I me rejoicid of my liberte,
That feldin time is found in mariage;
There I was fre I more ben in servage.

But nathèless I se your true entent,
And trust upon your wit, and have done aye,
Wherefore of my fre will I woll assent 1180
To weddin me as sone as ere I maye;
But there as ye have profrid me to daye
To chesin me a wife, I you relese
That choice, and pray you of that profir cese.

For God it wote, that childrin oftin ben
Unlike ther worthie elders them before,
Bounte comith of God, and not of strenne
Of whiche they ben engendrid and ybore,
I truste in Godd's bounte, and therefore
My mariage, and myne estate and reste
I him betake, he may done as him leste. 1190

Let me alone in chesing of my wife,
That charge upon my back I woll endure,
But I you praye and charge upon your life,
That what wife that I take, ye me ensure
To worship her, while that her life may dure,

C c

In

In werde and werke, both here and ellifwhere,
As she an Emperour's doughtir were.

And furthirmore thus shalle ye swere that ye
Agenst my choice shall nevir grutch ne strive, 1200
For sith I shalle forgoe my liberte
At your request, as evir mote I thrive,
There as my herte is sette there woll I wive,
And but ye woll assent in soche manere,
I praye you speke no more in this matere.

With hertie wille thei swerin and assent
To alle this thing, there sayed not one wight nay,
Beseching him of grace ere that thei went
• That he wolde grauntin them a certeine day
Of his spousaile, as sone as ere he may. 1210
For yet alweye the peple somewhat dredde,
Lest that this Marquis ne wolde no wife wedde.

He grauntid 'hem a day, soche as them leste,
On whiche he wolde be weddid sikirlye,
And saide he did alle this at ther request,
And thei with humble' entent full buxumlie,
Kneling upon ther knees full reverentlie
Him thonkid alle, and thus thei have an end
Of ther entent, and home ayen thei wend.

And hereupon he toke his officeres, 1220
Commaunding them for the feste to purvay,
And to his privie Knightis and his Squires
Soche charge he yave, as he leste on them lay,
And thei to his commaundement obey,
And eche of 'hem doeth all his diligence
To don unto that feste high reverence.

Explicit Pars prima, sequitur Pars secunda.

Not ferre fro thilke Paleyse honourable,
Thereas this Marquis shope his mariage,
There stode a thorpe of sight delectable,
In whiche the pore folk of that village 1230
Haddin ther bestis and ther herbigage,
And of ther labour toke ther sustenance,
After that the erthe yave 'hem habundaunce.

Among these pore folk there dwellid a man,
Whiche that was holdin porist of 'hem alle,
But the high God sometimis fendin can
His grace unto a litil Ox'is-stalle,
Janicola men of that thorpe him calle.
A doughtir had he faire enough to sight,
And Grisildis this yongè maidin hight. 1240

But for to speke of vertuose beaute,
Than was she one the feirist undir sonne.
And full porely yfostrid up was she
No lico'rous lust was through her herte yronne,
But oftir of the welle than of the tonne
She dranke, and for that she wolde vertue plesse,
She knewe welle labour, but none idle ese.

But though this maidin tendir were of age,
Yet in the breste of her virginie
There was enclosid sad and ripe corage, 1250
And in grete reverence and charite
Her olde pore faðir yfostrid she.
A fewe shepe spinning on the felde she kepte,
She woldè not ben idle till she slepte.

And whan homewarde she came, she woldè bring Wortis or othir herbis timis ofte,
The whiche she shradde and sethe for ther living,
And made her bed full harde and nothing soft,
And aye she kept her faðir's life on loft,

With every obeisaunce and diligence 1260
That childe might do to faðer's reverence.

Upon Grisildis this povert cature
Welle oftin hath the Marquis sette his eye,
As he on hunting rode peraventure,
And whan it felle that he might her espye,
He not with wanton loking of folie
His eyin cast on her, but in fade wise
Upon her chere he wolde him oft avise,

Commending in his herte her womanhede,
And eke her vertue, passing every wight 1270
Of so yonge age, as welle in chere as dede;
For though the peple have no grete insight
In vertue, he considerid full right
Her bounte, and purposid that he wolde
Her wedde only, if evir he wedde sholde.

The daye of wedding came, but no wight can Tell what manir of woman it shold be,
For whiche mervayle wondrid many a man,
And saidin whan they were in privite,
Wolle not our Lorde yet leve his vanite? 1280
Wolle he not wedde alas! alas the while!
Why wolde he thus himself and us begyle?

But nathèless this Marquis hath do make
Of gemmis sette in golde and in azure
Brochis and ringis for Grisildis sake,
And of her clothing toke he the mesure
Of a maidin like unto her stature,
And eke of othir ornamentis alle
That unto soche a wedding sholde befall.

The time of undern in the famin daye 1290
Approchid that the wedding sholdè be,
And all the Paleyse put was in araye,
Both halle and chambir eche in his degre;
The officis stuffid with grete plente,
There mayst thou se all dainteousse vitaille,
That may be foundin in ferthist Itaille.

This royalle Marquis richely was araied,
With Lordes and Ladies in his companie,
The whiche unto the feste werin yprayed,
And of his retinue the Bachelerie, 1300
With many' a soun of sondrie melodie,
And to the village, of whiche I you tolde,
In this araye the right waye hath yholde.

Grisild of this, God wote, full innocent,
(That for her shapin was alle this araye)
To fetchin water at a welle is wente,
And comith home as sone as ere she maye,
For welle she herdin saye that ilkè daye
That the Marquis sholde wedde, and if she might,
She woldè faine have sene some of that sight. 1310

She thought, I wolde with othir maidins stonde,
That ben my felawes, in our dore, and se
The Marquis, and therefore now wolde I fonde
To don at home, as sone as it may be,
The labour, which that longith unto me.
And then may I at leysir it beholde,
If he this waye unto the Castle holde.

And as she wolde over the ðreshold gone,
The Marquis came, and gan her for to calle, 1320
And she sette doune her watir-pot anon,
Beside the threshold of the Ox'is-stalle,
And doune upon her knees she gan to falle,
And with sad countenance she knelid stille,
Till she had herde what was the Lord's wille.
This

This thoughtfull Marquis spake unto the Maide.

Full fobirlic, and faide in this manere,
Where is your faðir, Grisildis, he faide?
And she with reverence and humble chere,
Answerid, Lorde, he is all redy here,
And in she goeth withoutin lengir lett,
And to the Marquis she her faðir sette.

1330

He by the honde then toke this oldè man,
And seide thus, whan he had him aside,
Janicola, I neither may ne can
The plesaunce lenger of myn hertè hide,
If thou vouchsafe, whatso'ever me betide,
Thy doughtir wolde I take ere hens I wend,
As for my wife, unto my liv'is end.

Thou lovist me, I wote it welle certeine,
And art my faithfull Liegè Man ybore,
And alle that likith me I dare welle saine
It likith The, and speciallic therefore Telle me that point that I have faide before,
And if thou wilt unto that purpose drawe?
To takin me as for thy Sonne in Lawe.

1340

This sodaine case the man astonid so,
That red he wext, abashed, and alle quaking
He stode, unneth ne said he wordis mo,
But only thus, Lorde, qð he, my willing,
Is as ye wolde, ne ayenst your liking
I wolde nothing, ye be my Lorde so dere,
Right as you lest governith this matere.

1350

Than wolde I thus, qð this Marquis, sothely,
That in thy chambir I and you and she
Have a Collation, and wotest thou why?
For I wolde aske her, if her wille it be
To be my wife, and rule her aftir me.
And all this shall be done in thy presence,
I woll not speke out of thine audience.

And in the chambir while thei were about
The Tretise, whiche as ye shull aftir here
The peple came unto the house without,
And wondrid hem in how honest manere
So tentiffy she kept her faðir dere.
But uttirly Grisildis wonder might,
For nevir erst ne sawe she soche a sight.

1360

No wondir is though she be astonid,
To se so grete a ghest come to that place,
She nevir was to soche ghestis wonid,
For whiche she lokid with a full pale face;
But shortlie fro this matere for to pace,
These were the wordis, that the Marquis faide
To this benigne and very feithfull maide.

1370

Grisilde, sayed he, ye shalle welle undirstond,
It likith unto your faðir and me,
That I you wedde, and eke it may so stonde,
As I suppose, ye wolde that it so be,
But these demaundis aske I first, qð he,
That sith it shalle be done in hastie wife,
Wolle you thereto assent, or you avise?

1380

I saye thus, be ye redy with gode herte
To alle my lust, and that I frely may
As me best likith, though ye laugh or smerte,
And nevir ye to grutch me night or day,
Whan I say yea, that ye say not ones nay,
Nouthir by worde, nor frowning countenance,
Swere this, and here I swere our alliaunce.

Wondring on these wordis, quaking for drede,
She faide, my Lord, indigne and unworthie

Am I to thilk honour that ye me bede, 1390

But as you wolde your self right so wolde I,
And here I swere that nevir willingly,
In werde, werke, thought, I n'll you disobey
For to be dede, though me were lothe to dey.

This is ynough, Grisildis mine, qð he,
And forth he goeth with a full sobre chere
Out at the dore, and aftir him came she,
And to the folke he faide in this manere,
This is my wife, qð he, that stondith here,
Honourith her, and lovith her, I pray, 1400
Whoso me lovith, there n'is more to say.

And for that nothing of her oldè gere
She sholde bringin into his house, he bade
That wymen sholde dispoilin her right there,
Of whiche these Ladies werin nothing glade,
To handle her clothes in whiche she was clad.
But nathèless this maidin bright of hew
Fro fore to hedde thei clothid han all new.

Her haire han thei kembid, that lay untressed
Full rudily, and with ther fingeres smale 1410
A Croune upon her hedde they han ydressed,
And sette it full of ouchis grete and smale,
Of her aray what sholde I make a tale?
Unnethe the peple knew her for fairenesse,
Whan she transformid was in soche richesse.

This Marquis hath her spousid with a ring,
Bought for the same cause, and then he her sette
Upon an horse snow-white, full welle ambling,
And to his paleyse, ere he lengir lette,
With joyfull peple, that her ladde and mette, 1420
Conveyid her, and thus the day thei spend
In revell, till the sonne gan to descend.

And shortly forth this tale for to trace,
I say that to this new-made Marquesse
God hath ysent soche favour of his grace,
That it ne semid by no likelinesse
That she yborne was and fed in rudenesse,
As in a Cote or in an Ox'is stalle,
But norished in an Emperour's halle.

To every wight she woxin is so dere 1430
And worshipfull, that folke there she was bore,
And fro her birth that knewe her yere by yere,
Unneth trowid thei her, but durst have swore
That to Janicola (of whom before)
She doughtir n'as, for as by conjecture
'Hem thought she was right anothir cature.

For though that evir vertuose was she,
She was encrefid in soche excellence
Of thewis gode, sette in so high degre,
And so discrete and faire of eloquence, 1440
And so benigne, and digne of reverence,
And couthe the pepli's hertis so embrace,
That eche her loved that lokid in her face.

Not only of Saluces in the toun
Publithid was the bountie of her name,
But eke beside in many regioun,
If one said welle, anothir faide the same,
So spraddin of her bountie the grete fame,
That men and wymen, bothè yonge and olde
Gone to Saluces, her for to beholde. 1450

This Walter lowlie and full royallie
Weddid hath with fortunate honeste.
In Godd'is pece livith full esily
At home, and outward grace ynough had he,
And

14002A

And for he sawe that undir lowe degre
Was honest vertue hid, pepill him helde
A prudent man, and that is fene full feld.

Not only this Grisildis through her witt
Couthe all the feat of wifly humblenesse,
But eke, whan that the case requirid it, 1460
The comyn profite couð she welle redresse,
There n'as discord, rancour, ne hevinesse,
In all the londe, that she ne couð appese,
And wifely bring 'hem alle in rest and ese.

Though that her husbonde present were or none,
If gentilman or chorle of that countre,
Were wrothe, she knewe how to bring them at one,
So wise and eke so ripe wordis had she!
And in judgment of so grete equite,
That she from Hevin sent was, as men wende,
Peple to save, and every wronge to amende!

Not longe time aftir that this Grisilde
Was weddid, she a doughtir hath ybore,
Alle had she levir have bore a knave childe,
Glad was the Marquis, and his folke therefore,
For though a maidin childe came al before,
She may unto a knave childe attaine
By likelihode, sithin she n'is barraine.

Explicit Pars secunda, & sequitur Pars tertia.

There felle, as it befallith oft times mo,
Whan that this childe had fokid but a throwe, 1480
This Marquis in his hert ylongith so
To tempt his wife, her sadnesse for to knowe,
That he ne might out of his herte throwe,
This mervailouse delite his wife to assaye,
Nedeless, God wote, he thought her to affraye,

He had assayid her ynough before,
And fonde her evir gode, what nedith it
Her for to turment alwey more and more?
Though some men praise it for a sotill wit,
But as for me, I say full ill it fitte 1490
To assaye a wife, whan that it is no nede,
And puttin her in anguish and in drede.

For whiche this Marquis wrought in this manere,
He came alone anight there as she laye,
With a sterne visage and right ugly chere,
And saide her thus, Grisilde, qð he that daye
That I The toke out of thy pore arraye,
And put The in estate of high noblesse,
Thou hast not that forgottin, as I ghesse,

I say, Grisilde, the present dignite, 1500
In whiche I now have put The, as I trowe,
Makith The not forgetfull for to be
That I The toke in pore estate, full lowe
For any wele, thou must thy selfin knowe,
Takith hede of every worde what I saye,
There is no wight that herith but we twaye,

Thou wotist thy self how that thou came here,
Into this house, it is not longe ago,
And thought to me ye be both lese and dere, 1510
Unto my Gentilles you are nothing so,
Thei say to them it is grete shame and wo,
For to ben subjeet, and ben in servage
To The, that borne art in so smalle village,

And namely sith thy doughtir was ybore,
These wordis have thei spokin doutileffe,
But I desire, as I have don before,
To live my life with them in rest and pece,

I may not in this case be rechileffe,
I mote don with thy doughtir for the best,
Not as I wolde, but as my peple lest. 1520

And yet, God wote, this is full loth to me,
But nathelleffe withoutin thy witting
I wolde nought do; but this I wolde, qð he,
That thou to me assent as in this thing,
Shewe now thy pacience in thy werking
That thou me hight and swore in your village
That day, that makid was our mariage.

Whan she had herde all this she not ameved
Neither in worde, or dede, or countenance,
For as it semid she was not agreved, 1530
She seide, Lorde, all lyeth in your plesauce,
My childe and I, with hertie obeisaunce,
Ben your own alle, and ye may save or spille,
With your owne thing workith aftir your wille.

There may be nothing, so God my soule save,
Likin to you, that may displein me,
Ne I desirin nothing for to have,
Ne dredin for to lese, but only ye,
This wille is in my herte, and ay shall be,
No length of time, or dethe may this deface, 1540
Ne turne my corage to none othir place.

Glad was this Marquis of her answering,
But yet he fainid as he were not so,
Alle dreerie was his chere and his loking;
Whan that he sholde out of the chambir go,
Sone aftir this a furlong way or two,
He privily had tolde alle his entent
Unto a man, and to his wife him sent.

A fort of Sergeant was this privy man,
The whiche he feithfull oft time foundin had, 1550
In thingis grete, and eke such folk welle can
Don execution of thingis bad,
The Lorde knew well that he him loved and dradde!
And whan this Sergeant knewe his Lord's wille,
Into the chambir stalkid he full stille.

Madame, he sayed, ye mote foryeve it me,
Though I a thing do whiche I am constrained,
Ye ben ful wife, and full welle knowin ye
That Lord's hestis may not be yfained,
Thei may welle be ywaylid and complained, 1560
But men must nedes unto ther lust obey,
And so wolde I, there n'is no more to sey:

This childe I am commaundid for to take,
And spoke no more, but up the childe he hent,
Dispitoufly, and gan a chere to make
As though he wolde have slaine it ere he went;
Grisildis alle must suffir and consent,
And as a Lambe she sittith meke and stille,
And let this cruill Sergeant do his wille.

Suspect ywas the fame of thilk man, 1570
Suspect his face, suspect his worde also,
Suspect the time, in whiche he this began,
Alas! her doughtir that she lovid so!
She wenid that he wolde have slaine it tho.
But nathelleffe she neither wepte ne siked,
Conforming her to that the Marquis liked.

But at the last to speke she thus began,
And mekily she to the Sergeant prayed,
So as he was a verry Gentilman
That she might kisse her childe, ere that it dyed, 1570
And in her barme the litil child she layed,

With

With full sad face than gan the childe to blisse,
And lullid it, and aftir gan it kisse.

And thus she saidin in her benigne voice
Farewelle, my childe, I shall The nevir se,
But fith I have markid The with the Croise,
Of thilke faðir yblessid mote thou be,
That for us dyid upon the Roode tre,
Thy soule, my litil childe, I him berake, 1580
For this night shalt thou dyin for my sake.

I trowe that to a norice in this case
Full harde it wolde have ben this rounthe to se,
Welle might a moðir then have cryed alas!
But nathlefs so sad and stedfast was she,
That she endurid her adversite,
And to the Sergeant mekily she sayed,
Have here ayen your litil yonge maide.

Goth now, qð she, and doth my Lord's heft,
But o thing wolde I praye you of your grace,
(But if my Lorde forbid it you) at lest 1590
Burie this litil bodie in some place,
That no bestis or foulis it may race.
But he no worde to that purpose wolde saye,
But toke the childe, and went anon his waye.

This Sergeant came unto his Lorde againe,
And of Grisildis wordis, and her chere
He tolde him pointe fro pointe, in shorte and plaine,
And him presentid with his doughtir dere.
Somewhat this Lorde had rounthe in this matere,
But nathlefs his purpose held he stille, 1600
As Lordis don, whan thei wolde have their wille:

And bad this Sergeant, that full privily
This childe he sholdin full soft wind and wrappe
With alle the Circumstancis tendirly,
And carrie it in coffer or in lappe,
But on paine of his hedde of for to swappe,
That no man sholdin knowe of his entent,
Ne whence he came, ne whither that he went.

But at Boloigne unto his sustir dere,
That thilke time of Pavie was Countesse, 1610
He sholde it take, and shew her this matere,
Beseeching her to don her besinesse
This child to fostir in alle gentilnesse,
And whose childe that it was he bade her hide
From every wight, for ought that might betide.

This Sergeant goeth, and hath fulfilled this thing.
But to this Marquis now returnin we,
For now goth he full fast imagining
If by his wif's chere he might ought se,
Or by her wordis percevin that she 1620
Were chaungid ought; but he couð nevir finde
But evir in one mode like sad and kinde.

As glad, as humble, and besie in servise,
And eke in love, as she was wont to be,
Was she to him in every manir wise,
Ne of her doughtir not one worde spake she,
None accident, ne none adversite
Was sene in her; nevir her doughtir's name
Ne namid she, for ernest ne for game.

Explicit Pars tertia, & sequitur Pars quarta.

In this estate there passid ben four yere, 1630
Ere she with childe was, but as God it wolde,
A knave child she bare to this Waltere
Full graciously and faire for to beholde,
And whan that folke it to the faðir tolde,

Non onlie he, but all the cōuntre mery
Was for the childe, and God thei thonk and hery.

Whan it was two yere olde, and fro the breste
Departid from his norce, on a daye
This Marquis caughtin yet anothir leste
To tempt his wife estsonis if he maye, 1640
O nedeless was she temptid I dare saye,
But weddid men ne knowin no mesure,
Whan that thei find a pacient cature.

Wife, qð this Marquis, ye have herde ere this,
My pepill hevy berith our mariage,
And namely fithin my sonne yborne is,
Now is it worse than evir in our age,
The murmure slayth my herte and my corage,
For to my eres comith the voice so smerte,
That it well nigh destroyid hath my herte. 1650

Now saye thei thus, when Waler is agon,
Than shalle the blode of Janicole succede,
And ben our Lorde, for othir have we none,
Soche wordis say my pepill out of drede,
Well ought I of such murmure takin hede,
For certainly I drede alle soche sentence,
Though thei not plaine speke in myn audience.

I wolde livin in pece, if that I might,
Wherefore I am disposid uttirly,
As I his sustir yservid by night, 1660
Right so I think to serve him priville,
This warne I you, that ye not sodainly
Out of your selfe, for no wo sholde outtraie,
Beth pacient, and thereof I you praye.

I have, qð she, sayed thus, and evir shalle,
I wolde nothing in no manir certaine
But as you leste; nought grevith me at alle
Though that my doughtir and my sonne be slaine
At your commaundement; this is to faine,
I have hadde no part of my childrin twaine, 1670
But first fikenesse, and aftir wo and paine.

Ye ben our Lord, doth with your ownè thing
Right as you leste, askith no rede of me,
For as I left at home alle my clothing,
Whan I came first to you, right so, qð she,
I left my wille and alle my liberte,
And toke your clothing, wherefore I you preye
Doth your plesance, I wolde your lust obeye.

And certis if I haddin prescience,
Your wille to knowe, ere you your lust me told, 1680
I wolde it doin without negligence,
But now I wote your lust, and what ye wolde,
Alle your plesance firme and stable I holde.
For wist I that my dethe might do you ese,
Gladly wolde I it suffir you to ples,

Dethe may not makin no comparison
Unto your love. And when this Marquis sawe
The constancy of his wife, he cast adoune,
His eyin two, and wondrid how she may
In soche pacience suffir alle all this arraie, 1690
And forth he goth with drerie countenance,
But to his herte it was full grete plesance.

That eiger Sergeaunt in the samè wife
That he her doughtir caught, right so hath he (Or werse, if he couð any werse devise)
Ycaught her sonne, that was full of bewte,
And evir in one so pacient was she,
That she no chere madin of hevinesse,
But kist her sonne, and aftir gan him blesse.

D d

Save

Save this she prayid him, if that he might,
 Her litil sonne he wold in the erth grave,
 His tendir limmis, delicate to fight,
 Fro foulis and fro bestis them to save.
 But she none answer of him mightin have,
 He went his way, as he nothing ne rought,
 But to Boloigne he tendirly him brought.

This Marquis wondrid evir lengir more
 Upon her pacience, and if that he
 Ne haddin sothly knowin there before,
 That perfetly her childrin lovid she,
 He wolde have wende, that for some sotilty,
 And of malice, and for cruell corage,
 That she had suffrid this with sad vilage.

But he knewe welle, that next himself certaine
 She loved her childrin best in any wise,
 But now of wymen wolde I aske full faine,
 If these assayis mightin not suffice,
 What coude a sturdie husbonde more devise
 To preve her wivehode, and her stedfastnesse,
 But he continuing in sturdinesse?

But there be folke of soche condition,
 That when thei have a certeine purpose take,
 Thei cannot stint of their intention,
 But right as thei were boundin to a stake
 Thei wolde not of that ther first purpose flake.
 Right so this Marquis hath fully purposed
 To tempt his wife, as he was first disposed.

He waitid if by worde or countenance
 That she to him was changid of corage,
 But nevir coude he findin variaunce,
 She was ay in one herte and one visage,
 And evir ferthir that she was in age
 The more truer, if it were possible,
 She was to him in love, and more penible.

For which it semid thus, that of them two
 There n'as but one wille; for as Walter left
 The famin lust was her plesaunce also,
 And, God be thonkid, alle felle for the best,
 She shewid welle for none worldly unrest
 A wife as of her self nothing ne sholde
 Wille in effect, but as her husbonde wolde.

The Sclander of Walter wonder wide sprad,
 That of cruill herte he full wickidly
 (For that he a pore woman weddid had)
 Hath murdrid both his childrin privily;
 Soche murmure was among 'hem comynly;
 No wondir was, for to the pep'is ere
 There came no worde but that thei murdrid were.

For which there as his peple there before
 Had loved him well, sclander of his defame
 Maidin 'hem that thei hatid him therefore,
 To ben a murdrer is an hateful name!
 But nathelss for ernest ne for game
 He of his cruill purpose wolde not stint,
 To tempt his wife ywas all his entent.

Whan that his doughtir twelve yere was of age,
 He to the Court of Rome in sotill wise
 Enformid of his wille sent his message,
 Commaunding hem such bullis to devise,
 As to his cruill purpose may suffice,
 How that the Pope had, for his pep'is rest,
 Bad him to wed another, if him left.

I save he bade thei sholdin counterfete
 The Pop'is Bullis, making mentioun

1700 That he hath leve his first wife for to lete,
 As by the Pop'is Dispensatioun,
 To stinte the rancour and dissentioun
 Twixte his pepill and him, so spake the Bulle,
 The whiche thei han publishid at the fullc.

The rude pepill, as it no wondir n'is, 1770
 Wendin full welle that it had ben right so,
 But whan these tidinges came to Grisildis,
 I demin that her herte was full of wo,
 But she was stille ylike sadde evirmo,
 Disposid welle was this humble cature
 The' adversite of fortune to endure,

Abiding evir his lust and plesaunce,
 To whome that she had gevin herte and alle,
 As to his verry worldly suffisaunce.
 But shortlie if I telle this storie shalle, 1780
 This Marquis writtin hath in specialle
 A Lettre, in which he shewed alle his entent,
 And privilie to Boloigne he it sent,

To the Erle of Pavie, whiche that had tho
 Weddid his sustir, praying specially
 To bringin him ayen his childrin two
 In honourable state, all opiny,
 But one thing he him prayid uttirly,
 That he no wight, although thei did enquere
 Ytellen sholde whose childrin that thei were. 1790

But say that the maidin sholde weddid be
 To the Marquis of Saluces anon;
 And as the Erle was prayid so did he,
 At the day sette he on his way is gone
 Towarde Saluce, and Lordis many one
 In riche araie, this maidin for to gyde,
 And her yong brothir riding by her side.

Arayid was towarde her mariage
 This maidin freshe shining with gemmis clere,
 And her brothir, that seven yere was of age, 1800
 Arayid was full freshe in his manere,
 And thus in grete noblesse, and in glade chere,
 Towarde Saluces speding their journey
 Fro day to day thei ridin forthe ther way.

Explicit Pars quarta, & sequitur Pars quinta.

Among alle this, aftir his wike usage,
 This Marquis yet his wife to temptin more
 To the utterist profe of her corage,
 Fully to have experience, and lore,
 If that she were as stedfast as before.
 He on a day in opin audience 1810
 Full boistously hath saide her this sentence.

Certis, Grisilde, I had ynow plesaunce
 To han you to my wife for your godenefs,
 And for your trouthe, and for your obeisaunce,
 Not for your lynage, ne for your richesse.
 But now I knowe in verry sothfastnesse
 That in grete Lordship, I me welle avise,
 There is grete servitude in sondrie wife.

I may not don as every Ploughman may,
 My peple me constrainith for to take 1820
 Anothir wife, and cryin day by day,
 And eke the Pope, this rancour for to flake,
 Consentith it, that I dare undirtake,
 And truly thus moche I wolde you say,
 My newe wife is coming by the way.

Be stronge of herte, and voide anon the place,
 And thilke dowir that ye brought to me

Take

Take it ayen, I graunt it of my grace,
Retournith to your faðr's house, qð he,
No man may alway have prosperite, 1830
With evin herte I rede you to endure
The stroke of fortune, or of aventure.

And she againe answerde in patience,
My Lorde, qð she, I wote and wist alwaye,
How that betwixte your high magnificence
And my poverte no wight can ne may
Makin comparifoune, it is no nay,
I helde me nevir digne in no manere
To ben your wife, ne yet your chamberere.

And in this house, there ye me Ladië made, 1840
(The High God take I as for my witnesse,
And all so wisely as he my soule glade)
I helde me neither ladië ne maistresse,
But humble servaunt to your worthinesse,
And evir shalle while my life may endure,
Abovin every worldely cature.

That ye so longe of your benighnte
Have holdin me in honour and nobley,
Where I was nothing worthie for to be,
That thonke I God and you, to whome I preye 1850
To yeld it you, there is no more to feye.
Unto my faðir gladly wolle I wende,
And with him dwelle unto my liv's ende.

There I was fostrid of a childe full smale,
Tille I be dede my life there wolle I lede,
A widowe clene in herte, bodie, and alle,
For sithin I gave you my maidinhede
I am your trewe wife, it is no drede,
God sheldë soche a Lord's wife to take
Anothir man to husbonde or to make. 1860

And of your newë wife God of his grace
So graunt you welthe and high prosperite.
For I wolle gladlie yeldin her my place,
In the whiche I was blifsfulle wont to be,
For sith it likith you, my Lorde, qð she,
(That whilome werin alle my hert's rest)
That I shalle gon; I shalle go whan you left.

But thereas ye me proffir such dowaire
As I first brought, it is welle in my mind 1870
It were my wretchid clothis nothing faire,
The whiche to me now were fulle harde to finde.
O gode God! how gentil, and eke how kinde
Ye semid by your speche, and your visage,
That daye that makid was our mariage!

But sothe is saide, alwey I finde it true,
For in effect it provid is on me,
Love is not olde as whan that it is newe,
But certis, Lorde, for none adversite,
To dyin in this place, it shalle not be 1880
That I in worde or werke shulle ere repent,
That I you yafe myne herte in gode entent.

My Lorde, ye wote, that in my faðr's place
Ye did me strippin out of my pore wede,
And richly ye me claddin of your grace,
To you I brought nought ellis out of drede,
But faithe, nakidnesse, and my maidinhede,
But here ayen your clothing I restore,
And eke my wedding ringe for evirmore.

The remnaunte of you jewelless redie be 1890
Within your chambre, dare I safely faine,
Nakid out of my faðr's house, qð she,
I came, and nakid I mote turne againe.

Alle your plesaunce folowe woldin I faine,
But yet I hope it be not your entent
That I smokelle out of your Paleyse went.

Ye couð not do so dishonest a thing,
That thilkë wombe, in whiche your childrin lay,
Sholde before the pepill in my walking
Be sene all nakid; wherefore I you praye, 1900
Let me not like a worme go by the waye:
Remembrith you myn owne Lorde so dere,
I was your wife, though I unworthie were.

Wherefore in guerdon of my maidinhede
(Which I to you brought, and not again bere)
As but vouchsafe to yeve me to my mede
But soche a smocke as I was wonte to were,
That I therewith may wrie the wombe of her
That was your wife; and here I take my leve
Of you, myn only Lorde, lest I you greve. 1910

The smocke, qð he, that thou hast on thy back
Let it be stille, and bere it forth with The,
But welle unnethe that wordë had he spake,
But went his way for routhe and for pite.
Before the folke her selfin strippid she,
And in her smocke with fote and hede al bare
Towardes her faðr's house forth is she fare.

The folke her folowed weping in her wey,
And fortune evir cursid as thei gone, 1920
But she fro weping kept her eyin dreye,
Ne in alle this time worde spakin she none.
Her faðir, that these tidinges herde anon
Cursid the day, and the time, that nature
Shopin him to ben a livis cature.

For out of doute this olde and poverte man
Was evir suspect of her mariage,
For evir he demid sith it began,
That whan the Lorde filled had his corage,
Him woldin thinke it was a disparage
To his estate so lowe for to alight, 1930
And voidin her so sone as ere he might.

Ayenst his doughtir hastily goth he,
(For he by noise of folk knew her coming)
And with her olde cote, as it mightin be,
He cov'rid her sorowfully weping,
But on her bodie he might not it bringe,
For rude was the clothe, and she more of age,
By dayis fele, than at her mariage.

Thus with her faðir for a certaine space
Dwellith this flower of wively pacience, 1940
That nevir by her worde, ne by her face,
Before the folke, ne eke in their abfence,
Shewid she that to her was done offence.
Ne of her hie estate no remembraunce
Had she, as by her manir countenance.

No wondir is, for in her grëte estate
Her ghost was ay in plaine humilite,
No tendir mouthe, ne yet herte delicate,
Ne pompe, ne semblaunce of high roialte,
But full of patient benighnte, 1950
Discrete, and prideless, and ay honourable,
And to her husbonde evir meke and stable.

Men speke of Job, and most for his humbleffs,
As Clerkis (whan 'hem left) can well endite,
Namely of men, but in gode sothefastnesse
Though Clerkis praisin wymen but a lite,
There can no men in humbleffe them acquite

As

As wymen can, ne ben thei halfe so true,
As wymen ben, but it bealle of newe.

Explicit Pars quinta, sequitur Pars sexta.

Fro Boloigne is the Erle of Pavie come, 1960
Of whiche the fame yspronge to more and lesse,
And to the Pepl's eris alle and some
Was tolde eke, how that a newe Marquesse
He with him brought in pompe, and soche richesse,
That nevir was there sene with Mann's eye
So noble' araye in alle West Lumbardie.

The Marquis, whiche that shope and knewe all this,
Ere that this erle was come sent his message
To thilke pore felie creature Grisildis,
And she with humble herte and glad visage, 1970
And with no swelling thought in her corage
Came at his heft, and on her knees her sette,
And reverently and wisely she him gret.

Grisild, qð he, my wille is uttirly,
This maidin, that shalle weddid be to me,
Recevid be to morowe roially,
As it is possible' in my house to be,
And eke that every wight in his degre
Have his estate in sitting and servise,
And alle so plesant as ye can devise. 1980

I have no woman suffisaunt certaine
The chambris to araye in ordinaunce
Aftir my lust, and therefore wolde I faine
That thine were all soche manir governaunce,
That knowist eke of olde all my plesauce,
Though thine araye be bad and ill to se,
Do thou thy devoir at the lestè weye.

Not only, Lorde, that I am glade, qð she,
To done your lust, but I desire also
Your wife to plesse and serve in my degre, 1990
Withoutin faining, and shalle evirmo,
Ne nevir for no wele, ne for no wo
Ne shalle the ghost within my hertè stent
To love you best with alle my true entent.

And with that worde she gan the house to dight,
And tablis sette, and beddis for to make,
And painid her to doe alle that she might,
Praying the Chambereres for Godd's sake
To hastin them, and faste to swepe and shake,
And she the moste servisable of 'hem alle 2000
Hath every chambre arayid and his Halle.

Aboutin undern gan this Erle alight,
That with him brought these nobill childern tweye,
For whiche the peple ran to se that sight
Of ther araie so richily beseye,
And than at erst amongis 'hem thei saye,
That Walter was no fole, though that him lesse
To chaunge his wife, for it was for the beste.

For she is fairer, as thei demin alle,
Than is Grisilde, and more tendir of age, 2010
And fairer fruit betwenin 'hem shalle falle,
And mucche more plesant for her high lynage,
Her broðir eke so faire was of visage,
That him to sene the peple had plesauce,
Commending now the Marquis governaunce,

O stormy peple, unsad, and untrew,
Aye undiscrete, and chaunging as a fane,
Delighting aye in rumour that is newe!
For like the Mone evir waxe ye and wane,
Ay full of clapping, dere ynough a jane; 2020

Your dome is false, your constaunce evil preveth,
A full grete fole is he that on you leveth.

Thus saidin the sad folke in that Cite,
Whan that the peple gasid up and doune,
For thei were glad right with the novelte,
To havin a new Ladie in the toun;
No more of this make I now mentioun,
But to Grisilde ayen wolde I me dresse,
And telle her constaunce and her besinesse.

Well besie was Grisilde on every thing, 2030
That to the feste tho was appertinent,
Right nought was she abashed of her clothing,
Though they were rude, and somedeke eke to rent,
But with glade chere unto the yate is went,
With othir folke, to grete the Marquesse,
And aftir doth she forth her besinesse.

With right glad chere his gestis she receveth,
And buxomly everich in his degre,
That no defaute no man there apperceveth,
But evir thei wondrid what she might be, 2040
That in so pore araie was for to se,
And couth soche honour and soche reverence,
And worthily thei praisin her prudence.

In all the menè while she nevir stente
This maide and eke her broðir to commende,
With all her herte and full benigne entente,
So welle, that no man couth her praise amende,
But at the laste, whan that these Lordis wende
To sittin down to mete, he gan to calle
Grisilde, as she was besie in the Halle. 2050

Grisilde, qð he, as it were in his playe,
How likith The my wife and her beaute?
Right welle, my Lord, qð she, for in gode fay
A fairer sawe I nevir none than she,
I praye God to yeve you prosperite,
And so I hope that he wolde to you sende
Plesauce ynough unto your liv's ende.

But one thing I beseeche and warne also,
That ye ne prick with no soche turmenting
This tendir Maidin, as ye han do me, 2060
For she is fost'rid in her norishing
More tendirly, and to my supposing
She couð not welle adversite endure,
As couldin a porer fost'rid creature.

And whan this Walter sawe her pacience,
And her glade chere, and no malice at alle,
And he so ofte had don to her offence,
And she constaunt and stable as a Walle,
Continuing her innocence ovre' alle,
This sturdie Marquis gan his herte to dresse 2070
To rue upon her wively stedfastnesse.

This is ynough, Grisildis myn, qð he,
Be nowe no more agaste, ne ill apaide,
I have thy faithe, and thy benignite,
As welle as evir woman was, assaide,
In grete estate, or poverly araide,
Now knowe I welle, dere Wife, thy stedfastnesse,
And in his armes her toke, and gan to kesse.

And she for wondir toke thereof no kepe,
Ne herdin she what thing to her he saide, 2080
She fared as she had stert out of a slepe,
Till she out of her masidnesse abraide;
Grisilde, qð he, by God that for us deyde,
Thou art my wife, ne none othir I have,
Ne nevir had, as God my soule save.

This

This is my doughtir, which thou hast supposid
To ben my wife, that othir faithfully
Shalle be myn heir, as I have purposid,
Thou barist them in thy bodie truly,
At Boloign have I kept 'hem fikerly; 2090
Take 'hem ayen, for now thou maist not say
That thou hast lorne none of thy childern tway;

And folke, that otherwife han saide of me,
I warne them wele, that I have done this dede
For no malice, ne for no cruelte,
But for to' assaie in The thy womanhede,
And not to sley my childern, God forbede!
But for to kepe 'hem privilie and stille,
Till I thy purpose knewe, and alle thy wille.

Whan this she herde, aswonne down she fallith, 2100
For pitous joye, and aftir her swouning
She bothe her yonge Childerne to her callith,
And in her armis, pitously weping,
Embracith 'hem bothe, tendirly kissing,
Full like a Moðir, with her saltè teres,
She bathid bothe ther visage and ther heres.

O what a pitous thing it was to se
Her swouning, and her pitous voice to here!
Graunt mercie! Lorde God, thonke I you, qð she,
That ye have savid me my childern dere, 2110
Now reke I nevir to be dede right here,
Sith I stonde in your love, and in your grace,
No force of dethe, ne whan my spirit pace.

O tendir, o dere, o yonge childerne mine,
Your wofull Moðir wenid stedfastly,
That cruell houndis, or some foule vermine
Had etin you, but God of his mercie,
And your benigne faðir so tendirly
Hath done you kepe, and in that samè stounde
Alle sodainly she swapte doune to the grounde.

And in her swounde so sadly holdith she
Her childrin two, whan she gan them embrace,
That with grete sight, and grete difficulte
The childerne from her armes they gan to race.
O many' a tere on many a pitous face
Doune ran of them that stod in there beside,
Unnethe about her might no man abide.

Walter her gladith, her sorowe slakith,
She risith up abasid from her traunce
And every wight her joie and feste makith, 2130
Tille she had caught ayen her countenaunce,
Walter her doth so faithfully plesauce,
That it was deinty for to se the chere
Betwixt 'hem two, whan thei were met yfere.

These Ladies, whan that thei their timè sey,
Han takin her, and to the chambir gone,
And strippid her out of her rude arraie,
And in a clothe of golde that brightly shone,
And with a croune of many a riche ston
Upon her hede, into the Halle her brought, 2140
And there she was honourid as she ought.

Thus hath this pitous day a blisfull ende,
For every man and woman doth his might
This day in mirth and revell to dispend,
Till on the welkin shone the sterris bright;
For more solempne in every mann's sight
This feste ywas, and greter of costage,
Than was the revell of ther mariage.

Full many' a yere in high prosperite
Livin these two in concord and in rest, 2150

And richely his doughtir maryid he Unto a Lorde, one of the worthyest
Of all Itaile, and than in pece and rest
His wif's faðir in his courte he kepte,
Tille that his soule out of his body crepte.

His sonne succedith in his heritage,
In rest and pece, aftir his faðir's day,
And fortunate was eke in mariage,
Alle put he not his wife in grete assay.
This worlde is not so stronge, it is no nay, 2163
As it hath ben in olde timis yore,
Then herkenith what the Autour saith therefore.

This storie is not saide that wivis sholde
Followe Grisilde in her humilite,
For it were importable, though thei wolde,
But for that every wight, in his degre,
Sholde be constaunt in alle adversite,
As was Grisildis, whereof Petrarke writeth
This storie, whiche with high style he enditeth.

For sith a woman was so pacient 2170
Unto a mortalle man, welle more we ought Receve all in gre that God hath us sente,
For with grete skille he previth what he wrought;
But he ne temptith no man that he bought,
As saith Saint Jame, if ye his Pistle rede,
He previth folke all day, it is no drede:

And suffrith us, as for our exercise,
With the sharpe scourgis of adversite
Full ofte to be betin in fondrie wife,
Notfor to knowe our wille, for certis he 2180
Ere we were borne yknewe alle our frailte,
And for our best is alle his governaunce,
Let us then live in vertuous suffraunce.

But one worde herk'nith, Lordinges, ere ye goe,
It were full harde to findin now adayes
In alle a rounne Grisildis thre or two,
For if that thei were put to soche assayes,
The Golde of them hath now so bad alayes,
With Brasse, that though the Kithe be faire at eye,
It woldin rathir brast atwo than plie. 2190

For which here for the Wif's love of Bathe,
Whose Life and Seet Almighty God maintene
In high maistry, or ellis were it skate,
I wolde with lustie herte bothe freshe and grene
Say you a Songe, to gladdin you I wene,
And let us stintin of ernest matere,
Herk'nith my Songe, that saith in this manere.

L'envoy de Chaucer à les Mariz de nostre temps.

Grisilde is dede, and eke her pacience,
And bothe at onis buried in Itaile,
For whiche I crie in opin audience 2200
No weddid Man be so hardie to' assaile
His wif's pacience, in hope to finde
Grisildis, for in certaine he shall faile.

O noble wivis, full of hie prudence!
Let no humilite your tonguis naile,
Ne let no Clerke have cause ne diligence
To write of you a storie of mervaile,
As of Grisildis pacient and kinde,
Lest Chicface you swallow' in her entraile.

 Beth not adassid for your innocence,
 But sharpely take on you the governaile,
 Emprintith well this lesson on your mind,
 For common profite sith it may availe,

Ne drede them not, do them no reverence,
 For though thine husbonde armid be in maile,
 The arrowes of thy crabbid eloquence
 Shalle perce his herte, and eke his adventaile,
 In jelousie I rede The thou him binde, 2220
 And ye shalle make him couehc as doth a quaile.

If you be faire, there folke ben in presence
 Shewe thou thy visage, and thy apparaile,
 If thou be foule, be fre of thy dispence;

Here foloweth the Wordes of our Hoste.

I His worthie Clerke whan endid was his Tale,
 Our Hoste saide and swore by Cockis bones,
 Me levir were than a barrell of Ale
 My wife at home had herd this Legend ones;
 This is a gentle tale for the nones,
 As to my purpose, wistè ye my wille,
 But thing that wolde not be, let it be stille. 2240

Here followeth the FRANKELEIN'S PROLOGUE.

HE oldè gentill Britons in ther days
Of diverse Avéntoures madin ther layes,

The Right Honourable the Earl of Oxford's MS begins with our Host's words as above, and goes on—

[“ I have a wife, although that pore she be, “ Yet hathè she an hepe of vicis, lo!
“ For of her tongue a verry shrewe is she;
“ For to my wille the contraire woll she doe,
“ There is no force; let alle soche thingis goe;
“ But wit ye what, in counseile be it seide,
“ Me rewith fore that I am to her teyde.

“ Sir Frankleine, commith nere, if your will be, 2250 “ Sey us a Tale, as y' are a Gentilman; “ It shalle be done trewly, mine Hoste, qð he,
“ I woll you tell as shortly as I can,
“ Holde me excused, though I unworthie am

“ To telle a tale, but I wolde nought rebelle “ Ayenst your wille, a tale now wolde I telle.]

Rymed in first in ther owne Briton tongue,
Whiche Layis with ther instruments thei songe,
Or ellis redin hem for ther plesaunce,
And one of them have I in remembraunce, 2260
Whiche I shalle saye as welle as ere I can.
But Sires, because I am a borell man,
At my beginning first I you besече,
Havith me excused of my rude speche.
I lernid never Rhetorike certeine,
Thing that I speke it mote be bare and pleine.
I never slepte on th' Mount of Parnassio,
Ne lernid Marcus Tullius Cicero;
Coloures ne knowe I none, withoutin drede,
But soche coloures as growin in the mede, 2270
Or ellis soche as men dye with, or peynte,
Coloures of Rhetorike ben to me queint,
My spirite felith nought of soche matere,
But if ye lust, my Tale shullin ye here.

The

The FRANKLEIN's TALE.

Aurelius after much labour and cost bestowed to win the Love of Dorigen, another Man's Wife, is content in the end, through the good dealing of her and her husband, to lose both his labour and cost. The scope of this Tale seemeth to be a contention of Courtesy.

IN Armorike, that clepid is Britaine,
There was a Knight, that loved, and did his paine

To servin a Ladie in his beste wise,
And many' a labour, many' a grete emprise
He for his Ladie wrought, ere she was wonne;
For she was one the fayrist under Sonne, 2280
And eke thereto comin of high kinrede,
That welle unnethis durst this Knight for drede
Telle her his woe, his paine, and his distresse:
But at the last, she for his worthinesse,
And namily for his meke obeysaunce,
Hath soche a pite caught of his penaunce;
That privily she felle of his accorde,
To take him for her husbonde, and her Lorde,
Of soche Lordship as men have ore ther wives.
And for to lede in the more blisse ther lives, 2290
Of his fre-wille he swore her as a Knight,
That nevir in his life, ne day ne night,
Ne sholde he take upon him no maistry
Ayenst her wille, ne kithe her jelousie,
But her obeye, and folowe' her wille in alle,
As any Lovir to his Ladie shalle:
Save that the name of Sovereignty,
That wolde he have, for shame of his degre.
She thonkith him of his grete humblenesse,
And seide, Sir, sith of your gentilnesse 2300
Ye profrid me to have so large a raine,
Ne wolde God nevir betwixtin us twaine,
As in my gilte, were outhir werre or strife,
Sir, I wolde be your true and humble wife,
Have here my trowth, till that my herte breste,
Thus ben thei both in quiet and in rest.

For one thing, Siris, safely dare I seye,
That frendis everich othir must obeye,
If that thei longe will holdin cumpany.
Love wolde not be constreynid by maistry: 2310
Whan maistry cometh, the God of Love anon
Betith his winges, and farewell, he is gon.
Love is a thing as anie spirite fre,
Wymen of kinde desirin liberte,
And not to be constreynid as a thralle,
And so done men, if I the sothe say shalle.
Loke whofo that most pacient is in love,
He is at his advauntage alle above,
Paciencie is an high vertue certene,
For it vanquishith, as these Clerkis seine, 2320
Thingis, that rigour nevir shalle attaine.
For every worde men may not chide or plaine,
Lernith to suffir, or, so mote I gone,
Ye shalle it lerne, whethir ye wolde or none.
For in this worlde certene no wight there is,
That he ne dothe or saithe sometime amis.
Ire, sikenesse, or constellacioun,
Wine, woe, or chaunging of complexioun,
Causith fulle ofte to done amis or speken,
On every wronge a man may not be wreken. 2330
Aftir the time must be the temperaunce
To every wight, that can of governaunce;
And therefore hath this wise and worthie Knight
To live in ese suffraunce to her behight,
And she to him full wisely eke gan swere,

That nevir sholde there be defaute in her.

Here may men se humble and wise accorde,
Thus hath she take her servaunte and her Lorde,
Servaunte in love, and Lorde in mariage,
Then was he bothe in Lordship and servage; 2340
Servage? nay, but in Lordship alle above,
Sith he hath bothe his ladie and his love,
His ladie certis and his wife also,
The whiche that law of londe accordith to:
And whan he was in this prosperite,
Home with his wife he goth to his contre,
Nat ferre fro Denmarke there his dwelling was,
Whereas he livith in joie and solas.

Who couth ytelle, but he that weddid be,
The joie, the ese, and the prosperite, 2350
That is betwixte an husbonde, and a wife?
A yere and more lastid this blisfull life,
Till that this Knight, of whiche I speke of thus,
That of kinrede was cleped Arveragus,
Shope him to gone, and dwelle a yere or twaine
In Englonde, that tho clepid was Britaine,
To seke in armis worship and honour,
For alle his luste he sette in soche labour,
And dwellid there two yere, the boke saithe thus.

Now wolde I stinte of this Arveragus, 2360
And speke I wolde of Dorigen his wife,
That loved her husbonde as her hert'is life;
And for his absence wepith she and siketh,
As done these noble wivis, whan 'hem liketh.
She mournith, wakith, fastith, and fore plaineth;
Desire of his presence her so constreineth,
That alle this wide worlde sette she at nought.
Her frendis, which that knewe her hevie thought,
Comfortin her in alle, that ere thei may,
Thei prechin her, and telle her night and day, 2370
That causeless she slayith her selfe, alas!
And every comfort possible in this caas
They done to her, with all ther besinesse,
And alle to make her leve her hevinesse.

By processe, as ye knowin everich one,
Men mowin so longe gravin in a stone,
Tille some figure therein imprintid be;
So longe han they comfortid her, till she Recevid hath by hope and by resoun
The' imprinting of her consolatioun, 2380
Through whiche her grete sorowe began to' af-
swage,

She may not alway dure in soche a rage.
And eke Arveragus in alle this care
Hath sente her letteres home of his wellfare,
And that he wolde come hastily againe,
Or ellis had this sorowe her herte slaine.
Her frendis sawe her sorowe gan to' aflake,
And prayed her on ther knees, for Godd'is sake,
To come and romin in ther cumpany,
Away to drivin her derke fantasie; 2390
And finally she grauntid that request,
For welle she sawe it was alle for the beste.

Now stondith her Castill fast by the See,
And oftin with her frendis walkid she,
Her to disportin on the bankis high,
Whereas she many shippes and bargis sie,

Sailing

Sailing ther course whithre them liste to goe,
 But yet was that a parcell of her woe,
 For to her selfe full ofte alas! said she,
 Is there no ship, so many as I se, 2400
 Wolle bringin home my Lorde? than were my herte
 Warishid of these bitter painis smerte.
 Anothir time she woldin sitte and thinke,
 And caste her eyin downwarde fro the brinke,
 But whan she saw the grisly rockis blake,
 For verry fere so wolde her herte quake,
 That on her fete she might not her sustene;
 Than wold she sitte adoune upon the grene,
 And pitously into the See beholde,
 And saye right thus with sorowfull sighes colde, 2410
 Eternal God! that through thy purveyaunce
 Ledist the worlde by certaine governaunce,
 In idle, as men saine, ye nothing make,
 But, Lorde, these grisly fendly rockis blake,
 That seme rathir a foule confusioun
 Of werke, than any faire creatioun
 Of soche a parfite God, wise, and full stable,
 Why have ye wrought this werke unresonable?
 For by this werke Northe, Southe, Weste, ne Este,
 There n'is yfostred man, ne birde, ne beste; 2420
 It dothe no gode, to my witte, but annoyeth,
 Se ye not, Lorde, how it mankinde destroyeth!
 An hundrid thousande bodies of mankinde
 Have rockis slaine, alle be thei not in minde.
 Sin mankinde is so faire parte of thy werke,
 That thou it madist like to thine owne merke,
 Than semid it ye had a grete cherte
 Towarde Mankinde; but how then may it be
 That ye soche menis make it to destroyen,
 Which menis don no gode, but evre' annoyen? 2430

I wote welle, Clerkis wolde saine as 'hem leste,
 By argumentes, that alle is for the beste,
 Though I ne cannot welle the causis knowe;
 But thilke God, that made the winde to blowe,
 Ay kepe my Lorde, this is my conclusioun,
 To Clerkis let I alle this disputatioun:
 But I wolde God that alle these rockis blake
 Were sonkin into Hell for his sake:
 These rockis do so sle my herte for fere!
 Thus wolde she saye with many' a pitous tere. 2440

Her frendis sawe it was for no disporte
 To romin by the See, but discomforte,
 And shapin 'hem to playin somewhere elles,
 They ledin her by riveres, and by welles,
 And eke in other placis delectables
 Thei daunce and playin at chefs and at tables.
 So on a day, right on the morowe-tide,
 Unto a gardin, that was there beside,
 In whiche that thei had made ther ordinaunce
 Of vitailles, and of othir purveyaunce, 2450
 Thei gon, and playin 'hem all the longe day.
 And this was in the first morowe of Maye,
 Whiche Maye hath paintid, with his soft' shoures
 This gardin full of levis and of floures:
 And crafte of mann'is honde so curiously
 Arayid had this gardin right nobly,
 That nevir was there gardin of soche price,
 But if it were the verry Paradise!
 The odour of the floures, and the freshe sight
 Woldin have made any pensife herte light, 2460
 That ere was borne, but if to grete sikenesse
 Or to grete sorowe helde it in distresse.
 So fulle it was of beaute with plesaunce!

Anon aftir dinner gan thei to daunce,
 And singe also, save Dorigen alone,
 Whiche made alweye her complainte and her mone,
 For she ne sawe him on the daunce ygo,
 That was her husbonde, and her love also.
 But nathelss she must her time abide,
 And with gode hope letin her sorowe slide. 2470

Upon this daunce, amongis othir men
 Dauncid a Squyir before Dorigen,
 That freshe ywas, and jollie of arraye,
 As to my dome, as is the monthe of Maye.
 He singith, dauncith, passing every man,
 That is or was sithin the worlde began.
 Therewith he was, if men sholde him describe,
 One of the best' faring men on live,
 Yonge, stronge, and vertuous, and riche, and wise, 2480
 And welle beloved, and holdin in grete prife;
 And shortly if the sothe I tellin shalle,
 Unwitting of this Dorigene at alle,
 This lustie Squyir, servaunte to Venus,
 Whiche that yclepid was Aurelius,
 Had lovid her beste of any cature,
 Two yere and more, as was his aventure,
 But nevir durste he telle her his grevaunce,
 Withoutin cupp dranke he all his penaunce.
 He was dispairid, nothing durste he saye, 2490
 Save in his songis somewhat wolde he wraye
 His woe, as in general complaining?
 He saide, he loved, and was beloved nothing.
 Of which matere madin he many layes,
 Songis, Complaintes, Roundeles, and Verilayes,
 How that he durstin not his sorowe telle,
 But languishith as dothe a fende in Helle,
 And dye he must, he saide, as did Echo
 For Narcissus, that durste not telle her woe;
 In othir manir than ye herde me saye;
 Ne durste he not to her his woe bewraye, 2500
 Save peradventure sometime at dauncis,
 There yonge folke kepyn ther observauncis,
 It may welle ben he lokid on her face,
 In soche a wise as men that askin grace.
 But nothing wiste she of alle his entente,
 Nathlesse it happid ere that thei thence wente,
 Becausin that he was her nigh neighbour,
 And was a man of worship and honoure,
 And she had knowin him of timis yore,
 Thei fallin in speche, and so more and more 2510
 Unto his purpose drewe Aurelius,
 And whan he sawe his time, he seide thus.
 Madame, q' he, by God that this world made,
 So that I wiste that I might your herte glade,
 I wolde that day that your Arvyragus
 Went ore the See, that I Aurelius
 Had gon there, I sholde nevir come againe,
 For welle I wote my service is in vaine!
 My guerdon n'is but breffing of my herte,
 Madame, ruith upon my painis smerte, 2520
 For with one worde ye may me sle or save,
 Here at your fote God wolde that I were grave,
 I have as now no lesire more to seye,
 Have mercie, swete, or ye wolde do me deye.
 She gan to loke upon Aurelius,
 Is this your wille, q' she, and say you thus?
 Nevir erst, q' she, wiste I what ye mente,
 But now, Aurelius, I knowe your entente,
 By thilke God, that gave me soule and life,
 Ne shalle I nevir be an untrew wife, 2530
 In worde, ne werke, as ferre as I have witte,
 I wolde be his to whome that I am knitte,
 Take this for finall answer as from me.
 But aftir this in pleye thus saidin she,
 Aurelius, q' she, by God above,
 Yet wolde I grauntin you to be your love,
 (Sith I se you so pitously complaine)
 Lok' what daye that endlong to Britaine
 Ye remeve alle the rockis stone by stone,
 That thei ne lettin ship ne bote to gone, 2540
 I saye whan ye have made the coste so clene
 Of rockis, that there is no stone ysene,
 Than wolde I love you best of any man,
 Have here my trouthe, in alle that ere I can.

F f

Is

Is there none othir grace in you, qð he?
 No by that Lorde, qð she, that makid me,
 For welle I wote, that it shall nere betide,
 Let soche folie out of your herte aslide.
 What deinty sholde a man have in this life
 For to goe love anothir mann's wife?
 That hath her bodie, whan so that him liketh.

Aurelius fulle oftin forely siketh.
 Woe was Aurely, whan that this he herde,
 And with a sorowfull chere he answerde,
 Madame, qð he, this were impossible,
 Then mote I dye on sodaine dethe horrible,
 And with that worde he turnid him anone.

Tho come her othir frendis everichone,
 And in the alleys romid up and doun,
 And nothing wiste of this conclusioun,
 But sodainly began to revell newe,
 Tille that the brighte sunne had losse his hewe,
 For the' Horison had reſte the sunne his light
 (This is as moche to ſaye, that it were night)
 And home thei gon in joie and in ſolas,
 Save only wretched Aurelius, alas!
 He to his houſe is gone with ſory herte,
 He ſaid he might not fro his dethe aſterte,
 Him ſemith that he felith his herte colde,
 Up to Hevin his hondis gan he holde,
 And on his knees bare he ſet him adoun,
 And in his raving ſaid this oriſoun,
 For very wo out of his witte he braide,
 He ne wiſt what he ſpake, but thus he ſaide,
 With pitous herte his plainte hath he begonne,
 Unto the goddes, and firſt unto the ſonne
 He ſaid: Apollo God, and governour
 Of every plante, and herbe, and tre, and floure,
 That yeveſt after thy declinacion
 To ilke of hem his time and his ceſon,
 As thine herberow chaungith low and hie,
 Lord Phœbus, caſt thy merciabie eye
 On wretched Aurelius, which am but lorne,
 Lo lorde, my lady hath my deth iſworne
 Withoutin gilt, but thy benigne
 Upon my dedely hert have ſome pite;
 For wel I wot, lorde Phœbus, if ye leſte,
 Ye may me helpin ſave my lady beſte,
 Now vouchē ye ſave that I may you deviſe,
 How that I maye be holpen, and in what wiſe.

Your bliſful ſuſtir Lucina the ſhene,
 That of the See cheſe Goddeſſe is and Quene,
 Though Neptunus hath deite in the ſee,
 Yet Empereſs abovin him is ſhe,
 Ye knowin wel lord, right as her deſire
 Is to be quickened and lighted of your fire,
 For whiche ſhe ſolloweth you full beſily,
 Right ſo the ſee deſirith naturally
 To ſolowin her that is the goddeſſe
 Both of the ſee, and rivers more and leſſe.
 Wherefore, lorde Phœbus, this is my requeſt,
 Do this miracle, or do mine hert breſt,
 That now next at this oppoſicion,
 Whiche ſhall be in the ſigne of the Lion,
 As prayith her ſo grete a ſtode to bringe,
 That five ſaſome at leſte it ovirſpringe
 The higheſt rocke in Armorike Britaine
 And let this ſtode endurin yeris twaine,
 Thanſ certis to my lady may I ſay,
 Ho'dith your heſt, the rockis ben away.
 This thing may ye full lightly don for me,
 Pray her to gon no faſtir courſe than ye,
 I ſay thus, praye your ſuſtir that ſhe go
 No faſtir courſe than ye in yeris two,
 Than ſhall ſhe be at evin full alweye,
 And ſpringe ſtode ſhall be laſting night and dey;
 And but that ſhe vouchſafe in ſuche manere
 To grauntin me my ſoveraine lady dere,

Pray her to ſinkin every rocke adoun
 Lowe into Helle her own derke regioun
 Undir the ground, there Pluto dwellith in,
 Or nevir more ſhall I my lady win.

Thy temple' in Delphos, wolle I barefote ſeke,
 O Lorde Phœbus, ſe the teres on my cheke,
 And on my paine have ſome compaſſioun;
 And with that worde in ſwoun he fel adoun,
 And longe time he thus lay in a traunce.
 His brothir, which that knew of his penaunce,
 Up caught him, and to bedde hath him ybrought;
 Dispeyrid in thus turment and this thought
 Now lette I thus this woful cecture lye,
 Cheſe he for me whethre' he wolle live or dye.

Arviragus with hele and grete honour
 (As he that was of chivalry the flour)
 Is comin home, and othir worthy men,
 O bliſful art thou now Dame Dorigen,
 That haſt thy luſty huſbonde in thine armes,
 That freſhe knight, that worthy man of armes,
 That lovith The, as his own hert's life,
 Nothing liſte him to be imaginatiſe
 If any wight had ſpoken (while he was out)
 To her of love, therof had he no dout,
 He nought entendith to no ſoche matere,
 But dauncith, juſtith, and makith gode chere.

And thus in joy and bliſſe I let hem dwell,
 And of wofull Aurelius wol I tell.
 In langour and in turmente diſpitous,
 Two yere and more, lay wretched Aurelius,
 Er any ſote on erth he mightin gone,
 Ne comfort in this time ne had he none,
 Save of his brother, whiche that was a clerke,
 He knewe of al this wo, and al this werke,
 For unto none othir creature certain
 Of this matere, ne durſt he no worde ſain,
 Undir his breſt he bare it more ſecre
 Than Polyphemus did for Galathe,
 His breſt was hole withoutin ſor to ſene;
 But in his hert aye was the arrowe kene,
 And well ye knowen, that of a ſurſanure,
 In ſurgery, is perilous the cure,
 But men might touch the arow', or come thereby.

His broðar waylith for him privily,
 Til at the laſt him fel in remembraunce
 That while he was at Orliaunce in Fraunce
 (As theſe yonge clerkis that ben likerouſe)
 To redin artis that ben curious
 Sekin in every halke and every herne
 Perticuler ſciencis for to lerne,
 He him remembrid that upon a deie
 At Orliaunce in ſtudie' a boke he ſeie
 Of Magike naturell, which his ſelawe,
 That was that time a bachelor of lawe,
 All were he there to lerne an othir craft,
 Had privily upon his deſke ilaſt,
 Whiche boke ſpake of mochill operacions
 Touching the ſoure and twentie Manſions
 That longin to the Mone, and ſoche folie,
 As in our dayis is not worth a flie,
 For holy church ſayith in our bileve,
 He ſuffrith non illuſion us to greve,
 And whan this boke was in his remembraunce,
 Anon for joie his harte began to daunce,
 And to himſelf he ſayid privily
 My brothir ſhall be warithed haſtily,
 For I am ſikir there be ſciences,
 By whiche men make divers aparences,
 Soche as theſe ſotill tregetoris plaie,
 For oft at feſtis have I well herd ſaie,
 That tragetors, within an hallē large,
 Have made to come in watir and a barge,
 And in the hallē rowin up and doun,
 Somtime hath ſemid come a grim Lioun,

And

And somtime flouris spring as in a mede,
Somtime a vine, and grapis white and rede,
Somtime a castill alle of lime and stone,
And whan 'hem likid, voidin 'hem anon,
Thus semid it to every mann's fight.

Now than conclude I thus, if that I might
At Orliaunce some old felawe yfinde,
That had this Mon's Mansions in minde,
Or othir Magike naturall above,
He should wel make my brothir have his love.
For with an apparaunce a clerke maie make
To mann's fight, that all the rockis blake
Of Britain, wer ivoidid everichone,
And shippis by the brinke to come and gone,
And in soche forme endure a yere or two,
Than wer my brothir warished of his wo,
Than must she nedis holdin her bihest,
Or ellis he shall shame her at the left.
What should I make a lengir tale of this?
Unto his brother's bedde he comin is,
And soche comfort he yave him for to gon
To Orleance, that he up stert anon,
And on his waie than is he forth ifare
In hope for to ben leffid of his care.

Whan thei wer come almost to that cite,
(But if it were a two forlong or thre)
A yong clerke roming by himself thei met,
Whiche that in Latin thriftily 'hem gret,
And aftirward he saied a wondir thing,
I knowe, qð he, the cause of your coming,
And ere thei farthir any fote ywente,
He told 'hem all that was in ther entent.

This Briton clerke askid him of felawes,
The whiche he had yknowen in oldè dayes,
And he answerid him, that thei dedde were,
For whiche he wepte full many a salt tere.

Doone of his horse Aurelius light anon,
And with this Magicien forth is he gon
Home to his house, and made him well at ese,
'Hem lackid no vitale that 'hem might plesse.
So well araied an hous as there was one
Aurelius in his life sawe nevir none.

He shewid him, or he went to suppere,
Forestes and parkis, full of wildè dere,
There sawe he hartis with ther hornis hie,
The gretist that were evir sene with eye,
He sawe of 'hem an hundrid slayn with houndes,
And sum of arowes bled with bittir woundes,
He sawe, whan voidid were the wildè dere,
These fauconers, upon a faire rivere,
That with the hawkis han the Heron slaine.

Tho sawe he knightis justing in a plain,
And after this he did him soche plesaunce,
That he him shewed his lady in a daunce,
On whiche himself ydauncid as him thought.
And whan this maistir, that this magike wrought,
Sawe it was time, he clapped his hondis to,
And farewell our revell, all was ago.
And yet remeved thei not out of the house,
While that thei sawe all this sight merveilous,
But in his studie, there his bokis be,
Thei fatin still, and no wight but thei thre.

To him this maistir callid his squiere,
And saied him thus, is redy out suppere?
Almoste an houre it is, I undertake,
Sin I you bad our supper redy make,
Whan that these worthy men ywent with me
Into my studie, there my bokis be.

Sir (qð the squier) whan it likith you
It is all redy, though you woll right now.

Go we suppe than, qð he, 'tis for the beste,
These amorous folke sometime mote have rest.

And aftir suppir fell thei in trete,
What summe shoulde this maister's guerdon be,

To remeve all the rockis of Britain,
And eke fro Garumne to the mouth of Saine.

He made it strange and swore so God him save,
Lasse than a thousand pound wold he not have, 2780
Ne gladly for that somme nolde he it doen.

Aurelius with blisfull herte anon
Answerid thus: Fie on a thousande pound
This widè worlde, whiche that men saie is round,
I would it yeve, if I were lorde of it,
This bargain is fuldrive, for we be knit,
Ye shall be payid truely by my trouth,
But loke now for no negligence or slouth
Ye staye us here no lengir than to morowe;
Naie, qð this clerke, have here my faithe to borowe.

To bedde is gon Aurelius whan him leste,
And well nie all that night he had his rest,
What for his labour, and his hope of blisse,
His wofull herte of penaunce had a lisse.

Upon the morowe, whan that it was daie,
To Britainewarde toke thei the rightè waie,
Aurelius, and this Magicine beside,
And ben discendid there thei would abide,
And this was, as the boke doeth me remember,
In the cold frostie ceson of December. 2800

Phebus waxed old, and hewed ilike Laton
That afore in his hote exaltation
Shone as the brenning gold, with stemis bright,
But now in Capricorne adoune he light,
Whereas he shone full pale, I dare well sain;
The bitter frostis with the slete and raine
Destroyid hath the grene in every yerde,
Janus sit by the fire with double berde
And drinkith of his bugle horne the wine,
Biforn him stont braune of the tuskid swine 2810
And Nowell singith every lustie man.

Aurelius, in all that evre' he can
Doeth to this maistir chere and reverence
And prayith him to doen his diligence
To bringin him out of his painis smerte,
Or with a swerd that he would slit his herte.

This sotill clerke soch routh hath on this man,
That night and daie he spedde him that he can
To waite a time of his conclusioun,
This is to saie, to make illusioun, 2820
Or soche an apparence, or jogelrie,
I ne can no termes of Astrologie,
That she and every wight should wene and saie,
That of Britain the rockis wer awaie,
Or els thei werin sonke undir the groundè,
Till at the last he hath his time ifound
To make his japis and his wretchidnesse
Of soche a superstitious cursidnesse

His Tablis Tolitanis forth he broughte,
Full well correctid, him ne lackid nought 2830
Neither his Collect, ne his Expans yeres,
Neither his Rotis, ne his othir geres,
As ben his Centris, and his argumentes,
And his Proporcineil Convenientes

For his Equacions in every thing,
And by his eight Speris in his werking
He knew ful well how far Alnath was shove
Fro the hedde of thilke fixe Aries above,
That in the ninth Spere considerid is,
Full subtilly he' had calculid all this, 2840

And whan he had found his first Mansion,
He knewe the remnaunt by proporsion,
And knewe the rising of the Monè wele,
And in whose face, the terme, and every dele,
And knewe also his othir observaunces,
For soche illusions, and soche mischaunces
As Hethin folke usid in thilkè daies,
For whiche ne makid he no lenge delaies,
But through his magike, for a weke or tway,
It semed that all the rockis wer away. 2850

Aurelius,

Aurelius, whiche that dispeirid is,
Whithir he shall have his love, or amis,
Awaitith night and daie on this miracle,
And whan he knewe there was non obstacle,
But that voidid were these rockes everichon,
Doun to the maistris fete he fell anon,
And faied, I wofull wretche Aurelius
Thanke you my lorde, and lady mine Venus,
That me hath holpen fro my caris cold,
And to the temple his waie forth hath he hold, 2860
Where as he knewe he should his lady se,
And whan he sawe his time, anon right he
With dredfull herte, and with humble chere
Saluid hath his soverain lady dere.

My rightfull lady (qð this wofull man)
Whom I bothe serve and love, as I best can
And lothest wer of all this worlde displese,
N'ere it that I for you have soche disese,
That I must die here at your fete anon,
Nought would I tel how wo is me begon, 2870
But certis either must I die or plain,
Ye slea me giltlesse for very pain,
But of my deth, although ye have no routh,
Avisin you, er that ye breke your trouth,
Repentith you, for that ilke God above,
For ye slea me, bicause that I you love,
For madame, well ye wote that ye have hight,
Not that I chalenge any thing of right
Of you my soverain lady, but of grace,
But in a gardin yonde, in soche a place, 2880
Ye wote right wel what thing ye behight me,
And in my hondè there your trouth plight ye,
To love me best, God wote ye sayid so,
Albeit that I worthy am thereto,
Madame, I speke for the honour of you,
More than to save my hert's life right now,
I have doen right as ye commaundid me,
And if ye vouchsafe, ye mai go and se,
Doeth as yow list, havith your hest in minde
For quicke or ded, right there ye shall me finde, 2890
In you lieth all to doe me live or deie,
But well I wote the rockis ben aweie.

He toke his leve, and she astonied stode,
In all her face there n'as a droppe of blode,
She wenid nere to come in soche a trappe,

Alas (qð she) that evir this should happe,
For wende I nere by possibilite
That soche a mistir or marvaile might be,
It is against the processe of nature;
And home she goeth a sorowfull cature 2900
For very fere unnethis maie she go,
She wepith and wailith a daie or two,
And swounith, so that it was routh to se,
But why it was to no wight toldin she,
For out of toun was gon Arviragus,
But to her self she spake, and sayid thus
In her complaint, as ye shall astir here,
With visage pale, and with sorowfull chere.

Alas (qð she) on The, fortune, I plain,
That unware hast wrappid me in thy chain, 2910
Fro whiche to escape, wot I no socour,
Save only deth, or els grete dishonour,
One of these two behovith me to chese,
But nathes, yet had I levir to lese
My life, than of my body to have a shame,
Or knowe my self false, or lesin my name,
And with my dethe I maie be quit I wis,
Hath there not many a noble wife er this,
And many a maide, illain her self alas!
Rathir than with her body doen trespas! 2920
And certis, lo! these stories ben witnesse,
Whan thurtie Tyrautes, full of cursidnesse,
Had slain Phidon, in Athenes at the feste,
Thei commaundid his doughtirs to areft,

And bringin 'hem beforne 'hem in dispite
All nakid, to fulfill ther foule delite,
And in ther faðr's blode thei made 'hem daunce
Upon the pavement, God yeve them mischaunce,
For which these wofull maidins full of drede,
Rathir than thei wolde lese ther maidinhede, 2930
Thei privily ben stert into a well,
And drent 'hemselvis, as the bokis tell.

Thei of Messene let enquire and seke
Of Lacedæmon fiftie maidins eke,
On which thei would have doen ther lecherie,
But there was none of all that companie
That she n'as slain, and with a glad entent
Chese rathir for to dien, than for to assent
To ben oppressed of her maidinhede,
Why should I than to dyin ben in drede? 2940

Lo! eke the tyraunt Aristoclides
That loved a maid that hight Simphalides,
Whan that her fathir slain was on a night,
Unto Diana's temple goth she right,
And hent the image with her armis two,
And fro the image wolde she never go,
No wight might fro it her hondis arace
Till she was slain right in the self same place.

Now sithnes that maidins had soche dispite
To ben defoulid with manns foule delite, 2950
Well ought a wife rathir her self to sle,
Than be defoulid, as it thinkith me.

What shall I say of Hasdruball's wife?
That at Cartage biraft her self her life,
For whan she sawe the Romanes wan the toun,
She toke her childrin all, and lept adoun
Into the fire, and chese rathir to die,
Than any Roman did her vilanie.

Hath not Lucrece illain her self, alas!
At Rome, for that there she oppressed was 2960
Of Tarquine, for her thought it was a shame
To livin, whan that she had lost her name.

The eight maidins of Melesie also
Han slain 'hemselfe for very drede and wo,
Rathir than folk of Gaule should 'hem oppresse.

More than a thousande stories, as I gesse,
Couth I now tell as touching this matere.

Whan Abradate was slain, his wife so dere
Her self yslowe, and let her blode to glide, 2970
In Abradar's woundis, brode and wide,
And faied, my body at the lestè waie
There shall no wight defoule if that I maie.

What should I mo ensamplis hereof sain?

Sin that so many han 'hemselvin slain,
Well rathir than thei would defoulid be,
I woll conclude that it is best for me
To sle my self than be defoulid thus;
I wolle be true unto Arviragus,
I woll my selvin sle in some manere, 2980
Right as did Democen's doughtir dere,
Bicause that she ne wolde defoulid be.

O Sedasus, it is full grete pite,
To redin how thy doughtirs didnen, alas!
That slown 'hemself for soche a manir caas;
As grete a pite was it, or well more,
The Theban maidin, that for Nichanore
Her selvin slewe; right for soche manere wo
Anothir Theban maidin did right so,
For one of Macedone had her oppressed,
She with her dethe her maidinhede redressed. 2990

What shall I sain of Nicerat's wife,
That for soche case biraft her self her life?

How true was eke to Alcibiades
His love, that for to dyin rathir chese,
Than let his bodie ungravid to be!

Lo! whiche a wife was Alceste! (qð she)
What saith Homere of gode Penelope?
All Grece yknowith of her chastite.

Of Laodamia is writtin thus.
 That whan at Troie was slain Protefelaus,
 No lengir n'olde she live after his daie.
 The same of noble Portia tell I maie,
 Withouten Brutus couth she nevir live,
 To whome she haddin all her herte ygive.
 The parfite wifehode of Artemisy
 Honourid is, throughout all Barbary.
 Oh Thenta Quene, thy wifely chafite
 Unto all wivis maie a mirroure be.
 The same thing I faie of Bilia,
 Of Rhodogune, and eke Valeria.
 Thus plainid Dorigene a daie or tweie,
 Purposing evir that she wouldè deie,
 But natheles upon the thirde night
 Home came Arviragus, the worthie knight,
 And askid her why that she wept so fore,
 And she gan wepe evir lengir the more.
 Alas (qð she) that evir I was borne!
 Thus have I said, (qð she) thus have I sworne,
 And told him all, as ye have herde before,
 It nedith not reherse it any more.
 This husbond with glad chere in sondry wise
 Answerd and faied, as I shall you devise,
 Is there aught els, my Dorigene but this?
 Naie naie (qð she) God helpe me so as wis,
 This is to moche, and it were Godd's will.
 Ye wife (qð he) let slepin that is still,
 It maie be well peraventure to daie,
 Ye shallin your trouthe holdin by my faie,
 For God so wisly have mercie on me,
 I had well levir stickid for to be,
 For very love whiche that I to you have,
 But that ye sholdin your trouthe kepe and save,
 Trouthe is the hiest thing that men may kepe,
 But with that word he braist anon to wepe,
 And faied, I you forbid on pain of dethe,
 That nevir whiles you lastith life or brethe
 To no wight tell of this misaventure,
 As I maie best I woll my wo endure,
 Ne make no countenance of heviness,
 That folke of you maie demin harme, ne gesse. 3040
 And forth he clepid a squier and a maide,
 Goth forth anon with Dorigene he faied,
 And bringith her in soche a place anone.
 Thei toke ther leve, and on ther waie thei gone,
 But thei ne wistin why she thiðir went,
 She n'olde no wight ytellin her entent.
 Peraventure an hepe of you, I wis,
 Will holdin him a leude man in this,
 That he wolle put his wife in jeopardie,
 Herk'nith the Tale er ye upon him crie, 3050
 She may have bettir fortune than you semeth,
 And whan that you have herde the Tale, demeth.
 This squier, whiche that hight Aurelius,
 On Dorigene, whiche was so amorous,
 Of aventure happid her for to mete
 Amid the toun, right in the maistir strete,
 As she wouldin have gon the waie forth right
 Toward the gardin, there as she had hight,
 And he was to the gardinward also,
 For well he spyid whan that she would go
 Out of her hous, to any manir place,
 But thus thei met of aventure or grace,
 And he saluith her with glad entent,
 And askid of her whiðir that she went.
 And she answerid half as she wer mad,
 Unto the gardin, as my husbond badde,
 My trouthe for to holdin, alas alas!
 Aurelius gan wondrin of this caas,
 And in his herte had gret compassion
 Of her chere, and her lamentacion,
 And of Arviragus the worthy knight,
 That bad her holdin all that she had hight,

So loth he was that she should breke her trouthe,
 And in his herte he caught of it grete rounth,
 Considering the best on every side,
 That fro his lust wer him bettir abide,
 Than doe so hie a churlishe wretchidnesse
 Ayenst fraunchise, and ayenst gentilnesse,
 For whiche in fewe wordis faied he thus.
 Madame, faie the to your lorde Arviragus, 3080
 That sithin I se this grete gentilnesse
 Of him, and eke I se well your distresse,
 That him were levir shame, (and that were routhe)
 Than that ye to me sholdin breke your trouthe,
 I have well levir evir suffir wo,
 Than departin the love betwixt you two;
 I you relese madame, into your honde
 Quite every surement, and every bonde,
 That ye have made to me, as here biforne,
 Sithens thilke time that ye werin borne, 3090
 My trouthe I plight, I shall you ne repreve
 Of no beheft, and here I take my leve
 As of the truest and the beste wife,
 That evir yet I knewe in all my life,
 But every wight beware of ther bihest,
 On Dorigene remembrith at the lest;
 Thus can a squier doen a gentill dede,
 As well as can a knight, withoutin drede.
 She thonkid him upon her knees all bare,
 And home unto her husbonde is she fare, 3100
 And told him all, as ye han herd me faied,
 And be ye sikre, he was so well apaied,
 That it were unpossible me to write.
 What should I lengir of this case endite?
 Arviragus, and Dorigene his wife
 In soverain blisse ledin forth ther life,
 Ne was there angir evir hem betwene,
 He cherished her, as though she wer a Quene,
 And she was to him true for evirmore,
 Of these two folkes ye get of me no more. 3110
 Aurelius, that his cost hath all forlorne
 Cursid the time that evir he was borne;
 Alas! (qð he) alas! that I beheight
 Of purid gold a thousande pound of weight
 To this Philosopher, how shall I doe?
 I se no more, but that I am fordoo,
 Mine inheritaunce mote I nedis sell,
 And ben a beggir, here maie I not dwell,
 And shamin all my kinrede in this place,
 But I of him maie get some bettir grace. 3120
 But natheles I wolle of him assaie
 At certain dayis yere by yere to paie,
 And thonkin him of his grete curtesie,
 My trouthe right woll I kepe, I woll not lie.
 With sorie herte he goth to his coffer,
 And broughtin gold unto the Philosopher,
 The value of five hundrid pound I gesse,
 And him besechith of his gentilnesse
 To grauntin him daies of the remenaunt,
 And faied: maistir I dare well make avaunt 3130
 I failid nevir of my trouthe as yet,
 For sikerly my debt shall welle be quit
 Towardis you, how that evir I fare
 To gon a begging in my kirtell bare,
 But would ye vouchsafe upon suerte
 Two yere or thre for to respitin me,
 Than were I well, for ellis mote I sell
 Mine heritage, there is no more to tell.
 This Philosopher sobirly answerde
 And seide thus, whan he his wordis herde, 3140
 Have I not holdin covenant to The?
 Yes certis, well and truily (qð he)
 Haft thou not had thy lady as The liketh?
 No no (qð he) and sorily he siketh.
 What was the cause, tell me if that thou can?
 Aurelius anon his tale began,

And told him all as ye han herd bifore,
It nedith not reherce it any more.

He faied Arviragus of gentilnes
Had levir die in sorowe and distresse,
Than that his wife werin of her trouthe false,
The sorowe' of Dorigene he told him als,
How loth she was to ben a wicked wife,
And that she had levir have lost her life,
And that her trouth she swore through innocence,
She nevir erst herd speke of apparence,
That made me have of her so grete pite,
And right as frely as he sent her me,
As frely sent I her to him again;
This is all and some, there n'is more to fain. 3160
The Philosopher answerd, levè brother,
Everiche of you did gentilly to other,

3150

Thou art a squier, and he is a knight,
But God forbid it, for his blisful might,
But if a clerke could doen a gentill dede
As well as any' of you, it is no drede.
Sir I relese to The thy thousande ponde,
As now thou werin crope out of the ground,
Ne nevir er now haddist knowin me,
For sir, I woll not takin a peny, 316
For all my craft, ne nought for my travaile,
Thou hast ipaied right well for my vitaile,
It is inough, farewel and have gode daie,
And toke his horse, and rode forth on his waie.
Lordinges this question would I aske now,
Whiche was most franke and fre, as thinkith you?
Now tellith me, er that I ferthir wende,
I can no more, my tale is at an ende.

Here endith the FRANKLEIN'S TALE.

Here

Here beginneth the Second Nonne's PROLOGUE.

HE Minister and Norice unto vices
Which that men clepe in English idlenesse,
That Porter of the gate is of delices,
To' eschue, and by her contrair' her op-
presse,

That is to saine, by lesfull besynesse,
Welle oughtin we to doen alle our entent,
Left that the Fende through idlenesse us hent.

For he that with his thousande cordis flie
Continuallly us waitith to beclappe,
Whan he maie man in idlenesse espie,
He can so lightly catche him in his trappe,
Till that a man be hent, right by the lappe,
He n'is not ware the fende hath him in hond,
Well ought us werche, and idlenesse withstond.

And though men dreddin nevir for to die,
Yet se men well by reson doutlefs;
That idlenesse is rote of slogardie,
Of which ther comith nevir gode ences,
And sith that sloth holdith 'hem in a lees,
Onely to slepe, and for to ete and drink,
And to devourin all that othir swinke.

And for to put us from soche idelnesse,
That cause is of so grete confusion,
I have here doen my faithfull besynesse,
Aftir the Legende in translacion
Right of thy glorious life and passion,
Thou with thy garlond wrought with rose and Lily,
The mene I, maide and martir saint Cecily.

And thou that flowir art of virgins all,
Of whom that Bernard list so well to write,

To The at my beginning first I call,
Thou comfort of us wretchis, do me' endite
Thy maidins deth, that whan through her merite
The eterne life, and of the fende victorie,
As men maie after redin in her storie.

Thou maide and mothir, doughtir of thy sonne;
Thou Welle of mercie, synfull soul's cure,
In whom that God of bounte chese to wonne,
Thou humble' and hie ore evèry cature,
Thou noblist, so ferre forthe ovir nature, 40
That no disdaine thy makir had of kinde
His sonne in blode and fleshe to clothe and winde.

Whiche in the cloistre of thy blisfull fidis
Toke mann's shape, the eterne love and pees,
That of the trine compas Lorde and guide is,
Whom heven, yerth, and se, withoutin les
Aie heryin, and thou virgine wemles
Bare of thy body', and dwellist maidin pure,
The creatour of evèry cature.

Assemblid is in The magnificence, 50
With mercie, godenes, and with soche pite,
That thou that art the sonne of excellence
Not only helpist 'hem that prayin The,
But oftin time of thy benigne
Full frely, or that men thine helpe besече,
Thou goest beforne, and art ther liv'is leche.

Now help thou blisfull, and meke, and faire maide,
Me flemid wretche, in this desert of gall,
Thinke on the woman of Canane, that saied
That whelpis etin some of the crommes small 70
That from ther Lord's table ben ifall,

And

And though that I unworthy childe of Eve
Be sinfull, yet acceptith my beleve.

And for that faith is ded withoutin werkis
So for to werchin yeve me witte and space,
That I be quit from the place that most derk is,
O thou that art so faire and full of grace,
Be thou mine advocate in that hie place,
There as withoutin ende is song Osanna,
Thou Christ's mothir, and doughtir of Anna. 80

And of thy light my soule in prison light,
That troublid is by the contagion
Of my body, and also by the wight
Of yerthly lust, and false affection,
O haven of refuge, O salvacion
Of them that ben in sorowe and distresse,
Now helpe, for to my werke I woll me dresse.

Yet I praie you, that redin that I write,
Foryeve me, that I doe no diligence
This ilke storie subtilly to endite, 90
For both have I the wordes and the sentence
Of them that at the saint's reverence
The storie wrote, and folowen her legende,
And praie you that ye wol my werke amende.

First woll I you the name of saint Cecily
Expoune, as men maie in her storie se,
It is to saie in Englishe, hevin's lilly,
For the pure chastnes of virginite,
Or for the whiteness had of honeste,
And grene of conscience, and of gode fame 100

The fote favour, Lilly was her name.

Or Cecily's to saie, the waie to blinde,
For the ensample was by gode teching,
Or els Cecily, as I writtin finde,
Is joignid by a manir conjoining
Of heven and Lia, in her figuring.
The heven is set for thought of holinesse,
And Lia, for her lasting besinesse.

Cecily maie be faied in this manere
Wanting of blindnes, for her gretè light 110
Of sapience, and for her thewis clere,
Or ellis Lo! this maidin's name bright
Of heven and Leos cometh, of which by right
Men might the hevin of people her call,
Ensamble of gode and wise werkis all.

For Leos peple' in Englishe is to saie,
And right as men maie in the hevin se
The Sunne, and Mone, and sterris every waie,
Right so men ghostly in this maidin fre 120
Sawen of faith the magnanimite,
And eke the clerenes hole of Sapience,
And sondrie werkis bright of excellence.

And right so as these Philosophers write
That hevin is swift, round, and eke brenning,
Right so was faire Cecilia the white
Full swift and besie in every gode working,
And round and hole in gode persevering,
And brenning evre' in charite full bright;
Now have I declarid you what the hight.

Here endeth the Second NONNE's PROLOGUE.

The Second NONNE's TALE.

HIS maide Cecily as her Legend faieth,
Was come of Romaines, and of noble kinde,
And from her cradle fostrid in the faithe
Of Christe, and bare his Gospel in her minde,

She nevir cesid, as I writtin finde,
Of her prayir, and God to love and drede,
Beseeching him to kepe her maidinhede.

And whan this maidin shoul unto a man
Iweddid be, that was full yong of age,
Which that iclepid was Valerian

And daie was comin of her mariage,
She full devout and humble' in her corage
Undir her robe of gold, that sat full faire,
Had next her fleshe iclad her in an heire.

And whiles that the organs made melodie,
To God alone thus in her herte song she,
O Lorde, my soule and eke my body gie
Unwemmed, lest that I confoundid be,
And for his love, that died upon a tre,
Every second or thirde day did she faste,
Aye bidding in her orisons full faste.

The night camin, and to bed must she gone
With her husbonde, as ofte is the manere,
And privily she said to him anon,

O swete and wel bylovid spouse dere,
There is a counsaile, and ye wol it here,
Which that right faine I wold unto you saie,
So that ye me sware, it not to bewraine.

Valerian gan fast unto her swere
That for no case, ne thing that mightin be
He shoul nevir to none bewraien her, 160
And than at laste thus unto him sayed she,
I have an angel, whiche that lovith me
That with gret love, where so I wake or slepe,
Is redy aye, my body for to kepe.

And if that he may felin out of drede
That ye wolle you govern nothing amis,
He wolle you save and kepe till you be dede,
For your clene living, and for your godenesse,
And bringe you streightway unto heavenly blifs, 170
He wolle you love as me for your clenenes,
And shewe you of his joie, and his brightnes.

Valerian, correctid as God wolde
Answerd ayen, if I shal trustin The,
Let me that aungel se, and him beholde,
And if that it a very aungel be,
Than wol I done as thou hast prayid me,
And if thou love anothir man forsothe
Right with this sword than wol I sle you bothe.
Cecily

Cecily answerd anon in this wise,
If that ye lust, that Angel shul ye se,
So that ye trowe on Christ, and you baptise,
Goth forth to Via Appia (qð she)
That from this toun ne stant but milis thre,
And unto the pore folkis that there dwell
Say 'hem right thus, as I shallin you tell.

Tell 'hem that I Cecile, you to 'hem sende
To shewin you the gode Urban the olde,
For secret medis, and for gode entent,
And whan that ye saint Urban han beholde, 190
Tel him the wordis, that I to you tolde,
And whan that he hath purgid you fro sinne,
Than shal ye se that Angel er ye twinne.

Valerian is to that place anon,
And right as him was taught by her lerning,
He found this holy man Urban anon
Among these saintis burials louting;
And he anon, withoutin tarying,
Did his message, and whan he had it tolde,
Urban for joy, gan his hondis up holde.

The teris from his eyin let he fall,
Almighty God, O Jesu Christ (qð he)
Sowir of chaste counsaile, hierde of us all,
The frute of thilke sede of chastite
That thou hast sowe in Cecile, take to The,
Lo! like a besy bee, withoutin gile
The servith evir thine owne thral Cecile.

For thilke spouse, that she yroke but newe
Ful like a fierse Lion, she sendith here
As meke as any lambe was to the ewe,
And with that word, anon there gan apere 210
An olde man, clad in white clothis clere,
That had a boke of golde letters in honde,
And gan biforne Valerian for to stond.

Valerian as dedde fet down for drede,
Whan he this olde man saw standing so,
And on his boke right thus he gan to rede,
O Lord, O Faith, O God withoutin mo
Of Christendome, and fathre' of al also,
Above al, and ovir al every whete, 220
These wordis al with Gold ywrittin were.

Whan this was rad, than said this olde man,
Levif thou this or none, say ye or nay,
I leve al this thing (qð Valerian)
Under the hevin no wight ne thinke may
A sothir thing than this, I dare well say.
Tho vanishid the olde man, he n'ist where
And pope Urban him christenid right there.

Valerian goth home, and saint Cecily
Within his chambir with an Angel fonde, 230
This aungel had of rose and of lillye
Corounis two, the whiche he bare in honde,
And first to Cecile, as I undirstonde,
He yave that one, and after gan he take
That othir to Valerian her make.

With body clene, and with unwemmid thought
Kepith aye wel these corounis (qð he)
From paradise to you I have 'hem brought,
Ne nevir more shullin they rottin be,
Ne lesin ther swete favour, trustith me, 240
Ne nevir wight ne shalle 'hem se with eye,
But he be chaf, and hate alle vilonie.

And thou Valerian, for thou so sone
Assenteddist to gode counsaile also

180 Say what you list, and thou shalt have thy bone;
I have a brothir (qð Valerian tho)
That in this world I lovin no man so,
I pray you that my brothir may have grace
To know the trouth, as I do in this place.

The angel sayed, God likith your request 250
And you both with the palme of martirdom
Yshallin come unto the blisfull feste,
And with that worde Tiburce his brothir come
And whan that he the favour undernome,
Whiche that the rosis and the lilies caste,
Within his hert he gan to wondir false.

And said: I wondir this time of the yere
Whence that this fote favour comith so
Of rosis and lilies, that I smell here,
For though I had them in mine hondis two, 260
The favour might in me no depir go,
The swete smel, that in mine hert I finde,
Hath chaungid me al in anothir kinde.

Valerian said, two corounis have we
Snowe white and rose red, that shinith clere,
Which that thine eyin han no might to se,
And as thou smellist 'hem thugh my praier,
So shalt thou fene 'hem my leve brothir dere,
If it so be that thou wilt without flouthe
Bileve aright, and know the very trouthe. 270

Tiburce answerid, saiest thou this to me
In sothnesse, or in dreme herkin I this?
In dremais (qð Valerian) han we be Unto this time, brother mine, iwis, 280
But now at erst, our dwelling in trouth is.
How wost thou (qð Tiburce) and in what wife?
Qð Valerian, that I shal The devise.

The angel of God hath me the trouth taught,
Which thou shalt sein, and thou wilt reney
The idols, and be clene, or ellis naught. 280
Of the miracles of these crounis twey
Saint Ambrose in his preface lust to sey,
Full solempnely this noble doctour dere
Commendith it, and faith in this manere.

The palme of martirdom for to receive,
Seint Cecily, fulfillid of God's yeste,
The world and eke her chambre gan she weive,
Witnesse Tiburc'is, and Cecil'is shrifte,
To which God of his bounte woldin shifte
Corounis two, of flouris wel smelling, 290
And made the angel 'hem tho crounis bring.

The maid hath brought 'hem to the blisse above,
The world hath wist what it is worth certain
Devocion and chastite to love.
Tho shewed him Cecile all opin and plaine 230
That al idollis ben but thingis vain,
For they ben dombe, and thereto they ben dese,
And chargid him his idoles for to lese.

Who that this trowith not, a beste he is,
(Qð this Tiburce) if that I shall not lie.
And she gan kisse his breste, whan she herde this, 300
And was ful glad he couth the trouthe espie,
This day take I The as for mine allie,
Saidè this blisful maidin faire and dere,
And afir that she said, as ye may here.

Lo right so as the love of Christ (qð she)
Made me thy brother's wife, right in that wise
Anon for mine alye here take I The,
Sithins that thou thine idoles wolt despise,
H h Go

Go with thy brother now, and The baptise, 310
And make The clene, so that thou maist beholde
The angel's face, of which thy brothir tolde.

Tiburce answerde, and said: my brothir dere,
First tell me whether shall I? to what man?
To whome, qð he? come forth with right gode chere,
I wol The lede unto the pope Urban.
To Urban? brothir mine Valerian,
(Qð this Tiburce) wilt thou me thiðir lede?
Me thinkith that it were a wondir dede.

Ne menist thou not Urban. (qð he tho)
That is so oftin dampnid to be dede,
And wonnith aye in halkis to and fro,
And dare not onis puttin forth his hede?
Men shoulidin him brenne in a fire so rede
If he were founde, and men might him espie,
And we also, that bere him companie.

And while we seken thilke divinite,
That is ihidde in hevin privily,
Algate ibrent in this world shoulde we be.
To whom Cecily answerid boldely, 330
Men mightin drede, right wel and skilfully
This life to lesin, mine owne derè brother,
If this were living onely and non other,

But there is bettir life in othir place,
That nevir shal be loste, ne drede The nought,
Which Godd'is Son to us told through his grace,
That Father's Sonne hath all thingis ywrought,
And al that wrought is with a skilfull thought,
The Gost, that from the fathir gan procede,
Hath fullid him withoutin any drede. 340

By word and by miracle, Godd'is Sonne,
Whan he was in this worlde, declarid here,
That there is othir life there men may wonne.
To whom answerd Tiburce: O sustir dere,
Ne saidist thou right nowe in this manere,
There n'as but one God lorde in sothfastnesse,
And now of thre how may you bere witnessse.

That shal I tel (qð she) or that I go;
Right as man hath sapiencis thre
Memory', engine, and intellectu also, 350
So in suche beyng of divinite
Thre personis may there right wel ybe;
Tho gan she there full besily him preche
Of Christ'is sonne, and of his painis teche.

And many pointis of his passion,
How Godd'is Sonne in this worlde was witholde
To doin mankind plaine remission,
That was ybounde in sinns and caris colde,
Al these thingis she unto Tiburce tolde;
And aftir this Tiburce in gode entent 360
With Valerian to pope Urban went,

That thonkid God, and with glad hert and light
He christenid him, and made him in that place
Perfite in his lerning, as Godd'is knight,
And aftir this Tiburce ygate suche grace,
That every day he saw in time and space
The' Aungel of God, and every manir bone
That he God askid, it was sped ful sone.

It were fulle harde by ordir for to faine
How many wondirs Jesu for him wrought,
But at the last, to tellin shorte and plaine,
The Sergeantis of the toun for 'hem fought,
And 'hem before Almache the Prefect brought,
Which 'hem aposed, and knew al ther entent,

And to the' Image of Jupiter 'hem sent.

And said, whofo wol do no sacrifice
Swappe of his hede, this is my sentence here.
Anon these martirs, that I you devise,
One Maximus, that was an officere 380
Of the Prefect's, and his Corniculere,
'Hem hent, and when he forth the faintis lad,
Himselfe he wepte for pite that he had.

Whan Maximus had herd these faintis lore,
He gate 'hem of the turmentouris leve,
And had 'hem to his house withoutin more,
And with ther preching, er that it were eve
Thei gan fro the turmentouris to reve,
And fro Maxime, and fro his folke echone,
The false faith, to trowin in God alone.

Cecily came, whan it was woxin night, 390
With priestis, that 'hem christenid al in fere,
And aftirward, whan day was woxin light,
Cecily saied 'hem with a sobir chere,
Now Christ'is own knightis both leve and dere,
Castith away the werkis of derknesse,
And armith you in armour of brightnesse.

Ye han forsoth idone a great bataile,
Your cours is run, your faith hath you conserved,
Goth to the croune of life that maie not faile,
The rightful juge, whiche that ye han yferved, 400
Shal yeve it you, as ye have it deserved,
And whan this thing was said, as I devise,
Men lad 'hem forth to done the sacrifice.

But whan they were unto the place ybrought,
To tellin shortly the conclusioun,
They n'olde enfence, ne sacrifice right nought,
But on ther knees they satin 'hem adoun,
With humble herte and sad devocion,
And lostin bothe ther hedis in the place,
Ther soulis went unto the king of grace. 410

This Maximus, that sawe the thing betide,
With pitoufe teris tolde it anon right,
That he ther soulis sawe to hevin glide
With aungels full of clerenesse and of light, 350
And with his word convertid many a wight,
For whiche Almachius did him so bete
With whippes of lede, till he his life gan lete.

Cecile him toke, and buried him anon
By Tiburce and Valerian sothly, 420
Within her burying place under a stone,
And aftir this Almachius hastily
Bad his ministers fetchin opinly
Cecile, so that she might in his presence
Do sacrifice, and Jupiter encence.

But they convertid were at her wife lore,
And weptin full sore, and yave full credence
Unto her worde, and cridin more and more
Christ Godd'is Sonne, withoutin difference
Is very God, this is alle our sentence,
That hath a servaunt so gode him to serve, 430
Thus with o voice we trowin though we sterve.

Almachius, that herde all this doying
Bad fetchin Cecile, that he might her se,
And alderfirst, lo! this was his asking,
What manir woman art thou (qð he)
I am a gentill woman borne (qð she)
I aske of The (qð he) though it The greve
Of thy religion and of thy beleve?

Ye

Ye have begon your question folishly,
(Qð she) that wolde two answeris conclude 440
In one demaunde, ye asken leudily.
Almachius sayed to that similitude
Of whence comith thine answering so rude?
Of whence (qð she?) whan that she was yfrained,
Of conscience, and of gode faith unfained.

Almachius said, ne takist thou none hede
Of my powir? and she him answerde this,
Your might (qð she) ful litill is to drede,
For every mortall mann'is power n'is,
But like a bladdir full of winde, iwis, 450
For with a nedl'is point, whan it is blowe,
May al the bofte of it be laide full lowe.

Full wrongfully begannist thou (qð he)
And yet in wrong is thy perseveraunce,
Wost thou not how our mighty Princis fre
Have thus commaundid and made ordinaunce,
That every christin wight shal have penaunce,
But if that he his christendome withsey:
And gon al quite, if he wol it reney?

Your Princis errin, as your Nobles dothe, 460
Qð tho Cecily, in a wode sentence,
Ye make us gilty, and it is not sothe,
For ye that knowen wel our innocence,
For as muche as we done a reverence
To Christ, and for we bere a christin name,
Ye put on us a crime and eke a blame.

But we that knowin well thilke namè so
For vertuous, we may it not withsey.
Almachius answerd, chese one of these two,
Do sacrifice, or christendome reney, 470
That thou mowe now escapin by that weye.
At whichè worde the holy blisful maide
Gan for to laugh, and to the judge she saide,

O judge confusid in thy nicete,
Wolt thou that I reney my innocence,
To makin me a wickid wight (qð she)?
Lo! he diffimulith here in audience
He stareth and woddith in his advertence.
To whom Almachius said: O sely wretche
Thou wotist not how far my might may stretche. 480

Have not our mighty princis to me yeven
The yest of powir and authority,
To makin folke to dyin, or to liven?
Why spekist thou so proudly than to me?
I speke it not but stedfastly (qð she)
Not proudly, for I say as for my side,
That we hatin dedely thilke vice of pride.

And if thou drede not a sothe for to here,
Than wol I shewe all opiny by right,
That thou hast made a full grete lesing here, 490
Thou saist thy princis han yeve The the might Both for to sle and eke to quicke a wight,
Thou ne mayist but only lyve bireve,
Thou hast non othir powir ne no leve.

But thou maist say, thy princis han The maked
Minister of dethe, for if thou speke of mo,
Thou lyist, for thy powir is full naked;
Do way thy boldnesse, saide Almachius tho,
And sacrifice to our goddes, er thou go,
I ne recke not what wrong thou me proffer 500
For I can bere it, as a philosopher,

But thilkè wrongis may I not endure,
That thou spekist of our gods here (qð he.)
Cecily answerid, O nice creture,
Thou saidist no worde sin thou spake to me,
That I ne knewe therwith thy nicete,
And that thou were in every maner wise
A leude officer, and a vaine justice.

The lackith nothing to thine utter eyen
That thou n'art blind, for thing that we sene all 510
That is a stone, that men well may asprien,
That ilkè stone, a God thou wolt it call,
I rede The let thine hond upon it fall,
And tast it wel, and stone thou shalte it finde,
Sens that thou seest not with thin eyin blinde.

It is a grete shame that the peple shall
So scornè The, and laugh at thy folye,
For cominly men wot it well ore all,
That mighty God is in his hevins hye,
And these ymages wel maiste thou asprie 520
To The ne to 'hemfelse may not profite,
For in effect they be not worth a mite.

These and suche othir wordis saidin she,
And he woxe wroth, and bad she should be lede
Home to her house, and in her house (qð he)
Brennin her in a bathe, with flamis rede;
And as he bad, right so was done the dede,
For in a bathe they gan her fast to shete,
And night and day grete fire undir they bete.

Al the long night, and eke the day also 530
For al the fire, and eke the bath'is hete,
She sat al colde, and felt of it no wo,
It made her not a droppè for to swete,
But in that bath her life she mote ylete:
For Almachie, with ful wicked entent,
To sle her in the bathe, his sonde he sent.

Thre strokis in the necke he smote her tho
The turmentour, but for no manir chaunce
He might not smitin al her necke a two,
And for there was that time an ordinaunce, 540
That no man do no person such penaunce,
The fourthè stroke to smite ne softe ne fore,
This turmentour durst smitin her no more.

But halfe dede, with her necke ycorvin there,
He left her lye, and on his way he went;
The christen folke which that about her were,
In shetis home full faire thei han her hent,
Thre dayis livid she in this turmente,
And never cessid she the faith to preche,
That she was sofrid in, and them to teche. 550

And 'hem she yave her meubles and her thing,
And to the pope Urban betoke 'hem tho,
And sayd, I askid this of hevin's king,
To have respite thre dayis and no mo,
To recommaunde to you er that I go
These soulis, lo! and that I might so werche
Here of mine house perpetuelliche a cherche.

Saint Urban with his Dekins privily
The body fette, and buried it by night,
Among his other saintis honestly, 560
Her house the church of saint Cecily hight,
Saint Urban halowed it, as he well might,
In whiche unto this day, in noble wife,
Men don to Christ, and to his saintes servise.

Here endith the Second NONNE's TALE.

Here beginneth the PROLOGUE of the Chanon's YEMAN.

WHAN endid was the life of saint Cecile,
 Er we fully had riddin fivè mile,
 At Boughton under blee usgan o'retake
 A man, that clothid was in clothis blake,
 And undir that he ware a white surplise,
 His hakney, that was all pomily grise,
 So swette, that it a wondir was to se,
 It semid he had prickid milis thre ;
 The horse eke that his yoman rode upon
 So swette, that unnethis mightin he gon ;
 About the paytrell stode the some full hie,
 He was of some as fleckid as a pye ;
 A wallet twifolde on his cropir lay,
 It semid that he caried lite aray,
 Al light for somir rode this worthy man,
 And in my hert to wondrin I began
 What that he was, till that I undirstode
 How that his cloke was sewid to his hode,
 For whiche, when I had long avifid me,
 I demid him some Chanon for to be.
 His hatte hing at his backe doune by a lace,
 For he had riddin more than trot or pace,
 He rode aye pricking as he werin wode,
 A clote lese he had laide under his hode
 For swette, and for to kepe his hede fro hete,
 But it was mochill joye to se him swete,
 His forehede droppid, as a stillatory
 Were ful of plantaine or of pellitory,
 And whan that he was come, he gan to crie,
 God save (qð he) this joly company,
 Fast have I prickid (qð he) for your sake,
 Bicause that I woldin you ovirtake
 To ridin in this mery company.

His yoman was eke ful of curtisy

And saidè, fires, now in the morowe tide
 Out of your hosterie I saw you ride, 600
 And warnid here my lorde and soveraine
 Whiche that to ridin with you is ful faine
 For his disporte, he lovith daliaunce.
 Frend, for thy warning God yeve The gode chaunce,
 Then said our host, certaine it woldin seme
 Thy lorde were wise, and so I may wel deme,
 He is ful joconde also dare I laye,
 Can he ought tell a mery tale or twaye
 With whiche he gladin may this companie?
 Who, sir? my lorde? Yea sir withoutin lie, 610
 He can of mirth and eke of jolite
 Not but inough ; also sir, trustith me,
 And ye him knewe al so well as do I,
 Ye would wondir how wel and thriftily
 He couth ywerke, and that in sondry wise,
 He hath take on him many' a grete emprise,
 Whiche were ful harde for any that is here
 To bringe aboute, but they of him it lere.
 As homely as he ridith amonge you,
 If ye him knew, it wold ben for your prowè, 620
 Ye woldin not forgon his acquaintance,
 For mochill gode I dare lay in balaunce,
 All that I have in my possession,
 He is a man of hie discreffion,
 I warne you wel he is a passing man.
 Wel (qð our hoste) I pray The tel me than
 Is he a clerke or non? tell what he is.
 - A clerke? nay greter then a clerke, iwis,
 Saidè the yoman, and in wordis fewe
 Hoste, of his crafte somwhat wol I The shewe. 630
 I say my lorde can suche a subtilte
 But al his craft ye may not wete of me,

(And

(And somewhat helpe I yet to his werching,
That all the ground that we be on riding
Til we be com to Canterbury toun,
He coude al clene yturnin up and doun,
And pave it al of silvir and of golde.

And whan this yoman hadde thus itolde
Unto our hoste: he saide benedicite!
This thing is wondir mervailous to me,
Sens that thy lorde is of so hie prudence;
(Bycause of whiche, men shuld him reverence)
That of his worship reckith he so lite
His overist sloppe is not worth a mite
As in effeete to him, so mote I go,
It is al baudy, and to tore also.
Why is thy lorde so stottish I The pray
And is of powir bettir clothes to bey,
If that his dede accordith with thy speche?
Tellin me that, and that I The besече.

Why (qð this yeman) wherto aske ye me?
God help me so, for he shal never the,
But I wol now avowin that I saie,
And therfore kepe it secret I you praie,
He is to wise in fay, as I beleve,
And that is ovirdone n'il nevir preve,
And right as clerkis saie, it is a vice,
Wherfore I holde him, in that, leude and nice;
For whan a man hath ovir grete a wit,
Ful ofte it happith him to misuse it:
So doth my lorde, and that me grevith fore,
God amende it, I can say you no more.

Therof no force gode yeman (qð our host).
Sens of the conning of thy lord thou wost,
Tel howe he dothe, I pray The hertily,
Sens that he is so crafty and so fly,
Wher dwellin ye, if it to tell ybe?

In the suburbis of a tounse (qð he)
Lurking in hernis and in lanis blinde,
Wheras the robbers, and thevis by kinde
Holdin ther privy fearful residence,
As they that dare not shewin ther pefence;
So fare we, if that I shal say the soth.

Yet, qð our hoste, let me talkin to Th',
Why art thou so discoloured in thy face?

Peter (qð he)? God gevith sory grace,
I am so used in the hote fire to blowe,
That it hath chaunged my colour as I trowe,
I am not wont in no mirrour to prie,
But to swinke fore, and lerne to multiplie,
We blondrin evir, and pore in the fire,

And for al that, we faile of our desire,
For evir we lacken our conclusion,
To much folke we ben but illusion,
And borowe gold, be it a pounde or two,
Or ten or twelve, or many summis mo,
And makin 'hem to wene at the left way
That of a pound we coulden makin tway;
Yet is it false, and aye han we gode hope
It for to done, and aftir it we grope.
But that science is so ferre us biforne
We mowe not although that we had it sworne
It ovirtake, it flyt away so fast,
It wol us makin beggers at the last.

Whiles this yeman was thus in his talking
This Chanon drewe him nere, and herd al thing
Whiche this yeman spake, for suspection
Of mennis speche evir had this Chanon,
For Cato saith, that he that gilty is
Demith al thing he spoke of him, twis,
Bicause of that, he gan so nighe to drawe
To his yeman, to herkin al his sawe.
And thus he said unto his yeman tho,
Holde now thy pece, and speke no wordis mo,
For if thou do, thou shalte it sore abie,
Thou slaundrist me here in this companie,
And eke discoverest that thou shuldist hide.

Ye (qð our host) tel on what so betide,
Of al this threting recke The not a mite.

In faith (qð he) no more do I but lite.
And whan this Chanon saw it would not be
But his yeman would tel his privite,
He fledde away for very sorowe and shame.

Ha! (qð the yeman) here shall rise a game,
All that I can, anon wol I you tell,
Sens he is gon, the foule fend him quell,
For nevre hereaftir, woll I with him mete
For peny ne for pounde, I you behete;
He that me first broughtin unto that game,
Er that he die, sorow have he and shame;

For it is ernest to me by my faithe,
That fele I well, what so any man saithe,
And yet for al my smert and al my grefe,
For al my sorowe, labour and mischefe,
I couldin nevir leve it in no wise;
Now wolde to God my witte mightin suffice
To tellin all that longith to that arte!

But nathelasse yet woll I tel you a parte,
Sens that my lord is gon, I wol not spare,
Suche thingis as I know I wol declare.

Here endeth the PROLOGUE of the Chanon's YEMAN.

The Chanon's YEMAN's TALE.

A Priest of London, more covetous than wife, is deceived by a Chanon professing the Art of Alchymye.

WITH this chanon I dwellid sevin yere,
And of his science I am nere the nere,
Al that I haddè I have lost thereby;
And God wotte, so hath many mo than I,

There I was wonte to be right freshe and gay
Of clothing, and of other gode aray,
Now maie I were an hose upon mine hedde;
And where my colour was both fresh and redde
Now it is wanne, and of a leaden hewe,
Who so it usith most, fore shall him rue.
And of my swinke, yet blerid is mine eye,
Lo suche avantage is to multiplie!
That sliding science hath me made so bare,
That I have no gode where that evre' I fare,
And yet I am endettid so thereby
Of gold, that I have borowid truly,
That while I live, I ne shall it quite never;
Let every man beware by me for ever,
What manir man that castith him therto,
If he continue, I hold his thrift ido,
So helpe me God, thereby shall he nere win,
But empte his purse, and make his wittis thin,
And whan he, through his madnesse and folie
Hath lost his owne gode, thorough jeopardie,
Than he exitith othir men thereto
To lese ther gode, as he himself hath doe,
For unto shrewis joye it is and ese
To have ther felawes in pain and difese;
For thus was I ones lernid of a clerke;
Of that no charge, I woll speke of our werke.

Whan we be there, as we shall exercise
Our elvishe craft, we semin wondir wise,
Our termis ben so clergiall and so quainte,
I blowe the fire, till that myne herte faint.

What should I tellin eche proporcion
Of thingis, whiche that we werchin upon?
As on five or fixe uncis, maie well be,
Of silvir, or some othir quantite,
And besie me to tellin you the names
Of Orpiment, brent bonis, yron squames,
That into poudir groundin ben full small,
And in an yerthin potte how put is all,
And salte-peter put in, and als papere,
Bifore these pouders that I speke of here,
And well icovered, with a lampe of glas,
And of moche othir thing which that there was,
And of the pottis and glas englutynge,
That of the aire might passin out nothing,
And of the esie fire and smart also,
Whiche that was made, and of the care and wo 790
That we had in our matters subliming,
And in amalgaming and calfining
Of quicksilver, icleped Mercury crude,
For all our sleightis, we can not conclude
Our Orpiment, and sublimed Mercurie,
Our groundid litarge eke on porphirie,
Of eche of these, of unces a certain,
Nought helpith us, our labour is in vain,
Ne eke our spiritis assencioun,
Ne our matters, that lien all fixe adoun,
Mowe in our werking nothing us availe,
For lost is all our labour and travaile,
And all the cost, a twentie devill waie,
Is lost also, whiche we upon it laie.

There is also full many' an othir thing,
That is unto our craft appertaining,
Though I by ordir 'hem ne reherce can,
Bicause that I ne am but a lende man,
Yet woll I tell 'hem as thei come to minde,
Though I ne cannot set 'hem in ther kinde, 810
As Bole Armeny, Verdegrece, Borace,
And sondrie vessels made of yerth and glas,
Our urinals, and our discensories,
Viols, crollettes, and sublimatories,
Concurbitis, and alembekis eke,
And othir soche, dere inough of a Leke;
It nedith not to rehercin 'hem all,
Watirs rubifying, and Bolis gall,
Arfneke, Sal Armoniake, and Brimstone,
And herbis colde I tell eke many one, 820
Egremonie, Valerian, Lunarie,
And othir soche, if that me list to tarie,
Our lampis, brenning bothè night and daie,
To bringe about our craft, if that we maie,
Our founice eke of calcinacion,
And of watirs albificacion,
Unflekid lime, chalke, and gleire of an eye,
Pouders divers, ashis, dong, pisse, and cleie,
Serid pottis, salt Peter, Vitriole,
And divers frirs, made of wode and cole, 830
Sal Tartre, Alcaly, sal preparete,
And combust matters, and coagulate,
Cley made with hors dung, mann's heere and oile,
Of tartre alim, glas, berme, wort, argoile,
Ros algar, and othir mattirs enbibing,
And eke of our mattirs incorporing,
And of our silvir citrinacion,
Our cementing, and fermentation,
Our yngottis, testis, and many mo.

I woll you tell as was me taught also 840
The foure spirites, and the bodies seven
By order, as I herd my lorde nemene.

The first spirite quicke silvir clepid is,
The second Orpiment, the third iwis
Sal Armoniake, and the fourth Brimstone.

The bodies seven, lo! here 'hem anone,
Sol gold is, and Luna silvir we threpe,
Mars yron, Mercury quicke silvir we clepe,
Saturnus leade, and Jupiter is tinne, 850
And Venus copir, by my fathir kinne.

This cursid craft who so woll exercise
He shall no gode have that maie him suffice,
For all the gode he spendith there about
He lesin shall, thereof have I no doubt,
Who so that list to uttir his folie,
Let him come forth and lerne to multiplie;
And every man, that hath ought in his cofer
Let him appere, and wexe a Philosopher,
Askaunce that craft is so light for to lere;
Naie naie God wote, all be he Monke, or Frere, 860
Priest, or Chanon, or any othir wight,
Though he sit at his boke both daie and night,
In lerning of this elvishe nice lore
All is in vain; and parde mochill more
Is to lere a leude man this subtelte,
Fie speke not thereof, for it woll not be,
All could he littrature, or could he none,
As in effect, he shall finde it all one,

For

For bothe two, by my saluacion,
Concludin in multiplicacion liche well, whan thei havin all ido,
This is to sain, thei failin bothe two

Yet forgate I to makia reherfaile
Of watirs corosife, and of limaile,
And of bodies molificacion,
And also of ther induracion,
Oiles, ablusions, metall fusible,
To telle you all, would passe any bible
That o where is, wherefore as for the best
Of all these namis now wolke I me reste,
For as I trowe, I have you told inow
To reise a fende, all loke he nere so row.

A naie let be the Philosophers stone
Elixir cleped, we sikin fast echone,
For had we him, than were we sikre' inow
But unto God of heven I make avowe
For all our craft, whan we han all ido,
And all our sleight, he wold not come us to,
He hath us made to spendin mochill gode,
For sorowe' of whiche, almost we waxin wode, 890
But that gode hope crepith into our herte,
Supposing evir, though we sorely smerte,
To ben relevid of him aftirward,
Such supposing and hope is sharpe and hard,
I warne you well it is to sikin ever,
That future temps hath made men discover
In trust thereof all that evir thei had,
Yet of that art thei could not waxin sad,
For unto them it is a bittir swete,
So semith it, for n'ad thei but a shete,
Which that thei might wrappin 'hem in a night,
And a bratte to walkin in a daie light,
Thei wold 'hem sel, and spend it on this craft,
Thei con not stince till nothing be them laste,
And evirmore, where that evir thei gone,
Men maie 'hem ken by the smell of Brimstone,
For all the worlde thei stincken as a Gote,
Ther savour is so Rammishe and so hote,
That though a man a mile from 'hem ybe
The savour wold enfect him, trustith me.

Lo, thus by smelling, and threde bare aray,
If that men list, these folke knowin thei maie,
And if a man wold aske 'hem privily,
Why thei be clothid so unthrifily?
Right anon thei wold rowne into his ere,
And sayin, if that thei espyd were,
Men wold 'hem flea, bicause of ther science,
Lo! thus these folke betrayin innocence.

Passe ovir this, I go my tale unto;
Er that the potte be on the fire ido
Of metalles, with a certain quantite
My lorde 'hem tempereth, and no man but he,
Now he is gon, I dare saie boldily
For as men sain, he can doen craftily,
Algate I wote well he hath soche a name,
And yet full oft he rennith in the blame;
And wote ye how, full oft it happith so,
The pot to brekith, farewell, all is go,
These metalles ben of so grete violence,
Our wallis maie not make 'hem resistance,
But if thei werin wrought of lime and stone,
Thei percin so, and through the wall thei gone,
And some of 'hem sinkin into the ground;
Thus have we lost by timis many' a ponde,
And some are scattered all the flore about,
Some lepen into the rose withoutin doubt,
Tho that the fende not in our sight him shewe,
I trowe that he with us be, that ilke shrewe
In hell where that he is both lorde and fire,
Ne is there no more wo, rancour ne ire,
Whan that our pot is broke, as I have saied,
Every man chite, and holte him ill apaid,

870 Some saied it was long of the fire making,
Some layid naie, it was on the blowing,
Than was I ferde, for that was mine office.
Straw (qð the third) ye ben bothe leude and nice,
It was not temprid as it ought to be.

Naie (qð the fourth) stint and herkin to me,
Bicause that our fire was not made of Beche,
That is the cause, and for none othir seche, 950
I cannot tell whereon it is along,
But well I wot grete strief is us emong.
What (qð my lorde) there n'is no more to doen,
Of these perilles I wold beware eftlone,
I am right sikir, that the potte was crased,
Be as be maie, be ye nothing amased,
As usage is, let swepe the flore aswithe,
Plucke up your herte, and be ye glade and blithe.

The mullocke on an hepè yswepid was,
And on the flore ycast was a canvas, 960
And all this mullocke in a Sive ithrowe,
And siftid and ipluckid many' a throwe.

Parde (qð one) fomwhat of our metall
Yet is there here, although we have not all,
And tho this thing mishappid hath as now,
An othir time it maie ben well inow.
We mote puttin our gode in aventure,
A Marchaunt, parde, maie not aie endure,
Trustith me well, in his prosperite,
Somtime his gode is drounid in the sec, 970
And sometime comith safe unto the londe.

Peace (qð my lorde) the next time I wol fonde
To bring our craft all in an othir plite,
And but I doe sirs, let me have the wite,
There was default in fomwhat, well I wote.

An othir saied, the fire was ovir hote,
But be it hote or cold, I dare saie this,
That we concludin evir more amis,
We failin of that whiche we woldin have,
And in our madnesse evirmore we rave, 980
And whan we be togither everichone,
Every man semith wise as Salomon,
But al thing, which that shinith as the gold,
Ne is not golde, as I have herde ytolde,
Ne every appell, that is faire at iye,
Ne is not gode, what so men clappe or crië.
Right so lo! farith it emongis us,
He that semith the wisist by Jesus
Is moeste sole, whan it comith to the prese,
And he that semith truist is a thefe, 990
That shall ye knowe, er that I from you wende,
By that I of my tale have made an endë.

There was a Chanon of Religoun
Emongis us, wold enfect all a toun,
Although it as grete were as Ninive,
Rome, Alisaundre, Troie, and othir thre,
His sleightis, and his infinite falsnesse
There couth no man ywrittin, as I gesse;
Though that he might livin a thousande yere,
In all this world of falsnesse n'is his pere, 1000
For in his termis he wold him so winde,
And speke his wordis in so flie a kinde,
Whan that he commune shall with any wight,
That he wold makin him dote anon right,
But that it a fende be as himself is;
Full many' a man hath he begiled er this,
And mo wold, if that he maie live a while,
And yet men ride and gone ful many' a mile
Him for to seke, and have his acquantaunce;
Not knowing ought of his false governaunce; 1010
And if ye lust to give me audience,
I wold it tellin here in your presence.

But worshipfull Chanons religious,
Ne demith not that I sclander your hous,
Although that my tale of a Chanon be,
Of every order some shrewe is parde,

And

And God forbid that all a companie
Should rue a singuler mann's folie;
To flaunder you is nothing mine entent;
But to correctin that amis is mente,
This tale ywas not only told for you,
But eke for other mo; ye wote well how
That emongis Christ's Aposteles twelve
There was no traitour but Judas himselve.
Than why sholdin the remenaunt have blame
That giltles were? by you I saie the same,
Save only this, if ye woll herkin me,
If any Judas in your covent be,
Remeveth him betimis, I you rede,
If shame or losse may caufin any drede,
And be nothing displefid I you praie,
But in this case herkinith what I saie.

IN London was a Priest Annuellere,
That therein had ydwelt many a yere,
Whiche was so plesant and so servisable
Unto the wife, where that he was at table,
That she would suffir him nothing to paie
For borde ne clothing, went he nere so gaie,
And spending silvir had he right inow;
Thereof no force, in plesaunce went his plow,
But for to telle you forthe of this Chanon,
That brought this priest unto confusion.

This false Chanon camin upon a daie
Unto this priest's chambir where he laie,
Beseching him to lene him a certain
Of gold, and he would quite it him ayen,
Lenith me a Marke (qð he) but daies thre,
At my day I wolle fans faile quite it The,
And if it so be, that thou finde me false,
An other daie than hang me by the halse.

This priest toke him a marke, and that aswith,
And this Chanon him thankid many sith,
And toke his leve, and went forth on his wey,
And at the third day brought him his money;
And to this priest he toke this gold ayen,
Whereof this priest was wondir glad and fain.

Certis (qð he) nothing anywith me
To lene a man a noble, two or thre,
Or what thing were in my possession,
Whan he so true is of condicion,
That in no wise he brekin wolle his daie,
To soche a man I can never saie naie.

What qð this Chanon, should I be untrue?
Nay that were a thing fallin of the newe,
Trowth is a thing that I woll ever kepe
Unto the daie, in whiche that I shall crepe
Into my grave, or ellis God forbede,
Belevith this as sikir as your crede,
God thonke I, and in gode time be it saied,
That there n'as never man yet ill apaid
For gold ne silvir that he to me lent,
Ne never falshe in mine herte I ment.

And sir (qð he) now of my privite
Sithin so godelich ye have ben to me,
And kithid to me so grete gentilnesse,
Somwhat, to quite with you your kindnesse,
I woll you shewe, if that ye woll it lere,
(I shalle it shewe to you anon right here)
How I can werchin in Philosophie,
Take gode hede, ye shall it se with your eye,
That I woll doe a maistris or I go.

Yea, qð this priest, yea, Sir, and woll ye so,
Mary therof I praie you hartily.

At your commaundement, sir, truily,
Qð the Chanon, and ellis God forbede;
(Lo how this these ycouth his service bedede!)

Full soth it is that such profered servise
Stinkith, as witnesfith the oldè wife,

And that full sone I woll it verifie
In this Chanon, rote of all trecherie,
That evirmore delite hath and gladnesse,
(Soche fendly thoughtis in his herte empressse)
How Christ's peple he may to mischef bring;
God kepe us from his false dissimuling.

What wist this sely priest with whom he delt?
Ne of his harme comming nothing he felt;
O sely priest! O sely innocent!
With covetise anon thou shalt be blent;
O gracelesse, and full blind is thy conceite,
Nothing art thou aware of his disceite,
Whiche that this Foxe hath shapin unto The,
His wilie wrenchis thou ne maiest not fle;
Wherefore to go to the conclusion,
That referrith to thy confusion.

Unhappie man, anon I woll me hie
To tellin thine unwitt, and thy folie,
And eke the falsnesse of that othir wretche,
As ferforth as my conning woll ystretche.

This Chanon was my lorde ye wouldè wene,
Sir hoste, in faith, and by the hevin's Quene,
It was an othir Chanon, and not he,
That can an hundrid folde more subtilte,
He hath betrayid folke many a time,
Of his falsnesse it dolith me to rime,
And evir whan I speke of his falshe de,
For shame of him, my chekis waxin rede,
Algatis thei beginnin for to glowe,
For rednesse have I none, right well I know,
In my visage, for the fumis diverce
Of metals, whiche ye have herde me reherce,
Consumid and wastid have my rednesse.
Now take hede of this Chanon's curfidnesse.

Sir (qð he) to the priest, let your man gon
For quicksilvir, that we had it anon,
And let him bringin uncis two or thre,
And whan he comith, as fast shull ye se
A wondir thing, whiche ye saw nere er this.

Sir (qð the priest) it shall be doen I wis.
He bad his servaunt fetchin him this thing,
And he all redy was at his bidding,
And went him forth, and came anon again
With this quicksilver, shortly for to fain,
And toke these uncis thre to the Chanoun,
And he hem layid well and faire adoun,
And bad the servaunt colis for to bring,
That he anon might go to his werking.

The colis right anon werin iset,
And this Chanon toke out a crossilet
Of his bosome, and shewed it to the priest,
This instrument (qð he) which that thou seest,
Take in thy hond, and put thy self therin
Of this quicksilver an unce, and begin
In Christ's name to wexe a Philosopher,
There be full fewe, whiche that I would it profer
To shewin hem so moche of my science,
For here shull ye se by experience
That this quicksilver I woll mortifie
Right in your sight anon withoutin lie,
And make it as gode silver and as fine
As there is any in your purse or mine,
Or ellis where, and make it malliable,
Or ellis holdith me false and unstable
Emongis folke for evir to appere.

I have a poudre, that cost me full dere,
Shall make all gode, for it is cause of all
My conning, whiche that I you shewin shall,
Voidith your man, and let him be thereout,
And shet the dore, whilis we ben about
Our privitie, that no man us espie,
Whiles that we werk in our Philosophie.
All as he bad, fulfillid was in dede,
This ilke servaunt anon out he yede

And

And his maistr yshet the dore anon,
And to ther labour spidily thei gon.

This priest at this cursid Chanon's bidding
Upon the fire right anon set this thing,
And blewe the fire, and besied him full fast,
And this Chanon into this croslet cast
A pouder, I ne wote whereof it was Ymakid, either of chalke, yearth, or glasse, 1170
Or somewhat ellis was not worth a flie,
To blind with this the priest, and bad him hie
These colis for to couchin all above
The croslelet, in token that I The love,
(Qð this Chanon) lo! thine own hondis two Shall werke all thing that here shall be ydo.

Graunt mercie (qð the priest) and was full glad,
And couchid colis, as the Chanon bad,
And while he besy was, this fendly wretche,
This false Chanon, the foul fende him fetch! 1180
Out of his bosome toke a Bechin cole,
In whiche full subtilly was made an hole,
And therein was put of silver limaile
An unce, and stoppid was withoutin faile
The hole with waxe, to kepe the limaile in.

And undirstondith wele that this false gin
Was not made there, but it was made bifore,
And other things that I shall tell you more Hereafter, which that he had with him brought Er he came there, to begile him he thought, 1190
And so he did, or that thei went a twinne,
Till he betrayid him he could not blinne,
It dullith me, whan that I of him speke,
On his falskede, fain wouldin I me wreke,
If I wist how, but he is here and there,
He is so varjaunt, he bidith no where.

But takith hede, sirs, now for Godd's love;
He toke his cole, of whiche I spake above,
And in his honde he bare it privily,
And whilis the priest couchid besily 1200
The colis, as I have told you er this,
This Chanon sayid, frende, ye doen amis,
This is not couchid as it ought to be,
But sone I shall amendin it (qð he)
Now let me medle therewith but a while,
For of you have I pite, by saint Gile,
Ye ben right hotte, I se well how you swete,
Have here a clothe, and wipe awaie the wete.
And whilis that the priest him wipid has,
This Chanon toke the cole, I shrewe his face, 1210
And layid it above on the midwarde
Of the croslet, and blewe well astirwarde,
Till that the colis began fast to brenne.

Now yevith us drinke, qð this Chanon then,
Aswithe all shall be well I undirtake,
Sit we adoune, and let us mery make.
And whan that this Chanon's bechin cole
Was brent all, the limaile out of the hole
Into the croslelet anon fel adoun,
And truely so it must nedes by refoun, 1220
Sens it so evin above couchid was,
But thereof wist the priest nothing, alas!
He demid all the colis yliche gode,
For of the sleight nothing he undirstode.
And whan this Alkamister sawe his time,
Rise up, sir priest, (qð he) and stondith by' me,
And for I wote well ingot have I none
Goth walkith forth, and bringith a chalke stone,
For I woll makin it of the same shappe
That an ingot is, if I maie have happe. 1230
And bringe eke with you a bolle or a panne
Full of watir, and ye shall wele se than
How that our besinefs shall hap and preve;
And yet for ye shall have no misbeleve
Ne wrong conceite of me in your absence
I ne woll not ben out of your presence,

But go with you, and come with you again.

The chambir dore, shortly for to fain,
Thei opened and shet, and went forth ther wele,
And forth with 'hem they carryid the keie, 1240
And come ayen without any delaie;
What should I tary all the longe daie?
He toke the chalke, and shope it in the wise,
Of an yngot, as I shall you devise.

I saie he tokin out of his own sleve
A teine of silver, evill mote he cheve!
Which that ne was not but an unce of weight,
And takith hede now of his cursid sleight,
He shope his yngot in length and in brede
Of this same teine, withoutin any drede, 1250
So slyly that the priest it not aspide;
And in his sleve again he gan it hide,
And from the fire he toke up his matere,
And into the yngot put with mery chere,
And into the watir vessell he it cast,
Whan that him list, and bad the priest as fast
Loke what there is, put in thin hond and grope,
Thou shalt there findin silvir, as I hope.
What divell of hell should it ellis be?
Shaving of silvir, silvir is parde. 1260

He put in his honde, and toke up a teine
Of silver fine, and glad in every veine
Was this priest, whan he sawe that it was so,
God's blessing, and his mother's also
And all Hallowis, have ye, sir Chanon,
Sayid this priest, and I ther Malison
But and ye vouchsafe for to techin me
This noble craft and all this subtilte,
I woll be yours in all that evre' I maie.

Qð the Chanon, yet woll I make assaie 1270
The second time, that ye mow takin hede,
And ben expert of this, and in your nede
An othir daie assaie in mine absence
This discipline, and this craftie science.
Let take an other unce now (qð he tho)
Of quicksilvir, withoutin wordis mo,
And doen therewith, as I have doen er this
With that othir, whiche that now silvir is.

The priest him besicth in all that he can
To doen as this Chanon, this cursid man, 1280
Commaundid him, and fast he blew the fire,
For to come to the effect of his desire.
And this Chanon right in the mené while
All redy was this priest eft to begile,
And for a countinaunce in his honde bare
An halowe sticke, take kepe and well beware,
In the end of whiche an unce and no more
Of silvir limaile put was all before

As in his cole, and stoppid with waxe wele
For to kepe in his limaile every dele. 1290
And whiles this priest was in his besinesse
This Chanon with his sticke gan him adresse
To him anon, and his poudir cast in
As he did erst (the devill out of his skin
Him turne, I praie to God, for his falskede,
For he was evir false in thought and dede)
And with his sticke above the croslelet,
That was ordainid with that false yett,
He stirrith the coles, till all relent gan
The waxe againe the fire, as every man, 1300
But he a sole be, wote well it mote nede,
And alle that in the sticke was out yede,
And into the croslelet hastily it fell.

Now, gode fires, what woldin ye bet than wel?
Whan that this priest begyldid was again,
Supposyng nothing but trouth, soth to fain,
He was so glad, that I can not expresse
In no manir his mirth and his gladnesse,
And to the Chanon he profered eft sone
Body and gode: (qð the Chanon) anone

Tho I be pore, craftie thou shalt me finde,
I warne The wele yet is there more behind.

Is there any Copir within faied he?
Ye sir (qð the Priest) I trowe that there be.
Ellis goe beye us some, and that aswithe,
Now, gode sir, goith forth thy way, and hithe.

He went his waie, and with the copir came,
And this Chanon in his hondis it name,
And of that copir waied out but an unce.
All to simple is my tong to pronounce, 1320
Or to monstre my wit the doublenesse
Of this Chanon, rote of all cursidnesse,
He femed frendly, to 'hem that knew him noughr,
But he was fendly, both in werke and thought,
It werieth me to tell of his falsenesse,
And nathêles, yet wol I it expresse,
To the' entent that men maie beware therby,
And for none othir causè truely.

He put this unce of copir in th' cros'let,
And on the fire aswithe he hath it set, 1330
And cast in poudir, and made the priest blow,
And in his werking for to stoupin low
As he did erst, and all n'as but a jape,
Right as him list, the priest he made his Ape,
And aftirward in the' ingot he it cast,
And in the panne he put it at the last
Of watir, and in he put his owne hond
And in his slevè, as ye bifore hond
Yherd me tell, he had a silvir teine,
He sily toke it out, this cursid heine, 1340
Unwiting this priest of his false craft,
And in the pann'is botome he it laft,
And in the watir romblith to and fro,
And wondir privily toke up also
The copir teine, not knowing it this priest,
And hiddin it, and hent him by the brest,
And to him spake, and thus said in his game,
Stoupith adoune, by God ye be to blame,
Helpith me now, as I did you whilere,
Put in your hond, and lokith what is there. 1350

This priest toke up this silvir teine anon,
And than sayid the Chanon, let us gon
With these thre teinis, whiche that we han wrought
To some Goldsmith, and wete if it be ought,
For by my faith, I ne wolde for my hode
But if they were silvir both fine and gode,
And that aswithe yprovid it shall be.

Unto the Goldsmith, with these teinis thre,
Thei went, and put these teinis in assaie 1360
To fire and hammer, might no man saie naie,
But that thei wer as them ought for to be.

This fottid priest, who was gladdir than he?
Was nevir bird gladdir ayenst the daie,
Ne nightingale in the seson of Maye
Was nevir none, that list bettir to sing,
Ne lady lustier in carolling,
And for to speke of love and womanhede,
Ne knight in armes, to doen a hardy dede,
To stondin in grace of his lady dere,
Than had this Priest, this sory craft to lere; 1370
And to the Chanon thus he spake, and seid,
For the love of God, that for us all deid,
And as I maie deserve it unto you
What shall this receipt cost, tellith me now?

By' our lady (qð this Chanon) it is dere
I warne you well, that save I and a Frere
In Engèlonde, there can no man it make.

No force (qð he) now sir, for Godd'is sake,
What shall I paie, tellith me I you praie.

I wis (qð he) it is full dere I saie, 1380
Sir at one worde, if that ye list it have,
Ye shall paie fourtie pound, so God me save,
And n'ere the frendship that ye did er this
To me, ye should ypayin more I wis.

This priest the somme of fourtie pound anon
Of nobles fet, and told 'hem everichon
Unto this Chanon, for this ilke receite,
All his worching was but fraude and deceite.

Sir priest, he said, I kepe for to have no lose 1390
Of my craft, for I would it were kept close,
And as you love me, kepith it secre,
For and men knowin all my subtilte,
By God men wouldin have so grete envie
To me, bicause of my Philosophie,
I should be dedde, there were none othir waie.

God it forbid (qð the priest) what ye saie,
Yet had I levir spendin all the gode
Whiche that I have, and ellis waxe I wode,
Than that ye should fallin in soche mischese,
For your gode will, sir, have ye right gode prefe, 1400
(Qð the Chanon) then farewell graunt mercie.

He went his waie, and nere the priest him seie
After that daie: and whan that this priest should Makin assaie, at soche time as he would,
Of this receite, farwell, it n'old not be.

Lo thus bejapid and begiled was he,
Thus makith he his introduction
To bringin folke to ther destruction!
Considerith sirs, how in eche estate
Betwixtin men and golde there is debate, 1410
So ferforth, that unnethis there is none,

This moultypling blindeth so many one,
That in gode faith, I trowin that it be
The grettist cause of such grete scarfite.
These philosophers speke so mistily

In this crafte, that men cannot come therby,
For any wit that men have nowe a daies,
They may well chattrè and jangle as do jayes,
And in ther termis, set ther lust and paine,
But to ther purpose shul they ner attaine; 1420

A man may lightly lerne, if he have ought
To multiplie, and bring his gode to nought.
Lo, suche a lucre' is in this lusty game!

A mann'is mirth it wol turne all to grame,
And emptin also gret and hevy purfes,
And makin folke to purchasin fele curses
Of them that han thereto ther gode ylent,
O fye for shame! thei that han ones be brente
Alas! can not thei flie the fir'is hete?

Ye that it use, I rede that ye it lete, 1430
Left ye lese alle; for bet than nere is late.
Nevir to thrivin were to longe a date;
Though ye prolle aye, ye shall it nevir find,
Ye ben as bolde as is bayarde the blind,
That b'onderith forth, and peril castith none,
He is as bold to renne ayenst a stone

As for to go beside it in the way;
So farin ye, that multiplien, I say;
If that your eyin cannot sene a right,
Lokith that your minde lackith not his sight; 1440
For though ye loke nevir so brode, and stare.

Ye shall not winne a mite in that chaffare
But waltin al that ye may repe and renne;
Withdrawe the fire; leste it to fast ybrenne;
Medlith no more with that science, I mene,
For if ye done, your thrift is gon full clene,
And right aswithe I wol you tellin here
What philosophers sain in this matere.

Lo! thus saith Arnolde of the newè toun,
As his rosarie makith mencion, 1450
He saith right thus, withoutin any lie
There may no man Mercurie mortifie,
But it be with his brother's knowleging,
Lo! how that he, which first ysaid this thing,
Of Philosophirs fathir was, Hermes.

He sayith how that the Dragon doutles
Ne dyith not, but if that he be slaine
With his brothir: And this is for to saine

By

By the dragon Mercury, and none other,
He undirstode the brimstone was his brother, 1460
That out of Sol and Luna were idrawe,
And therefore said he, take hede to my sawe,

Let no man besie him this arte to seche,
But he that the entencion and speche
Of Philosophers understondin can,
And if he do; he is a leude man,
For this science, and this conning (qð he)
Is of the secrete of secretes, parde.

Also there was a scholar of Plato,
That on a time said his maistr to, 1470
As in his boke Semor wol bere witnesse,
And this was his demaunde in sothfastnesse,
Tellith me the name of the privy stone.

And Plato answerd unto him anone,
Takith the stone that Titanos men name.

Which is that? (qð he) Magnatia' is the same
Said Plato: ye sir, qð he, is it thus?
This is ignotum per ignotius.

What is Magnatia, gode sir I you pray?
It is a watir that is made, I say, 1480

Of elementis four (qð then Plato)
Tellith me, gode sir, the rote, qð he tho,
Of that watir, if that it be your will.

Nay nay (qð Plato) certaine that I n'ill;
The Philosophers were isworne echone,
That they shuld discovir it unto none,
Ne in no boke it write in no manere,
For unto Christ it is so lefe and dere,
That he wol not that it discovered be,

But where it likith to his deite 1490
Man to enspire, and eke for to defende,
Whan that him likith; lo! this is his ende.

Than conclude I thus, sens the God of heven
Ne will not that the philosophers nemen
How that a man shall come unto this stone,
I rede as for the beste, to let it gone:
For who so makith God his adversary,
As for to werche any thing in contrary
Unto his wil, certes nevir shal he thrive,
Though that he multiply terme of his live. 1500
And there a pointe, for ended is my tale,
God send every true man bote of his bale.

Here endith the TALE of the Chanon's YEMAN.

Here

Here followeth the Doctour of Phisike's PROLOGUE.

WHAN that this yeman his tale endid had
Of this false Chanon, whiche ywas so bad,
Our hoste gan say, truely and in certaine
This priest was begilid, soth for to saine,
He wenid to be a Philosopher,
Til he right no golde left in his cofer,
And sothly this Priest haddè all the jape,

This cursed Chanon put in his hode an ape,
But al this passe I ovir will as now;
Sir doctour of phisicke, yet I pray you,
Tel us a tale of some honest matere.
If that be done, if that ye wol it here,
Said this doctour, and his tale gan anon;
Now gode men (q<sup>d</sup> he) herk'nith everichon.

Here endeth the Doctour of Phisike's PROLOGUE.

Here beginneth his TALE.

THere was, as tellith Titus Livius,
A knight, that clepid was Virginius,
Fulfilled of honour and of worthinesse,
And strong of frendis, and eke of richesse.
A doughtir faire had this knight by his wife,
And nevir had he mo in all his life.
Fayre was this maide in excellent beaute
Abovin every wight that man may se,
For nature hath with soveraine deligence
Yformed her in so gret excellence,
As though that she would say, lo! I nature
Thus can yforme and paintin a cature,
Whan that me listè, who can me counterfete?
Pigmaleon? Not though he forge and bete?
Or grave or painte? for I dare well ysaine,
Appelles, or Xeuxis, should werche in vaine

1530

To grave or painte, or for to forge or bete,
If they presumid me to counterfete;
For he that is the formir principal
Hath madin me his vicar generall
To fourme and paintin erthly creaturis,
Right as me listè; for al thing in my cure is Undir the mone, that may or wane or waxe;
And for my werkè nothing wol I axe,
My lorde and I ben fully of accorde,
I made her to the worship of my lorde,
So do I all mine othir ceturis,
Of what colour they be, or figuris;
Thus semith me that nature wouldè say.
This maidin was of age xii, yere and tway,
In whiche that nature hath suche a delite,
For right as she can paint a lilye white

1540

And

And rody as rose, right with such painture
 She paintid hath this noble creature
 Er she was borne, upon her limmis fre,
 Where as by right soche colouris shoulde be:
 And Phebus dyid had her tressis grete
 Like to the stremis of his burnid hete,
 And if that excellent were her beaute,
 A thousande folde more vertuous was she;
 In her ne lackith no condicion
 That is to preise, as by discrecion
 As wel in body as goste chaste was she,
 For which she flourid in virginite,
 With all humilite and abstinence,
 With al attemperaunce, and pacience,
 With mesure eke, in bering of aray,
 Discrete she was in answering alway,
 Tho she were wise as Pallas, dare I saine,
 (Her faconde eke, full womanly and plaine)
 No counterfettid termis haddè she
 To femin wife: but aftir her degre
 She spake, and all her wordis more and lesse
 Sowning in vertue and in gentilnesse,
 Shamefast she was, in maidins shamfastnesse,
 Constant in hert, and ewre' in businesse
 To drive her out of idle slogardie,
 Bacchus had of her mouthe no maisterie,
 For wine and youth done Venus aye encrece,
 As men in fyre wol castin oyle or grece;
 And of her owne vertue unconstrained
 She hath full oftin her selfe like yfained,
 For that she wouldin stie the company
 Where likely was to tretin of foly,
 As is at festes, at revels, and at daunces,
 That ben occasions of daliaunces,
 Suche thingis makin children for to be
 To sonè ripe and bolde, as men may se,
 Whiche is ful perilous, and hath ben yore,
 For al to sonè may she lern the lore
 Of boldenels, when she is wexin a wife.

And ye maistressis in your oldè life
 That lordis doughtirs han in governaunce,
 Ne takith of my worde no displeaunce,
 Thinkith that ye ben set in governinges
 Of lordis doughtirs, onely for two thinges,
 Eithir for you han kepte your honeste,
 Or ellis ye han fallin in frelte,
 And knowin well inough the oldè daunce,
 And conne forsakin fully that mischaunce
 For evirmore; therfore for Christ's sake
 Kepith wel tho folke that ye undirtake.

A thefe of venison, that hath forlaste
 His likerounesse and all his thev's craste,
 Can kepe a forest beste of any man;
 Now kepeth 'hem well, for and ye wol ye can,
 Lokith well, to no vice that ye assent,
 Lest ye be dampnid for your ill entent,
 For who so dothe, a traytour is certain,
 And takith kepe of that I shall you saine,
 Of al treyson soveraine pestilence
 Is, when a wight betrayith innocence.

Ye fathers, and eke ye mothers also,
 Though ye han children, be it one or mo,
 Yours is the charge of al ther surveyaunce,
 Whilis they ben undir your govimaunce,
 Beth ware, that by ensample of your living,
 Or by your negligence in chastising,
 That they ne perishe: for I dare wel say
 If that they don, ye shal ful sore obay:
 Undir a shepherde softe and negligent
 The wolf hath many a shepe and lambe to rent.

Sufficith one ensample now as here,
 For I mote turne ayen to my matere.

This maide of which I tell my tale expresse
 She kepte her selve, she nedid no maistresse,

1550 For in her living maidins mightin rede
 As in a boke, every gode worke and dede
 That longith to a maidin vertuous;
 She was so prudent and so bounteous,
 For whiche the fame out spronge on every side
 Bothe of her beaute and her bounte wide,
 That through the londe they preisid her echon
 That lovid vertue, save Envy alone,
 That fory is of othir mennis wele,
 And glad is of ther sorowe, and unhele. 1630
 The doctour makith this descripcion.

1560 This maide went on a day into the toun
 Towarde the temple, with her mothir dere,
 As is of all yonge maidins the manere.
 Now livid there a Justice in that toun,
 That govirnour was of that regioune,
 And so befel, this Justice his eyen cast
 Upon this maide, avising her ful fast
 As she came forth by ther as the Judge stode,
 Anon his hert ychaungid, and his mode, 1640
 So was he caught with beaute of this maide,
 And to himselfe full previly he saide,
 This maidin shall be mine for any man.

1570 Anon the fende into his hertè ran,
 And he taught him sodainly, by what sleight
 The maidin to his purpose winne he might;
 For certis, by no force, ne by no mede
 Him thought he was not able for to spede,
 For she was stronge of frendis, and eke she Confirmit was in fuche soveraine beaute, 1650
 That well he wist he might her nevir winne
 As for to make her with her body sinne;
 For whiche with grete deliberacioun
 He sent after a client in the toun,
 The whiche he knew ful subtilly and ful bold;
 This Judge unto this client his tale told
 In secret wise, and made him to ensue
 He shulde it tellin unto no creture,
 And if he did, he should lesin his hede.
 And whan assentid was this cursid rede, 1660
 Glad was the Judge, and made mochil gode chere,
 And yave him giftis precious and dere.

1590 When shapin was all this conspiracie
 Fro point to point, how that his lecherie
 Parfourmid shoulidin be full subtilly,
 As ye shulle aftir herin opiny:

Home gothe this client that hight Claudius,
 But this false Justice that hight Appius,
 So was his name, for it ne is no fable,
 But knownen for thing historiall notable, 1670
 The sentence of it sothe is out of dout,
 This false judge I say, gothe now fast about
 To hastin his delite, al that he may;

And so bifel, sone aftir on a day
 This false judge, as tellith us the storie,
 As he was wonte, fate in his consistorie,
 And yave his domis upon sondry caas,
 This false client came forth a ful gret paas,
 And seide, Lord; if that it be your will,
 As doth me right upon this pitous bill, 1680
 In whiche I plaine upon Virginus,
 And if that he wol say it is not thus,
 I wol prove it, and findin gode witnesse, 1610 That sothe is that which my bill wol expresse.

The judge answerd, of this in his absence
 I may not yeve definitive sentence,
 Let do him call, and I woll gladly here,
 Thou shalt have all right, and nothing wrong here.

Virginus came to wete the judg's will,
 And right anon was radde this cursid bill, 1690
 The sentence of it was as ye shall here.

Unto you, my lorde Appius so dere,
 Shewith your pover servaunt Claudius,
 How that a knight, callid Virginus,

Ayenst the lawe, and ayenst equite
Holdith expresse ayenst the will of me
My seruant, which that is my thral by right,
Which from mine hous was stolin on a night,
Whilis she was full yonge, I will it preve,
By witnesse lord, so that ye you not greve,
She is not his doughtir, what so he say,
Wherefore, my lorde Justice, I do you pray
Yelde me my thral, if that it be your will.
Lo! this was all the sentence of that bill.

Virginus gan on the client beholde,
But hastily, er he his tale had tolde
He would have defendid, as shuld a knight,
And by witnesse of many a trewe wight,
That al was false, that said his adversary.

This cursid Justice would no lengir tary,
Ne here a worde more of Virginus,
But yave his judgement, and pronouncid thus.

I deme anon this man his seruant have,
Thou shalt no lengir her in thine house save,
Go bring her forth, and put her in our warde,
This man shal have his thral, thus I award.
And when this worthy knight Virginus,
Through the assent of the judge Appius,
Ymust by force his dere doughtir up-yeven
Unto the judge, in lechery to liven,
He gothe him home, and set him in his hall,
And let anon his derè doughtir call,
And with a face as dede as ashis colde
Upon her humble face he gan beholde,
With father's pite, sticking through his hert,
Al wolde he not from his purpose convert.

Doughter (qð he) Virginia by name,
There ben two wayis, either deth or shame
That thou must suffer, alas that I was borne!
For nevir thou deservedist wherforme
To dyin, with a sworde or with a knife.
Oh my dere doughtir, comfort of my life,
Whiche I have fostrid up with such plefaunce,
That thou ne were out of my remembraunce!
O doughtir mine, which that art my last wo,
And in my life my laste joye also!

O jemme of chastite, in pacience
Take thou thy dethe, for this is my sentence,
For love and not for hate thou must be dede,
My pitous honde mote smitin of thine hede;
Alas that evir Appius The sey!
Thus hath he falsely judgid The to dey:
And told her al the case, as ye before
Han herd, it nedith not to tell it more.

O mercy dere fathir, than (qð this maide)
And with that worde she both her armis layde
About his necke, as she was wonte to do,

The teris braste out of her eyin two,
And sayd, O my gode fathir shall I die?
Is there no grace? is there no remedie?
No certis O dere doughtir mine (qð he)
Than geve me leve, my lese faðir, qð she,
My deth for to complaine a ltil space,
For parde, Jepte yave his doughtir grace
For to complaine, er he her slough, alas!
And God it wot, nothing was her trespas,
But that she ranne her fathir first to se
To welcome him, with gret solempnite.
And with that word she fel aswoune anon;
And astir whan her swouning was agon
She risith up, and to her fathir sayde,
Blissid be God, that I shall die a mayde,
Yeve me my deth, er that I have a shame,
Doth with your child your wil a God's name.
And with that word she prayith him ful ofte
That with his swerd he shouldin smit her softe;
And with that word in a swoune doune she fell.
Her fathir with forouful hert and fell
Her hede of smote, and by the toppe it hente,
And to the judge he it yave in presente,
As he sat in dome in consistorie.

Whan the judge it sawe, as saith the storie,
He bad take him, and honge him also fast.
But right anon all the people in thrast
To save the knight, for routh and for pite,
For knowen was the judg's iniquite;
The peple anon had suspect in this thing
By manir of this clientes chalinging,
That it was by the assent of Appius,
They wist right well that he was lecherous;
For whiche unto this Appius they gon,
And kest in him in prison right anon,
Where as he slew himself; and Claudius,
That seruant was unto this Appius,
Was demed for to be hongid on a tre.
But Virginus, of his grete pite
So prayid for him, that he was exiled,
And ellis certis he had ben begiled.
The remnaunt were hongid, both more and lesse,
That consentid were to this cursidnesse.

Here men may se how sin hath his merite;
Beware, for no man wot how God wol smite,
In no degre, ne in no maner wise,
The worme of conscience wollin arise
Of wickid life, though it so privy be
That no man wote of it but God and he,
Whethir he be a leude man or lered,
He n'ot how sone that he may ben affered.
Therefore I redin you this counsaile take,
Forsakith sinne, er that sinne your forsake.

Here endeth the Doctour of Phisikes TALE.

Here foloweth the wordes of our Hoste.

OUR Host gan fwere as he were woxin
wode,
Harowe (qð he) by naylis and by blode,
This was a false thefe, and a cursed Justice,
As shameful dethe, as herte may devise
Come to false judgis, and ther advoca's,
Algate this sely maide is slain, alas!
Alas! to dere abought she her beaute.
Wherefore I say, that allè men may se,
That yestis of fortune, or of nature
Len cause of dethe of many a cature.,

Her beaute was her dethe, I dare wel saine;
Alas so pitously as she was slaine.
But herof wol I not procede as nowe,
Men have full ofte timis more harme than prowre.
But truely, mine ownè maistir dere,
This is a right petous tale for to here.
But nathelesse, passè ovir, is no force,
I pray to God to save thy gentle corce,
And thy urinalles, and thy jordanis,
Thine ypocras, and eke thy galianis,

1820
And

And evèry boxe ful of letuarie
 God blesse 'hem and our lady seint Marie.
 So mote I the, thou arte a propir man,
 And lyke a prelate by saint Damian,
 Thou spake enough, I can not say in terme,
 But wele I wote thou dost myne herte to yerne,
 That I have almost caught a cardiale,
 By Corpus Domini, but I have triacle,
 Or ellis a draught of moiste cornye ale,
 Or but I here anothir mery tale,
 My hert is losse, for pite of this maide;

1830

Thou belamy, John pardoner, he faide,
 Tel us some mery tale, or jape, anon.
 It shal be don (qð he) by saint Runion;
 But first, (qð he) here at this ale-house stake,
 I woll bothe drinke, and etin of a cake.
 But right anone, these gentils gon to crye,
 Nay, let him tell us of no ribaudrye,
 Tel us som moral thing, that we mow lere
 Some witte, and than wol we right gladly here.
 I graunt (qð he) I wis, but I mote thinke
 On some honest thing, whilis that I drinke.

Here endeth the wordes of the Hoste.

Here followeth the PROLOGUE of the PARDONER.

Ordinges (qð he) in chyrch whan that
I preche,
I painin me to have an hautein speche,
And ring it out, as round as doth a bell,

For I can all by rote, which that I tell,
My theme is alwey one, and evir was,
(Radix malorum est cupiditas)
First I pronouncin from whence that I come,
And then my Bullis I shewe al and some,
Then our Liege Lord's sefe on my patent,
That shewe I first, my body to warrent,
That no man be so bolde, ne preest ne clerke,
Me to distourbe of Christ's holy werke,
And aftir that, I tellin forth my tales
Bullis of Popis, and of Cardinales,
Of Patriarkes, and of Bishopes I shewe,
And in latin I speke wordis a fewe
To savir with my predicacion,
And for to stere men to devocion;
Than shewe I forth my longe cristal stones
Ycrammid ful of cloutis and of bones,
Relikes they ben, as wenin they echone.

Than have in laton a sholdir bone,
Whiche that was of an holy jew's shepe.

Gode men saye I, take of my wordis kepe,
If that this bone be washen in any wel,
If cove or calfe, or shepe, or oxin swel,
That any worme hath etin, or 'hem stonge,
Take watir of this wel, and washe his tongue, 1870
And it is hole anon: and farthirmore
Of pockis, and of scabbes, and every sore
Shall every shepe be hole, that of this well
Drinkith a draught, take kepe of that I tell.

If that the gode man, that the bestis oweth,
Wol every day, er that the cocke croweth
Fasting ydrinkin of this wel a draught,
As thilke holy jewe our elders taught,
His bestis, and his store shall multiply;
And firs, also it helith jelosye, 1880
For though a man be fall in jelous rage,
Let makin with this watir his potage,
And nevir shall he more his wife mistrift,
Though he in soth the defaute by her wift,
Al had she takin priestis two or thre.

Here is a mittaine eke, that ye may se,
He that his honde wol put in this mittaine
He shal have multiplying of his graine,
Whan he hath sowin, be it whete or otes,
So that he bringe some pennys, or els grotes. 1890

And men and women, o thing I warne you,
If any wight ben in this churchè now,
That hath done sinne so horrible, that he Dare not for shame of it yshrivin be,
Or any woman, be she yonge or olde,
That hath ymade her husbond a cokewolde,
Such folk shul have no powir ne no grace
To offir to my relikes in this place,
And who so findith them out of such blame,
Commith up, and offre in Godd's name, 1900
And I assoyle him by the' auctorite,
Suche as by bulle was grauntid unto me.

And by this gaude have I wonne every yere
An hundrid marke, sith I was pardonere,
I stondin like a clerke in my pulpet,
And whan the leude peple ben doune iset,
I preche so as ye have lered here before,
And tel to them an hundrid japis more,

Than paine I me to stretchin forth my necke,
 And este and west, upon the peple I becke, 1910
 As dothe a dove, sitting upon a berne,
 My hondis and my tonge goin so yerne,
 That it is joy to se my besinesse,
 Of avarice and of such curfidnesse
 Al my preching is for to maken 'hem fre
 To yeve ther pens, and namely unto me,
 For mine entent is not but for to winne,
 And nothing for correction of sinne,
 I reke not whan that thei ben buryid,
 Though that ther soules gon a blackburyid. 1920
 For certis many a predication
 Comith oft time of ill entencion;
 Some for plesauce of folke, and for flateri,
 To ben avauncid by hipocrisy,
 And some for veine glory, and some for hate;
 For whan I dare not other waies debate,
 Than wol I sling 'hem with my tonge smette
 In preching, so that he shall not asterte
 To ben diffamid falsely, if that he Hath trespassed to my bretherne or to me; 1930
 For though I tellin not his propre name,
 Men shall wel knowin that it is the same
 By signis, or by othir circumstaunces,
 Thus quite I folke, that doth us displeaunces,
 Thus spitt I out my venim undir hewe
 Of holinesse, to semen holy and trewe.
 But shortly mine entent I wol devise,
 I preche of nothing but of covetise,
 Therfore my theme is yet, and evir was
 Thus can I prechin ayenst the same vice
 Whiche that I use, and that is avarice. 1940

But though my selfe be gilti in that sinne,
 Yet can I makin other folke to twinne
 From avarice, and fore 'hem to repent,
 But that is not my principall entent,
 I prechin nothing but for covetise,
 Of this matere it ought inough suffice.
 Than tell I 'hem ensamples many one
 Of oldè stories, longè time agone, 1950
 For leude peple lovin talis olde,
 Whiche thingis they can well report and holde;
 What trowin ye? whilis that I may preche,
 And winnin gold and silvir for to teche,
 That I wol live in povert wilfully?
 Nay nay, I nevir thoughtin it truely.
 For I wol preche and begge in sondrie londes,
 I wol not do no labour with mine hondes,
 Ne makin baskettis, and live therby,
 Bicause I wol not livin idilly, 1960
 I wol none of the' Apostels countrefete,
 I wol have money, mault, and chese, and whete,
 Al were it yevin of the porist page,
 Or of the porist widdow' in a village,
 All shulde her childrin stervin for famine,
 Nay, I wol drinke the licoure of the vine,
 And have a joly wenche in every toun.
 But herkenith, lordinges, my conclusioun.
 Your liking is that I should tel a tale,
 Now I have dronken a draught of corny ale, 1970
 By God I hope I shal tel you a thing,
 That shal by reson ben at your liking;
 For though my selfe be a full vicious man,
 A moral tale yet I you tellin can,
 Which I am wont to preche silvir to winne;
 Now holde your pece, my tale I wol begin.

Here endeth the PARDONER'S PROLOGUE.

The PARDONER'S TALE.

 N Flaunders whilom was a company
 Of yongè folke, that hauntedin foly,
 As hasard, riot, stewis, and tavernes,
 Where as with harpis, lutes, and geternes,
 Thei dauncen and plaien at dice both night and day,
 And eten also, ovir that ther might may,
 Through which they don the devil sacrifice
 Within the devil's temple, in curfid wise
 By superfluite abhominable,
 Ther othis ben so gret and dampnable
 That it is grisly for to here 'hem swere,
 Our blissed Lord's body they al to tere,
 'Hem thought the Jewis rent him not inough,
 And eche of 'hem at others sinnè lough. 1990
 And right anon comen in the tomblesteres
 Fetis and smale, and yongè flutisteres,
 Singers with harpis, baudes, and wafereres,
 Suche ben the very Devil's officeres,
 To kindle and blowe the fire of lechery,
 That is annexid unto gloteny,
 The holy writte take I to my witnesse,
 That lechery is in wine and dronkenesse.

Lo how that dronkin Lot unkindly
 Lay by his doughtirs two unwetingly! 2000
 So dronke he was, he ne wist what he wrought,
 And therefore fore repentin him he ought.
 Herodes, who so wol the stories seche,
 There may ye lerne, and by ensample teche,
 When he of wine was replete at his feste,
 Right at his owne table he yave his heste
 To sleen Johan the Baptiste ful gilleste.
 Seneca faith eke gode wordis doutles.
 He faith he can no difference yfinde
 Betwixt a man that is out of his minde 2010
 And betwixt a man that is dronkèlew,
 But wodenesse that is fallin in a shrewè
 Perseverith lengir than dronkenesse.
 O gloteny, fulfilled of curfidnesse!
 O the cause first of our confusion!
 O originall of our dampnacion,
 Til Christ had bought us with his blode again!
 Lo se how dere, shortly for to sain,
 About was first this curfid vilonie!
 Corrupt was al this world through glotonie. 2020
 M m Adam

Adam our fornfathir, and Eve also Fro Paradise, to labour and to wo
Were drivin for that vice, it is no drede;
For whiles that Adam fastid, as I rede
He was in Paradise, and whan that he
Ete of the fruit defendid on the tre,
Anon he was out cast to wo and pain;
O glotonie, on thee well ought us plain.

Oh, wist a man how many maladies
Folowe of excesse and of glotonies,
He woulde ben the more mesurable
Of his diete, sitting at his table.

Alas! the short throte, and the tendir mouthe
Makith that East and West, and North and South,
In yerth, in aire, in watir men to swinke,
To getten a gloton deinte mete and drinke.
Of this matter, o Paule, wel can'st thou trete,
Mete unto wombe, and wombe eke unto mete,
And yet shall God destroie both, as Paul saieth;
Alas! a foule thing it is, by my saieth,
To saie this worde, and foulir is the dede,
Whan man so drinkith of the white and rede,
That of his throte he makith his privie
Through thilkè cursid superfluite.

The Apostle saieth, weping full pitously,
There walkin many, of whiche told have I,
I saie it now weping with pitous voice,
That thei ben enemies of Christ's croice,
Of which the ende is deth, wombe is ther God.
O belie! O wombe! and O stinkin cod
Fulfilled of dong and of corrupcioun!
At eithir ende of The foule is the soun.
How grete the cost and labour is to finde
These cokis? how thei stamp, and strein, and grinde,
And tournin substaunce into accident!
To fulfill all thy likerous talent
Out of the hardè bonis knockin thei
The mary (for thei cast it not awaie)
That maie go through the gullet safe and sote,
Of spicerie, of levis, barke, and rote,
Shall ben his sauce imadin by delite
To maken hem have a newir appetite.
But certis he that hauntith soche delices
Is dedde, whiles that he livith in the vices.

A lecherous thing is wine and dronkenes,
It's full of striving and of wretchidnes;
Oh dronkin man, disfigured in thy face,
Sower is thy breth, foule art thou to embrace,
And through thy dronkin nose sownith the soun
As tho thou saidist aie, Sampson, Sampson;
And yet God wot Sampson dronk nevir wine;
Thou fallist, as it wer a stickid swine;
Thy tong is lost, and all thine honest cure;
For drokenesse is very sepulture
Of mann's witte, and his discrecion;
In whom that drinke hath dominacion
He can no counsaile kepe, it is no drede;
Now kepe you fro the white, and fro the rede,
And namily fro the White wine of Lepe,
That is to sell in Fishestrete and in Chepe;
This Wine of Spain crepith in subtilly,
And other wimis growing fast thereby,
Of whiche there risith soche fumosite,
That whan a man hath dronkin draughtis thre,
And wenith that he be at home in Chepe,
He is in Spain, right at the toun of Lepe,
Nought at Rochell, ne at Burdeaux toun,
And than wollin he saie, Sampson, Sampson.
But herkenith, lordinges, o word, I you pray,
That all the soverain actis, dare I saie,
Of victories in the old Testament,
Through very God, that is omnipotent,
Were doen in abstinence and in praiere;
Lokith the Bible, there ye mow it lere,

Lokith Attila, the grete conquerour
Died in his slepe, with shame and dishonour,
Bleding aie at his nose in dronkinnesse;
A capitain should live in sobirnesse.

And ovir all this, avise you right well
Whas was commaundid unto Lamuel,
Not Samuel but Lamuel saie I,
Rede the Bible, and finde it expresly
Of wine yeving to hem that have justice,
No more of this, for it maie wele suffice.

And now that I have spake of glotonie,
Now woll I defende you of hasardrie.
Hasarde is very mothir of lesinges,
And of deceipt, and cursid forweringes,
Blaspheme of Christ, manslaughter, wait also,
Of battaile oft time, and of othir wo,
It is repreve, and contrary to honour
For to be holden a common hasardour,
And evir higher that he is in state,
The more still he is holden desolate,
If that a Prince shall usin hasardrie,
In all governaunce and all policie
He is as by comen opinion
Holdin the lesse in reputacion.

Stillebon that was a wise ambassadour
Was unto Corinth sent with grete honour,
Fro Calidone, to makin aliaunce,
And whan he came, him happid this perchaunce,
That all the gretist that wer of the londe
Playing at hasarde befily he fonde,
For whiche, as sone as that it mightin be,
He stole him home ayen to his countre,
And sayid, there woll I not lese my name,
I n'll not take on me so grete defame,
For to alie you to none hasardours,
Sendith othir wisir enbassadours,
For by my trouth, me were levir to die
Than I should you to hasardours alie,
For ye that ben so glorious in honours
Shall not alyin you with hasardours
As by my will, ne by any tretie,
This wise Philosopher, thus sayid he:

Lokith eke how to king Demetrius
The king of Parthis, as the boke saieth us,
Sent him a paire of Dice of gold in scorne,
For he had used hasardrie there biforne,
For whiche he held his glory and renoun
At no value or reputacioun,
Lordis might findin othir manir plaie
Honest inough to drive the daie awaie.

Now woll I speke of othis false and grete
A worde or two, as oldè bokes entrete:
Grete swering is a thing abhominable,
And false swering is yet more reprovable,
The most hie God forbad swering at all,
Witnesse of Mathew, but in speciall,
Of swering, saieth the holy Jeromie,
Thou shalt swere soth thine othis, and not lie,
And swere in dome and eke in rightwisnesse,
But idle swering is a cursidnes.

Behold and se that in the first table
Of hie God's heftis honourable,
How that the seconde heste of him is this,
Take not my name in idelnesse amis.
Lo! he rathir forbiddith soche swering
Than homicide, or othir cursid thing;
I saie as thus, by order as it stondesth,
This knowe thei that his heftis understondeth,
How that the seconde heste of God is that,
And furthirmore, I woll The tell all plat,

That

That vengeance shall not depart fro his hous
That of his othis is outrageous,
By Godd'is precious hart, and his nailes,
And by the blode of Christ that is in Hailes,
Sevin is my chaunce, and thin five and thre,
By Godd'is armis, if thou false plaie me
This daggir shall thorough thine harte go.
This fruit comith of thilke bonis two,
Forfwering, ire, falsnesse, and homicide.

Now for the love of Christ, that for us dide,
Levith your othis, bothe gret and smale,
For I shall tell you a mervailous tale.

These riottours thre, of whiche I you tell,
Long ere to prime were rongin any bell,
Were set 'hem in a Taverne for to drinke,
And as thei sat, thei herdin a Bell clinke
Biforne a cors, that was caried to' his grave,
That one of 'hem gan call unto his knave,
Go fast (qð he) and askin redily
What cors is this, that passith forth hereby?
And loke that thou reportin his name wele.

Sir (qð he) it nedith nevir a dele,
It was me tolde er ye came here two houres,
He was parde an old felowe of yours,
And all fodainly was he slain to night,
For dronke as he sat on his bench upright
There came a privie these, men elepin dethe,
That in this countrey all the peple slaeth,
And with his spere he smote his hert atwo,
And went his waie, withoutin wordis mo.
He hath a thousande slain, this pestilence,
And maistir, er ye come in his presence
Me thinkith that it were full necessarie
For to beware of soche an adversarie;
Bethe redy for to mete him evirmore:

Thus taught me my faðir, I saie no more.

By saint Mary, sayid this Tavernere,
The child sajeth sothe, for he hath slaine this yere
Hens ovir a mile, in a grete village,
Bothe man and woman, bothe child and page.
I trowe his habitacion be there,
To ben avifid, gret wisdom it were
Er that he did a man soche dishonour.

Ye Godd'is armis (qð this riottour)
Is it soche perill with him for to mete?
I shall him feche by stile and eke by strete,
I make a vowe, by Godd'is digne bones.
Herkinith felowes, we thre ben all ones,
Let eche of us hold up his honde to other,
And eche of us become other's brother,
And we woll sekin this false traitour dethe,
He shall be slain, whiche that so many slaeth,
By God's dignite, er it be night.

Togiðir han these thre ther trouthis plight
To live and die eche of them with othir,
As though he werin his owne born brothir.
And up thei sterten all dronkin in this rage,
And forth thei gon are toward that village,
Of whiche the Taverner hath spoke bifore;
And many a grisly othe han thei swore,
And Christ's blessid body thei to rent,
Deth shall be dedde, if that we maie him hent.

Whan thei han gon not fully half a mile,
Right as thei would have trodin ore a stile,
An olde man and a pore hath with 'hem met,
This old pore man full mekily 'hem gret,
And sayid thus, now lordinges God you se.

The proudist of these riottouris thre
Answerd ayen, what chorle with sorie grace
Why art thou all forwrappid, save thy face?
Why livist thou so long in so gret age?

This old man gan lokin in his vilage,
And sayid thus: for I ne can not finde
A man, although I walkid into Inde,

Neither in cite, ne in no village,
That would exchaungin his youth for mine age, 2240
And therefore mote I havin min age still,
For as long time as it is Godd'is will.
Ne deth, alas! ne wolle not have my life;
Thus walke I like a restlesse caitife,
And on the ground, which is my mother's gate,
I knocke with my staffe both erliche and late,
And sayin thus, leve mothir, let me in,
Lo! how I vanishe, fleshe, and blode, and skin,
Alas! whan shall my bonis ben at rest?

Mothir, with you would I exchaunge my chest, 2250
That in my chambir long time hath ybin,
Ye for an herin clout to wrappe me in,
But yet to me she woll not doen that grace,
For whiche full pale and welkid is my face.

But sirs, to you it is no curtise
To speke unto an old man vilonie,
But he trespas outhir in worde or dede,
In holy writ, you maie your self well rede.

Ayenst an old man, hore upon his hedde,
Ye should arise, and therefore I you rede 2260
Ne doeth to an old man no harme as now,
No more than ye would a man did to you
In age, if that ye maie so long abide:
And God be with you, wher' ye go or ride,
I mote go thiðir as I have to go.

Naie naie old chorle, by God thou shalt not so,
Sayid these othir hasardours anon,
Thou partist not so lightly by saint John,
Thou spakist right now of thilke traitor deth,
That in this countre all our frendis slaeth, 2270
Have here my trowth, for thou art his espie,
Tell where he is, or ellis thou shalt die
By God and by the holy Sacrament,
For sothily thou art of his assent

To slayin us yonge folke, thou olde false these.

Now sirs, if that it be to you so lese
To findin deth, tourne up this crokid waie,
For in that grove I left him by my saie
Undir a tre, and there he woll abide,
Ne for your boste he n'ill him nothing hide, 2280
Se ye that oke, right there ye shal him finde,
And God you save that bought ayen mankinde,
And you amende; thus sayid this old man.

Than everiche of these riottouris ran
Til thei came to the tre, and there thei found
Floreines of gold fine and icoignid round
Well nie a sevin bushels, as 'hem thought;
And now no lengir aftir deth thei sought,
But eche of 'hem so glad was of that sight,
For that the Floreins so faire ben and bright, 2290
That doune thei sittin by the precious horde;
The yongist of them spake the firste worde,

Brethern (qð he) take kepe of what I saie
My wit is grete although I borde or plaie, 2220
This trefure hath fortune unto us yeven,
In mirthe and jolite our life to liven,
And lightly as it cometh, so woll we spend;
Heie, Godd'is precious harte: who would have wend
To daie, that we should have so faire a grace?
But might this gold be caried fro this place
Home to my house, or ellis unto yours,
(For well I wote that all this gold is ours)

Than werin we in hie felicite,
But truely by daie it maie not be, 2230
Men wouldin saie, that we were thevis strong,
And for our own trefure doen us to hong.
This trefure must icaried be by night
As wisely and as slyly as it might; 2310
Wherfore I rede, let loke emong us all
To drawe, and let se where the cutte wol fall,
He that hath the shortist cut with hert blith
Shall renne unto the toun, and that ful swith,

To

To bring us brede and drinke full prively,
And two of us shall kepe full subtilly
This trefure well, and if he woll not tarie
Whan it is night, we woll this trefure carie
By one assent, where as us listith best.

That one of 'hem tho brought grasse in his fest, 2310
And bad 'hem draw, and loke where it wold fal,
And it fel on the yongist of 'hem all,
And forth toward the toun he went anon,
And al so sone as that he was agone,
That one of 'hem yspake unto that other,
Thou wotist wele that thou art my sworne brother,
Thy profite woll I tell The right anone,
Thou wotist well that our felowe is gone,
And here is gold, and that full grete plente
That shall departid be emong us thre, 2330
But nathelesse, if that I can shape it so
That it departid were emong us two,
Had I not doen a frendly tourne to The?

That othir sayed, I n'ot how that might be,
I woll full well that the gold were ours two,
What shoud we doin that it might be so?

Shall it be counsaile (sayid the first shrew)
And I shall tellin The in wordis fewe
What we woll doen, and bring it well about.

I graunt it (qð that othir) out of doubt. 2340
That by my trouthe I wol The not bewrain.

Now (qð he) thou wost well that we ben twain,
And twain of us shall strongir be than one,
Lokith whan he is set, and than anone
Arise, as though thou wouldest with him plaie,
And I shall riven him through the sidis tway
Whiles that thou strugglist with him as in game,
And with thy daggir loke thou do the same,
And than shall all the golde departid be, 2350
My dereft frend, betwixtin The and me;
Than maie we bothe all our lustis fulfill,
And plaie at Dice, right at our owne will.
And thus accordid ben these shrewis twaie
To slea the third, as ye han herd me saie.

This yongist, which that wentin to the toun
Full ofte in his hert roilid up and doune
The beaute of these floreins faire and bright,
O Lorde (qð he) if so were that I might
Have all this trefour to my self alone,
There n'is no man, that livith undir trone 2360
Of God, that should live so mery as I.

And at the last the fende our enemy
Put in his thought that he shuld poison beie,
With which he might slayin his felowes twey.
For why? the fende fonde him in soche living,
That he had leve to forowe him to bring,
For this was uttirly his whole entent
To slaen 'hem bothe, and nevir to repent.
And forth he goth, no lengir would he tary
Into the toun, unto a Potecary, 2370
And prayid him that he wolde to him sell
Some poison, that he might his rattis quell,
And eke there was a Polkat in his hawe,
That, as he saied, his Capons had islawe,
And faine he wolde awreke him, if he might,
Of vermin, that destroyid 'hem by night.

The Potecarie answerd, thou shalt have
A thing, as wisly God my soule save.
In all this worldè there n'is no cature
That eteth or drinkith of this confecture 2380
Not but the mountenaunce of a corne of whete;
That he ne shall his life anon forlete,
Ye sterve he shall, and that in a lesse while
Than thou woldest gon a pace, not but a mile,
This poison is so strong and violent.

This cursid man hath in his honde hent
This poison in a boxe, and swithe he ran
Into the nextè strete unto a man,

And borowid of him large botels thre,
And in the two the poison pourid he, 2390
But the third he kept clene for his own drinke,
For all the night he shope him for to swinke.
In caryng of the gold out of that place.
And whan this riotour, with forie grace,
Hath fillid with him his gret bottels thre,
To his felowes ayen repairid he.

What nedith it thereof to sermon more?
For right as thei had cast his deth before,
Right so thei han him slain, and that anone;
And whan that this was doen, than spake that one,
Now let us sit ahd drinke, and make us mery,
And aftirward thei wolne his body bury.
And aftir that it happid one, per caas,
To take the bottle there the poison was, 2400
And dronke, and yave his felowe drinke also,
Through whiche anon thei stervin bothè two.

But certis I suppose that Avicenne
Wrote nevir in no cannon, ne no fenne
More wondir sorowes of empoisonning,
Than had these wretchis two in ther ending. 2410
Thus endid ben these homicidis two,
And eke the false enpoisonner also.

O cursid sinne, full of all cursidnesse!
O traitour homicide! O wickidnesse!
O glotenie, luxure, and hasardie,
Thou blasphemour of Christ with vilanie
And othis grete, of usage and of pride!
Alas mankinde! how maie it so betide
That to thy creatour, which that The wrought;
And with his precious blode ayen The bought, 2420
Thou art so false and so unkinde, alas!

Now gode men, God foryeve you your trespas,
And ware you fro the sinne of avarice,
Mine holy pardon maie you all warishe,
So that ye offir nobles or starlinges,
Or ellis silvir spones, brochis, or ringes,
Bowith your hedde undir this holie Bulle,
Cometh up ye wives, and offrith of your wol,
Your names I enter in my rolle anon,
Into the blisse of heaven shull ye all gon: 2430
I you assoilin by mine high powere,
All ye that offrin, as clene and eke clere
As ye were borne. Lo! sirs, thus I preche.
And Jesu Christ, that is our soulis leche,
So grauntin you his pardon to receive,
For that is best, I woll you not disceive.
But sirs, one worde foryate I in my tale,
I have relikes, and pardon in my male,
As faire as any man in Engèlonde,
Whiche were yevin me by the Pop'is honde. 2440
If any' of you woll of devocion.

Offrin, and have mine absolucion,
Cometh forth anon, and knelith here adoun,
And mekily receivith your pardoun,
Or ellis takith pardon as ye wende,
All newe and freshe at every toun's end,
So that ye offrin alweie newe and newe
Nobles or pens, whiche that ben gode and true;
It is grete honour to' everiche that is here,
That ye have a sufficient pardonere 2450
To assoile you, in countre there ye ride,
For aventuris, whiche that maie betide;
Peraventure there maie fall one or two
Doune of ther hors, and breke ther necke a two;
Loke whiche a suretie it is to you all,
That I am in your felowship ifall,
That maie assoilin you bothe more and lasse,
Whan that the soule shall fro the body passe.
I redè that our hoste here shall beginne,
For he is moste envelopid in sinne; 2460
Come forth, sir hoste, and offir first anon,
And thou shalt kisse the relikes everichon,

Ye

Ye for a grote, unbokle' anon thy purse,
 Naie naie (qð he) than have I Christ's curse.
 Let be (qð he) it shall not be so theiche,
 Thou wouldist make me kisse thin oldè breche,
 And fwere it were a relike of a sainct,
 Though it wer with thy foundement depaint,
 But by the crosse, whiche that sainct Helain fond,
 I would I had thine coilons in mine hond 2480
 Instede of relikes, or of sanctuarie,
 Let cut 'hem of, I woll help 'hem to carie,
 Thei shall be shrinid in an hogg's torde.
 This Pardoner answerid not a worde,

So wroth he was, he would no wordè faie.
 Now (qð our hoste) I woll no lengir plaie
 With The, ne with non othir angrie man.
 But right anon the worthy knight began,
 Whan that he sawe that al the people lough,
 No more of this, for it is right inough, 2490
 Sir Pardoner, be mery' and glad of chere,
 And ye sir hoste, that ben to me so dere,
 I praie you that ye kisse the Pardoner,
 And Pardoner, I praie The drawe The nere,
 And as we did, so let us laugh and plaie,
 Anon thei kised, and ridin forth ther waie.

Here endeth the PARDONER'S TALE.

Here

Here beginneth the Host's words, and the Shipmann's Prologue.

NOW frendis all sayid our host so dere,
How likith you by John the Pardonere?
He hath unbokelid right well the male,
He hath us toldè right a thriftie tale 2500
As touching of mennis misgovernance,
I praye to God him yevin as gode chaunce

As ye han herde of these riottours thre.
I praye The, gentill Mariner, hertily,
Tell us a gode tale, and that right anon.
I shall be doen, by God and by sainct John,
Saied this Mariner, as well as I can;
And right anon his tale he thus began.

Here endeth the SHIPMANN's PROLOGUE.

Here foloweth the SHIPMANN's TALE.

A Marchaunt whilom dwelled at sainct Denise,
That rich was, for the which men held him wise; 2510
A wife he had of excellent beaute,
And compinable', and revelous was she,
Whiche is a thing that causith more dispence,
Than worth is all the chere and reverence
That men 'hem doen, at festis and at daunces,
Soche salutacions and countinaunces
Passith, as doeth a shadowe on a wall,
But wo is him that payin mote for all,
The sely husbonde algate he mote paie,
He mote them both clothin and eke arraie 2520
All for his owne worshippe full richily,
In whiche arraie thei dauncin jolily,
And if that he maie not, paraventure,
Or ellis list not soche dispence endure,

But thinkith, that it is wast and iloste,
Than mote an othir payin for ther cosse
And lende them gold, and that is perilous.
This noble Marchaunt held a noble hous,
For whiche he had all daie so grete repaire,
For his largesse, and for his wife was faire, 2530
That wondir was: but herkenith to my tale.
Emongis all his gestis grete and smale
There was a Monke, a faire man and a bold,
I trowe that thurtie Winter he was old,
That evre' in one was drawing to that place.
This yongè Monke, that so faire was of face,
Acquaintid was so wele with this gode man,
Sithinis that their first knowlege began,
That in his hous as familier was he
As it is possible' any frende to be. 2540
And for as moche as that this gode man
And eke this Monke, of the whiche I began,

Werin

Werin bothe two yborne in one village,
The Monke him claimid, as for cosinage,
And he again sayid not onis naie,
But was as glad thereof, as foule of daie,
For to his herte it was a grete plesaunce.

Thus ben they knit with eterne aliaunce,
And eke of 'hem gan other to ensure
Of brotherhed, whilis ther life may dure.

Fre was Dan John, and namely of dispens
As in that hous, and full of diligence
To doe plesaunce, and also grete costage,
He foryate not to yevin the leste page
In all that hous, but aftir ther degre,
He yave the lorde, and sithin his meine,
Whan that he came, some manir honest thing,
For whiche thei wer as glad of his comming
As foule is faine, whan that the sunne up riseth,
No more hereof as now, for it suffiseth.

But so bifell, this Marchaunt on a daie
Shope him to makin redy his araie,
Toward the toun of Bruges for to fare,
To buyin there a porcion of ware,
For whiche he hath sent to Paris anon,
A messenger, and prayid hath Dan John
That he should come to S. Denis to plain
With him, and with his wife, a day or twain,
Or he to Bruges went, in alle wise.

This noble Monke, of which I you devise,
Hath of his Abbot, as him list, licence,
Bicause he was a man of hie prudence,
And eke an officer, out for to ride,
To sene ther graungis and ther bernis wide,
And unto saint Denis he cometh anon.

Who was so welcome, as my lorde Dan John
Our dere cosin, so full of curtesie?
With him he brought a jubbe of Malvesie,
And eke an othir full of fine vernage
And volatily, as was his usage;
And thus I let 'hem both ete, drinke, and plaie,
This marchaunt and this monke, a daie or tway.

The third daie this Marchaunt he up risith,
And on his nede sadly him avisith,
And up into his counting hous goth he
To rekin with himself, as well maie be,
Of thilkè yere, how that it with him stode,
And how that he dispendid had his gode,
And if that he encrefid were or none;
His bokis and his baggis many one
He laieth afore him on his counter borde,
Full riche ywas his tresour and his horde,
For whiche ful fast his counter dore he shet,
And eke he nolde that no man should him let
Of his accompris, for the menè time,
And thus he sate till it was passid prime.

Dan John was up on the morowe also,
And in the gardin walkid to and fro,
And hath his thingis saied full curtisly.

This gode wife comith walking privily
Into the gardin, where he walkid soft,
And him salueth, as she hath doen full oft,
A maidin child came in her companie,
Whiche as her lust, she maie governe and gie,
For as yet undir the yerde was the maied.

O dere cosin Dan John, this gode wife sayed,
What ailith you so rathe for to arise?

Nice (qð he) it ought inough to suffice
Five houris for to slepin on a night,
But it were for an old and pallid wight,
As ben these weddid men, that lie and dare,
As in a forme sittith a very Hare
All fortraughtin, with houndis gret and smale;
But my dere Nece, why loke ye now so pale?
I trowe for certaine that our gode man
Hath you labourid, sith this night began,

That you were nede to restin hastily,
And with that worde he lough full merily,
And with his own thought he woxin all red.
This faire wife began for to shake her hed,
And sayid thus, ye God wote all (qð she) 2620
Nai cosin mine, it stont not so with me,
For by that God that yave me soule and life
In al the relme of Fraunce, is there no wife
That lesse lust hath unto that forie plaie,
For I may singen alas, and welawaie
That I was borne! but to no wight (qð she)
Dare I not tellin how it stont with me.
Wherefore I thinke out of this world to wende,
Or els of my self sone to make an ende, 2630
So full I am of drede and eke of care.

This Monke began upon this wife to stare
And saied alas! naie, dere nece, God forbede
That ye for any sorowe, or for drede
Fordo your self, but tellith me your grefe;
Peraventure I maie in your mischefe
Counsaile or helpe, and therfore tellith me
All your anoie, for it shall secre be,
For on my Porthose I makin an othe,
That never in my life, for lese ne lothe, 2640
Ne shall I of no counsaile you bewraie.

The same ayen to you (qð she) I saie
By God and by this Porthose I you swere,
Though men would me all into peces tere;
Ne shall I nevir, for to go to hell,
Bewraie o worde, of thing that ye me tell,
Not for no cosinage, ne aliaunce,
But verily for love and affiaunce.
Thus ben thei sworne, and hereupon thei kiste,
And ilke of 'hem told othir what 'hem list. 2650

Cosin (qð she) if that I had a space
As I have none, and namely in this place,
Than wold I telle a legende of my life
That I suffrid have, sith I was a wife,
With mine husbond, though he be your cosin.

Naie (qð this Monke) by God and S. Martin
He n'is no more a cosin unto me
Than is this lese, that hongith on the tre,
I clepe him so, by saint Denis of Fraunce,
To havin the more cause of acquaintaunce 2660
Of you, whom I have lovid specially
Aboven all othir women sikirly,
This swere I you on my professioun,
Tellith your grefe, lest that he come adoune,
And hastith you, and goth your waie anon.

My dere love (qð she) O my own Dan John,
Full lese me were this counsaile for to hide,
But out it mote, it maie no lengir bide.

My husbonde is to me the worstè man,
That evir was, sithin the worlde began, 2670
But sithen I am a wife, it sit not me
To tellin no wight of our privite
Neither in bed, ne in none othir place,
God shilde that I should tell it for his grace,
A wife ne should not say of her husbonde
But all honour, as I can undirstonde,
Save unto you, thus much I tellin shall,
As helpe me God, he is noughte worthe at all,
In no degre, the value of a fie,
But yet me grevith most his nigardie, 2680

And wel ye wot, that women nat'urally
Desirin thingis fixe, as well as I,
They woldin that ther husbondis should be
Hardy, and wise, and riche, and therto fre,
And buxom to his wife, and freshe abed;
But by that ilkè Lorde that for us bled,
For his honoure, my felfe for to arraye
A sonday next, I mote nedis paye
An hundred frankes, or ellis am I lorne,
Yet were me levir that I were unborne. 2690
Than

Than me were done slaundir or villanie,
 And if mine husbonde eke might it aspie
 I n'ere but lost, and therfore I you prey
 Lene me this summe, or ellis mote I dey,
 Dan John I say, lene me this hundrid frankes,
 Parde I wol not failin you my thanks,
 If that ye list to do that I you pray,
 For of a certaine day I wol you pay,
 And to don you what plesaunce and service
 That I may don, right as ye list devise,
 And but I do, God take on me vengeance,
 As foule as had Genilion of Fraunce.

This gentil Monke answerd in this manere,
 Now truly nece and mine owne lady dere,
 I have (qð he) on you so gret a routhe,
 That I you swere, and plight to you my trouthe,
 That whan your husbond is to Flaunders fare
 I wol delivir you out of this care,
 For I wol bringin you an hundrid frankes,
 And with that worde he caughte her by the flankes,
 And her embracid hard, and kissed her ofte;
 Goth now your way (qð he) al stil and softe,
 And let us dine as sone as ere ye may,
 For by my kalender 'tis prime of day,
 Goth now, and beth as true as I shal be.

Now ellis God forbode it, sir, qð she,
 And forth she goth, as joly as a pie,
 And bad the cokis that they should 'hem hie,
 So that men mightin dine, and that anone.
 Up to her husbonde is this wife ygone,
 And knockid at his counter dore boldly,
Qui est la? (qð he) Peter it am I
 Qð she, what, sir, how long wollin ye fast?
 How long time wollin ye reckon and caft
 Your summis, and your bokis, and your thinges?
 The devel have part of al fuche rekeninges,
 Ye have inough (qð she) of Godd's sonde,
 Come down to day, and let your baggis stonde,
 Ne be ye not ahamid that Dan John
 Shal fastin al this longe day ygon?
 What? let us go here masse, and then go dine.

Wife (qð this man) litill canst thou divine
 The curious besinesse that we have,
 For of us chapmen all, so God me save,
 And by that lorde that callid is seint Ive,
 Scarfly amongis twenty twelve shal thrive
 Continuelly, lastin unto their age,
 We may wel makin chere and gode visage,
 And drivin forth the world, as it may be,
 And kepin our estate in privite
 Till we be dede, or ellis that we playe
 A pilgrimage, or gone out of the way;
 And therfore have I grete necessite
 Upon this queint world to avisin me,
 For evirmore we mote stondin in drede
 Of happe and fortune, in our chapmanhede.

To Flaunders woll I gon to morue' at day,
 And come ayen as sone as ere I may,
 For whiche my derè wife, I The beseke,
 As be to every wight buxom and meke,
 And for to kepe our gode be curiouse,
 And honestly to governe wel our house,
 Thou hast inough, in every manir wise,
 That to a thrifty hufwife may suffise,
 The lackith none array, ne no vitaile,
 Of silvir in thy purse thou maiest not faile.
 And with that worde his counter dore he shette,
 And doune he goth, no lengir would he lette,
 And hastily a masse was there ifaide,
 And spedily the tablis were ilaide,
 And unto dinner fast thei han 'hem spedde,
 And richily the chapman this Monke fedde.

And aftir dinner, Dan John sobirly
 This chapman toke aparte al privily,

And said him thus, cousin, it stondith so
 That, wel I se, to Bruges ye wol go,
 God and seint Austen spede you wele and gide,
 I pray you, cousin, wisely that ye ride,
 Governe you wel also of your diete,
 Al tempe'ratly, and namely in this hete,
 Betwixt us two, nedith no straunge fare,
 Farwel cofin, and God shilde you fro care;
 If any thing thing there be by day or night,
 And it lie in my power or in my might,
 That ye me wol commaunde in any wise,
 It shal be done, right as ye wol devise.

But o thing or ye go, if it may be,
 I wolde prayin you for to lene me
 An hundrid frankis, for a weke or twey,
 For certaine bestis, that I mote nedes bey,
 To florin therewith a place that is ours,
 God helpe me so, I would it werin yours;
 I shal not failin surely at my day,
 Not for a thousande frankis, a mile way,
 But let this thing be secrete, I you pray,
 For yet this night these bestis mote I bey,
 And fare now wele, mine owne cofin dere,
 Graunt mercy of your cost and of your chere.

This noble marchaunt gentilly anon,
 Answerde and said, O cofin mine Dan John,
 Now sikirly this is a smale requeste,
 My gold is yours, whan that evir you leste,
 And not onely my golde, but my chaffare,
 Take what you list, God shilde that you spare.
 But one thing is, ye knowe it well ynough
 Of chapmen, that ther money is ther plough,
 We may creaunce while that we have a name,
 But godelesse for to be it is a shame,
 Pay it ayen, when it lieth at your ese,
 After my might fain wouldin I you plesse.
 The hundrid frankis fet he forth anon,
 And privily he toke 'hem to Dan John,
 No wight of all this worlde wist of this lone,
 Saving this Marchaunt, and Dan John alone,
 Thei drinke and speke, and rome a while and pley,
 Till that Dan John ridith to his abbey.

The morow came, and forth rid this marchaunt
 To Flaunders ward, his prentis him avaunt
 Till he to Bruges came full merily;
 Now goth this Marchaunt wel and besily
 About his nedes, and bieth, and creaunfith,
 He neither playith at dice ne dauncith,
 But as a Marchaunt, shortely for to tell,
 He ledde his life, and there I let him dwell.

The sonday next that this Marchaunt was gon
 To seint Denis ycomin is Dan John,
 With croune and berde al fresh and new ishave,
 In al this house there n'as so lite a knave,
 Ne no wight ellis, but he was ful faine
 For that my lord Dan John was comen againe,
 And shortely to the pointe right for to gon,
 This faire wife is accordid with Dan John,
 That for these C. frankes he should al night
 Havin her in his armis bolte upright,
 And this acord parformid was in dede,
 In mirth al night a besy life they lede
 Til it was day, that Dan John yede his way,
 And bad the meine farwel and gode day,
 For non of 'hem, ne no wight in the toun
 Had of Dan John any suspectioun,
 And forth he ridith home to his abbey,
 Or where him list, no more of him I sey.

This marchaunt, whan that endid was the faire,
 To saint Denis he gan for to repaire,
 And with his wife he makith fest and chere,
 And tellith her the chaffare is so dere
 That nedis must he make a chevisaunce,
 For he was bonden in a reconyfaunce

To

To payin twenty thousande frankes anon;
For which this Marchaunt is to Paris gon,
To borue' of certaine frendis that he had
A certain frankes, and som with him he lad.
And whan he was comin into the toun,
For chierthe and gret affectioun
Unto Dan John he first goth him to pley,
Nought for to borowe of him no money,
But for to wete and se of his welfare,
And for to tellin him of his chaffare,
As frendis don, when they ben mette in fere.

Dan John him makith fest and mery chere, 2850
And he him tolde ayen full specially
How he had bought, ful wel and graciously,
Thonkid be God, all whole his Marchaundise,
Save that he muste in alle manir wise
Makin a chevesaunce, as for his beste,
And then shouldin he be in joy and reste.
Dan John answerd, certis I am right fain
That ye in hele be comin home again,
And if that I were riche, as have I blisse,
Of twenty thousand shildes shuld ye not misse, 2860
For ye so kindly, this othir day,
Ylent me golde, and as I can and may
I thonke you, by God and by saint Jame;
But nathelesse, I toke it to our dame
Your wife at home, the same golde againe,
Upon your benche, she wote it wel certaine,
By certaine tokins, that I can her tell.
Now by your leve, I may no lengir dwell,
Our abbot wol out of this toun anon,
And in his company I mote agon, 2870
Gretith well your dame, mine own nece so swete,
And farewell dere cosin, till that we mete.

This Marchaunt which that was ful ware and wise
Creauncid hath, and eke paide in Paris
To certaine lombardes, redy in ther hondes
This somme of golde, and gate of hem the bondes,
And hom he goth, as mery as a jaye,
For wel he knewe he fode in fuche aray,
That nedis must he win by that viage
A thousand frankes, above all his costage. 2880

His wife ful redy mete him at the yate,
As she was wonte, of old usage algate,
And at that night in mirth thei ben yfette,
For he was riche, and clerely out of dette.
Whan it was day, this marchaunt gan embrace
His wife al newe, and kissed her in her face,
And up he goeth, and made it wonder tough.
No more (qð she) by God ye have inough;
And wantonly ayen with him she plaide,
Til at the laste this marchaunt thus yfaide.

By God (qð he) I am a litill wrothe
With you my wife, although it be me lothe,
And wote ye why? by God as I may gesse
For ye have made a manir of straungenesse
Berwixtin me and my cosin Dan John,
Ye should have warnid me, or I had gon.
That he had you an hundrid frankis paide
By redy token', and held him ill apaide
For that I to him spake of chevesaunce,
Me semid so, as by his countenaunce, 2900
But nathelesse, by God our hevin King
I ne thought not to aske of him nothing;
I prai The wif, ne doith no more so,
Tell me alway er that I fro The go,
Yf any dettour hath in mine absence
Ypayid The, lest through thy negligence
I might him aske a thing that he hath paide.

This wife was not aferde ne yet affraide,
But boldly she saide, and that anon,
Mary I defie that false monke Dan John, 2910
I kepe not of his tokins nevre' a dele,
He toke me certaine golde, I wote it wele,
What evill the dome on his monk'is snoute,
For God it wote, I wende withoutin doute,
That he had yeve it me, bicaufe of you,
To don therwith mine honour and my prow,
For cosinage, and eke for belle chere,
That he hath had ful oftin timis here,
But sith I se it stonte in fuche disjoynte,
I wol answere you shortely to the pointe. 2920
Ye have mo slackir dettours than am I,
For I wol pay you well and redily
Fro day to daie, and if so be I faile,
I am your wife, score it upon my taile,
Or I shall paie as sone as ere I maie,
For by my trueth, I have on mine aray,
And not in waste, bestowid it every dele,
And for I have bestowid it so wele,
To your honour, for Godd'is sake, I say,
As be not wrothe, but let us laugh and playe; 2930
Ye shall my joly body have to wedde,
By God I n'il not pay you but a bedde,
Foryeve it me, mine owne spouse so dere,
Turne hithirward, and makith better chere.

This marchaunt sawe ther was no remedy,
And for to chide it was but a foly,
Sith that the thing may not amendid be,
Now wife he said, I do foryeve it The,
But in thy life, ne be no more so large,
Kepe bet my gode, this yeve I The in charge. 2940
Thus endith nowe my tale, and God us sende
Taling inough, unto our our liv'is ende.

Here endeth the SHIPMAN's TALE.

Here folowe the wordes of our Hoste.

WELL said by Corpus Domini (qð our Hoste)
Now longe mote thou sailin by the See
coste,
Thou gentil maistr, gentil marinere,
God give the Monke a thousande last quad yere,
Aha! felowes, beware of fuche a jape,
The monke put in the marchauntes hode an ape,
And in his wiv'is eke, by saint Austin
Drawith no monkis more into your inne. 2950
But nowe passe ovir, let us seke aboute

Who shall tel now the first of all this route
Anothir tale, and with that worde he saide
As curtisly, as it had ben a maide,
My lady Priorese, now by your leve,
So that I wist that I shuld you not greve,
I woldè demin that ye tellin sholde
A tale nexte, if so be that ye wolde.
Now wollin ye vouchsafe my lady dere.
Gladly (qð she) and said in this manere. 2960

Here beginneth the PRIORESSE's PROLOGUE.

Domine Dominus noster, quàm admirabile est nomen tuum in universâ terrâ.

O Lorde our Lorde, thy name how marveilouse
Is in this widè world ysprad, qð she,
For not only thy Laudis precieuse
Parfourmid are by men of dignite,
But by the mouth of children thy bounte
Parfourmid is, for on the breste sucking
Sometimis shewin they thine herying.

Wherefore in laude, as I can best and may,
Of The and her that is the lilly floure
Whiche that The bare, and is a maide alway, 2970
To telle a storie, I wol do my laboure,
Nought that I may encrefin her honoure,
For she her selfe is honour and the rote
Of bountie, next her sonne, and soul's bote.

Mothir maidin, O maid and mothir fre,
O bushe unbrent, brenning in Moyse's sight,
That ravishedest down fro the deite,

Through thin humbleffe, the Gost that in The light,
Of whose vertue, when he in thin hert pight,
Concevid was the Father's sapience, 2980
Helpe me to tel it in thy reverence.

Lady, thy bounte, and thy magnificence,
Thy vertue, and thy gret humilite
There may no tonge expresse, in no science,
For somtime, lady, er men praie to The,
Thou goest before, of thy benignite,
And gettist us the light through thy prayere
To gidin us unto thy sonne so dere,

My conning is to weke, O blisful Quene,
For to declarin thy high worthinesse, 2990
That I ne may the weight of it sustene,
But as a childe of twelve moneth old and lesse,
That can unnethis any worde expresse,
Right so fare I, and therefore I you pray
Gidith my songe, that I shal of you say.

Here foloweth her TALE.

A Miracle of a Christian Child murder'd by the Jews.

Here was in Asie, in a grete cite,
Amongis christin folke a jewerie,
Sustenid by a lorde of that countre,
For foule usury, and lucre of villany,
Hateful to Christ, and to his company,
And thorough the strete men might ride and wende,
For it was fre, and open at every ende.

A litil schole of Christin folke there stode
Doun at the farthir ende, in whiche there were Children an hepe, comin of Christin blode,
That lernid in that schole fro yere to yere
Such manere doctrine, as men usin here,
This is to say, to singin and to rede,
As smale children done in ther childehede. 3010

Amonges these children was a wedowes son
A clergion, that vii. yere was of age,
That day by day unto schole was his won,
And also eke, where he sey the image
Of Christ's mothir, had he in usage,
As him was taught, to knele adoun and say
An Ave Maria, as he goth by the way.

Thus hath this wedow' her litil child itaught
Our blissid lady, Christ's mothir dere,
To worship aye, and he foryate it naught, 3020
For the sely childe would al day sone lere;
But aye, when I remembre this matere,
Saint Nicholas stont aye in my presence,
For he so yonge to Christ did reverence.

This litil childe his litil boke lerning
As he sate in the schole at his primere,
Herde Alma Redemptoris Mater singe,
As children lered ther antiphonere,
And as he durst, he drewe aye nere and nere, 3030
And herkened to the wordis and the note,
Til that he the first verse couth al by rote.

Nought wist he what this latin was to say,
For he so yonge and tendir was of age,
But on a day his felowe gan he pray
To expoune him the song, in his langage,
Or tell him why this song was in usage,
This praide he him to constre and declare
Full oftin timis, upon his knees bare.

His felowe, which that elder was than he,
Answerd him thus, this song I have herd say 3040
Was made upon our blissid lady fre,
Her to salewe, and eke her for to prey
To ben our helpe, and succour, when we dey,
I can no more expoune in this mater,
I lerne to singe, I can but smal grammer.

And is this song imade in reverence
Of Christ's mothir, said this innocent?
Now certis I wol done my diligence
To conne it al er Christinmasse be went,
Though that I for my primer should be shent, 3050
And should be betin thre times in an houre,
I wol it conne, our lady to honoure.

His felaw taught him homwarde privily
Fro day to day, til he couthe it by rote,

And than he songe it wel and boldly
Fro worde to worde, according to the note,
And twise a day it passith through his throte,
To scolewarde, and homwarde when that he went;
On Christ's mothir set was his entent.

As I have saide throughout the jewerie 3060
This litil childe as he came to and fro,
Ful merily then would he singe, and crye
Alma Redemptoris Mater, ere mo,
The swetenesse hath his herte yperfid so
Of Christ's mothir, that to her to pray
He cannot stinte of singin by the way.

Our firste foe, the Serpent Sathanas,
That hath in Jewis hert his waspis nest
Up swale and said, O Ebrake peple' alas! 3070
Is this a thing to you that is honeste,
That suche a boy shal walkin as him leste
In your dispite, and singen of suche sentence
Whiche is againt your law's reverence?

From thence forth the jewis han conspirid
This innocent out of this worlde to chafe,
An homicide therto han thei hirid,
That in an aley had a privy place,
And as the child gan forth by for to pace, 3080
This cursid Jewe him hent, and heldin faste,
And cutte his throte, and in a pitte him caste.

I say that in a wardrope thei him threwe,
Where that the Jewis purgid ther intraile.
O cursid folke of Herodes all newe,
What may your evill entent you availe?
Murder wol out, certis it woll not faile,
And namely ther the honor of God shal sprede,
The bloud out cryith on your cursid dede.

O martyr crownid in Virginitie,
Now mayst thou singe folowing ay in one 3090
The pure white Lambe celestial, qd she,
Of whiche the gret evangeliste seint John
In Pathmos wrote, which sayith that they gon
Before this lambe, and sing a song al newe,
That never fleschly woman thei ne knewe.

This pore widowe awaitith al the night
Aftir her litill childe, and he came nought,
For whiche as sone as it was day's light
With face all pale for drede, and besy thought
She hath at scole, and ellis where him sought, 3100
Til finally, she gan so farre aspie
That he was last seine in the Jewerie.

With mother's pite in her breste enclosed
She goth as she wer halfe out of her mithe
To every place, where that she hath supposed
By likelyhode her litil childe to finde,
And ere on Christ's mothir, meke and kinde,
She cryid, and at the last thus she wrought,
Among the cursid Jewis she him sought.

She frenith, and she prayith pitously
To every Jewe that dwellich in thilke place, 3110
To tellin her, if her childe went there by,
They al say nay; but Jesu of his grace

Yave

Yave in her thought, within a litill space,
That in that place, aftir her sonne she criede
There he was caste into a pitte beside.

O grete God, that parfournidist thy laude
By mouthe of innocence, lo here thy might!
This Jemme of Chastite, this Emeraude,
And eke of martirdome the rubie bright,
There he with throte ycorvin lay upright, 3120
He (Alma redemptoris) gan to singe
So loude that all the place began to ringe.

The christin folke, that thorough the strete went,
In comin, for to wondir on this thing,
And hastily they for the Provost sent,
Which foundin the child freshly yet bleding,
And heryeth Christ that is of Hevin King,
And eke his mothir, honoure of mankinde,
And aftir that, the Jewis let he binde.

This childe with pitous lamentacion 3130
Was up takin, singin his songe alway,
And with honoure, and grete proceffion
Thei carien him unto the nexte abbey,
His mothir sownin by the bere ylay,
Unnethis might the peple that wer there
This sorowful Rachell bring fro his bere.

With turment and with shamful deth eche one
This Provost doth these Jewis for to sterve,
That of this murdre wist, and that anone
He ne wolde no fuche cursidnesse observe, 3140
Evill shall he have that wol ill deserve,
Therefore with wild horses he did 'hem drawe,
And aftirwarde he honge 'hem by the lawe.

Upon his bere aye lieth this innocent
Before the chefe aulter, whiles the masse last,
And aftir that, the' abbot with his covent
Them speddin for to bury him ful fast,
And when they holy watir on him caste,
Yet spake the child, when sprint was holy water,
And songe, O alma redemptoris mater! 3150

This abbot, which that was an holy man,
As monkis ben, or ellis ought to be,
This yongè childe to covir he began,
And faide: O derè childe, I hailin The
By vertue of the holy Trinite

Tell me what is thy cause thus for to sing,
Sithins thy throte is cutte to my seming.

My throte is cutte, unto my neckè bone,
Sayid this child, and as by way of kind
I shoulde have dyid, ye longe time agone, 3160
But Jesu Christ, as ye in bokis finde,
Wol that his glory laste and be in minde,
And for the worship of his mothir dere
Yet may I sing (O alma) loude and clere.

This wel of mercy, Christ's mothir swete,
I lovid alway, aftir my conning,
And when that I my life yshold forlete
To me she came, and badde me for to sing
This antem verily in my dying,
As ye han herde, and when that I had songe, 3170
Me thought she layd a graine upon my tonge.

Wherefore I sing, and sing I mote certaine
In honour of the blisful maidin fre,
Til fro my tonge of takin is the graine;
And aftir that, thus she said unto me,
My litle childe, now wol I fetchin The
When that the graine is fro thy tong itake,
Be not agaste, I wol The not forsake.

This holy monke, this abbot, him mene I,
His tonge out caught, and toke away the grayne,
And he yave up the goste ful softly;
And when this abbot had this wondir seyne,
His saltè teris triklid doune as reyne,
And grofing he fell plat upon the grounde,
And stil he lay, as he had ben ibounde.

The covent lay eke upon the pavement
Weping and herying Christ's mothir dere,
And aftir that thei risen, and forth ben went,
And toke away this martir fro the bere,
And in a tombe of marble stonis clere 3190
Enclofin they his litle body swete,
There he is now God graunt us for to mete.

O yongè Hewe of Lincoln, flaine also
With cursid Jewes, as it is notable,
For it is but a littil while ago,
Praise eke for us, we sinful folke unstable,
That of his mercy God be merciable
On us, and his grete mercy multiply,
For reverence of his mothir Mary.

Here endeth the PRIORESSE TALE.

~~~~~

Here foloweth the wordes of the Hoste to CHAUCER.

¶ Hen said was this miracle, every man 3200
As sobre was, as wondir was to se,
Til that our hostè to japin began,
And than at erste he lokid upon me
And saidè thus: what man arte thou? (qð he)
Thou lokist, as thou wouldist finde an hare,
For evir on the grounde I se The stare.

Aprochin nere, and loke up merily
Now ware you firs, and let this man have place,
He in the wasse is shapen as wel as I,
This were a popet in armes to embrace, 3210

For any woman, smale and faire of face,
He semith elvishe by his countenance,
For unto no wight doth he daliaunce.

Say now somwhat sith othir folke han said,
Tel us a tale of mirthe and that anon.
Hoste (qð I) ne be not evil apaide,
For othir tale ne certis can I none
But of a rime, I lernid yore agone.
Ye that is gode (qð he) we shullin here
Some deinte thing, me thinkith by thy chere. 3220

Here endeth the wordes of the Hoste.

Here

A Northern Tale of an outlandish Knight, purposely utter'd by CHAUCER in a Rime and Style differing from the rest, as though he himself were not the Author, but only the Reporter of the other Tales.

Listenith lordinges in gode entent,
And I wol tellin verament
Of mirthe and of solas,
All of a knight was faire and gent
In batayle and in turnament,

His name was sir Thopas.
Iborne he was in ferre coundre
In Flaunders, al beyonde the see,
At Popering in the place.
His fathir was a man ful fre,
And lorde he was of that coundre,
As it was Godd's grace.
Sir Thopas was a doughty swaine,
White was his face as paine de maine,
His lippis redd as rose,
His rudde is like scarlet in graine,
And I you tell in gode certaine
He had a semely nose.
His here, his berde was like saffroun,
That to his girdel raught adoun,
His shone of cordewane.
Of Bruges were his hofin broun,
His robe was of chekelatoun,
That cost many a jane.
He couthe hunt at the wildere dere,
And ride an hauking by the rivere
With grey goshaue on honde.
Therto he was a gode archere,
Of wrastring was there none his pere,
There any Ram should stonde.
Full many a maide bright in boure
They mournid for him paramoure,
Whan hem were bet to slepe.
But he was chaff, and nolechoure,
And swete as is the Bramble floure,
That berith the redde hipe.
And so befell upon a daie
Forsoth, as I you tellin maie,
Sir Thopas would outride.
He worth upon his stede so graie,
And in his honde a launce so gaie,
A long swerde by his side.
He prickith through a faire forest,
Therein was many a wilde beste,
Ye bothe the Bucke and Hare.
And as he prickid North and Este
I tellin you, him had almesse
Betide a forie care.
There springin herbis grete and small,
The Licoris and Setuall,
And the Clove glosier,
And Nutmigus, to put in ale,
Whither it be or newe or stale,
Or for to lie in cofer.
The birdis singen, it is no naie,
The Sperhauke and the Poppingaie,
That joie it was to here.
The Throftill Cock eke made his laie,
The wode Larke sitting on a spray,
She song full loud and clere.
Sir Thopas fill in love longing,
And whan he herd the Throftill sing,
He prickid as he were wode,
His faire courser in his pricking
So swette, that men mightin him wring,
His sidis were all blode.
Sir Thopas eke so werie was,

For pricking on the softè gras,
So fiers was his corage,
That doune he laied him in that place, 3290
To makin his stede some solace,
And gave him gode forage.
Oh, saint Mary, benedicite!
What ailith this same love at me
To blindè me so sore?
Me dremid all this night, parde,
An else quene shall my lemman be,
And slepe undir my gore.
An Elfe Quene woll I love I wis,
For in this worlde no woman is Worthy to be my make, 3300
All othir women I forsake,
And to an Elfe Quene I me take
By dale and eke by doune.
Into his saddle he clombe anone,
And prickid ovir stile and stone
An Elfe Quene to espie. 3240
Till he so long hath ridden and gone
That he fonde in a privie wone
The coundre of Fairie.
Wherein he fought both North and South 3310
And oft he spirid with his mouth,
In many forest wilde;
But in that Countre n'as there none
Ne neither wife ne childe.
Till him there came a grete Giaunt,
His name was called sir Oliphaunt,
A perillous man of deede.
He sayid childe, by Termagaunt,
But if thou pricke out of my haunt,
Anon I slea thy stede.
Here wonith the Quene of Fairie, 3320
With Harpe and Pipe, and Simphonie,
Within this place and boure,
The child saied, also mote I the
To morowe woll I metin The Whan I have mine armoure.
And yet I hopin par ma faie,
That thou shalt with this launce gaie,
Abie it through thy mawe,
Thy hawbeck shall I, if I may,
Perce, er it be ful prime of day, 3330
For here thou shalt be slawe.
Sir Thopas drowe abacke full fast,
This Giaunt at him stonis cast
Out of a fell staffe sling.
But faire escapid sir Thopas,
And all was thorough Godd's grace,
And through his faire bering.
Yet listenith lordinges to my tale,
Merier than the Nightingale,
For now I woll ye rounne, 3340
How sir Thopas, with sidis smale
Pricking all ovir doune and dale,
Is comen ayen to tounne.
His mery men commaundid he
To makin him bothe game and gle,
For nedis must he fight
With a Giaunt, with heddis thre,
For paramoures and jolite
Of one that shone full bright.
Doe come he saied my ministralis 3350
And jestors, to tell us talis
Anon in mine arming,
P p

Of Romaunces that been roials
 Of Popis and of Cardinals
 And eke of love longing.
 Thei fet him first the swete wine,
 And Mede eke in a Mazeline,
 And roiall spicerie,
 Of Ginger brede that was full fine,
 Of Licoris, and eke Comine,
 With Suger that is trie.
 He did on next his white lere
 Of cloth of lake full fine and clere
 A breche and eke a sherte.
 And next his shert an haketon,
 And ovir that an habergeon
 For percing of his herte.
 And ovir that a fine hauberke
 Was all iwrought of Jewis werke,
 Full strong it was of plate.
 And over that his cote armoure
 As white as is the Lilly floure,
 In whiche he would debate.
 His shilde was all of gold so redde,
 And theron was a Bor's hedde,
 A carbocle beside.
 And there he swore by ale and brede
 How that the Giaunt should be dede
 Betide what so betide.
 His jambeux were of cure buly,
 His f'ord's shethe of Ivorie,
 His helme of Laton bright.
 His sadell was of ruel bone,
 His bridle as the Sunne yshone
 Or as the Mone ylight.
 His spere was of the fine Sypres
 That bodith warre, and nothing pece,
 The hedde full sharpe igrounde.

3370

3380

His stede ywas all dapple graie,
 He goth an aumble by the waie
 Full softly and full round,
 There n'as his pere in any londe;
 Lo! Lordis mine, here is a fit,
 If ye woll any more of it
 To tell it woll I fonde.

3390

NOW hold your mouth for charite
 Bothe Knight and also Lady fre,
 And kerkenith to my spell.
 Of battaile and of chevalrie,
 And eke of Ladies love drierie
 Anon I woll you tell.
 Men speke of Romaunces of pris,
 Of Hornechild, and of Ipotis,
 Of Bevis and fir Gie,
 Of fir Libeaux, and Blaïndamoure,
 But fir Thopas berith the floure
 Of riall chevalrie.
 His gode Courser he hath bestrode,
 And forth upon his waie he rode
 As sparke out of the bronde.
 Upon his cresse he bare a toure,
 And therin stiked a Lilly floure,
 God shilde his cors fro shonde!
 And for he was a knight aventrous
 He n'oldè slepin in none hous,
 But liggin in his hode.
 His bright helmet was his wanger,
 And by him baytid his destrer
 Of herbis fine and gode.
 Himself dronke watir of the well
 As did the knight fir Persivell
 So worthy undir wede.
 Till it was on a day

Here our Holte interrupteth the Rime of Sir THOPAS.

O more of this for Godd'is dignite,
N (Qd then our holte) for thou makist me
 So wery of thy very leudenes,
 That al so wisly God my soule blesse
 Mine eris akin of thy draffie speche,
 Now soche a rime the devill I beteche,
 This maie well be clepe rime Dogrell (qd he)
 Why so (qd I) why wolt thou lettin me
 More of my tale, than any othir man,
 Sens that it is the best rime that I can?
 By God (qd he) full plainely at o worde
 Thy draffie riming is not worth a torde,
 Thou dost nought ellis but dispendist time,
 Sir at one worde, thou shalt no lengir rime.
 Let se whither thou canst tell ought in gest,
 Or tellin in prose fomwhat at the lest,
 In whiche there maie be some mirthe or doctrine.
 Gladly (qd I) by Godd'is swete pine
 I woll you tell a little thing in prose,
 That ought to like you as I do suppose;
 Or els ye be certis to daungerous,
 For it is a morall tale vertuous,
 All be it tolde somtime in sondrie wise
 Of sondrie folke, as I shall you devise.
 As thus, ye wote that every' Evangelist,
 That tellith us the paine of Jesu Christ,
 Ne saieth not all thing as his felowe doeth,

3430

But natheles ther sentence is all soth,
 And all they acordin in ther sentence,
 All be there in ther telling difference,
 For some of 'hem saine more, and some saine lesse,
 Whan thei his pitous passion expresse.
 I mene of Mathew and Mark, Luke and John,
 But doutilefs ther sentence is all one.
 And therefore, Lordingis, I you beseche,
 If that you think I varie in my speche,
 As thus, although I tellin fomwhat more
 Of proverbis, than ye han herd bifore
 Comprehendid in this lite tretise here,
 To' enforcin with the' effect of my matere,
 And though I the same wordis do not say
 As ye han herd, yet to all you I praie,
 Blamith me not, for that in my sentence
 Shull ye not findin mochill difference
 Fro the sentencis of this tretis lite,
 After the whiche this merie tale I write.
 And therefore herkinith what I shall saie,
 And let me tell my tale I do you praie.

MS. Ch. has these lines after.

Here endyth Chaucer's tale of Sir Thopas,
 A doughty Knight in alle his dede;
 God us helpe and Saynt Thomas,
 And graunte us alle grace weel to spede.

Here ende the wordes of our Holte.

Here

Here beginneth CHAUCER's TALE of MELIBEUS.

Young manne called Melibeus, mightie and riche, begate upon his wife that called was Prudence, a doughtir whiche that called was Sophie.

Upon a daie bifell that he for his disport is went into the felde him to plaie: His wife and eke his doughtir hath he left within his hous, of whiche the dores were faste ishet. Four of his old foos han it aspied, and settin ladders to the walles of his hous, and by the windowes ben entred, and bet his wife, and wounded his doughter, with five mortall woundes, in five sondrie places: That is to saie, in her fete, in her hondes, in her eres, in her nose, and in her mouth, and lesten her for ded, and wenten ther waie.

Whan Melibeus retourned was into his hous, and see all this mischief, he like a mad man renting his clothes, gan to wepe and crie.

Prudence his wife, as ferforth as she durst besought him of his weping for to skint: But not forthy, he gan to wepe and crie ever lenger the more.

This noble wife Prudence remembred her upon the sentence of Ovide, in his boke that cleped is the remedy of love, wher as he saith he is a fole that dishourbeth the mother to wepe, in the deth of her childe, till she have wepte her fill, as for a certain time: and than shall a man doen his diligence with amiable wordes, to recomfort and praie her of her weping for to stinte. For whiche reson this noble wife Prudence, suffered her husbunde to wepe and crie, as for a certain space: and whan she sawe her time, she saied him in this wise. Alas my Lorde (qð she) why make ye your self for to be like a fole? Forsoth it apperteineth not unto a wise manne, to maken soche a forowe. Your doughter, with the grace of God, shall warishe and escape. And all were it so that she right now were ded, ye ne ought not as for her deth your self distroy. Senek saith the wise manne shall not take to grete discomfort for the deth of his children, but certes he should suffre it in pacience, as well as he abideth the deth of his owne proper person.

This Melibeus answerde anon and said: What man (qð he) should of his weping stint, that hath so grete a cause for to wepe: Jesus himself our Lord wepte for the deth of Lazarus his frende. Prudence answered, certes well I wot, a temperate weping is nothing defended, to him that sorowfull is, emonge folke in sorow, but it is rather graunted him to wepe. The Apostle Poule unto the Romanes writeth, menne should rejoice with him that maketh joie, and wepe with soche folke as wepen. But though a temperate weping be graunted, certes outrageous weping is defended. Mesure of weping should be considered, after the lore that techeth us Senek. Whan that thy frende is dedde (qð he) let not thin eyen to moiste ben of reses, ne to moch drie: although teres comen to thine eyen, let 'hem not fal. And whan thou hast forgon thy frende, doe diligence to get an other frende: and this is more wisedome than for to wepe for thy frende, whiche thou haste lorne, for therein is no bote. And therefore if you governe you by sapience, put awaie sorowe out of your herte. Remembreth you that Jesus Sirake saith, a man that is joious and glad in herte it him conserveth flourishing in his age: But sothely a sorowfull herte maketh his bones drie. He saith eke thus, that sorowe in herte slaeth full many a manne. Salomon saith, that right as moughthes in the shepes fleise anoieth the clothes, and the smale wormes wormes the tre, right so anoieth sorowe the herte of man, wherfore us ought as well in the deth of our children, as in the losse of our temporall godes, have pacience.

Remember you upon pacient Jobe, whan he had losse his children and his temporalle substaunce; and in his body endured and received full many a grevous tribulacion, yet saied he thus: Our Lorde it sente to me, our Lorde hath biraft it me, right so as our Lorde would, right so it be don, iblest be the name of our Lorde. To these forsaied thinges Melibeus unto his wife Prudence answerd: All thy wordes (qð he) ben true, and therto profitable, but truly mine herte is troubled with this sorowe so greuously, that I n'ot what to do. Let call (qð Prudence) your true frendes al and thy linage, whiche that ben wise, and telleth to 'hem your case, and herkeneth what thei saie in counsailling, and govern you after ther sentence. Salomon saith, werke al thy things by counsaile, and thou shalt never rue. Than by counsaile of his wife Prudence, this Melibeus let cause a grete congregacion of peple, as Surgiens, Phisicians, olde folke and yong, and some of his olde enemies reconciled (as by ther semblante) to his love and to his grace: and therewithal there came some of his neighbours, that did him reverence more for drede than for love, as it hadde ofte. There comen also full many subtil flatterers, and wise Advocates lerned in the lawe. And whan these folkes togeders assembled were, this Melibeus, in sorowful wise, shewed 'hem his case, and by the maner of his speche it semed that in herte he bare a cruell ire, redy to doen vengeance upon his foes, and sodainly he desired that warre should begin, but nathelesse yet asked he counsaile upon this matter. A Surgien by licence and assent of soche as were wise up rose, and unto Melibeus saied, as ye shull here.

Sir (qð he) as to us Sergiens appartaineth, that we do to every wight the best that we can, where as we ben withholden, and to our paciente that we doen no damage: wherfore it happeth many time and oft, that whan two men have everiche wounded other, one Surgien heleth 'hem bothe, wherfore unto our art it is not pertinent to norish warre, ne parties to supporte. But certes, as to the warfishing of your daughter, al be it so that perilously she be wounded, we shall doe so tentive businesse fro daie to night, that, with the grace of God, she shall ben whole and sounde, as sone as is possible. Almoste right in the same wise the Phisiciens answerde, save that thei saiden a fewe wordes more: That right as maladies ben by ther contraries cured, right so shall man warishe warre by pece. His neighbours full of envie, his fained frendes that semed reconciled, and his flatterers, maden semblaunce of weping, and enpaired and agrutched moche of this matter, in praising gretly Melibe, of might, of power, of riches, and of frendes, dispising the power of his adversaries: and saied utterly, that he anon should wrenken him on his foes, and begin warre.

Up rose than an Advocate that was wise, by leve and by counsaile of other that were wise, and saied: The nede, for the whiche we ben assembled in this place, is full hevie thing, and a grete matter, bicause of the wrong and of the wickednesse that hath be doen, and eke by reson of grete damages, that in time comyng ben possible to fallen for the same, and eke by reson of the grete riches and power of the parties bothe; for the whiche resons, it wer a full grete perill to erren in this matter. Wherfore, Melibeus, this is our sentence; we counsaile you aboven al thing, that right anon thou doe thy diligence, in keping of thy proper person, in such a wise that thou ne wante no espie ne watche, thy body for to save: And after that, we counsaile that in thine hous thou set sufficient garrison, so as thei maie as well thy bodie as thy hous defende: but certes to moven warre, or to doen sodainly vengeance, we maie not deme in so little time, that it were profitable, wherfore we aske leiser and space, to have deliberacion in this case to deme, for the common proverbe saith thus: He that sone demeth sone shall repent. And eke men sain, thilke Judge is wise that sone understondeth a matter, and judgeth by leiser: For all be it taryng be noifull, algate it is not to be reproved in yeving of judgement, ne in vengeance taking, whan it is sufficiente and resonable. And that shewed our Lorde Jesu Christ by ensample, for whan the woman was taken in avoutrie, and was brought in his presens to knowen what shuld be doen of her persone, all be it that he wiste well himself what he would answer, yet ne would he not answer sodenly, but he would have deliberacion, and in the ground he wrote twise, and by this cause we asken deliberacion: and we shal than by the grace of God counsaile you that thing that shal be profitable.

Up sterte than the yong folke at ones, and the most part of that companie have skorned this olde wise man, and begon to make noise and said. Right so as whiles that iron is hot men should smite, right so men should wrenken ther wronges while that thei ben freshe and newe, and with loude voice thei cried, warre, warre. Up rose tho one of the olde wise, and with his hond made countenance that thei should holden 'hem stil, and yeven him audience. Lordinges (qð he) there is ful many a manne that crieth warre warre, that wote full lite what warre amounteth. Warre at his beginning hath so grete an entring and so large, that every wight maie enter whan him liketh, and lightly find warre: but certes what ende thereof shall fall, it is not lightly to knowe. Whan that warre is ones begon, there is full many a child unborn of his mother, that shal sterve yong, bicause of thilke warre, other els live in sorowe, or dien in wretchednesse: And therefore or that any warre be bigon, menne must have grete counsaile and gode deliberacion. And whan this old manne wende to enforcen his tale by reson, well nie al at ones bigon for to rise, for to breken his tale, and bidden him full ofte his wordes to abregge: For certes he that precheth to 'hem that liste not to here his wordes, his sermon 'hem annoieth. For Jesus Sirake saith, that Musick in wepinge is a noious thinge. This is as moche to saie, as moche availleth it to speke biforne folke to whiche his speche anoieth, as it is for to singen biforne 'hem that wepe. And whan this wise man saw that him wanted audience, all shamfast he set him adoun ayen. For Salomon saith: there as thou maist not have audience, enforce The not to speke. I se well (qð this wiseman) that the common Proverbe is sothe, that gode counsaile wanteth, whan it is moste nede.

Yet hadde this Melibeus in his counsaile many folke, that privily in his ere counsailed him certain thinges, and counsailed him the contrary in generall audience. Whan Melibeus had herd that the grettest part of his counsaile were accorded that he should make warre, anon he consented to ther counsailling, and fully affirmed ther sentence. Than dame Prudence, whan that she sawe her husbonde shope him for to awreke him on his enemies, and to begin warre: she in full humble wise, whan she sawe her time, saied to him these wordes. My Lorde (qð she) I you beseeche as hertly as I dare or can, ne haste you not to fast, and for all guerdons yeve me audience. For Peter Alphonis saith, Who so doeth to The gode or harme, haste The not to quite it, for in in this wise thy frend wol abide, and thine enemye shall the longer live in drede. The Proverbe saith, he hasteth well that wisely can abide: And in wicked hast is no profite.

This Melibe answerd to his wife Prudence: I purpose not (quod he) to werke by thy counsaile, for many causes and reasons, for certes every wight would holde me than a sole. This is to saie, if I for thy counsailling would chaunge thinges that ben ordained and affirmed by so many wise. Secondly, I saie that all women ben wicked, and none gode of hem al. For of a thousande men saith Salomon, I founde one gode man: but certes, of all women founde I never non. And also certes, if I governed me by thy counsaile, it should seme that I had yve The over me the maistrie: and God forbid that so it were. For Jesus Sirake saith, that if the wife have maistrie, she is contrarious to her husbande. And Salomon saith, Never in thy life, to thy wife, ne to thy childe, ne to thy frende, ne yve no power over thy self, for better it wer that thy children aske of The thinges that hem nedeth, than thy self to be in the handes of thy children. And also if I woll werche by thy counsaile, certes my counsaile must be sum time secrete, till it were time that it must be knowen: and this ne maie not be; if I should be counsailed by The. When dame Prudence fall debonairly and with grete patience, had herd all that her husbande liked for to saie, than asked she of him licence for to speke, and saied in this wise. My lorde (quod she) as to your first reson, it maie lightly ben answerd. For I saie that it is no folie to chaunge counsaile whan the thing is chaunged, or els whan the thing semeth otherwise than it semed afore. And moreover I saie, though that ye have sworne and behight to performe your emprise, and by just cause ye doe it not: men should not saie therefore ye wer a liar and forsworne. For the boke saith, that the wise man maketh no lesing, whan he tourneth his corage for the better. And albeit that your emprise be established, and ordeined by grete multitude of folke, yet dare you not accomplishe thilke ordinance but you liketh: for the trowth of thinges, and the profite ben rather founden in fewe folke that ben wise and full of reson, than by grete multitude of folke, there every man crieth and clattereth what him liketh: sothly soche multitude is not honest. And as to the second reson, where as ye saie, that al women ben wicked: save your grace, certes ye despise al women in this wise, and he that al despiseth, as saith the boke, al displeseth. And Seneca saith, that whoso wol have sapience, shall no man dispraise, but he shall gladly teche the science that he can, without presumption or pride: and soche thinges as he nought ne can, he shall not ben ashamed to lerne hem, and to enquire of lesse folke than himself. And that ther hath ben many a gode woman, maie lightly be proved: for certes, sir, our Lorde Jesu Christ n'olde never han disceded to be borne of a woman, if al women had ben wicked. And after that, for the grete bounte that is in women, our Lorde Jesu Christ, whan he was risen fro deth to life, appered rather to a woman, than to his Apostles. And though that Salomon saied, he founde never woman gode, it foloweth not therefore that all women be wicked: for though that he ne founde no gode woman, certes many an other man hath founde many a woman full gode and true. Or els paraventure the entente of Salomon was this, that in sovereign bounte he found no woman, this is to say: that there is no wight that hath parfite bounte save God alone, as he himself recordeth in his Evangelie. For there n'is no creature so gode, that him ne wanteth somewhat of the perfeccion of God that is his maker.

Your third reson is this, ye say that if ye governe you by my counsaile, it should seme that ye had yve me the maistrie and the lordship of your person. Sir, save your grace it is not so, for if so were that no man should be counsailed but onely of hem that han lordship and maistrie of his persone, men n'olde not be counsailed so ofte. For sothly thilke man that asketh counsaile of a purpose, yet hath he fre will whither he woll doe after that counsaile or non. And as to your fourth reson, there as ye saie that the janglerie of women can hide thinges that thei wote not, as who so saith, that a woman can not hide that she wote. Sir, these wordes ben understonde of women that ben jangelers and wicked, of whiche women men sain that thre thinges driven a manne out of his hous, that is to saie, smoke, dropping of rain, and wicked wives. And of soche women Salomon saith, that a man were better dwell in deserte, than with a woman that is riotous. And sir by your leave it am not I, for ye have ful oft assaied my grete silence and my grete patience, and eke how well that I can hide and hele thinges, that men oughten secretly to hiden. And sothly as to your fift reson, where as ye saie that in wicked counsaile women venquishe men: God wot that thilke reson stant here in no stede: for understondeth now ye asken counsaile for to doe wickednes: And if ye would werken wickednesse, and your wife restraineth thilke wicked purpose, and overcome you by reson and by gode counsaile, certes your wife ought rather to be praised than blamed. Thus should ye understond the Philosopher that saith, in wicked counsaile women venqueshe ther husbandes. And there as ye blame all women and ther reasons, I shall shewe you by many ensamples, that many women have be ful gode and yet ben, and ther counsaile wholsome and profitable. Eke some men han saied, that the counsaile of women is either to dere, or to little worth. But albeit so that full many women be bad, and ther counsaile vile and nought worth, yet han menne found full many a gode woman, and full discrete and wise in counsailling. Lo Jacob through the counsaile of his mother Rebecke, wan the benison of his father, and the Lordship of all his brethern. Judith, throwe her gode counsaile, delivered the cite of Bethule, in whiche she dwelt, out of the hond of Holofern that had it all besieged, and would have destroyed it. Abigaile delivered Naball her husband, fro David the King, that would have slaine him, and appeased the ire of the King by her wit, and by her gode counsaile. Hester by her counsaile enhaunced grete the peple of God, in the reigne of Assuerus the king. And the same bountie in gode counsailling of many a gode woman maie men rede and tell. And furthermore, whan that our Lorde had created Adam our forme father, he saied in this wise: It is not gode to be a manne alone: make we an helper to himself semblable. Here maie ye se that if that women were not gode, and ther counsaile gode and profitable, our Lorde God of heven ne would neither han wrought hem, ne called hem the helper of man, but rather confusion to man. And there saied a clerke ones in two verses. What is better than golde? Jasper. What is better than Jasper? Wisedome. And what is better than Wisedome? Woman. And what is better than a gode woman? That is a gode man. And what is better than a gode man? Nothing. And sir, by many other reasons maie ye sene that many women ben gode, and eke ther counsaile gode and profitable. And therefore, sir, if that ye woll truste to my counsaile, I shall restore you your daughter hole and founde, and eke that I woll doe you so moche, that ye shall have honour in this case.

Q q

Whan

Whan Melibe had herd the wordes of his wife Prudence, he saide thus. I se well that the wordes of Salomon be soth. For he saith the wordes that be spoken discretly by ordinaunce, ben Honie Combes, for thei yeven swetnesse to the soule, and holsomnesse to the body. And wife, bicause of thy swete wordes, and eke for I have proved and assaied thy grete Sapience and thy grete trowth: I woll governe me by thy counsaile in all thing.

Now sir (quod dame Prudence) and sithens that ye vouchsafe to be governed by my counsaile, I woll enforme you how that ye shall governe your self, in chosing of your counsaillours. Ye shall first in all your werke, mekely besechyng to the hie God that he woulde be youre counsaillour, and shapeth you to suche entent that he yeve you counsaile and comforte, as taught Thobie his sonne; At all times thou shalt blisse God, and praie him to dresse thy waies, and loke eke that thy counsailes ben in him ever more. Saint James saith, if anye man of you have nede of sapience, aske it of God. And afterwarde, than shullen ye take counsaile in youre selfe, and examine well your owne thoughtes, of suche thinges as you thinke that ben beste for youre profite. And than shal ye drive fro your hertethinges that be contrarious to gode counsaile: that is to saye, ire, covetise, and hastinesse.

First he that asketh counsaile of himselfe, certes he must bewithouten ire and wrath in himselfe, for many causes. The firste is this: He that hath gret ire and wrath in himselfe he weneth alwaye that he may doe thing that he may not do. And secondly, he that is yrous and wrothful, he may not well deme. And he that maye not well deme, maye not well counsell. The thirde is this, he that is yrous and wroth, as saith Seneca, maie not speke but blamefull thinges, and with thilke vicious wordes he stirreth other folke to angre and to ire. And eke sir ye muste drive covetise out of your herte. For the Apostle saith, that covetise is the rote of all harmes. And trusteth right well that a covetous man ne can not deme ne thinke but onely to fulfil the ende of his covetise: and certes that ne may never be accomplished, for evermore, the more habundaunce that he hath of riches, the more he desireth. And sir ye muste also drive oute of your hert hastinesse: For certes ye may not deme for the best a sodaine thought that falseth in your herte, but ye muste avise you on it full ofte: For as ye have herde here bifore, the comen Proverbe is this. He that sone demeth, sone repenteth.

Sir, ye ne be not alway in like disposicion, for certes some thing that semeth somtime to you that is gode for to do, an other time it semeth to you the contrarie.

And whan ye han taken counsaile in your selfe, and han demed by gode deliberacion suche thing as you semeth beste, than rede I you that ye kepe it secret. Bewraye ye not your counsaile to no person, but if so be that ye wene fikerly that through your bewraynge, your condicion shall be to you the more profitable. For Jhesus Sirake saith: neyther to thy foe ne to thy frende, discover not thy secret, ne thy folie: for they woll yeve you audience and lookinge, and supportacion in your presence, and scorne you in your absence. Another Clerke saith, that scarllie shall you finde anie person that maie kepe counsaile sykerly. The boke saith, while that thou kepest thy counsaile in thine herte, thou kepest it in thy prison: and whan thou bewrayist thy counsaile to anie wight, he holdeth The in his snare. And therefore you is better to hide your counsaile in your hert, than to praie him to whom ye have bewrayde your counsaile, that he woll kepe it close still.

For Seneca saith: If so be that thou maiste not thine owne counsaile hide, how darste thou praie anie other wight thy counsaile secret to kepe. But nathelesse if thou wene fikerly that the bewrayinge of thy counsaile to a person wol make thy condicion stonde in the better plichte, than shalt thou tell him thy counsaile in this wise. First thou shalt make no semblant whether The were leve pece or warre, or this or that, ne shewe him not thy will ne thine entent: For truste well that comenly these counsaillours ben flatterers, namely the counsaillours of grete lordes, for they enforce hem alway rather to speke pleasaunt wordes enclinyng to the lord's luste, than wordes that ben trew or profitable, and therefore men saye that the riche man hath felde gode counsaile, but if he have it of himselfe. And after that thou shalt consider thy frendes and thine enemies. And as touching thy frendes, thou shalt consider whiche of hem ben moste faithfull and most wise, and eldest, and moste approved in counsailling: and of hem shalt thou aske thou counsaile, as the case requireth.

I saye, that first ye shall call to your counsaile your frendes that ben trewe. For Salomon saith: that right as the herte of a man deliteth in favoure that is softe, righte so the counsaile of trewe frendes yeveth swetenesse to the soule. And he saith also, there maye nothing be likened to the trewe frende: For certes golde ne silver be not so muche worth as the gode will of a trewe frende. And also he saith that a trewe frende is a strong defence, who so that it findeth, certis he findyth a grete trefure. Than shall ye also consider if that your true frendes be discrete and wise: for the boke saith, aske alwaye thy counsaile of them that be wise. And by this same reson shall ye call to your counsaile your frendes that ben of age, suche as seme and ben expert in many thinges, and ben approved in counsailling. For the boke saith, that in olde menne is sapience, and in longe time the prudence. And Tullius saith, that grete thinges ben not aye accomplished by strength, ne by delivernesse of body, but by counsaile, by auctorite of persones, and by science: the whiche thre thinges ne ben not feble by age, but certes they enforce and encrece daye by daye; and than shall ye kepe this for a general rule. Firste shall ye call to your counsaile a fewe of your frendes that ben especiall. For Salomon saith, many frendes have thou, but amonge a thousande chose The one to be thy counsaillour: For al be it so that thou firste ne tell thy Counsaile but to a fewe, thou mayste afterwarde tell it to moe folke if it be nede. But loke alwaie that thy counsaillers have those condicions that I have sayd before, that is to saye, that thei be trew, wise, and of olde experience. And werke not alway in every nede by one Counsailler alone: for sometime behoveth it to be counsailed by manie. For Salomon saith, salvacion of thinges is where as there be many counsaillers.

Nowe have I tolde you of whiche folke ye shall be counsailed: nowe wol I tel you whiche counsaile ye ought to eschue. First ye shal eschue the counsailling of foles. Salomon saith, take no counsaile of a fole: for he woll counsaile but after his owne lust and his affection. The boke saith, that the proper tie of a fole is this: He troweth lightly harme of every man, and lightly troweth all bountie in himself. Thou shalt eschue the counsailling of all flatterers, which as enforcen hem rather to praie your person by flattery, than for to tell you the sothfastnesse of thinges. Wherefore, Tullius saith, amonge all the pestilence that ben in frendship, the gretist is flattery. And therefore it is more nede that thou eschue and drede flaterers, than any other peple. The boke saith, thou shalt rather fle fro the swete wordes of flaterers and praising, than fro the egre wordes of thy frendes that that saith The sothes. Salomon saith, that the wordes of a flaterer is a snare to catche Innocentis. He saith also; he that speketh to his frende wordes of flaterie and of plesauce, he setteth a net before his fete to catche him. And therefore Tullius saith. Encline not thine eres to flaterers; ne take no counsaile of flaterers. And Caton saith, Avise The well, and eschue the wordes of swetenesse and plesauce. And eke thou shalte eschue the counsaile of thine olde enemies that ben reconciled. The boke saith, that no wight returneth safelie into the grace of his olde enemy. And Ilope saith, ne trust not to hem, to which thou hast somtime had warre or enemite, ne tel hem not thy counsaile. And Senek telleth the cause why it maye not be, for he saith, there as grete fire hath longe time endured, that there dwelleth some vapoure of hete. And therefore saith Salomon, in thine olde foe truste thou never. For sikerly though thine enemy be reconciled, and make The signe of humilite, and loute to The with his hed, truste him never: for certes he maketh thilke fained humilite more for his profite then for any humilite, or for any love of thy person, bicause that he demeth to have victory over thy persone by such fained counsaunce, the whiche victorie he might not have by strite or warre. And Petrus Alphons saith, make no felowship with thine olde enemies, for if thou do hem bountie, they wollen pervert it to wickednesse. And eke thou must eschue the counsaile of hem that ben thy servautes, and beren The grete reverence: for peraventure they saie it more for drede than for love. And therefore saith a philosopher in this wise; There is no wight parfitly true to him that he dredeth. And Tullius saith, there is no might so grete of any emperour that long may endure, but he have love of the peple and drede. Ye shall eschue also the counsaile of folke that ben dronkelewe, for they ne can no counsaile hide. For Salomon saith, ther n'is no privite there as reigneth dronknesse. Ye shal have also in suspecte the counsaile of suche folke as counsaile you one thing prively, and counsaile you the contrarie openly. For Cassidorie saith, that it is a maner of sleight to hinder his enemy when he sheweth to done a thing openly, and werketh prively the contrary. Thou shalte have also in suspecte the counsaile of wicked folke, that be alwaie full of fraude. And David saith, that blisful is the manne that hath not followed the counsaile of shrewes. Thou shalt also eschue the counsaile of yonge folke, for ther counsaile is not ripe, as Salomon saith.

Nowe fir, sithens I have shewed you of suche folke as ye shal be counsaile of, and folowe it: nowe woll I teche you howe ye shall examine your counsaile. After the doctrine of Tullius, in examining of youre counsaillours, ye shall consider many thinges.

Firist thou shalt consider thilke thing that thou purposest, and upon that thinge that thou wolt have counsaile, that very trueth be said and conserved, this is to say, tel truely thy tale, for he that saith false, may not well be counsaile in that case, of whiche he lieth. After this thou shalte consider the thinges that acorden to that thou purposest for to doe by thy counsaillours, if reson acorde therto, and eke if thy might maie attaine therto: and if the more parte and the better parte of your counsaillours accorden therto or no. Than shalt thou consider what thing shall folowe of ther counsaile: As hate, pece, warre, grace, profite, or damage, and many other thinges: and in all thinges thou shalte chose the beste, and weyve all other thinges. Than shalt thou consider of what rote is engendred the matter of thy counsaile, and what fruite it may conceive and engender. Thou shalt eke consider all the causes, from whence they be sprong. And when thou hast examined thy counsaile, as I have said, and which party is the better and more profitable, and hast approved it by many wise folke and olde, than thou shalt consider, if thou maiste performe it and make of it a gode ende. For certes reson wol not that any man shall beginne a thinge, but if he might performe it as him ought: ne no wight shoude take upon him so hevie a charge, but that he might bere it. For the proverbe saith, he that to muche embraceth distraineth litell. And Caton saith, assaie to do suche thinges as thou hast power to done, lest the charge oppresse The to fore, that The behoveth weive thinge that thou hast begonne. And if so be that thou be in doute, whether thou maist perfourme a thing or none, chose rather for to suffer than to beginne. And Peter Alphons saith, if thou hast might to do a thing, of which thou must repent, it is better holde thy tonge still than for to speke. Than maiste thou understonde by stronger resons, that if thou hast power to perfourme a werke of whiche thou shalte repent The, than is it better thou suffer than begin. Wel saine they that defenden everie wight to assaie a thing of whiche he is in dout whether he maye performe it or none. And after when ye have examined your counsaile (as I have saide before) and knowe well that ye maye performe your emprise: conferme it than sadly till it be at an ende.

Nowe it is reson and time that I shewe you, whan and wherfore that ye maye chaunge your counsaile, withouten reprove. Sothly a man may chaunge his purpose and his counsaile, if the cause cese, or whan a new case betideth. For the lawe saith, that upon thinges that newly betideth, behoveth newe counsaile. And Seneke saith, if thy counsaile is come to the eres of thine enemies, chaunge thy counsaile. Thou maiste also chaunge thy counsaile, if so be thou finde that by error or by any other cause, harme or damage maie betide. Also if thy counsaile be dishonest, other els come of dishoneste cause, chaunge thy counsaile. For the lawe saith, that all behestes that be dishoneste, ne ben of no value: And eke, if so be that it be impossible or maye not gladly be perfourmed or kepte.

And take this for a generall rule, that every counsaile that is affermed stronglye, that it may not be chaunged for no condicion that maie betide, I say that ilke counsaile is wicked.

MElibeus, when he had herde the doctrine of his wyfe Dame Prudence, aunswerde in this wise. Dame (qð he) as yet unto this time ye han well taught me, as in governaile howe I shall governe me in the chosinge and in the withholdinge of my counsaile: But nowe should I saine that ye would condescende in especiall, howe that ye semeth by our counsaillours that we have chose in this present nede.

My lorde (qð she) I beseeche you in all humbleste, that ye wolt not wilfully replie ayenst my resons, ne distemper your hert though I speke thing that you displese, for God wot as in mine entente, I speke it as youre beste and for the beste for your honour and profit eke; and sothly I hope that your benigneite woll take it in pacience. And trusteth me well that your counsaile in this case ne shuld not (as to speke properly) be called a counsaile, but a mocion of a movinge of folke, in whiche counsaile ye have erred in many a sondrie wise.

Firist ye have erred in the assemblinge of your counsaillours: For firist ye should have cleped a fewe folke to your counsaile, and after ye might have shewed it to mo, if it had be nede. But ye have cleped to your counsaile a grete multitude of peple, ful chargeous chargeous and full noyous for to here. Also ye have erred, for there as ye shoulde have onelie cleped to your counsaile your trewe frendes, olde and wise, ye have cleped straunge folke, yonge folke, false flatterers, and enemies reconciled, and folke that done you reverence withouten love. And eke ye have erred, for ye have brought with you to your counsaile, ire, covetise, and hastinesse, the which thre thinges ben contrary to every gode counsaile, honest and profitable, the whiche thre thinges ye have not destroyed neither in your selfe ne in your counsaillours, as ye ought. Ye have erred also for ye have shewed to your counsaillours your talent and your affections to make warre anon, and for to doe vengeance, and they have espyde by your wordes, to what thing ye ben enclined: and therefore han they rather counsailed you to your talent, than to youre profite. Ye han erred eke, for it semeth that you suffiseth to have be counsailed by these counsaillours onely, and with litle avisement, where as in so hie and in so gret a nede, it had ben necessarie mo counsaillours, and more deliberacion to performe your emprise. Ye han erred also, for ye have not examined your counsaile in the forsayd maters, ne in dewe maner as the case requirith. Ye have erred also, for ye made no division bytwene your trew frendes and your fained counsaillours: ne ye have not knowen the will of your trew counsaillours and frendes, olde, and wise, but ye have caste all ther wordes in an hoche poche, and enclined your herte to the more parte and to the gretter nombre of foles than of wise men. And therefore the counsaillinges that ben at congregacions and multitudes of folke, there as men take more regarde to the nombre than to the sapience of persons, ye sene well, that in suche counsaillinges, foles han the maistrie. Melibe answerde and said ayen: I graunt well that I have erred, but there as thou haste told me here biforne, that he n'is not to blame that chaungeth his counsaile in certaine case, and for certaine and juste cause, I am all redye to chaunge my counsaillours righte as thou wouldest devise. The Proverbe saith, for to done sinne is mannish, but certes for to percever longe in sinne, is the werke of the Divell.

To this sentence answereth anon dame Prudence and saide: Examineth (qð she) well youre counsaile, and let us se whiche of 'hem hathe spoke most resonably, and taughte you beste counsaile. And for as muche as the examinacion is necessarie, lette us begin at Surgens and Phisiciens, that first spake of this mater. I say that Phisiciens and Surgiens have saide you in your counsaile discretly, as 'hem ought: and in ther speche saide full wisely, that to the office of 'hem appertaineth to donne to everye wighte honour and profite, and no wight to anoie, and after ther crafte to done grete diligence unto the cure of 'hem, which they have in ther governaunce. And sir, right as they have answerde wisely and discretly, righte so rede I that they ben hiely and soverainly guerdoned for ther noble speche, and eke for they shull more done ther ententise besinesse in the curation of your daughter; for al be it so they ben your frendes, therefore shullen ye not suffre, that they serve you for naught, but ye ought thereafter guerdon 'hem, and pay 'hem ther largesse. And as touching the propocicion, whiche the Phisiciens entreteden in this case, this is to faine, that in maladies is, that contrarie is warished by an other contrarie: I wold faine knowe howe ye understonde thilke texte, and what is your sentence. Certes (qð Melibeus) I understond it in this wise. Righte as they han done me a contrarie, so shoud I done 'hem an other, for righte as they han venged 'hem upon me, and done me wronge, right so wold I venge me upon 'hem, and done 'hem wrong, and than I cured one contrarye by an other.

Lo lo (qð dame Prudence) how lightly is every man enclined to his owne desire and his owne pleasure! Certes (qð she) the wordes of the Phisiciens ne shoulde not ben understond in that wise, for certes wickenesse is not contrary to wickednesse, ne vengeance is not contrarie to vengeance, ne wronge to wronge, but everye of 'hem encreseth and engendreth other. But certes the wordes of the Phisiciens shoud be understond in this wise, for gode and wickednesse ben two contraries: and pece and warre, vengeance, and suffraunce, discord, and acorde, and many other thinges: But certes wickednesse shal be warished with godenes, discord by acorde, warre by pece, and so forthe in other thinges. And therto acordeth saint Paule the Apostell in many places: He saith, ne yelde not harme for harme, ne wicked spech for wicked speche, but do wel to 'hem that don to The harme, and blesse them that saith The harme. And in many other places he amonisheth pece and accord. But now wol I speke of the counsaile which was iyeve unto you by menne of Lawe, and the wise folke, and olde folke, that sayden all by one acorde as ye herde beforne, that over all thinges ye shall done your besinesse and diligence to kepe your persone, and to warnstore your house: And they saide also, that in this case ye ought to werchen ful wisely and with grete deliberacion. And sir, as to the firste pointe, that toucheth the keping of your persone: ye shall understonde that he that hath warre, shal ever devoutly and mekely praien, biforne all thinges, that Jesu Christ of his mercy wold have him in his proteccion, and to be his soveraine helper at his nede: For certes in this worlde there n'is no wight that maie be counsailed ne kepte sufficiently without the keping of our lorde Jesu Christe. To this sentence acordeth the Prophet David that saith: if God ne kepte the Cite, in idel waketh he that it kepeth. Nowe sir, than shoud ye committe the kepinge of your person to your true frendes, that ben approved and iknow, and of them shoud ye aske helpe, your person to kepe. For Caton saith: If thou have nede of helpe aske it of thy frendes, for there n'is none so gode a Phisicien as thy true frende. And after this than shal ye kepe you fro all straunge folke, and fro liers, and have alwaie in suspecte ther companie. For Peter Alphons saith, Ne take no company by the waie of no straunge man, but if so be that thou haste knowen him of lenger time: And if so be that he fall into thy companie, paraventure withouten thyne assente and gode will, enquire than as subtilly as thou canste of his conversacion, and of his life biforne, and faine thy waie, saying thou wouldest go thiðer as thou wolte not go, and if he bere a spere, holde The on the righte side of him, and if he bere a swerde, holde The on the lefte side of him. And than shall ye kepe you wisely from all maner of suche people as I have saide you here before, and 'hem and ther counsaile eschue. And after this than shall ye kepe you, in suche maner, that for anye presumption of your bodely strength, that ye dispise not ne acounte not the might of your adversary so lite, that ye lette the kepinge of your person for your presumption, for every wise man dredeth his enemy. And Salomon saith: A very fole is he that of al hath drede: But certes he that thorowe hardenesse of his hert and through the hardinesse of himself, hath to grete presumption, him shal yvell betide. Than shall ye evermore encounterwaite embusmentes, and all espiaille. For Seneke saith: The wise man that dredeth harmes, eschueth harmes: He ne falleth in to no perilles, that perill eschueth. And all be it so that thou seme, that thou be in secret place, yet shalt shalt thou alwaie done diligence in keping of thy person, this is to saie, ne be not negligent to kepe thine owne person, not onely for thy gretest enemy, but also for thy leste enemy. Seneke saith, a man that is wel adviced, he dredeth his leste enemy. Ovide saith, that the litel wesele wol fle the grete Bulle and the wilde Herte. And the proverbe saith, that a litell thorne woll greve a King ful fore, and a litell hounde woll holde the wilde Bore. But nathelesse I say not thou shalt be so cowarde, that thou doute where as is no drede. The boke saith, that some men have grete luste to disceive, but yet they drede to be disceived. And kepe The fro the companie of skorners: For the boke saith, with skorners ne make no company, but fle ther wordes as venim.

Now as to the seconde point, where as youre wyfe Counsaylours counsayled you to warrestore your houe with grete diligence, I woulde sayne knowe howe ye understonde thilke wordes, and what is your sentence.

Melibeuus answerde and said, certes I understonde it in this wise, that I shall warrestore mine house with toures, suche as have castels and other maner edifices, and armure and archeries, betwene whiche thinges I may my person and my house so kepe and defende, that mine enemies shullen be in drede mine house to aproche. To this sentence answerde anon Prudence. Warnstoringe (q^d she) of hie toures and of hie edifices, is with grete costages and with grete travaile, and whan that they ben accomplished, yet ben they not worth a strawe, but if they ben defended with trew frendes, that ben olde and wise. And understondeth well, that the gretest and the strongest garison that riche men may have, as well to kepen ther person as ther godes is, that they be beloved with ther subiectes, and with ther neighbours. For thus saith Tullius, that there is a maner garison, that no man maie venquishe ne discomfite, and that is a lorde to be biloved of his citezins, and of his peple.

Nowe sir, as to the thirde point, where as your olde and wise Counsaylours saide, that ye ought not sodainly ne hastily procede in this nede, but that ye oughten purvayen and aparayle you in this case, with grete diligence and deliberacion. Verely I trowe that they saied right treuly and right soth. For Tullius saith: In every dede or thou begin it, apparaile The with grete diligence. Than saie I, in vengeance taking, in warre, in bataile, and in warnstoringe, or thou begin I rede that thou aparaille The therto, and do it with grete deliberacion, For Tullius saith: The longe apparailing tofore the bataile maketh short victorie. And Cassiodorus saith: The garison is stronger, whan it is longe time avised. But nowe let us speke of the Counsaile that was accorded by youre neighbours, such as done you reverence withouten love, your olde enemies reconciled, your flatterers, that counsailed you certaine thinges prively, and openly counsailed you the contrarie. The yonge folke also, that counsailed you to venge you, and to make warre anon. Certes sir, as I have saide byfore, ye have gretly erred to clepe suche maner of folke to your counsaile, whiche counsaylours ben inoughe reproved by the resons afore-said. But nathelesse let us now discende to the speciall. Ye shull first procede after the doctrine of Tullius. Certes the trouthe of this mater or of this counsaile, nedeth not diligently to enquire, for it is well wiste, which they ben that han don you this trespas and villanie, and howe many trespasours, and in what maner they have done all this wronge to you, and all this villany. And after this, then shull ye examine the seconde condicion, whiche Tullius addeth in this matter. For Tullius putteth a thing, whiche that he clepeth consenting: this is to saie, who ben thei, and whiche ben they, and howe manie, that consenten to thy counsaile in thy wilfulness, to done hastie vengeance. And let us consider also who ben they, and how manie they ben that consented to your adversaries. As to the first point, it is well known whiche folke they be, that consented to your hastie wilfulness. For truly all tho that counsaile you to maken sodaine warre, ne be not your frendes. Let se nowe whiche ben they that ye holden so gretly your frendes, as to your person: For albeit so that ye be mighty and riche, certes ye ben but alone: for truly ye ne have no childe but a doughter, ne ye have no brethren ne Cosins Germains, ne none other nie kinrede, wherefore your enemies should stinte to plete with you, ne to distroy your person. Ye know also that your riches mote be dispended in diverse parties. And whan that everie wight hath his parte, they wollen take but litell regarde to venge your deth. But thine enemies ben thre, and they have many Brethren, Children, Cosins, and other nie Kinrede: and though so were, that thou haddest slaine of 'hem two or thre, yet dwelleth there inowe to avenge ther deth, and to fle thy person. And though so be that your kinrede be more stedfaste and siker than the kinne of your adversaries, yet nathelesse your kinrede is but after kinrede, for they ben but litell sibbe to you, and the kinne of your enemies ben nie sibbe to 'hem. And certes as in that, ther condicion is better than is yours. Than lette us consider also of the counsaile of 'hem, that counsailed you to take sodaine vengeance, whether it acorde to reson or non: And certes ye knowe wel nay, for as by right and reson, there may no man take vengeance of no wight, but the judge that hath jurisdiction of it, when it is graunted him to take vengeance, hastie, or attemperatly as the Lawe requireth. And yet more over of thilke worde that Tullius clepeth consenting, thou shalt consider, if that thy mighte and thy power maye consente and suffice to thy wilfulness, and to thy counsaylours: And certes thou maiste well saie naye, for sikerlye as for to speke properly, we maie doe nothing but suche thinge as we maie done rightfully: and certes rightfully ye may take no vengeance, as of your own proper auctorite. Than maye ye se that your power ne consenteth not ne accordeth not with your wilfulness. Nowe lette us examine the thirde point, that Tullius clepeth consequence. Thou shalt undirstonde that the vengeance that thou purposeth for to take is consequent, and therof foloweth an other vengeance, perill, and warre, and other damages withouten numbere, of which we be not ware, as at this time. And as touchinge the fourthe point, that Tullius clepeth engendring thou shalt consider, that this wrong, whiche that is don to The, is engendred of the hate of thin enemies, and of the vengeance taking upon 'hem, that wolde engender another vengeance, and muchel sorow and wastinge of riches, as I sayde ere. Nowe sir, as touchinge the fift point, that Tully clepeth causes, whiche is the laste point, thou shalt undirstonde, that the wronge that thou haste received hath certayne causes, whiche that clerkes callen oriens, and efficiens, and causa longinqua, and causa propinqua, that is to saie, the ferre cause, and the nighe cause. The ferre cause is almightie God, that is cause of all thinges. The nere cause is thy thre enemies. The cause accidentall was hate. The cause materiall, ben the five woundes of thy doughter. The cause formalle, is the maner of their werking that brought laders and clambe in at thy windowes. The cause finall was

for to flea thy doughter. it letted not in as moche as in them was. But for to speke of the ferre cause, as to what ende thei shall come, or finally what shal betide of them in this case, ne can I not deme, but by coniecting and supposing: For we shall suppose that thei shall come to a wicked end, bicause that the boke of decrees saieth. Seld or with grete pain ben causes brought to a gode ende, whan thei ben badly begon.

Now sir, if men would aske me, why that God suffered menne to doe you this villanie? Truly I can not wel answere, as for no sothfastnesse. For the Apostle saieth, that the sciences, and the judgments of our Lorde God Almighty ben full depe, there maie no man comprehende ne ferche 'hem suffisantly. Nathelesse by certaine presumpcions and coniectinges, I hold and bileve, that God, whiche that is full of Justice and of rightounesse, hath suffered this betide, by just cause resonable.

Thy name is Melibee, this is to saie, a man that drinkith Honie. Thou haste dronke so moche honie of swete temporell richesse, and delices of honours of this worlde, that thou arte dronke, and hast forgotten Jesu Christe thy creatour: Thou ne hast not doen to him soche honour and reverence as The ought, ne thou ne hast not taken kepe to the wordes of Ovide, that saieth, Under the Honie of the godes of thy bodie, is hid the venime that slaeth thy soule.

And Salomon saieth: if it so be that thou hast found honie, etc of the same honie, that that suffiseth: for if so be that thou etc of the same honie out of mesure, thou shalt spewe, and also be neddy and pore. And paraventure almightie God Jesu Christ hath The in dispite, and hath tourned awaie fro The his face, and his eres of misericorde and mercie. And also he hath suffred and give licence, that thou thus shouldest be punished and chastised in the maner that thou hast trespassed and offended. Thou haste doen sinne against our Lorde Christe, for certes the thre enemies of mankinde, that is to saie: the fleshe, the fend, and the worlde, thou hast suffred 'hem entre into thine herte wilfully, by the windowes of thy bodie, and hast not defended thy self sufficiently ayenst their assautes, and their temptacions, so that thei have wounded thy soul in five places, this is to saie: the dedly sinnes that ben entered into thy herte by thy five wittes. And in the same maner our Lorde Christ hath would and suffred, that thy thre enemies ben entered into thy hous, by the windowes, and have wounded thy doughter in the forsaied maner.

Truely (q^d Melibee) I se wel that ye enforce you moche by wordes to overcome me, in soche maner, that I shall not venge me on mine enemies, shewing me the perilles and the evils that might fall of this vengeance, but who so would consider in all vengeance, the perilles and evils that might sue of vengeance taking, a man would never take vengeance, and that were harme: for by the vengeance taking, ben the wicked men discevered fro the gode men. And thei that have will to doe wickednesse, restrain their wicked purpose, whan thei se the punishing and chastising of the trespassours: and yet saie I more that right as a singuler persone sinneth, in taking vengeance of an other man, right so sinneth the judge, if he do no vengeance of 'hem that have deserved. For Seneke saieth thus: That maister he saith is gode, that preveth shrewes. And as Cassiodor saieth: A man dredeth to doe outrages, whan he wote and knoweth, that it displeth to the Judges and Soveraines. And an other saieth: the judge that dredeth to doe right, maketh men shrewes. And saint Poule the Apostle saieth in his Epistle, whan he writeth unto the Romanes, that the Judge bere not the spere without cause, but thei bere it to punishe the shrewes and misdoers, and for to defende the gode menne.

If ye woll than take vengeance of your enemies, ye shall retourne and have your recourse to the Judge, that hath the jurisdiction upon 'hem, and he shall punish 'hem, as the lawe asketh and requieth.

A ha, saied Melibee, this vengeance liketh me nothing, I bethinke me now, and take hede how that fortune hath nourished me fro my childehode, and hath holpe me to passe many a strong paas: Now I would assaie her, trowing with Godd's help, that she shall helpe me my shame for to avenge.

Truely saied Prudence, if ye woll werke by my counsaile, ye shall not assaie fortune by no waie: ne ye shall not lene or bowe unto her, after the worde of Senek; for thinges that ben foolishly doen, and that ben doen in hope of fortune, shall never come to gode ende. And as the same Seneke saith: the more clere and the more shining that fortune is, the more brittle and the soner broke she is. Trusteth not in her, for she is not stedfaste ne stable. For whan thou trowest to be moste sure and stedfast of her helpe, she woll faile and disceive The. And where as ye saie, that fortune hath nourished you fro your childehode, I say that in so moche ye shall the lesse trust in her, and in her wit. For Seneke saith: what man that is nourished by fortune, she maketh him a grete sole. Now than sith ye desire and aske vengeance, and the vengeance that is don after the lawe, and bfore the judge, ne liketh you not, and the vengeance that is doen in hope of fortune, is perillous and uncertaine, than have ye none other remedie, but for to have your recourse unto the soverain judge, that vengeth al villanies and wronges. And he shal venge you, after that himself witnesseth, where as he saith: leve the vengeance to me, and I shall doe it.

Melibee answerde, if I ne venge me of the villanie, that men have doen to me, I sommon or warne 'hem, that have doen to me that villanie, and all other, to doe me an other villanie. For it is written: if thou take no vengeance of an old villanie, thou summonest thine adversaries, to doe The a newe villanie: and also for my sufferance, men would doe me so moche villanie, that I might neither bere it ne sustaine it, and so should I be put and holden over lowe. For men saie, in mikell suffring shall many thinges fall unto The, whiche thou shalt not mowe suffer.

Certes (q^d Prudence) I graunt you, that over moche suffraunce is not gode, but yet ne foloweth it not therof, that every persone, to whom men doe villanie, should take of it vengeance: for that appertaineth and longeth all onely to Judges, for thei should venge the villanies and injuries: And therefore those two authorities, that ye have saied afore, ben onely understonde in the Judges: For whan thei suffer over moche the wronges and villanies to be doen, without punishmente, thei sommon not a man all onely for to doe newe wronges, but thei commaunde it. Also a wise man saith, that the Judge that correcteth not the sinner, commaundeth and biddeth him do sinne. And the Judges and Soveraines, might in their londe so moche suffre of the shrewes and misdoers, that they should by soche suffrance, by processe time, waxe of soche power and might, that thei should put out the Judges and the Soveraines from their places, and at laste, make 'hem lese their Lordshippes.

But

But let us now suppose, that ye have leve to venge you: I saie ye be not of might and power, as now to venge you, for if ye wold make comparison unto the might of your adversaries, ye shuld finde in many thinges, that I have shewed your er this, that their condicion is better than yours, and therefore saie I, that it is gode as now, that ye suffer and be pacient.

Ferthermore, ye knowe wel that after the common lawe, it is a wodenesse, a manne to strive with a stronger, or a more mightie man than he is himself, and for to strive with a man of even strength, that is to saie, with as strong a manne as he is, it is perill: and for to strive with a weker man, it is folie, and therefore shoud a manne flie striving, as mikell as he might. For Salomon saith: It is a grete worship to a man, to kepe fro noise and strif; and if it so befall and hap, that a man of greter might and strength than thou art, doe The grevaunce: studie and busie The rather to still the same grevaunce, than for to venge The. For Seneke saith, that he putteth him in grete perill, that striveth with a greter manne than he is himself. And Caton saith, if a manne of higher estate or degre, or more mightie than thou, do The anoy or grevaunce, suffer him: for he that ones hath greved The, maie an other time releve The and helpe The. Yet sette I case ye have licence for to venge you, I saie that there ben full many thinges, that shall restrain you of vengeance taking, and make you for to encline to suffre, and for to have pacience in the wronges that have ben doen to you. First and formest, if ye wold consider the fautes that ben in your own persone, for whiche fautes God hath suffred you have this tribulacion, as I have saied to you here before. For the Poete saith, that we ought paciently take the tribulacions that come to us, whan that we thinke and consider, that we have deserved to have them. And saint Gregorie saith, that whan a manne considereth well the number of his defautes and of his sinnes, the paines and the tribulacions, that he suffereth, seme the lesse unto him. And in as moche as him thinketh his sinnes, more hevie and grievous, in so moche semeth his paine the lighter and the esier unto him. Also ye owe to encline and bowe your herte, to take the pacience of our Lorde Jesu Christ, as saith saint Peter in his Epistles. Jesu Christ he saith hath suffred for us, and yeven ensample to every man to folowe and sue him, for he did never sinne ne never came there a villainous worde out of his mouth. Whan men cursed him, he cursed 'hem not. And whan men bete him, he menaced hem not. Also the grete pacience, which Sainctes, that ben in Paradise, have had in tribulacion that thei have suffred, without ther deferte or gilte, ought moche stirre you to pacience. Ferthermore, ye shul enforce you to have pacience, considering that the tribulacions of this worlde but little while endure, and sone passen ben and gone, and the joye that a man seketh to have by pacience in tribulacions is perdurable, after that the Apostle saith in his Epistle, The joye of God he saith, is perdurable, that is to saie, everlasting. Also troweth and bileveth stedfastly, that he is not well norished and well taught, that con not have pacience, or wol not receive pacience. For Salomon saith, that the doctrine and the witte of a man, is knownen by pacience. And in an other place he saith, that he that is pacient, governeth him by grete prudence.

And the same Salomon saith, The angrie and wrothefull man maketh noises, and the pacient man attempreth and stilleth 'hem. He saith also, it is more worth to be pacient than to be right strong. And he that maie have the Lordship of his own herte;

is more to praise, than he that by his force or strengthe taketh grete citees. And therefore saith saint James in his Epistle, that pacience is a grete vertue of perfeccion.

Certes (qð Melibee) I graunte you Dame Prudence, that pacience is a grete vertue of perfeccion, but every manne maie not have the perfeccion that ye seke, ne I am not of the number of right perfite men. For mine herte maie never be in pece, unto the time it be avenged. And albeit so that it was grete perill to mine enemies, to doe me a villanie, in taking vengeance upon me, yet toke thei no hede of the perille, but fulfilled ther wicked will and ther corage: and therefore me thinketh men ought not to repreve me, though I put me in a litle perill, for to avenge me, and though I doe a grete excessse; that is to saie: that I venge one outrage by an other.

Ah (qð dame Prudence) ye saie your will as you liketh: but in no case of the world, a man shoud not do outrage ne excessse, for to venge him. For Cassiodor saith, that as evill doeth he, that vengeth him by outrage; as he that doeth the outrage. And therfore ye shall venge you after the order of right, that is to saie, by the Lawe, and not by excessse, ne by outrage. And also if you wol venge you of the outrage of your adversaries, in other maner than right commaundeth, ye sinne. And therfore saith Seneke: that a man shal never venge shreudnesse by shreudnesse. And if ye saie that right asketh to defende violence, and fighting by fighting: certes ye saie soth, whan the defence is doen without intervall, or without tarying or delaie, for to defende him, and not for to venge him. And it behoveth that a man put soch attemperaunce in his defence, that men have no cause ne matter to repreve him, that defendeth him of outrage and excessse, for els were it againe reson. Parde ye knowe well, that ye make no defence as now, for to defende you, but for to venge you: and so sheweth it, that ye have no will to doe your dede attemperately, and therfore me thinketh that pacience is gode. For Salomon saith, that he that is not pacient, shall have grete harme.

Certes saied Melibe I graunte you, that whan a man is impaciente and wrothe, of that that toucheth him not, and that appertaineth not unto him, though it harme him it is no wonder. For the lawe saith, that he is culpable, that entremetleth or medleth with soche thinges, as appertaineth not unto him. And Salomon saith, that he that entremetleth of the noise or strife of an other manne, is like to him that taketh a straunge hounde by the eres: For right as he, that taketh a straunge hounde by the eres, is other while bitten by the hond, right so in the same wise, it is reson that he have harme, that by his impaciente, medleth him of the noise of an other man, where as it appertaineth not unto him. But ye knowe well that this dede, that is to saie, my grief and my disese, toucheth me right nigh. And therfore though I be wrothe and impatient, it is no mervaille: and saving your grace, I cannot se that it might gretely harme me, though I toke vengeance, for I am richer and more mightie than mine enemies be: And well knowe ye that by money and by having grete possessions, ben all thinges of this worlde governed. And Salomon saith, all these thinges obei to money.

Whan Prudence had herd her husbonde, avaunte him of his richesse and money, dispraising the power of his adversaries, she spake and saied in this wise. Certes dere sir, I graunte you that ye be riche and mightie, and that the richesse is gode to them that have have well gotten 'hem, and that well can use them. For righte as the bodie of a manne maie not live without the soule, no more maie it live without the temporell godes, and by richesse maie a manne get him grete frendes. And therefore saieth Pamphillus: If a Nerthes doughter he saieth be riche, she maie chese of a thousande menne, whiche she wolle take to her husbonde: for of a thousande one wolle not forsake her ne refuse her. And this Pamphillus saieth also: if thou be right happie, that is to saie, if thou be riche, thou shalte finde a grete number of fellowes and frendes. And if thy fortune chaunge, farewell frendship and felowship, for thou shalte be alone without any companie, but if it be the companie of pore folke. And yet saieth this Pamphillus more over, that thei that ben bonde and thrall of linage, shal be made worthy and noble by the riches. And right so as by the riches there come many gode-nesses, right so by povertie come there many harmes and evilles, for grete povertie constraineth a manne to doe many evilles. And therefore calleth Cassiodor povertie the mother of ruine, that is to saie, the mother of overthrowing or of falling doune. And therefore saieth Peter Alfoune: One of the gretest adversities of this world, is whan a fre man by kinde or of birth, is constrained by povertie, to ete the almose of hisemie. And the same saieth Innocente, in one of his bokes: As saith, that sorowfull and mishap is the condicion of a pore begger, for if he aske not his mete, he dieth for hunger, and if he aske he dieth for shame: and algates necessite constraineth him to aske. And therefore saieth Salomon, that better is to die, than for to have soche povertie. And as the same Salomon saieth: Better is to die of bitter deth, than for to live in soche wise. By these resons that I have saied unto you, and by many other resons that I could saie, I graunt you that riches ben gode, to 'hem that 'hem well getten, and to 'hem that well usen tho riches: And therefore wolle I shewe you how ye shall behave you in gathering of riches, and in what maner she shullen use 'hem.

Firste, ye shall gette 'hem withouten gret desire, by gode leiser, sokingly and not over hastily; for a manne that is to desiring to get richesse, habandoneth him firste to theft and to all other evilles. And therefore saieth Salomon: he that hasteth him to busily to wexe riche, he shall be none innocente. He saieth also, that the richesse that hastily cometh to a manne, sone and lightly goeth and passeth from a manne, but that richesse that cometh little and little, wexeth alwaie and multiplieth. And sir, ye shall get richesse by your wit and by your travaile, unto your profite, and that without wrong or harme doing to any other persone. For the Lawe saieth, there maketh no man him self riche, if he doe harme to an other wight, this is to saie: that nature defendeth and forbiddeth by righte, that no manne make himself riche, unto the harme of an other person. And Tullius saith that no sorowe ne no drede of deth, ne nothing that maie fall unto a man, is so moche ayenst nature, as a man to encrece his own profite. to the harme of an other manne. And though the grete and mightie menne gette riches more lightly than thou, yet shalte thou not be idle, ne slowe to do thy profite, for thou shalte in all wise flie idleness. For Salomon saith, that idleness techeth a man to doe many evils. And the same Salomon saieth, that he that travaileth and busieth him to tilthe his londe, shal ete bred: but he that is idell, and casteth him to no business ne occupacion, shall fall into povertie, and die for hunger. And he that is idell and slowe, can never find covenable time for to doe his profite. For there is a versefour saith, that the idell manne excuseth him in Winter, bicause of the grete cold, and in Sommer bicause of the hete. For these causes saith Caton, waketh and encline you not over moche for to slepe, for over moche rest norisheth and causeth many vices. And therefore saieth sainct Hierom, doe some gode dedes, that the devil, whiche is our enemy, ne finde you not unoccupied, for the devil ne taketh not lightly unto his working, soche as he findeth occupied in gode werkes.

Than thus, in getting riches ye must flie idleness. And afterwarde ye shall use the riches, whiche ye have gotte by your wit and by your travaile, in soche maner, that men hold you not to scarce, ne to sparing, ne sole large, that is to saie, over large a spender: for right as men blame an avaricious man, bicause of his scarfitie and chincherie, in the same wise is he to blame, that spendeth over largely. And therefore saith Caton: use (saith he) the riches that thou hast gotten in soche maner, that men maie have no matter, ne cause to call The nother wretche ne chinche: For it is a grete shame to a manne, to have a pore herte, and a riche purse. He saieth also, the godes that thou hast gotte, use them by mesure, that is to saie, spende mesurably, for thei that folishly waste and dispende the godes that thei have, whan thei have no more proper of ther own, than thei shape 'hem to take the godes of an other manne. I saie than that ye shall nie avarice, using your riches in soche maner, that men saie not that your richesse ben buried, but that ye have 'hem in your might, and in your welding. For a wise man reproveth the avaricious man, and saith thus in these verses two. Whereto and why burieth a manne his godes by his gret avarice, and knoweth well, that nedes he must die, for deth is the ende of every man, as in this present life? And for what cause or encheson joineth he him, or knitteth he him so faste unto his godes, that all his wittes mowe not discever him, ne departe him fro his godes, and knoweth well, or ought to knowe, that whan he is ded, he shall nothing bere with him out of this worlde.

And therefore saith sainct Augustin, that the avaricious manne is likened unto helle, that the more it swalloweth, the more desire it hath to swalowe and devoure. And as wel as ye would eschue to be called an avaricious manne or chinche, as wel should ye kepe and governe you in soche a wise, that menne call you not sole large. Therefore saith Tullius: The godes of thine hous ne should not be hid ne kept so close, but that thei might be opened by pite and debonaire, that is to saie to yeve 'hem parte that have grete nede. Ne thy godes should not be so open, to be every mann's godes. Afterwarde in getting of your riches, and in using 'hem, ye shall alwaie have three things in your herte, that is to saie, our Lorde God, conscience, and gode name. First, ye shall have God in your herte, and for no richesse ye shuld doe any thing, whiche maie in any maner displese GOD your creatour and maker. For after the worde of Salomon, it is better to have a little gode with the love of GOD, than to have moche gode and treasure, and lese the love of his Lorde GOD. And the Prophete saith, that better it is to be a gode manne, and have little gode and treasure, than to be holden a shrewe, and have grete richesse. And yet I saie ferthermore, that ye should alwaie doe your business to gette your richesse, so that ye get 'hem with gode conscience. And the Apostle saith, that there n'is thing in this world, of whiche we should have so grete joye, as whan our conscience bereth us gode witnesse. And the Wise manne saith: That the substance of a manne is full gode, whan sinne is not in mann's conscience. Afterwarde in getting of

of your richesses, and in using of 'hem ye must have grete busynesse, and grete diligence, that your gode name be alwaie kept and conserved. For Salomon saith, that better it is, and more it availeth a man to have a gode name, than for to have grete richesses: And therefore he saith in an other place, Doe grete diligence saith Salomon, in keping of thy frendes, and of thy gode name, for it shall lengir abide with The, than any tresoure, be it never so precious. And certes he should not be called a grete gentleman, that after God and gode conscience, all thinges left, ne doeth his diligence and busynesse, to kepe his gode name. And Cassiodor saith, that is a signe of a gentle herte, whan a manne loveth and desireth to have a gode name. And therefore saith saint Augustin, that there ben two thinges that ben right necessarie and also nedeful: and that is gode conscience, and gode lose, that is to saie: gode conscience to thine owne persone inwarde, and gode lose for thy neighbour outwarde. And he that trusteth hym so moche in his gode conscience, that he despiseth and setteth at nought his gode name or lose, and recketh not though he kepe not his gode name, n'is but a cruell churle.

Sir, now have I shewed you how ye shuld doe in getting richesses, and how ye should use 'hem: And I se well that for the trust that ye have in your richesses, ye wol move warre and battaile; I counsaile you that ye begin no warre, in truste of your richesses, for thei ne suffise not warres to maintain. And therefore saith a Philosopher: That manne that desireth and would algates have warre, shal never have suffisaunce: for the richer that he is, the greter diffences must he make, if he woll have worship and victorie. And Salomon saith, that the grete richesses that a man hath, the more dispendours he hath. And therefore, sir, albeit so that for your riches, ye may have moche folke, yet behoveth it not, ne it is not gode to begin warre, where as ye maie in other manner have pece, unto your worship and profite: For the victories in batailles, that ben in this worlde, lieth not in grete number or multitude of peple, ne in the vertue of man, but it lieth in the will, and in the honde of our Lorde God Almightye. And therefore Judas Machabeus, whiche was God's knight, whan he should fight against his adversarie, that had a greter number, and a greter multitude of folke, and stronger than was his peple of Machabe, yet he recomforted his little companie, and saied right in this wise: Al so lightly, said he, maie our Lorde God Almightye yeve victorie to a fewe folke, as to many folke, for the victorie of a battaile commeth not by the grete number of peple, but it commeth from our Lorde GOD of heven. And dere sir, for as moche as there is no manne certaine, if it be worthie that God yeve him victorie or not, after that Salomon saith, therefore every manne should gretely drede warres to begin: and bicause that in batailles fall many perills, and happeth other while, that as sone is the grete manne slaine, as the little manne. And as it is written in the seconde boke of Kinges: The dedes of batailles ben adventurous, and nothing certain, for as lightly is one hurte with a Spere, as an other: and for there is grete peril in warre, therefore should a man fle and eschue warre in as moche as a manne maie godlye. For Salomon saith, he that loveth perille, shall fall in perill.

After that Dame Prudence had spoken in this manner, Melibe answerde and saied. I se well dame Prudence, that by your faire wordes and youre resons, that ye have shewed me, that the warre liketh you nothing, but I have not yet herd your counsaile, howe I shall doe in this nede.

Certes (saied she) I counsaile you that ye accorde

with your adversaries, and that ye have pece with 'hem. For saint James saith in his Epistle: That by concorde and pece, small riches wexe grete: and by debate and discorde, riches decaie. And ye knowe well, that one of the gretest and most soveraine thing that is in this worlde, is unite and pece. And therefore saith our Lorde Jesu Christe to his Apostles, in this wise: well happy ben thei, that love and purchase pece, for thei be called the childern of God. Ah, saied Melibe, now se I well, that ye love not mine honour ne my worship. Ye knowe well that mine adversaries have begon this debate and brige by their outrage. And ye se well that thei ne require ne praie me of pece, ne thei aske not to be reconciled. Woll ye than that I go meke me, and obeye me to 'hem, and crye 'hem mercie? Forsothe that were not my worship. For right as menne saie, over grete humblenes engendreth dispraisinge, so faareth it by to grete humilite or mekenesse.

Than began dame Prudence to make semblaunte of wrathe, and saied: Certes sir, save your grace, I love your honour and profite, as I doe mine owne, and ever have doe: ye ne none other never see the contrary. And yet, if I had saied, that ye should have purchased pece and reconciliacion, I ne had moche mistake me, ne saied amisse. For the Wise man saith: the discencion beginneth by an other man, and the reconciling beginneth by thy self. And the Prophete saith: fle shrewdnes and doe gode-nesse, seke pece and folowe it, in as moche as in The is. Yet saie I not, that ye should rather pursue to your adversaries for pece, than thei should to you: for I knowe well that ye ben so hard herted, that ye wol do nothing for me. And Salomon saith: he that hath over harde an herte, he at last shall mishappe or misbetide.

Whan Melibe had herd dame Prudence make semblaunte of wrathe, he saied in this wise. Dame I praie you, that ye be not displefed of thing that I saie, for ye know wel that I am angrie and wrothe, and that is no wonder: and thei that ben wrothe wot not well what thei doe, ne what thei saie. Therefore the Prophete saith: that troubled eyen have no clere sight. But saie and counsaile me as you liketh, for I am redy to doe right as ye woll desire: And if ye repreve me of my folie, I am the more holden to love and praise you. For Salomon saith, that he that repreveth him that doeth folie, he shall finde greter grace, than he that disceiveth hym by swete wordes.

Than saied Dame Prudence, I make no semblaunt of wrath ne of anger, but for your grete profite, for Salomon saith: he is more worth, that repreveth or chideth a sole for his folie, shewing him semblaunt of wrath, than he that supporteth him and praiseth him in his misdoynge, and laugheth at his folie. And this same Salomon saith afterwarde: That by the sorowfull visage of a manne, that is to saye, by the sorie and hevvy countenance of a manne, the sole correcteth and amendeth himselfe.

Than saied Melibe, I shall not conne aunswere unto so manie faire resons as ye put to me and shewe: saye shortly your will and your counsaile, and I am al redy to performe and fulfill it.

Than Dame Prudence discovered all her will unto him and saied. I counsaile you (saied she) above all thinges, that ye make pece bitwene God and you, and be reconciled unto him and to his grace, for as I have saide you here before, God hath suffred you to have this tribulacion and disese for your sinnes: and if ye do as I saye you, God woll sende youre adversaries unto you, and make 'hem fall at your fete, redy to do your will and your commandement. For Salomon saith, whan the condicion of man is ple-

saunt and liking to God, he chaungeth the hertes of the man's adversaries, and constraineth hem to beseeche him of pece and of grace. And I pray you let me speke with your adversaries prively, for thy shall not knowe that it be of your wil or your assent: And than whan I knowe theyr will and their entent, I may counsaile you the more surely.

Dame saide Melibe, doeth your will and your liking, for I put me holly in your disposicion and ordinaunce.

Than dame Prudence, when she sawe the gode will of her husbonde, bythoughte here and toke advise in her selfe, thinking howe she mighte bringe this nede unto a gode conclusion and to a gode ende: And whan she sawe her time, she sente for these adversaries to come unto her in a prive place. And shewed wisely unto hem the grete godes that come of pece, and the grete harmes and perils that ben in warre, and said to hem in a godelye maner: how that hem ought to have grete repentaunce of the injury and wrong, that they had done to Melibeus her lord, and unto her and to her doughter.

And whan they herd the godely wordes of Dame Prudence, they were so supprised and ravished, and had so gret joye of her, that wonder was to tell.

Ah, lady (saide they) ye have shewed unto us the blissinge of swetnesse after the saying of David the Prophet. For the reconfiling whiche we be not worthy to have in no manere. But we ought require it with grete contricion and humilite, that ye of your godenesse have presented unto us. Now se we wel, that the science and conning of Salomon is full prewe, for he saith: That swete wordes multiply and encresse frendes, and maketh shrewes to be debonaire and meke.

Certes (saide they) we put our dede and all our matter and cause all holly in your gode will, and ben redy to obey at the commaundement of our lorde Melibeus. And therefore dere and benigne lady, we praie and beseeche you, as mekely as we can and maie, that it like unto your grete godenesse, to fulfill in dede your godely wordes. For we consider and knowe, that we have offended and greved our Lorde Melibeus out of mesure: so ferforthe that we be nat of power to make him amendes. And therefore we oblige and binde us and our frendes, for to doe all at his will and commaundemente: but paraventure he hath suche hevynesse, and suche wrathe to us warde, bycause of our offence, that he woll enjoyne us suche a paine, as we mowe not bere ne sustayne. And therefore noble lady, we beseeche your womanly pite, to take suche advisement in this nede, that we ne oure frendes be not disherited ne distroied, through our foly.

Certes (saide Prudence) it is an harde thing and right perillous, that a man put him all utterly in arbitracion and judgement, and in the might and power of his enemye: For Salomon saith: levethe me, and yeven credence to that I shal say: Ne yeveth never the power ne governaunce of thy godes, to thy son, to thy wife, to thy frende, ne to thy brother: ne yeve thou never mighte ne maystrye over thy body while thou livest. Nowe, sith he defendeth that a man should nat yeve to his brother ne to his frende, the might of his bodye; By a stronger reson he defendeth and forbiddeth a manne to yeve himselfe to his enemye. And nathelless I counsaile you that ye mistrust nat my lorde: for I wote well and know verely, that he is debonaire and meke, large, curteis, and nothing desirous ne covitous of godes riches. For there is nothing in this worlde that he desireth, save onely worship and honoure. Ferthermore I knowe, and am right sure, that he shall nothings doe in this nede, without my counsaile: and I shall so werke in this case, that by the grace of oure Lorde God, ye shall be reconfild unto us.

Than saide they with one voice, worshipful lady, we put us and our godes all fully in your will and disposicion, and ben redy to come, what daie that it liketh unto your noblesse to limite us or assine us, for to make our obligacion and bonde, as stronge as it liketh unto your godenesse, that we mowe fulfill the wil of you and of my lorde Melibe.

Whan dame Prudence had herd the answere of these men, she bad hem goe ayen prively and she returned to her lord Melibe, and tolde him howe she founde his adversaries full repentaunt, knowleging full lowly ther sinnes and trespas, and how thei were redy to suffer all paine, requiring and praying him of mercy and pite.

Than saide Melibe, he is well worthy to have pardon and foryeveness of his sinne, that excuseth not his sinne, but knowlegeth and repenteth him, asking indulgence. For Seneke saith, there is the remission and foryevenesse, where as the confession is: for confession is neighbour to innocence. And therefore I assent and confirme me to have pece, but it is gode that we doe nought without the assent and wil of our frendes.

Than was Prudence right gladde and joyfull, and saide: Certes sir, ye have well and godely answered: for righte as by the counsaile, assente, and helpe of your frendes, ye have be steered to venge you and make war: Right so, without ther counsaile shall ye not accorde you, ne have pece with your adversaries. For the lawe saith: there is nothing so gode, by waie of kinde, as a thing to be unbounde by him that it was ibounde.

Than dame Prudence, without delay or tarying, sent anon her messenger, for her kinsfolke and her olde frendes, whiche that were trewe and wise: and tolde hem by order, in the presence of Melibe, all the mater, as it is above expressed and declared. And praied hem that they would saye their advise and counsaile, what best were to do in this nede. And when Melibeus frendes had taken ther advise and deliberacion of the forsaide mater, and had examined it by grete besinesse and diligence, thei yave ful counsaile for to have pece and reste, and that Melibe should receive with gode hert his adversaries, to foryevenesse and mercy.

And when dame Prudence had herde th' assent of her lorde Melibe, and the counsaile of his frendes accorde with her will and her entencion, she was wonderfly glad in her hert, and saide. There is an olde Proverbe (saide she) That the godenesse that thou maiste doe this daie, doe it, and abide it not, ne delaye it nat till the nexte daie. And therefore I counsaile, that ye sende your messengers, suche as be discrete and wise, unto your adversaries: telling hem on your behalfe, that if they woll trete of pece and accorde, that they shape hem without delay or tarying, to come unto us: whiche thinge perfourmed was in dede. And when these trespallours, and repenting folke of ther folies, that is to saye, the adversaries of Melibeus, had herde what these messengers saide unto hem, they were right gladde and joyfull, and answered full mekely and benignely, yeldinge grace and thanks to ther lorde, Melibe, and to all his companie: and shope hem without delaye to go with the messengers, and obeyed the commaundement of ther lorde Melibeus. And right anon they toke ther waye to the court of Melibe, and toke with hem some of ther true frendes, to make faith for hem, and for to be ther borowes: And whan they were comen to the presence of Melibe, he said to hem these wordes. It stondeth thus, saide Melibe, and sothe it is, that causelesse and without skill and refon, ye have done gret injuries and wronges to me and my wife Prudence, and to my doughter also, for ye have entred into my house by violence, and have don such outrage, that all men know wel that ye have deserved dethe. And therefore woll I knowe and wete of you, whether ye woll put the punishing and the chastising and the vengeance of this outrage, in the will of me and my wife, or ye wol not.

Then the wisest of 'hem thre answerde for 'hem al, and said. Sir (said he) we knowe well that we ben unworthy to come to the courte of so gret a lorde and so worthy as ye be, for we have so gretly mistaken us, and have offended and agilted in such wise againe your high lordeship, that truly we have deserved the dethe, but yet for the grete godenesse and debonaire, that all the worlde witnesseth of your person, we submitte us to the excellence and benigne of your gracious lordeshippe, and ben redy to obey to all your commaundementes, beseeching you, that of your merciable pite ye woll consider our grete repentaunce, and lowe submission, and graunte us foryevenesse of our outragious trespassse and offence: For wel we knowe, that your liberall grace and mercye stretche ferther in to the godenesse, than doen our outragious giltes and trespassses into the wickednesse. Al be it that curfildy and dampnably we have agilted against your high lorship.

THan Melibe toke 'hem up fro the ground full benignely, and received ther obligacions and ther bondes, by ther othes upon ther pledges and borowes, and assyned 'hem a certayne day to returne unto his court for to receyve and accept sentence and judgement, that Melibeus would commaunde to be don on 'hem, by the causes asorfaid, which thinges ordained, every man returned to his house.

And when dame Prudence sawe her time, she fained and asked her lorde Melibe, what vengeance he thought take on his adversaries.

To which Melibe answerde, and said: Certes (said he), I thinke and purpose me fully to disherite 'hem of all that ever they have, and for to put them in exile for ever.

Certes said dame Prudence, this were a cruell sentence, and muche ayenst refon. For ye be riche inough, and have no nede of other meanes riches. And ye might lightly in this wise gete you a covetous name, whiche is a vicious thing, and ought be eschewed, of every gode manne. For after the saying of the Apostel, Covetise is rote of all harmes. And therefore it were better to you lese so muche gode of your owne, than for to take of their gode in this manner. For better it is to lese gode with worship, than to winne gode with villane and shame. And every man ought to do his diligence and his businesse, to gete him a gode name. And yet shall he not only busy him in kepinge his gode name, but he shall also enforce him alwaie to doe some thinge, by whiche he maye renewe his gode name. For it is written, that the olde gode lose of a manne or gode name, is sone gon and paste, whan it is not renewed. And as touchinge, that ye saie that ye woll exile your adversaries: that thinketh me muche ayenst refon, and out of mesure, considring the power, that they have yeve you upon them self. And it is writen: that he is worthy to lose his privilege, that misuleth the mighte and power that is given him. And I sette case, ye might enjoyne 'hem that paine by righte and lawe, whiche I trowe ye maie not doe: I saie, ye might not put it to execution, for peraventure than it were like to turne to the warre, as it was before. And therefore if ye woll that men do you obeisaunce, ye must demene you more courteisly, that is to saye: ye must yeve more esy sentences and judgement. For it is written: he that most curteisly commaundeth, to him men most obey. And therefore I praye you, that in this necessite and in this nede, ye caste ye to overcome your herte. For as Senek saith: he that overcometh his hert, overcometh twife. And Tully saith: there is nothing so commendable in a grete lord, as when he is debonaire and meke, and apeseth him lightly. And I pray you that ye wol now forbere to do vengeance in suche a maner, that your gode name maie be kept and conserved, and that men maie have cause and matter to praise you of pite and mercy: and that ye have no cause to repent you of thing that is done. For Senek saith: he overcometh in an yvell manere, that repenteth him of his victorie. Wherefore I praye you, lette mercy be in your hert, to th' effect and entent, that God Almightye have mercie upon you in his laste judgement. For saint James saith in his Epistel: judgement without mercy shal be do to him, that hath no mercy of another wight.

Whan Melibe had herde the grete skilles and reasons of dame Prudence, and her wife informacions and techinges, his herte gan encline to the will of his wife, considring her trewe entent, conformynge him anon and assented fully to worke after her counsaile: and thanked God, of whom procedeth all godenesse and vertue, that him had sent a wife of so grete discretion. And whan the day came that his adversaries should apere in his presence, he spake to 'hem godely, and saide in this wise.

Al be it so, that of your pride and high presumption and folie, and of your negligence and unconninge, ye have misborne you, and trespaced unto me, yet for as mikell as I se and beholde your gret humilite, and that ye be fory and repentaunt of your giltes, it constraineth me to doe you grace and mercy: Wherefore I receive you to my grace, and forgeve you holly all the offences, injuries, and wronges, that ye have done ayenst me and mine, to th' effect and ende, that God of his endlesse mercy woll at the time of our dyinge foryeve us our giltes, that we have trespaced to him in this wretched worlde. For doutlesse if we be fory and repentaunt for the sinnes and giltes, whiche we have trespaced in the sight of our Lord God: he is so fre and so merciable, that he woll forgive us our giltes; and bring us to the blisse that never shall have ende. Amen.

Here endeth the TALE of CHAUCER.

Here

Here foloweth the MONKE's PROLOGUE.

Han endid was the tale of Melibee
 And of Prudence, and her benignite,
 Our hoste saide, as I am a faithful man,
 And by the precious corpus Madrian,
 I had levir than a baril of ale
 That goodlese my wife had yherde this tale,
 For she nothing is of suche pacience
 As was this Melibeus wife Prudence.

By godd's bonis, when I bete my knaves
 She bringith to me the grete clubbid staves,
 And cryith, flee the doggis everichone,
 And breke of them the backe and every bone.
 And if so be any neighbour of mine
 Wol not in churche unto my wife encline,
 Or be so hardy to her to trespase,
 Whan she cometh home she rennith in my face,
 And cryith, false cowarde, awreke thy wife,
 By Corpus Domini, I wol have thy knife,
 And thou shalt have my distafe, and go spinne,
 Fro day til night, she wol right thus beginne.

Alas! she saith, that ever she was shape
 To weddin a milkop, a cowarde ape,
 That wol be overleide with every wight,
 Thou darst not stondin by thy wiv's right.

This is my life, but if that I wol fight,
 And out at dore, anon I mote me dight,
 And ellis I am losse, but if that I
 Be like a wilde lion, and sole hardy.

I wot well she wol do me flee some day
 Some neighbour or othir and goe my way,
 For I am perilous with knife in honde,
 Al be it that I dare not her withstonde,
 For she is bigge in armis by my faith,
 That shal he finde, that her misdoth or faith:

But let us passe away from this mattere.

My lord he said, sir monke, be mery of chere;
 For ye shall tellin us a tale truely.

Lo Rochester ystondeth here fast by,
 Ride forth min own lord, and breke not our game,
 But by my trowth I knowin not your name, 40
 Whe'er I shal cal you my lorde dan John,
 Or dan Thomas, dan Robert, or Albon,
 Or what house be ye, by your father kin,
 I vowe to God, thou hast a ful faire skyn,
 It is a gentle pasture there thou gost,
 Thou art not like a pinaunt or a ghost.

Upon my faithe thou art some officere,
 Some worthy Sexten, or some Celerere,
 For by my father's soule, as to my dome 50
 Thou art a maistir, when thou art at home,
 No pore cloisterer, ne no pore novise,
 But a governour both wity and wise,
 And therewithall of braune and eke of bones
 A right well faring person for the nones.

I praie to God yeve him confusion
 That first The brought into religion,
 Thou woldist have ben a trede foule aright,
 Haddist thou as grete leve, as thou haste might
 To persourm al thy lust in ingendrure,
 Thou haddest begottin many a cature, 60
 Alas! why werist thou so wide a cope,
 God yeve me sorowe, and I werin Pope,
 Not onely thou, but every mighty man,
 Though he were shorin high upon his pan,
 Should have a wife, for al this world is lorn,
 Religion hath take up al the corne
 Of treading, and we borel men ben shrimpes,
 Of feble trees there comith wretched impes,

This

This makith that our childern be so slender
And feble, that thei may not well engender,
This makith that our wivis wol assay
Religious folke, for they may bettir pay
Of Venus paimentes, bettir than mowe we,
For God wote no lufsburghis payin ye,
But be not wroth my lord, although I playe,
Ful ofte in game a sothe have I herde say.

This worthy monke toke al in pacience,
And said, I wol doin my diligence
As ferre as founith into honeste,
To tellin you a tale, ye two or thre,
And if ye liste to herkin hitherwarde,
I wol you saine the life of saint Edward,
Or ellis tragidies first I wol tell,
Of whiche I have an hundrid in my cell.
Tragidy is to tell a certaine story

As oldē bokis makin ofte memory
Of 'hem that stode in grete prosperite,
And be fallin out of ther hie degre
In to misery, and endid wretchidly,
And thei ben versifyid cominly 90
Of fixe fete, whiche men clepen hexametroh,
In prose eke ben enditid many one,
And in metre, many a sondry wife,
Lo! this ought inough you for to suffise.
Now herkinith, if you list for to here,
But first I you beseke in this matere,
80 Though I by ordir tellin not these thinges,
Be it of Popis, Emperours, or Kinges,
After ther agis, as men writin finde,
But telle 'hem, some before and some behinde, 100
As it comith nowe to my remembraunce,
Have me excusid of mine ignoraunce.

Here endeth the MONKE's PROLOGUE.

Here beginneth his TALE.

A Tragical Discourse of many who have fallen from high Estate to extreme Misery.

Wol bewaile in manre' of Tragedy
The harme of them that stode in hie
degre,

And fell so that there was no remedy
To bring 'hem out of ther adversite.
For certaine whan that fortune list to flye,
There may no man of her the course withhold,
Let no man trust to blind prosperity,
Beth ware by these ensamples yonge and olde. 110

Lucifer.

At Lucifer, though he an angel were
And nat a man, at him will I beginne,
For though fortune may nat an angel dere,
From hie degre, yet fel he for his sinne,
Doun into hell, where as he is yet inne.
O Lucifer, brightist of angels all,
Now art thou Sathanas, that maist not twin
Out of misery, in whiche thou art fall.

Adam.

Lo Adam! in the felde of Damascene
With Godd's owne finger ywrought was he, 120
And not begotin of mannes strene unclene,
And welte al paradise savoring o tre,
Had nevere worldely man so hie degre
As Adam, til he for misgovernance
Was driven out of his high prosperite,
To labour unto Helle, and to mischaunce.

Sampson.

Lo Sampson! which that was annunciate
By the' angel, long or his nativite,
And was to God almighty consecrate,
And stode in nobles whilis he might fe, 130
Was nevere suche another, as was he,
To speke of strength, and therto hardinesse,
But to his wivis tolde he his previte,
Through which he slough himself for wretchidnesse.

Sampson, this noble' and mighty champion,
Withoutin wepin, save his handis twey,
He slough and al to rente the strong lien

Towarde his wedding, walking by the wey,
His false wife coulde him so plesse and pray,
Till she his counsaile knewe, and she untrew 140
Unto his foes his counsaile gan bewray,
And him forfoke, and toke another newe.

An hundrid foxis toke Sampson for yre
And all ther tailis he together bonde,
And set the foxis tailis al on fire,
For he in every taile hath put a bronde,
And thei brent all the cornis in that londe,
And ther olivis, and ther vinis eke,
A thousand men eke he slough with his honde,
And had no wepin, but an ass's cheke. 150

Whan thei were slaine, so thrifed him that he
Was wel nie lorne, for which he gan to prey
That God wold of his paine have some pite
And sende him drinke, or ellis mote he dey,
And of this ass's cheke, that was so drey,
Out of a wange tothe sprang anon a well,
Of whiche he dronke inough, shortly to sey,
Thus halpe him God, as Judicum can tell.

By very force, at Gasa on a night,
Maugre the Philistins of that cite, 160
The gatis of the toun he hath up plight,
And on his backe icaried 'hem hath he
High on an hill, where as men might 'hem fe.
O noble mighty Sampson, lese and dere,
Had thou not tolde the woman thy secre,
In al this worldē ne had be thy pere.

This Sampson neither sider dranke ne wine,
Ne on his hed came rasour none ne there,
By precepte of the messangere divine,
For all his strength was lodgid in his here, 170
And fully twenty winteres yere by yere
Of Israel he had the governaunce,
But after sone shall he wepe many a tere,
For women shal bring him to his mischaunce.

Unto his lemman Dalila he tolde

T t

That

That in his heris al his strength ylay,
And falsely to his foemen she him folde,
And sleping in her barme upon a day 180
She made to clippe or shere his heres away,
And made his fomen al his craft espie,
And whan that thei him fonde in suche aray
They bounde him faste, and tho put out his eyen.

But er his heres were clippid or ishave
There n'as no bond with which men might him
binde,
But now he is imprison'd in a cave,
Where as thei made him at the querne to grinde.
O noble Sampson, strongist of mankinde,
O whilom judge in glory and riches! 190
Now maist thou wepin with thine eyin blinde,
Sith thou art from wele fal to wretchidnesse.

The' ende of these caitives was, as I shal sey,
His fomen made a fest upon a daie
And made him, as their sole, before 'hem pley,
And this was in a temple of gret araie,
But at the last he made a foule affray,
For he two postis shoke, and made 'hem fall,
Doun fel the temple al, and there it laie,
And sloughe himself, and eke his fomen all. 200

This is to say, the princes everichone,
And eke thre thousand bodies were ther slain
With falling of the grete temple of stone.
Of this Sampson now wol I no more saie,
Beth ware by this ensample olde and plain
That no men tel ther counsaile to ther wives
Of such thing as thei would have secret fain,
If that it touche ther limmis or ther lives.

Of Hercules.

Of Hercules the soveraine conqueroure
Singin his werkis, laude, and hie renown, 210
For in his time of strength he bare the floure,
He slough and raste the skin of the lioun
And of the Centaurs laide the boste adoune,
He Harpyes slewe, the cruel birdis fell,
He goldin appels raste fro the dragon,
He drewe out Cerberus the hounde of hell.

He slewe the cruel tiraunt Busyris,
He made his horse to frete him fleshe and bone,
He sloughe the very serpent venemous,
Of Achelous hornes brake he that one, 220
And he slewe Cacus in a cave of stone,
He sloughe the giaunt Antæus the stronge,
He sloughe the grisly bore, and that anon,
And bare his hed upon his sperè longe.

Was nevir wight, sithin the world began,
That slough so many monsters, as did he,
Throughout this wide world his name it ran,
What for his strength, and what for his bounte,
And evèry relme went he for to se,
He was so strong, that no man might him let, 230
And at the world's end he, for Trophe,
Instede of boundes of brassè 2 pillours set.

A lemman had this noble champion
That hight Deianire, as fresh as Maye,
And as these clerkis makin mention
She hath him sent a shirt both fresh and gaie,
Alas: this shirte, alas and well awaie!
Envenomid was subtilly withall,
That er he had werid it halfe a daie
It made his bonis fro his fleshe to fall. 250

But nathelesse, some clerkis here excusen

By one that hight Nessus, that it makid,
Be as be may, I wol her not accuseri,
But on his bak the' shirte he ware nakid,
Til the fleshe was with the venim blakid,
And when he sawe none othir remedie,
In hote colis he hath himselfe irakid
For with no venim dainid he to die.

Thus sterfe this worthy mighty Hercules,
Lo! who may trust in fortune any throwe? 250
For him that foloweth of this world the pres
Or he beware, is oftin laide ful lowe,
Ful wise is he, which that himselfe can knowe,
Beware, for when that fortune liste to glose
Than waitith she, her man adoune to throwe
By suche a way, as he would leste suppose.

Nabuchodonosor.

THE mighty trone, the precious trefore,
The glorious septer, royal majeste,
That hath the King Nabuchodonosore,
With tonge unnethis may discrivid be. 260
He twise wanne Hierusalem, that cite,
The vesseles of the temple he with him lad,
At Babilon was his soveraine se,
In whiche his glory and delite he had.

The fairist childrin of the blode royall
Of Israel he did do gelde anone,
And make eche of 'hem for to ben his thrall,
Amonge all othir Daniell was one,
That was the wisist childe of everichone,
For he the dremis of the king expounded, 270
Where as in Caldee clerkis were there none
That wist unto what fine his dremis souned.

This proude king let make a statu of golde
Sixty cubites in lengthe, and sevin in brede,
To whiche ymage, to bothe the yonge and olde
Commaundid he to loute, and have in drede,
Or in a forneis, ful of flamis rede,
He should be brente, that ne would not obey,
But never would assent unto that dede
Daniell, ne his yong felowis twey.

This king of kingis, so proude and elate
Wende God, that sittith hie in majeste
Ne might him nat birefe of his estate,
But sodainly he losse his dignite, 280
And like a best him semid for to be,
And ete hey as an oxe, and laye therout
In rain, and with wilde bestis walkid he,
Til that a certain time was come about.

And like an Egl's fethers were his heres,
And his neilis like birdis clawis were, 290
But God relevid him at certain yeres,
And yave him wit, and than with many' a tere
He thonkid God, and al his life in fere
Was he to doe amisse, or more trespase,
And ere that he layid was on his bere
He knew that God was full of might and grace.

Balthasar.

HIS sonnè, which that hightin Balthafare,
That helde the reign after his fa'ir's daie,
He by his fa'ir could not be aware,
For proude he was of herte, and of arraie, 300
And eke an Ydolaster was he aie,
His high estate assurid him in pride,
But fortune cast him doun, and there he laie,
And sodainly his reigne bygan devide.

A fest he made unto his lordis all

Upon

Upon a time, he made him blith to be,
And than his officeris gan he call,
Goth bringith forth the Vessellis, qð he,
Whiche that my fathre' in his prosperite
Out fro the Temple' of Jerus'lem beraft,
And to our Goddis thonkis yeldin we
Of honour, that our eldiris with us laft.

His wife, his lordis, and his concubines
Aie dronkin, whiles ther appetyte wold laft,
Out of these noble vessels, fondrie wines,
And on a wall this king his eyin cast,
And sawe an hond armelesse, that wrote full fast,
For fere of whiche he quoke, and fighid fore,
This hond, that Balthasar made fore agast,
Wrote Mene Techel Phares and no more.

In all that londe Magicien was ther non
That couð expounin what this letter ment,
But Daniel expounid it anon,
And saied, O king, God to thy fathir sent
Glorie and honour, reign, tresour, and rent,
And he was proude, and nothing God he drad,
And therefore grete wrath God upon him sent,
And him biraft the reigne that he had.

He was out cast of mann'is companie,
With Affis was his habitacion,
And ete haie as a best, in wete and drie,
Till that he knewe, by grace and by reson,
That God of heven hath dominacion
Ovir every reigne, and every cature,
And than had God of him compassion,
And him restored his reigne and his figure.

Eke thou, that art his sonne, art proud also,
And knowist all these thingis privily,
And rebell unto God art, and his foe,
Thou dranke eke of his vessels boldly,
Thy wife eke, and thy wenchis sinfully
Dronke of the same vessels fondrie winis,
And heryid false Goddis curdily,
Therefore unto The shapin full gret pyne is.

This hond was sent fro God, that on the wal
Wrote Mene Techel Phares trustith me,
Thy reigne is doen, thou weldest it not at all,
Devidid is thy relme, and it shall be
To Medis and to Perciens (qð he)
And that same night in bed the king was slawe, 250
And Darius occupied his degre,
Though he therto had neither right ne law.

Lordinges, here by ensample mowe ye take
How that in lordship is no sikirnesse,
For whan that fortune woll a man forsake,
She bereth awaie his reigne, and his richesse,
And eke his frendis, bothe more and lesse,
And whanne a man hath frendis through fortune
Mishap woll make them enemies I gesse,
This proverbe is full soth, and ful commune. 360

Zenobia.

Zenobia of Palmerie the Quene
(As writith Perciens of her noblesse)
So worthy was in armis, and so kene,
That no wight passid her in hardinesse,
Ne in linage, ne othir gentillesse,
Of kingis blode of Perce she is discended,
I saie that she ne had not moſte fairenesse,
But of her shap she might not be amended.

From her childhode I findin that she fled
Office of woman, and to wode she went,

And many a wilde Hert'is blode she shed.
With arrowis brode, that she to 'hem sent,
She was so swift, that she anon 'hem hent,
And whan that she was eldir, she would kill
Lions, Libardes, and Beris all to rent,
And in her armis welde 'hem at her will.

She durst the wilde bestis dennis seke,
And rennin in the mountaines all the night,
And slepe under a bushe; and she could eke
Wraſtill by very force, and very might
With any yong man, were he nere so wight,
There mightin nothing in her armis stonde,
She kept her maidinhed from every wight,
To no man dained she to be ybounde.

But at the laſt, her frendis haven her married
To Odenat, a Prince of that countre,
All were it so, that she 'hem long ytaried,
And ye shall understondin how that he
Yhad soche fantasie as had she,
But nathelſſe, whan thei were knit in fere,
Thei lived in joye and in felicite,
For eche of 'hem had othir leſe and dere.

Save one thing, that she n'olde nevir assent
By no waie, that he shouldin by her lie
But onis, for it was her plain entent
To have a child, the worlde to multiplie,
And al so sone as that she might asprie
That she was not with childe with that dede,
Than would she suffre' him do his fantasie
Eftſonis, and but onis out of drede.

And if she were with childe at thilkè cast,
Than no more should he play with her that game
Till fully fourtie dayis werin past
Than would she onis suffir him the same,
All were this Odenat or wilde or tame
He gate no more of her, for thus she saied,
It was to wivis lecherie and shame,
In othir case if that men with 'hem plaid.

Two fonnis by this Odenat had she,
The whiche she kept in vertue and lettrure,
But now unto our talè tournin we,
I saie that so worshipfull a cature
And wise therwith, and eke large with mesure,
So penible in warre, and curteis eke,
Ne more labour mightin in warre endure
Was non, though al this world men woldin seke.

Her riche araie ne might not be ytold
As well in vessell as in her clothing,
She was all cladde in pierrie and in gold,
And eke she ne left not for none hunting;
To have of fondrie tonguis folke knowing
Whan that she leisir had for to entende
To lernin bokis was all her liking,
How she in vertue might her life dispende.

And shortly of this storie for to trete,
As doughtie was her husbonde as was she,
So that thei conquered many reignis grete
In the' Orient, with many' a faire cite
Appertenaunt unto the Majeste
Of Rome, and with strong hond them held ful faste,
Ne nevir might her foemen doe her sle
As long as Odenat'is dayis laſt.

Her battailes, who so liſte 'hem for to rede,
Again Sapor the king, and othir mo,
And how that all this proces fill in dede,
Why she conquered, what title she' had therto,
And

And after of her mischief, and her wo,
How that she was besiegid, and itake,
Let him unto my maister Petrarke go,
That write inough of this, I undertake.

440

Whan Odenat was dedde, she mightily
The relmis held, and with her propre honde
Ayenst her foes she fought so truilly,
That there n'as prince ne king in all that londe
That he n'as glad, if that the grace he fonde,
That she ne should upon his londe warrey,
With her thei maidin aliaunce by bonde
To be in pece, and let 'hem ride and pley.

The Emperour of Rome hight Claudius,
Ne him beforne, the Romain Galien
Ne durst nevir be so coragious
Ne non Armen, ne non Arabiene,
That durste onys before hiere be sene
Within the field, that durst with her to fight,
Lest that she would 'hem with her hondis flene,
Or with her meine, put 'hem all to flight.

450

In king's habite, went her sonnis two,
As lawfull heiris of her relmis all,
And Hermano and Titamallio
Ther namis were, as Perciens 'hem call
But aie fortune, hath in her honie gall,
This mightie Quene, ne maie no while endure
Fortune out of her reigne made her to fall
To wretchidnesse, and to misaventure.

460

Aurelian, whan that the governaunce
Of Rome was come into his hondis twey,
He shope upon this quene to doe vengeance,
And with his legions, he toke his wey
Toward Zenobia', and shortly for to saie
He made her fle, and at the last her hent,
And fettered her, and eke her children twaie,
And wan the lond, and home to Rome he went.

470

Emongis othir thingis that he wan
Her chare, that of gold was wrought and pierre,
This gretè Romaine, this Aurelian
Hath with him lad, for that men should it se,
And beforne his triumph ywalkid she
With golden chainis on her necke honging,
Crounid she was, as aftir her degre,
And full of pierre chargid her clothing.

480

Alas fortune, she that whilom ywas
Dredefull to Kingis, and to Emperoures,
Now gaurith all the peple' on her, alas!
And she that helmid was in starke stouris
And wan by force tounis strong, and touris,
Shall on her hedde now werin autremite!
And she that bare the scepter full of flouris,
Shall bere a distasse, her coste for to quite!

Nero.

Although that Nero were as vicious
As any fende, that lieth full low adoun,
Yet he, as tellith us Suetonius,
All this wide worlde had in subjeccioun
Bothe East and West, South and Septentrioun,
Of Rubies, Saphers, and of Perlis white
Were all his clothis broudrid up and doun,
For he in gemmis gretely gan delite.

490

More delicate, more pompous of araie,
More proude, was nevir Emperour, than he,
That ilke clothe that he had werid o daie,
Aftir that time he n'old it nevir se,
Nettis of gold threde had he grete plente

500

To fishe in Tiber, whan him list to plaie,
His lustis were as lawe, in his degre,
For fortune, as his frende, would him obaie.

He Rome ybrent for his delicacie,
The Senatours he slue upon a daie,
To here how ther wivis would wepe and crie,
And slowe his brothir, by his siltir laie,
His mothir made he in pitous araie,
For he her wombe let slite for to beholde
Where he conceivid was, so welawaie
That he so little of his mothir tolde.

520

No teres out of his eyin for that sight
Ne came, but saied a faire woman was she,
Grete wondir is, how that he couð or might
Be the Domifman of her dedde beaute,
The wine to bringin him commaundid he,
And dranke anon, none othir wo he made;
Whan might is joignid unto cruelte
Alas! to depe wollin the venim wade.

520

In youth a maistir had this Emperour
To techin him lettrure, and curtesie,
For of moralite he was the floure,
As in his time, but if these bokis lie,
And whiles his maistir had of him maistre
He made him so conning and so souple,
That long time it was or that tirannie,
Or any vice, durst in him uncouple.

This Seneca of which I you devise,
Bicause that Nero had of him soche drede,
For he for his vicis would him chastise
Discretly as by worde, and not by dede,
Sir, he would saie, an Emperour mote nede
Be vertuous, and hatin tirannie,
For whiche he made him in a bathe to blede
On bothe his armis, till he must ydie.

This Nero had eke of a customaunce
In youth, ayenst his maistir for to rise,
Which aftirward him thought a grete grevaunce,
Therefore he made him dey in this wyse,
But natheless this Seneca the wife
Chese in a Bath to dye in this manere,
Rathir than have anothir turmentise,
And thus hath Nero slain his maistir dere.

540

Now fell it so, that fortune list no longer
The high pride of this Nero to cherishe
For tho that he were strong, yet was she stronger,
And thus she thought by God I am to nice
To set a man, that is fulfilled of vice,
In hie degre, and Emperour him call,
By God out of his fete I woll him trice,
Whan he lest wenith, sonist shall he fall.

550

The peple rose upon him on a night
For his defaute, and whan he it aspied,
Out of his dores anon he hath him dight
Alone, and there he wende have ben alied,
He knockid fast, and aie the more he cried,
The fastir shette han thei the doris all,
Tho wist he well, he had himself begiled,
And went his waie, no lengir durst he call.

The peple cried and romblid up and doun,
That with his eris he herd how thei saied,
Where is this false Traytour, this fell Neroun?
For fere full nere out of his wit he braied,
And to his Goddes right pitouly he praied
For focoure, but it might not him betide,
For drede of this him thoughtin that he deide,

560

And

And ran into a gardein, him to hide.

And in this gardeine found he chorlis twey
That fattin by a fire full grete and redde,
And to the chorlis two he gan to prey
To flea him, and to girdin of his hedde;
That to his body, whan that he were dedde,
Were no despite ido, for his deffame,
Himself he slough, he could not better redde,
Of which fortune ylough and made a game.

Holofernes.

WAS never a capteyn undir a king,
That reiginis mo put in subjeccion;
Ne strongir was in field, of alle thing
As in his time, ne gretir of renoun,
Ne more pompous in high presumpcioun,
Than Holofernes which fortune aie kiste,
And so licorously lad up and down,
Till that his hedde was off er that he wiste.

Not only that this worlde had of him awe,
For lesing of richesse and liberte,
But he made every man renie his lawe,
Nabuchodonosor was lorde, saied he,
None othir God yshould honourid be,
Ayenst his heft, there dare no wight trespase,
Save in Bethulia, a strong cite,
Where Eliathem was priest of that place.

But take kepe of the deth of Holoferne;
Amid his hoste he dronkin laie all night
Within his tent, as large as is a berne,
And yet for all his pompe, and all his might,
Judith, a woman, as he laie upright
Slepinge, his hedde of smote, and fro his tent
Full privily she stole; from every wight,
And skatheless fram hem all she went.

Antiochus.

WHat nedith it of king Antiochus
To tell his high and roiall majeste?
His grete pride, and his werkis venemus;
For soche an othir nas never noon but he;
Redith what that he was in Machabe,
And redith the proude wordis that he saied,
And why he fill from his prosperite,
And in an hill how wretchidly he died.

Fortune him had enhaumid so in pride;
That verily he wende he might attaine
Unto the steris, upon every side,
And in a balaunce to wey eche mountain,
And all the foudis of the se restrain,
And Godd's peple had he moste in hate,
Them would he flea, in turment, and in pain,
Wening that God ne might his pride abate.

And for that Nichanore and Timothe
By Jewis were venquithid mightily,
Unto the Jewis soche an hate had he,
That he bad greithe his chare full hastily,
And swore and sayid, full dispitously,
Unto Hierusalem he would eftfone,
To wreke his ire on it full cruilly;
But of his purpose was he let full sone.

God for his menace him so fore hath smote,
With woundes invisible, incurable,
That in his guttis carfid so and bote,
That his peynis werin importable,
And certainly the wreche was refonable,
For many a mann's guttis did he pain,
But from his purpose, cursed and dampnable,
For all his smert, he n'old him not restrain.

But bade anon, aparailin his hoste;
And sodainly, er he was of it ware,
God dauntid all his pride, and all his boste;
For he so fore yfell out of his chare,
That all his limmis and his skin to rare,
So that he no more ne might go ne ride;
But in a chaire men doe about him bare
Alle forbrufid both in back and side.

The wreche of God him smote so cruilly
That in his body wickid wormis crept,
And therewithall he stanke so horribly,
That none of all his meine, that him kept,
Whethir that he awoke, or ellis slepte,
Ne mightin not of him the stinke endure,
And in his mischief he wailid and wept,
And knewe God was Lorde of every cecture.

To all his hoste, and to himself also,
Full lothsome was the stinke of his caraine,
There n'as no man might bere him to and fro,
And in his stinke, and his horrible pain
He sterfe full wretchidly on a mountain.
Thus hath this robbour, and this homicide,
That many a man made to wepe and plain,
Soche guerdon, as belongeth unto pride.

Alexander.

ALisaunder's storie is so commune;
That every wight, that hath discrecioun,
Hath herde somwhat or all of his fortune,
This wide worlde, as in conclusioun,
He wan by strength; or for his high renoun
Thei werin glad for pece unto him fende,
The pride of man and beeste he laied adoun
Where so he came, unto the world's ende.

Comparioun might yet nevir be makid
Betwixt him, and an othir conquerour,
For al this world for dred of him hath quaked,
He was of knighthode, and of fredome floure;
Fortune him made the heir of high honour,
Save wine and women, nothing might alswage
His high entent in armis and laboure,
So was he full of Leonine corage.

What price were it to him, though I you told
Of Darius, and of a thoufande mo,
Of Princis, Erlis, and of Knightis bold,
Whiche that he conquerid, and brought to wo?
I saie as ferre as man mai ride or go
The world was his, what shuld I more devise?
For though I wrote and told you evir mo
Of his knighthode, it mightin not suffice.

Twelve yere he reignid, as sayeth Machabe,
Philipp's sonne of Macedohe was he,
Which that first King was of Grece the countre;
O worthy gentill Alisaundre, alas! qd he
That evir it sholde falle in swyche degreet,
Enpoisonid of thy own folke thou were,
Thy fortune to an asse hath turnede thee,
And yet for The ne wept she ner a tere.

O who shall yeve me tetis to complain
The deth of gentilnesse, and of fraunchise,
That all the worlde weldid in his demain,
And yet him thought it mightin not suffice,
So full was his corage of high emprise!
Alas! who shall me helpin to endite
Falso fortune, and her poison to dispise,
The which two of all this wo I wite.

U u

Julius

Julius Cesar.

BY wisedome, manhode, and by grete labour,
 From humble bed to roiall Majeste
 Up rose he, Julius the Conquerour,
 That all the Occident, by londe and see,
 Wan by strength of hond, or els by trete,
 And unto Rome made them tributarie,
 And sith of Rome the Emperour was he Till that fortune wext his adversarie.

700

O mightie Cesar, that in Theffaly
 Ayenst Pompeius father thine in lawe,
 That of the' Orient had the chivalrie
 As ferre as that the daie beginneth to dawe,
 Them thorough knighthode thou hast take and slaw,
 Save a fewe folke that with Pompeius fled,
 Through which thou puttest al the' orient in awe; 710
 Thonkith fortune that The so well yspedde.

But now a little while I woll bewaile
 This Pompeius, this noble governour
 Of Rome, which that yfied at this battaile,
 I saie one of his men, a false traitour,
 His hedde of smote, to winnin him favour
 Of Julius, and to him the' hedde ybrought:
 Alas Pompei, of the' Orient conquerour
 That fortune unto soch a fine The wrought!

To Rome again repairith Julius
 With his triumph laureate full hie,
 But on a time Brutus and Cassius,
 That evre' had of his hie estate envie,
 Full privilie had made conspiracie
 Ayenst this Julius, in subtilt wise,
 And cast the place, in whiche he should ydie
 With bodekins, as I shall you devise.

720

This Julius to the Capitoll went
 Upon a daie, as he was wont to gone,
 And in the Capitoll anon him hent
 This false Brutus, and his othir fone,
 And stickid him with bodekins anone
 With many' a wound, and thus thei let him lie,
 But never groned he at no stroke but one,
 Or els at two, but if his storie lie.

730

So manly was this Julius of herte,
 And so well loved estatey honeste
 That tho his dedly woundis so fore smerte,
 His mantell ovir his hippis cast he,
 For no man should yse his privite,
 And as he laie in dying on a traunce,
 And wist verrily that ded shuld he be,
 Of honestie yet had he remembrance.

740

Lucan, to The this storie I commende,
 And to Sueton, and Valerie also,
 That of this storie writin orde and ende
 How that to these grete Conquerouris two
 Fortune was first a frende, and sith a foe,
 Let no man trust upon her favour long,
 But have her in awaite for evermo;
 Witnesse on all the conquerouris strong.

750

Cresus.

THE riche Cresus, whilom was king of Lide
 (Of which Cresus Cirus fore him ydrad)
 Yet was he caught amidis all his pride,
 And to be brent men to the fire him lad,
 But soche a rain down from the welkin had
 That quent the fire, and made him to escape,
 But to beware yet no grace he had,
 Till fortune on the galowes made him gape.

Whan he escapid was he could not stint
 For to begin a newe araie again,
 He wenid well, for that fortune him sent
 Soche hap, that he escapid through the rain,
 That of his fois he might not be slain,
 And eke asweven' upon a night he met,
 Of whiche he was so proude, and eke so fain,
 That in vengeaunce he all his herte yfet.

760

Upon a tre he was, as that him thought,
 Ther Jupiter him wishe, both hals and side,
 And Phebus eke a faire towayle him brought
 To drie him with, and therwith wexe his pride,
 And to his doughtir, that stode him beside,
 Which that he knewe in hie sentence habound,
 He bad her tell him what it signified,
 And she his dreame right thus began expound.

770

The tre (qð she) the galous is to mene,
 And Jupiter betokeneth snowe and rain,
 And Phebus, with his towell all so clene
 Betokeneth the Sunne bemis, soth to fain,
 Thou shalt hongid be, fathir myne certain,
 Rain shall The washe, and sunne shall The ydrie.
 Thus she warnid him full plat and full plain,
 His doughtir, which that callid was Phanie.

780

And hongid was this Cresus the proude king,
 His roiall throne ne might him not availe;
 Tragedie is none othir manir thing,
 Ne can in finging, crying ne bewaile,
 But for that fortune aldaie woll assaile,
 With unware stroke, the reignis that ben proud,
 For whan men trustith her, than wol she faile,
 And covir her bright face undir a cloude.

790

Petro of Spain.

O Noble, worthy Petro, King of Spain,
 Whom fortune held so high in Majeste,
 Well oughtin men thy pitous deth complain,
 Out of thy londe thy brothir made The fle,
 And astir at a sieg by subtilte
 Thou wer betraied, and ladde unto his tent,
 Where as he with his owne honde slue The,
 Succeding in thy reigne and in thy rent.

The felde of snowe, with th' egle black therin,
 Caught with the limrod, coloured as the glede,
 He brewe this curfidnesse, and all this sinne,
 The wicked neste was werker of this dede,
 Not Charles, ne Oliver, that toke aie hede
 Of trouth and honour, but of Armorique
 Genillion Oliver, corrupt for mede,
 Brought this worthie king into soche a brike.

800

Petro King of Cipre.

O Worthy Petro, king of Cipre also,
 That Alixandrie wan by high maistrie,
 Full many an Hethin wroughtist thou wo,
 Of whiche thine owne liegis had envie,
 And for nothing, but for thy chivalrie,
 Thei in thy bed han slain The by the morow;
 Thus can fortune her whele govern and gie,
 And out of joye bringin men into sorowe.

810

Barnabo Visconti.

OF Milan, the grete Barnabo Vicounte,
 God of delite, and scourge of Lombardie,
 Why should I not thine infortune accounte,
 Sens in estate thou clombin were so hie?
 Thy brothir's sonne, that was thy double aie,
 For he thy nevewe was, and sonne in lawe,
 Within his Prison made The for to die,
 But why ne how n'ot I, that thou wer slawe.

Hugeline

Hugeline of Pise.

OF the' erle Hugeline of Pise the langoure
Ther maie no tong ytellin for pite,
But lityl out of Pise there stont a toure,
In the whiche toure in prifon put was he,
And with him ben his little childrin thre,
The eldist scarfly five yere was of age;
Alas fortune, it was grete cruelte
Soche birdis for to put in soche a cage!

Dampnid was he to die in that prifon,
For Roger, whiche that bishop was of Pise,
Had on him made a false suggestion,
Through which the peple gan upon him rise,
And put him in prifon, in soche a wise
As ye have herd, and mete and drinke he had
So small, that unnethis it maie suffise,
And therwithall it was full pore and bad.

And on a daie bifell, that in that houre 840
Whan that his mete wont was for to be brought,
The geilour shett the doris of the toure,
He herd it well, but yet he spake right nought,
And in his herte anon there fill a thought,
That thei for hungir wouldin doe him dien,
Alas (qð he) alas that I was wrought!
And therewithal the teres fell from his eyen.

His yongè sonne, that thre yere was of age,
Unto him said, fathir, why do ye wepe?
Whan will the geilour bring us our potage? 850

Is there no morfell bred that ye do kepe?
I am so hungrie, that I maie not slepe;
Now would to God that I might slepe for ever!
Than should not hunger in my belly crepe,
There n'is nothing but bred that me were lever.

Thus daie by daie this child began to crie,
Till in his fathir's barme adoune it laie,
And sayid farewell fathir, I mote die,
And kist his fathir, and deide the same daie, 860
And whan the wofull fathir did it sey,
For wo his armis two he gan to bite,
And saied alas: fortune, and welawaie
Thy false wylis my woo I may wyte.

His childrin wend, that it for hungir was
That he his armis gnawe, and not for wo,
And sayid: fathir, do not so (alas!)
But rathir ete the fleshe upon us two,
Our fleshe thou yave us, take our fleshe us fro,
And ete inough; right thus thei to him said; 870
And afir that within a day or two
Thei laid 'hem in his lappe adoun, and deide.

Thus endid is this mighty erle of Pise
Himself dispeirid eke, for hungir starfe,
From high estate fortune away him carfe,
Of this Tragedy', it ought inough suffise,
Who so wol here it in a longir wise,
Yredith the grete poete of Itaille,
That hight Dante, for he can it all devise,
Fro point to point, not a worde wol he faile.

Here endeth the MONKE's TALE.

Here

Here stineth the Knight the Monke of his Tale, and here foloweth the Prologue of the Nonne's Priest.

HO! (qð the knight) gode sir no more of this,
 That ye have sayd is right ynough I wis,
 And mokil more; for litill hevinessse,
 Is right inough to mochell folk I gesse,
 I saie for me, it is a grete difese
 Wheras men havin ben in welth and ese,
 To herin of ther sodaine fal, alas!
 And the contrary is joye and solas,
 As when a man hath ben in pore estate
 And climbith up, and wexith fortunate,
 And there abidith in prosperite,
 Such thingis are gladsome, as thinkith me,
 And of suche thingis were gode for to tell.
 Ye (qð our hoste) by saint Poul's bell
 Ye say right soth, this monke he clappith lowde,
 He spake, how fortune covered with a cloude
 I wote not what, and also' of a Tragedy
 Right nowe ye herde, and parde no remedy
 It is for to bewailin, ne complaine
 That that is done, and als it is a paine,
 As ye have saide, to here of hevinessse;
 Sir monke no more of this, so God you blesse,
 Your tale anyith all this company,
 Suche talking is not worth a butterfly,
 For therin is there no disporte ne game,
 Therfore sir monke, dan Piers by your name,
 I pray you hertely, tell us somwhat elles,

For sikirly, n'ere clinking of your belles,
 That on your bridill honge on every side,
 By hevin king, that for us allè dide,
 I should er this han fallin doune for slepe,
 Although the slough had ben nevir so depe,
 Than had your tale al be toldin in vaine,
 For certeinly, as that these clerkis saine,
 Where as a man may have none audience
 Nought helpith it to tellin his sentence;
 And wel I wote the substance is in me,
 If any thing shal well reportid be.
 Sir, say somwhat of hunting, I you pray.
 Nay (qð this monke) I have no lust to play,
 Now let an othir tel, as I have tolde.
 Than spake our hoste with rude speche and bolde,
 And saied unto the Nonn's priest anon,
 Come nere thou preeft, come hithir thou sire John,
 Tel us such thing, as may our hertis glade,
 Be blithe, although thou ride upon a jade,
 What though thy horse ybe be both foule and lene,
 If he wol servin The, recke not a bene,
 Loke that thy herte be mery ever mo.
 Yes Oofte, qð he, soo mote I ryde or goo,
 But I be mery', I wis I wol be blamed,
 And right anon his tale he hath atamed,
 And thus he saide unto us everichon,
 This swetè preeft, this godely man sir John.

Here endeth the PROLOGUE of the Nonne's PRIEST.

Here

Here foloweth his TALE.

Of a Cock and a Hen. The Morall whereof is to embrace true friends, and to beware of flatterers.

A Pore widowe, somdele islept in age,
Was whilom dwelling in a narwe cotage
Beside a grene, ystonding in a dale;
This widowe, of the whiche I telle my tale,
Sithins the day that she was last a wife
In pacience ledde schee a full simple life,
For litill was her catill and her rent,
By husbondry, of suche as God her sent,
She fonde her self, and eke her doughtirs two;
Thre large fowis had she, and no mo,
Thre kine, and eke a shepe which that hight Mall;
Full sooty was her boure, and eke her hall,
In whiche she ete many a sengell mele,
Of poinant fauce hiere nededene a dele,
Noo deinty morcill passid through her throte,
Her diet was acordaunt to her cote,
Repletion ne made her nevir sike,
A temperate diete was all her phisike,
And exercise, and hertis suffisaunce,
The gout ne let her nothing for to daunce,
Ne apoplexie ne shent nat her hed,
No wine drank evir she, ne white ne red.
Her borde was most servid with white and blacke,
Milke and broun bred, in which she fonde no lack,
Seinde bakon, and sometime an eye or twey,
For she was as it were a manir dey.

A gardyn she had, enclosid al aboute
With stickis, and with a drie ditch without,
In whiche she had a cocke hight chaunteclere,
In al the lande of crowing n'as his pere,
His voice was merier than the merie orgon
On masse dayis that in the churchis gon,
Wel sikerer was his crowing in his loge
Than is a clock, or Abbey-horologe,
By nature he knew eche assencion
Of the equinoctial in that ilke toun,
For when degrees xv. werin assended
Than crew he, that it might not be amended.

His comb was reddir than the fine corall,
And battelled, as it were a castill wall,
His beke was blacke, as any get it shone,
Like asure were his leggis and his tone,
His nailis whitir than the lilly floure,
And like the burnid golde was his coloure.

This gentel cocke had in his governaunce
Seven hennis, for to donne all his plesaunce,
Which were his sustirs, and his paramours,
And wondir like to him, as of colours,
Of whiche the fayrist hewed under the throte
Was callid faire damosell Pertelote;
He fethered her a hundred times a day,
And she him plesith al that ere she may,
Curteis she was: discrete and debonaire,
And compenable, and bare her selfe so faire
Sithins the time that she was sevenight olde,
That truiliche she hath the herte in holde
Of Chaunteclere, loking in every lith,
He loved her so, that wel was him therwith;
But suche a joye it was to here him sing,
Whan that the brighte Sunne began to spring,
In swete acorde, My life is faren in londe.

For at that time as I have undirstonde
Bestis and birdis couldin speke and sing,
And it so fell, that in the day dawninge
As Chaunteclere, among his wivis all,

Sat on his perche, that was within the hall,
And nexte to him sat his faire Pertelote,
This Chaunteclere gan to grone in his throte,
As a man in his dreame is dreethed sone,
And whan that Pertelot thus herde him grone,
She was agast, and said my herte dere,
What eylith you to grone in this manere?
Ye be a very slepir, fie for shame!

And he answerid thus, by God madame,
I pray you, that ye take it not in grete,
By God I mette, I was in suche mischefe
Right now, that yet mine hert is sore afright,
Now God (q'ð he) my swevin rede aright,
And kepe my body out of foule prisoun.

Me mette, how that I romid up and doun
Within our yerde, wher as I sawe a best
Was like an hound, and would have made arest
Upon my body, and have had me ded,
His colour was betwixt yellow and red,
And tippid was his taile, and both his eres
With black, unlike the remenant of his heres,
His snoute was small, with glowing eyin twey,
Yet for his loke almost for fere I dey,
This causith me my groning doutilese.

Away, q'ð she, fie on you hertilese!
Alas (q'ð she) for by that God above
Now have ye losse my hert, and al my love;
I can not love a cowarde by my faithe,
For certis, what so any woman faithe,
We all desirin, if that it might be
To have husbondis, hardy, wise, and fre,
But siker no nigarde, ne no sole,
Ne him that is agast of every tole,
Ne none avowtour, by that God above,
How durst ye say for shame unto your love
That any swevin might make you aferde?
Have ye no mann'is hert, and have a berde?
And con ye be aferde of swevenis?
Nothing but God woot but fantasye it ne is.

Swevins engendir of repletions,
And oft of fume, and of complections,
When humours ben to habundaunt in a wight;
Certis this dreame, which ye have met to night,
Comith of the grete superfluite
Of youre reede coloure that yee have parde,
Which causith folk to dredin in ther dremes
Of arowes, and of firis with red lemes,
And of red bestis that wollin hem bite,
Of conteke, and of whelpis gret and light,
Right as the humour of melancholye
Causith many a man in slepe to crye
For fere of beris ore of bolis blake,
Or ellis that blacke buggys wol him take.

Of othir humours coude I tell also,
That werkin a man in slepe mochil wo,
But I wol passe, as lightly as I can.
Lo Caton, whiche that was so wise a man!
Said he not thus? ne do no force of dremes.

Now sir (q'ð she) when we fle fro the bemes,
For Godd'is love takith some laxatife,
Up peril of my soule, and of my life
I counsaile you the beste, I woll not lie,
That bothe of colour, and melancholye
Ye purgin you, and for ye shal not tarie,
Though in this toun be none apotecarie,

I shal my self two herbis techin you,
That shall be for your hele, and for your prow,
In the gardyn two herbis shall I finde
The whiche havin ther properte by kinde
To purgin you bineth, and eke above,
Foryet not this for Godd's ownè love;
Ye be right colerike of complection,
Ware, the sunne is in his ascencion,
Ne finde you not replete of humours hote?
For if ye do, I dare wel lay a grote
That ye shal have a fever terciane,
Or els an ague, that may be your bane.
A day or two ye shal have digestives
Of wormis, or ye take your laxatives,
Of laurel, centorie, and femetere,
Or els of elder beries, that growe there
Of Catapuce, or of gaitre beries,
Or erve Ive growinge in oure erberis,
Pecke 'hem up as thei growe, and ete 'hem in,
Be mery husbonde, for your fathir kin
Dredith no dreme, I can say you no more.

Madame (qð he) gramercy for your lore,
But nathèlesse, as touching dan Catoun,
That of wisdom hath such a grete renoun,
Though that he bade no dremis for to drede,
By God, men may in oldè bokis rede
Of many' a man, more of auctorite
Than ever Caton was, so mote I the,
That al the revers saith of his sentence,
And have well foundin by experience
That dremis ben significacions
As wel of joye, as tribulacions,
That folke endurin in this life present,
There nedith make of this none argument,
The very prefe shewith it us in dede,
One of the gretist auctours out of drede
Saith thus; that whilom two felowes ywent
On pilgrimage, in a ful gode entent,
And happid so, thei come in to a toun
Where as there was suche congregacioun
Of peple, and eke of straite herbigage,
That thei ne founde as muche as a cotage,
In whiche thei bothe mightin ilogid be Wherfore thei motin of necessite
As for that night departin company,
And eche of 'hem goeth to his hostelry,
And toke his ostrye, as it would yfall.

That one of 'hem was lodgid in a stall
Farre in a yerde, with oxin of the plough,
That other man was lodgid wel inough,
As was his aventure, or his fortune,
That us governith all, as in comune.

And so befel, that longe or it were day
This man mette in his bedde, there as he lay,
How that his felowe gan upon him call,
And said (alas) for in an ox's stall
This night shal I be murdered, there I lie,
Now helpith me dere brothir, or I die,
In all haste comith unto me, he sayed,

This man out of his slepe for fere abraid,
But whan he was awakid of his slepe
He turnid him, and toke of this no kepe,
Him thought his dreme was but a vanite,
Thus twise in his sleeping ydremid he,

And at the thirde time yet his felawe
Cam as him thought, and said I now am slawe,
Beholde my bloudy woundis, depe and wide, 1130
Arise up erly, in the morow tide,
And at the west gate of the toun (qð he)
A carte ful of donge there shalt thou se,
In whiche my body' is hide ful privily;
Do thou that carte arestin boldily,
My golde causid my deth, soth for to saine,
And told him every point how he was slaine,

With a ful petous face, all pale of hewe,
And trustith wel his dreme he founde right trewe,
For on the morue', as sone as it was day 1140
To his felow's inne he toke the way,
And when that he came to the ox's stall
After his felowe lowde gan he to call.

1070 The hostiler answeride him anon,
And seide, sir, your felawe is ygone,
As sone as day he went out of the toun.

This man gan fal into suspeccioun,
Remembring of his dremis that he mette,
And forth he goeth, no lengir would he lette,
Unto the west gate of the toun, and fonde 1150
A donge carte, as hee wentte to donge the londe,
That was arayid in the same wise

As ye have herde the ded man did devise,
And with an hardy herte he gan to crie
Vengeaunce and justice on this felonie,
My felowe murdrid is this same night,
And in this carte he lieth, gaping upright,
I cry out on the ministers (qð he)

That shouldin kepe and rulin this cite,
Harowe alas, here lieth my felowe slaine! 1160

What shouldin I more of this tale saine?
The peple' out start and cast the cart to grounde,
And in the middill of the donge thei founde
The ded man, that murderid was al newe.

O blisful God! that arte so gode and trewe,
Lo! how thou bewrayist murdre alway!
Murdre wol out, that se we day by day,
Murdre' is so walsome and abhominable
To God, that so juste is and refonable
That he ne wol it suffre heled to be, 1170
Though it abide a yere, or two, or thre,
Murdre wol out, this is my conclusioun.

And right anon the ministers o'th toun
Have hent the cartir, and so sore him pined,
And eke the hostiler so sore constreynede,
That thei beknew ther wickidnesse anone,
And thei were hongid up by the neck bone.

Here maie ye se that dremis ben to drede.

And certis, in the same boke men may rede
Right in the next chapter I rede of this, 1180
I gabbè not, so have I joye and blis.

Two men would have passid ovir the se
For certaine cause, into a ferre countre,
If that the winde ne had ben contrarie,
That made 'hem in a cite to tarie,
That stode ful mery' upon an havin side,
But on a day, ayenst an evin tide,
The winde gan chaunge, and blewe right as 'hem left,
Joly and glad they wentin to ther rest;
And castin 'hem full erly for to faile, 1190
But herkin, to one man fell grete mervaille.

That one of 'hem, in sleeping as he lay
He met a wondir's dreme, again the day,
Him thought a man stode by his bedd's side,
And him commaundid, that he should abide,
And said him thus, if thou to morow wende,
Thou shalt be dreint, my tale is at ende.

He woke, and tolde his felow what he mette,
And prayid him his voyage for to lette,
As for that day he prayd him for to abide. 1200

His felowe that laie in his bedde that tyde
Gan for to laugh, and sko.nid him ful faste,
No dreme (qð he) may so my herte agaste,
That I woll letin for to do my thinges,
I ne set not a strawe for thy dreminges,
For swevins ben but vanites and japes,
Men meten' al day of oulis and of apes,
And eke of many a mafe ther withal,
And dremen' of thing that nevir was, ne shal,
But sithe I se that thou wolt here abide, 1210
And thus forslouthin wilfully thy tide,

God

God wote it ruith me, and have gode day,
And thus he toke his leve, and went his way.

But er that he had halfe his course ifailed,
I ne wote why, ne what mischaunce it ayled,
But casuelly the schippis bothom rent,
And ship and men undir the watir went,
In sight of othir shippis there beside,
That with 'hem sailid at the samè tide.

And therfore my faire Pertelot so dere,
By such enfamples olde mayist thou lere
That no man should ybe to rechileffe
Of dremis, for I say The doutileffe
That many' a dreme ful fore is for to drede.

Lo! in the life of saint Kenelme we rede;
That was Kenelphus sonne, the noble king
Of Merkenrick, how Kenelm mette a thing,
A lite er he were murdrid on a day,
His murdir in his vision he say,
His norice him expounid every dele
His swevin, and badde him to kepe him wele
Fro trayson, but he was but seven yere old,
And therfore litill tale he therof tolde
Of any dreme, so holy was his herte,
By God, I had full rathir than my sherte
That ye hadde herde his legende, as have I.

Dame Pertelot, I say to you truely,
Macrobius, that writith the' avision
In Affrike, of the worthy Scipion,
Affirmith dremis, and saieth that they ben
Warning of thingis that men aftir sene.

And ferthirmore I pray you lokith well
In the olde Testament, of Daniell,
Yf he held dremis only vanite.

Rede eke of Joseph, and there shal ye se
Dremis ben somtime, but I say nat all
Warning of thingis, that aftir shal fall.

Lo! of Egypt the king, that hight Pharao,
His baker, and his buttiler also
Wheðer they feltin none effect in dremes?
Who so wol seke athis of sondrie remes
May rede of dremis many' a wondir thing.

Lo! Cresus whiche that was of Lide king
Mette he not that he satte upon a tre?
Whiche signified that he should hongid be.

Lo! Andromache, that was Hector's wife,
That day that Hector should ylese his life
She dremid in the samè night beforne
How that the life of Hector should be lorne,
Yf that day he went unto the battaile;
She warnid him, but it might not availe,
He went for to fightin neverthelesse,
But he was slain anone of Achilles;
But that ilke tale is all to long to tell,
And eke it is nigh day I may nat dwell.

Shortely I say, as for conclusion,
That I shall have of this avision
Adversite: and I say farthirmore
That I ne tell of laxatives no store,
For they ben venomous, I wote it wele,
I them desie, I love 'hem nevre' a dele.

But let us speke of mirthe, and stinte all this,
Dame Pertelot, so have I joye and blisse,
Of one thing God hath sent me a large grace,
For when I se the beaute of your face,
Ye ben so scarlet red about your eyen,
It makith al my dredè for to dien,
For also siker, as In principio
Mulier est hominis confuso.

Madame, the sentence of this latin is
Woman is mann's joye and all his blis;
For when I fele on night your softè side,
Al be it that I may not on you ride,
For that our perche is made so narowe' alas!
I am so full of joye, merthe and solas,

That I desie bothè swevin and dreme.
And with that word he flewe down fro the beme,
For it was day, and eke the hennis all,
And with a chucked he gan 'hem for to call,
For he had founde a corne lay in the yerde, 1290
Royall he was, he n'as no more aferde,

He fetherid Pertelot twenty time,
And tradde her eke as ofte, er it was prime;
1220 He lokede as it were a grimme lioun,
And on his toes he romid up and down,
Him deivid not to set his fete to grounde,
He chuckid, when he had a corne ifounde,
And to him than rennin his wivis all.

As royall as a prince is in his hall
Leave I this Chaunteclere, in his pasture, 1300
And after woll I tel his adventure.

Whan that the moneth in whiche the world began
That hight March, in which God first makid man, 1230 Was complete, and ypaffid were also Sith Marche began twenty dayis and two,
Befill that Chaunteclere, in all his pride,
His sevin wivis walking him beside,
Cast up his eyin to the brightè funne,
That in the signe of Taurus was irunne

Twenty degrees and one, and fomwhat more,
He knew by kinde, and by none othir lore,
That it was prime, and crew with blisfull steven,
The funne he said is clombin up to heven
1240 Twenty degrees and one, and more iwis,
Now Madame Pertelot, my world's blisse,
Herkinith how these blisful birdis singe,
And se the freshe flouris howe thei springe,
Full is min hert of revel, and solas;

But sodainly him fel a sory caas,
For er the lattir ende of joye is wo, 1320
God wote that worldely joye is sone ago,
And if that a rethore coud faire endite,
He in a cronicle might favelly write
It as a souveraine notabilite;

Nowe every wife man herkin to me,
This story' is al so true I undirtake
As is the boke of Launcelot du lake,
That women holden in ful grete reverence.
Now wol I turne ayen to my sentence.

A col foxe (ful of slie iniquite) 1330
That in the grove had wonnid yeris thre,
By high imaginacion aforne caste
On a night thorghw the hoggis sty hee braste
1260 Into the yerde, there Chaunteclere the faire
Was wont, and eke his wivis to repaire,
And in a bedde of wortis still he laye,
Til it was passid undren of the day
Waiting his time on Chaunteclere to fall,
As gladly done these homicidis all,
That in a waite liggin to murdre men. 1340

O false murderer, rucking in thy den!
O newe Scariot, and newe Ganilion!
O false dissimuler! O greke Sinon
That broughtist Troy all uttirly to sorowe!
O Chaunteclere, accursid be the motowe,
That thou into thy yerde flewe fro the bemes,
Thou were ful well ywarnid by thy dremes,
That ilke day was perillous to The,
But what that God afore wote, must nedes be, 1350
After the opinion of certaine clerkis,
Witnesse on hem that conne of that werkys,

That in scole is grete altercacion
In this matere, and grete disputacion,
And hath ben of an hundrid thousande men,
But I ne can not boulte it to the brenne,
As can the holy doctour saint Austin,
Or Boece, or the Bishop Bradwardin,
Whethir that Godd's wille by forweting
Steryth me nedily to do a thing,

(Nedely)

(Nedely clepe I simple necessite)
 Or ellis if fre choice be grauntid me
 To doin the same thing, or do it nought,
 Though God forewote it, or that it was wrought,
 Or if his weting strainith ner a dele,
 But by necessite condicionele,
 I wol not have to done of suche matere,
 My tale is of a cocke, as ye shal here,
 That toke his counsaile of his wife with forowe,
 To walkin in the yerde upon the morowe,
 That he had met the dreame, as I you tolde, 1370
 Womens counsaillis ben oftin ful colde,
 And womens counsaile brought us first to wo,
 And made Adam fro paradise to go,
 There as he was ful mery, and well at ese,
 But for I n'ot whom that I might displese
 If I the counsaile of women would blame,
 Passe ovir, for I said it in my game,
 Rede authors, wher thei trete of such matere,
 And what thei say of women ye mowe here,
 These ben the Cock's wordis, and not mine, 1380
 I can noon harme of no woman divine.

Faire in the fonde, to bathe her merily,
 Lieth Pertelot, and al her sustirs by Ayenst the sunne, and Chaunteclere so fre
 Songe merier, than the Marmaide in the se,
 For Phisiologus saieth sikirly
 How that they singin wel and merily.

And so befill that as he cast his eye
 Among the wortis on a butterflie,
 He was ware of the foxe that laie ful lowe, 1390
 But nothing than ne list him for to crowe,
 But cried anon cocke cock, and up he stert
 As one that was affrayid in his hert,
 For nat'urally bestis desire to fle
 Fro ther contrarie, if they may it se.
 Tho he ner erst had sene him with his eye,
 This Chaunteclere, when he gan him espie,
 He would have fledde, but that the foxe anone
 Said, gentil sir, alas! what wol ye done?
 Be ye affraide of me, that am your frende? 1400

Nowe certis I were worse than is a fende
 Yf I to you would harme, or villanny,
 I am not come your counsaile to espie,
 But frewily the cause of my comminge
 Was only for to herkin howe ye singe,
 For sothly ye have as mery a steven
 As any angel hath, that is in heven,
 Therwith ye have of musike more feling
 Than had Boece, or any that can sing, 1410
 My lorde your fathir, God his soule yblese,
 And eke your mothir of her gentilnesse
 Have in my house yben, to my grete ese,
 And certis, sir, ful fain would I you plesse.
 But for men speken of singing, I wol sey
 So mote I biokin wel mine eyin twey
 Save you, ne herde I nevir man so singe
 As did your father in the morowninge,
 Certis it was of herte, all that he song,
 And for to make his voice more shrill and strong,
 He would so paine him, that with both his eyen 1420
 He must ywinke, so loude he must ycrien,
 And stondin on his tiptoes therwithall,
 And stretchin forth his necke so long and small,
 And eke he was of suche discrecion,
 That ther was no man in no region
 That him in songe or wisdom might ypasse;
 I have wel reddin dan Burnel the asse
 Among his veris, how there was a Cocke,
 For that a prest's sonne yave him a knocke,
 Upon his legges, while he was yong and nice, 1430
 He made him for to lese his benefice,
 But certaine there is no comparison
 Betwixt the wisdom and discrecion

Of your fathir, and of his subtilte;
 Nowe singith sir, for swete saint charite,
 Let se, can ye your father counterfete.

This Chaunteclere his wingis gan to bete,
 As one that could not his trefon aspie,
 So was he ravished with his flaterie!

Alas ye lordes, many' a false flaterour
 Is in your courte, and many a lesingour,
 That plesith you wel more, by my faith,
 Than he that sothfastnesse unto you saith.

Redith Ecclesiast of flaterie,
 Beware ye lordis of ther trecherie.

This Chaunteclere stode hie upon his toos
 Stretching his necke, and held his eyin cloos,
 And gan to crowin loudè for the nones,
 And dan Russel the foxe starte up at ones,
 And by the gorget hath hent Chaunteclere, 1450
 And on his backe towarde the wode him bere,
 For yet ne was there no man that him sued.

O destine, that maiste not be eschued!
 Alas that Chaunteclere flewe fro the bemes!
 Alas his wife ne rought not of his dremes!
 And on a friday fill al this mischaunce.

O Venus, that art goddesse of plesaunce,
 Sithnes that thy servaunt was this Chaunteclere,
 And in thy service did all his powere,
 More for delite, than kind to multiplie,
 Why woldest thou suffre' him on thy day to die?

O Gaulfride, my dere maistir soveraine,
 That whan that worthy king Richard was slaine
 With shot, complanedist his deth so fore,
 Why n'ad I now thy science and thy lore,
 The friday for to chide, as didin ye?
 (For on a friday sothly slaine was he)
 Than wold I shew you how that I coud plaine
 For Chauntecler's drede, and for his paine.

Certis such cry, ne lamentacion 1470
 N'as ner of ladies made, whan Ilion
 Was won, and Pirrus with his brighte swerde
 Whan he had hent king Priam by the berde
 And slough him (as sayith Eneidos)
 As madin all the hennis in the close,
 Whan they had losse of Chaunteclere the sight,
 But soverainly dam Pertelot the fright
 Wel loudir than did Hadruball's wife,
 Whan that her husbond had ylost his life,
 And that the Romans had ybrent Cartage, 1480
 She was so ful of turment and of rage,
 That wilfully into the fire she sterte,
 And brent her self with a full stedfast herte.

O woful hennis, right so cryid ye,
 As whan that Nero brennid the cite
 Of Rome, cryid the senatouris wives,
 For that ther husbondis should lese their lives,
 Withoutin gilte this Nero hath 'hem slaine.

Now wol I turne unto my tale againe.

The sely widowe and her doughtirs two 1490
 Yherde the hennis crie and makin wo,
 And out at the dore stertin thei anon,
 And saw the foxe towarde the wode ygon,
 And bare upon his backe the Cocke away,
 And cryid out harow and well away!
 A ha! the Foxe! and after him thei ran,
 And eke with stavis many' anothir man,
 Ran Coll our dogge, Talbot, and eke Garlonde,
 And Malkin, with her distaffe in her honde,
 Ran Cowe and Calfe, and eke the very Hogges, 1500
 So ferid thei the barking of the Dogs,
 And shouting of the men, and women eke,
 They ran so that them thought ther herts shuld breke,
 They yellin loude as fendis do in hell,
 The Duckis cryid as men wold 'hem quell,
 The Geese for fere flewin ovir the trees
 Out of the Hivis came the swarme of Bees,

So

So hidous was the noife, ah benedicite !
 Certis ne Jacke Strawe, ne all his meine
 Ne madin nevir shoutis half so shrill,
 Whan that thei wouldin any Flemming kill,
 As that ilke daie was made upon the Foxe;
 Of brasse thei blewe the trompis, and of boxe,
 Of horne and bone, in which thei blew and pouped,
 And therewithal thei shrikid and thei howpede,
 It semid, as though hevin should yfall.
 Now gode men I praie you herkinith all.

Lo how that fortune tournith sodainly
 The hope and the pride of ther enemy !
 This Cocke that laie upon the Fox's backe
 In all his drede, unto the Foxe he spake
 And sayid, gode sir: if I were as ye,
 Yet should I saie, as wise God helpe me,
 Tournith ayen, ye proudè churlis all,
 A very pestilence upon you fall,
 Now am I come unto this wod's sïde,
 Maugre of you alle, the Cocke shal here abide,
 I woll him ete in faith, and that anon.

The Foxe answerd, in faith it shall be doen.
 And as he spake the worde, all sodainly
 This Cocke brake from his mouth delivirly,
 And high upon a tree he flewe anon,
 And whan the Foxe sawe that he was agon,
 Alas! (qð he) O Chaunteclere alas!

I have (qð he) doe to you grete trespas,
 In as moche as I makid you aferde
 Whan I you hent, and brought out of your yerde,
 But sir, I did it in no wick entent,
 Come down, and I shall tell you what I ment,
 I shall to you saie sothe, God helpe me so. 1540

Naie than (qð he) I shrewe us bothè two,
 And first I shrewe my self, both blode and bones,
 If thou begile me oftir time than ones,
 Thou shalt no more thorough thy flatterie
 Doe me to sing, and winkin with myne eye,
 For he that winkith, whan he should yfe
 All wilfully, God let him nevir the.
 Naie (qð the Foxe) but God yeve him mischaunce,
 That is so indiscrete of governaunce,
 That janglith, whan that he should hold his pees.

Lo, soche it is for to be rechiles,
 And negligent, and trust on flaterie !
 But ye that holde this Tale for a folie,
 As of a Fox, or of a Cock, or Henne,
 Ytakith the moralite gode men ;
 For fain& Poule sayith, all that writtin is
 To our doctrine it is writtin, iwis,
 Takith the corn, ond let the chaffe be still.

And now, gode God, if that it be thy will,
 As saïeth my lorde, so make us all gode men, 1560
 And bring us unto thy high blisse. Amen.

Here endeth the TALE of the Nonnes PRIEST.

Here

Here foloweth the MANCIPLE's PROLOGUE.

SIR Nonn'is Prieſte, our hoſte ſaied anone,
 Ibleſſid be thy breche and every ſtone,
 This was a merie tale of Chauntecler,
 But by my trowth, if thou were ſeculer
 Thou wouldiſt be a tredəfoule aright,
 For if thou have corage, as thou haſt might,
 The werin nede of hennis, as I wene,
 Ye more than ſevin timis ſevintene,
 Se whichè braunis hath this gentle prieſt,
 So grete a necke, and ſoche a large breſt,
 He lokith as a Sparhauke with his eyen,
 Him nedith not his colours for to dien
 With Braſill, ne with grain of Portingale.
 But fir, full faire yfall you for your tale.
 And aſtir that, he with full mery chere
 Saied to an othir man, as ye ſhall here.
 Wote ye not where ſtondith a little toun
 Whiche that yclepid is Bob up and doune
 Undir the blee, in Caunterburie waie?
 There gan our hoſte to japin and to plaie,
 And ſayid, ſirs: what? Dunne is in the mire,
 Is there no man, for praier ne for hire
 That woll awake our felowe here behinde?
 A theſe him might full lightly rob and binde,
 Se how he nappith, ſe for cock'is bones
 How he woll fallin from his hors at ones;
 Is that a Coke of London, with miſchaunce?
 Doe him comfort, he knowith his penaunce,
 For he ſhall tellin a tale by my fey
 Although it be not worth a bottle' of hey.
 Awake thou Coke (qð he) God yeve The ſorow,
 What eilith The to ſlepin by the morow,
 Haſt thou had ſleen al night, or art thou drunk,
 Or haſt thou al night with ſome quene iſwonke,

So that thou maiest not holdin up thine hedde?
 This Coke that was ful pale, and nothing redde,
 Sayid, ſir hoſte: ſo God my ſoule ybleſſe
 There is fallin on me grete hevineſſe,
 But I n'ot why, me were levir to ſlepe 1600
 Than the beſt gallon wine that is in Chepe.
 Well (qð the Manciple') if it maie doe eſe
 To The ſir Coke, and to no wight diſpleſe
 1570 Whiche that here ridith in this companie,
 And that our hoſte will of his curteſie,
 I woll as now excuſe The of thy tale,
 For in gode faith thy viſage is full pale,
 Thine eyin daſin ſothly as me thinketh,
 And wel I wote thy breth ful ſoure yſtinketh,
 That ſhewith wel thou art not well diſpoſed, 1610
 Of me certaine thou ſhalt not be ygloſed,
 Se how he galpith, lo this dronkin wight!
 As though he would us ſwalowe anon right.
 1580 Holde cloſe thy mouthe man, by thy fathir kin,
 The devill of hell ſet his fote therein,
 Thy curſid breth will now enſect us all,
 Fie ſtinking ſwine! fie foule mote The befall!
 Ah! takith hede ſirs of this luſtie man.
 Now ſwete ſir, woll ye juſtin at the van?
 Thereto me thinkith ye be well yſhape, 1620
 I trowe that ye have dronkin wine you ape,
 And that is whan men playin at a ſtrawc.
 And with his ſpech the coke waxid al wrawc,
 And on the Manciple gan to nodde faſt
 For lacke of ſpeche: and down his hors him caſt,
 Where as he laie, till that men up him toke,
 This was a faire cheveſaunce of a coke,
 Alas that he n'ad holde him by his ladill!
 And er that he ayen were in the ſadill

There was a gretè shoving to and fro
To lift him up, and mochill care and wo,
So' unweldy was this sely pallid goste,
And to the Manciple than spake our hoste.

Bicause that drinke hath dominacion
Upon this man, by my salvacion
I trowe that leudely woll he tell his tale,
For were it wine, or stronge old moistie ale
That he hath dronke, he spekith in the nose,
And snivelith fast, and eke hath caught the pose.

He also hath to doe more than inough
To kepe him on his caple' out of the slough,
And if he fall from his caple estfone,
Than shall we all havin inough to doen
And lifting up again his dronkin corce;
Tell on thy tale, of him make I no force.

But Manciple, in faith thou art to nice
Thus opinly to reprevin his vice,
An othir daie he woll paraventure
Recleime The, and bringin The to lure,
I mene he spekin will of smale thinges,
And for to pinchin at thy reckininges,
That were not honest, if it came to pefe.

No (qð the Manciple) that wer mischefe,
So might he bringin me into the snare,
Yet had I levir payin for the Mare

1630 He ridith on, than he should with me strive,
I woll not wrathe him, all so mote I thrive,
That which I spake, I saied it but in bourde,
And wote ye what? I have here in my gourde
A draught of wine, it is of a ripe grape, 1660
And right anon ye shall se a gode jape,
This Coke shall drinke thereof, if that I maie,
Up pain of my life he woll not saie naie.

And certainly, to tellin as it was,
Of this vessell the Coke dranke fast, alas!
What nedith it, he drank inough beforen,
And whan he had ypoupid in his horne
To the' Manciple he toke the gourde again,
And of the drinke the Coke was wondir fain,
And thonkid him, in soche wise as he coulde. 1670

Than gan our hoste to laughin wondir loude,
And saied: I se well it is necessary
Where that we gon, gode drinke with us to cary,
For that will tournin rancour and disefe
To' accord and love, and many' a worde to pefe.

1650 O Bacchus! blessid be thy holy name!
That so canst tournin ernest into game;
Worship and thonke be to thy deite.
Of that mattir ye get no more of me.
Tell on thy tale thou Manciple', I The praie. 1680
Well sir (qð he) herkinith what I saie.

Here endeth the MANCIPLE's PROLOGUE.

Here foloweth his TALE.

Phœbus kepeth a white Crow, which can speak as a Jay. The Crow accuseth his Wife, of whom he was too jealous, to have play'd false in his Absence. Hereupon with an Arrow he slayeth his Wife; but after repenting of his Rashness, he taketh revenge of the Crow.

¶ Han Phebus dwellid here in yerth adoun,
As olde bokis makin mencoun,
He held was the moſte luſtie bachelor
Of all the worlde, and eke the beſt archer!

He ſlough Python the ſerpent, as he laie
Sleping ayenſt the Sonne upon a daie,
And many' an othir noble worthy dede
He with his bowe ywrought as men mow rede.

Playin he coulde on every minſtralcie,
And ſingin that it was a melodie
To herin of his clere voice the ſoun.
Certis the king of Thebis, Amphioun,
That with his ſinging, wallid the cite,
Could nevir ſingin halfe ſo well as he.
And therto he ywas the ſemelyſt man,
That is or was, ſithe that the worlde began.

What nedith it his ſeturys to diſcrive?
For in this world n'as none ſo faire alive.
He was therewith fulfilled of gentilneſſe,
Of honour, and of perſite worthineſſe.

This Phebus, that was floure of bachelorie
As well in fredome, as in chivalrie,
For his diſport, in ſigne of victorie
Of Python, ſo as tellith us the ſtorie,
Was wont to berin in his hond a bowe.

Now had this Phebus in his hous a crowe,
Whiche in a cage he foſtrede many' a daie,
And taught to ſpeke, as men techin a jaye,
White was this crowe, as is a ſnow-white Swan, 1710
And counterfete the ſpeche of every man

He coulde, whan that he tellin ſhould a tale,
There was in all this world no Nightingale
Ne coulde by an hundrid thouſand dele
Singin ſo wondir merrily and wele.
Now had this Phebus in his hous a wife,
Whiche that he lovid more than his own life,
And night and daie did evre' his diligence
Her for to pleſe, and doe her reverence,
Save onily, if I the ſoth ſhall ſain, 1720
Jelous he was, and would have kept her ſain,
For him were lothe yjapid for to be,
And ſo is every wight in ſoche degre,
But all for nought, for it availith nought,
A gode wife, that is clene of werke and thought,
Should not be kept in none awaite certain,
And truily the labour is vain

To kepe a ſhrew, for it woll not ybe,
This holde I for a very nicete
To ſpill our labour for to kepe our wives, 1730
Thus writith olde clerkis in ther lives.
But now to purpoſe, as I firſt began.
This worthy Phebus doeth all that he can
To pleaſin her, wening through ſoch pleaſaunce,
And for his manhode, and his governaunce,
That no man ſhould have put him from her grace,
But God it wote, there maie no man embrace
As to diſtraine a thing, whiche that nature
Hath naturally ſette in a cature.

Take any birde, and put him in a cage, 1740
And doe all thine entent, and thy corage

To fostre' it tendirly with mete and drinke
Of all the dainties that thou canste bethinke,
And kepe it also clenely as thou maie,
Although the cage of gold be ner so gaie,
Yet had this birde by twentie thousand fold
Levre' in a forest, that is wide and cold,
Go etin wormis, and soche wretchidneße,
For er this birde will doe his businesse
To' escape out of his cage, whan that he maie, 1750
His libertie the birde desirith aie.

Let take a Cat, and fostir her with milke
And tender fleshe, and make her couch of filke,
And let her se a Mous go by the wall,
Anon she weivith fleshe, and couche, and all,
And every deinte, that is in that hous,
Soche appetite hath she to ete the Mous.
Lo! here hath lust his dominacion,
And appetite flemith discrecion.

A she Wolfe hath also a vila'nous kinde,
The leudist Wolfe, that evir she maie finde,
Or lest of reputacion wolle she take,
In time whan that her lust to have a make.

All these ensamples speke I by these men,
That ben untrue, and nothing by women,
For men have er a lico'rous appetite
On lowir thinge to performe ther delite,
Than on their wivis, be thei ner so faire,
Ne nevir so true, ne so debonaire,
The fleshe is so newfangell, with mischaunce, 1770
That we ne con in nothing have plesauce,
That founith unto vertue any while.

This Phebus, which that thought upon no gile,
Disceivid was, for all his jolite,
For bysyde hym another love hadde she,
A man of little reputacion,
Nought worth to Phebus, in comparison,
The more harme is, it happith oftin so,
Of whiche there comith mochill harme, and wo.

And so bifell, whan Phebus was absent, 1780
His wife anon hath for her lemman sent,
Her lemman, certes that is a knavishe speche,
Foryeve it me, and that I you besече.
The wife Plato sayith, as ye mowe rede,
The worde must nedis acorde with the dede,
If men should tellin propirly a thing,
The worde must cosin be to the working;
I am a boistous man, right thus saie I,
There is but little difference truely
Betwixt a wife, that is of hie degre, 1790
If of her body dishonest she be,
And a pore sely wenche, othir than this,
If it so be thei werkin bothe amis,
But for the gentill is in state above
She shall be called his lady and his love,
And for that tothir is a pore woman
She shal be called his wenche or his lemman,
And God it wote, mine ownè dere brothir,
Men laie as lowe that one as that othir,
Right so betwixt a titlelesse tiraunt 1800
And an outlawe, or elles a thefe erraunt
The same I saie, there is no difference,
To Alexaunder was told this sentence,
That for the tiraunt is of gretir might
By force of meine for to slea doune right,
And brenin hous and home, and make al plain,
Lo therfore is he called a capitain,
And for the outlawe hath but small meine,
And maie not doe so grete an harme, as he,
Ne bring a cuntry to so grete mischefe, 1810
Men callin him an outlawe or a thefe.

But for I am a man not textuele,
I wolle not tell of textis ner a dele,
I wolle go to my tale, as I began.
Whan Phebus wife had sent for her lemman,

Anon thei wroughtin all their luste volage.
This white crowe, that hing aie in the cage,
Behelde their werke, and saied nevir a worde;
And whan that home was come Phebus the lorde,
This crowe ysong, cuckowe, cuckowe, cuckow.
What bird (qð Phebus) what song singist thou?
N'ere thou not wont so merily to sing

That to my herte it was a rejoising
To heare thy voice? alas! what song is this?

By God (qð he) I singin not amis,
Phebus (qð he) for all thy worthinesse
For all thy beaute, and thy gentilnesse,
For all thy songis, and thy minstralcie,
For all thy waiting, blerid is thine eye
With one of little reputacion, 1830

Not worth to The as in comparison
The mounenance of a gnat, so mote I thrive,
For on thy bedde thy wife I sawe him swive.

What wol you more? the crow anon him told,
By sad tokinis, and by wordis bold
How that his wife had doen her lecherie,
Him to grete shame, and to grete villanie,
And tolde how oft, he sawe it with his eyen.

This Phebus gan awaiward for to prien,
Him thought his wofull herte ybsraist a two, 1840
His bowe he bent, and set therin a flo,
And in his ire he hath his wife yslain,
This is the' effect, there is no more to sain,
For sorowe then he brake his minstralcie
Bothe Harpe and Lute, and Getern, and Sautrie,
And eke he brake his arowes, and his bowe,
And aftir that, thus spake he to the crowe.

Traitour (qð he) with tong of Scorpion,
Thou hast me brought to my confusion,
Alas that I was wrought! why n'ere I dedde? 1850

O dere wyif, O gemme of all lustihede,
That were to me so sad, and eke so true,
Now liest thou dedde, with face all pale of hewe
Full giltileffe, that durst I swere iwis,
O rakell honde, to doe so foule amis!

O troublid wit, O irè wretchileffe,
That unavisid smitist giltileffe!
O wantrust, full of false suspeccion!
Where was thy wit and thy discrecion?

Oh every man beware of rekilnesse 1860
Ne trowe nothing, withoutin strong witnesse,
Smite not to sone, or that thou wetè why,
And be avisid well and soberly

Or ye do any execucion
Upon your ire, thorough suspection.

Alas; a thousand folke hath rekell ire
Fully fordoen, and brought 'hem in the mire.

Alas! for sorowe I wolle my self sle.
And to the crowe, O false thefe sayid he, 1870
I wolle The quite anon thy false tale.

Thou songist whilom, like a Nightingale,
Now shalt thou false thefe, thy song forgone,
And also thy white fethers everychone
Ne nevir in all thy life shalt thou speke,
Thus shull men on a traytour be awreke,
Thou and thin offspring ever shall be blake,
Ne nevir aftir swete noife shall ye make,
But evir crye ayenst tempest and rain,
In token, that through The my wife is slain, 1880
And to the crow he stert, and that anon,
And pulled of his white fethers everichon,
And made him blacke, and rest him al his song,
And eke his speche, and out at dore him slong
Unto the devill, whiche I him betake,
And for this cause yben all crowis blake.

Lordinges, by this ensample' I wol you pray
Beth ware, and takith kepe what that I say,
Ne tellith nevir no man in your life
How that an othir man hath dight his wife. 1890

He

He woll you hatin mortally certain.
 Dan Salomon, as thes wise clerkis sain,
 Techith a man to kepin his tong well,
 But as I saied, I am not textuell;
 But nathelasse, thus taughte me my dame,
 My sonne thinke on the crowe a God's name;
 My sonne kepe wel thy tong, and kepe thy frend,
 A wicked tong is worse than is a fend;
 My sonne, from any fende men may 'hem blesse,
 My sonne, God of his endlesse godenesse 1900
 Wallid a tong with tethe, and lippis eke,
 For man shuld him avisin what he speke;
 My sonne, full oftin for to mikill speche
 Hath many' a man be spilt, as clerkis teche,
 But for lite speche, spokin avisdly
 Is no man shent, to spekin generally;
 My sonne, thy tong yshouldist thou restrain
 At all timis, but whan thou doest thy pain
 To speke of God, in honour and praier;
 The first vertue my sonne, if thou wolt lere, 1910
 Is to restrain, and kepin well thy tong,
 Thus lemin children, whan that thei be yonge,
 My sonne, of mikill speking unavised
 (There whan lasse speking had inough suffised)
 Comith moche harme; thus was me told and taught.

In mochl speche there ne sin wantith not.
 Wolfe thou wherfore a rakell tong yserveth?
 Right as a sworde forcuttith and forkerveth
 An arme on two, my derè sonne right so
 A tong ycuttith frendship all atwo; 1920
 A jangler is to God abhominable,
 Rede Salomon, so wise and honourable,
 Rede David in his Psalms, rede Senecke,
 My sonne speke not, but with thyin hed thow beck,
 Dissimule' as thou were dese, if that thou here
 A janglour speke of perilous mattere.
 The Fleming sayeth, and lerne it if thou lest,
 That lityl jangling causith mochl reste;
 My sonne, if thou no wickid word hast said
 The thereof dredè not to be bewraid, 1930
 But he that hath missaid, I dare well sain
 He maie by no waie clepe his worde again,
 Thing that is saied, is saied, and forth it goth,
 Though him repent, or him be ner so loth,
 He is his thrall to whom that he hath saied
 A tale for whiche he is now ill apaied;
 My sonne beware, and be non authour new
 Of tidinges, whether thei be false or true,
 Where so thou come, emongis hie or lowe
 Kepe well thy tong, and thinke upon the crowe. 1940

Here endeth the MANCIPLE'S TALE.

Here

Here beginneth the PLOWMAN's PROLOGUE.

This and the Tale is in none of the MSS that I have seen, nor in any of the first Printed Books; Caxton and Pynsent, I presume, durst not publish it: The former printed this Poet's Works in Westminster-Abbey, and both before the Abolition of Popery; and the MSS being before that, I fancy the Scriveners were prohibited transcribing it, and enjoyn'd to subscribe an Instrument at the end of the Canterbury Tales, call'd his Retraction. So that if this Tale had not been carefully collected and preserv'd in Master Stowe's Library, as the Editor of Illip's 1602 Book says he has seen it, in a hand of near to Chaucer's time for Antiquity, in all likelihood it had been lost.

THE Plowman pluckid up his plowe,
Whan Midsomer Mone was comen' in,
And saied his bestes should ete inowe,
And lige in graspe up to the chin,
Thei ben feble both Oxe and Cowe,
Of 'hem n'is left but bone and skinne,
He shoke of there, and coulter' off drowe,
And honged his harnis on a pinne.

He toke his tabarde and staffe eke,
And on his hedde he set his hat,
And saied he would sainct Thomas seke,
On pilgrimage he goth forth plat;
In scrippe he bare bothe bred and lekes,
He was forswonke and all forswat,
Men might have sene through both his ehekes,
And every wang tothe where it sat.

Our hoste behelde well all about,
And sawe this man was Sunne ibrent,
He knewe well by his singid snout,
And by his clothes that were to rent,
He was a man wont walke about,
He n'as not aye in cloister pent,
Ne couthe religiouseliche lout,
And therefore was he full ill shent.

Our hoste him axed, what mani art thou?
Sir Hoste (qð he) I am an hine,

For I am wont to go to plow,
And erne my mete yer that I dine,
To swette and swinke I make avowe,
My wife and babes therewith to finde, 1970
And servin God and I wist how,
But we leude men yben full blinde.

For clerkes saie we shullin be fain
For ther livelod to swette and swinke;
And thei right nought us give again, 1950
Neither to ete ne yet to drinke,
Thei mowe by lawe, as that thei fain,
Us curse and dampne to hell'is brinke,
And thus thei puttin us to pain
With candlis queint and bell'is clinke. 1980

Thei make us thrallis at ther lust,
And fain we mowe not els be saved,
Thei have the corne and we the dust,
Who gainfayes them, they saye he raved.
What? man (qð our hoste) canst thou preche?
Come nere and tel some holy thing. 1960
Sir, qð he, I herd onis teche
A preeft in pulpit gode preching.

Saie on, qð he, I The besече.
Sir I am redy at your bidding, 1980
I praie that no man me reproche,
While that I am my tale telling.

Thus endeth the PROLOGUE.

Here

Here foloweth the first Part of the TALE.

A Complaint against the Pride and Covetousness of the Clergy, made no doubt by Chaucer, says the Editor of Chaucer's Works; Printed for Ad. Islip at London. A.D. 1602.

A Full sterne strief is stirid newe,
In many stedis in a stounde,
Of sondry sedis that ben sewe,
It semith that some ben unsounde,
For some be grete growin on grounde,
Some ben fouble, simple and small,
Whethir of 'hem is falsir founde,
The falsir foule mote him bifall.

That one side is that I of tell,
Popis, Cardinals, and Prelates;
Parsons, Monkis, and Freris fell,
Priours, Abbotes, of grete estates;
Of heven and hell thei kepe the yeates,
And Peter's successours ben all,
And this is demid by old dates;
But falshed foule mote it befall.

The othir side ben pore and pale,
And peple yput out of prese,
And femin caitiffes fore a cale,
And er in one without encrese,
Iclepid lollers and londlese,
Who toteth on 'hem thei ben untall,
Thei ben arayid all for pece,
But falshed foule mote it befall.

Many a countrey have I fought;
To knowe the falsir of these two,
But aye my travaile was for nought
All so ferre as I have ygo,
But as I wandrid in a wro
Within a wode beside a wall,
Two foulis sawe I sittin tho,
The falsir foule mote him befall.

That one did plete on the Popes side,
A Griffon of a grimme stature,
A Pellicane withoutin pride
To these lollers ylaied his lure,
He mused his mattir in mesure
To counsaile, Christ ay gan he call,
The Griffon shewed as sharpe as fire,
But falshed foule mote it befall.

The Pellicane began to preche
Bothe of mercie and of mekenesse;
And saied that Christ so gan us teche,
And meke and merciable gan blesse,
The' Evangely berith witnesse,
A lambe he likeneth Christ ovre' all,
In tokening that he mekist was,
Sith pride was out of hevin fall.

And so should every Christened be,
Priestis, and Peter's successours,
Beth lowliche and of lowe degre,
And usin none yerthly honours,
Ne croune, ne curious covertours,
Ne pilloure, ne othir proude pall;
Ne to cofrin up grete tresours,
For falshed foule mote it befall.

Priestis should for no cattill plede,
But chaftin 'hem in charite,
Ne to no battaile should men lede
For inhaunsing ther owne degre;
Nat willin sittinges in hie se,
Ne soverainte in hous ne hall,
Worldly worship defie and fle,
Who willith highnes foule shall fall.

Alas! who maie soche sainctis call
That wilnith welde yerthly honour;
Lowe as Lucifere soche shall fall,
In balefull blacknesse build ther boure,
That eggith peple to erreure,
And makith them unto 'hem thrall,
To Christ I holde soche one traitour,
Lowe as Lucifer soche shall fall.

That willith to be kingis peres;
And higher than the Emperour,
And some that werin but pore Freres
Now wollin waxe a warriour;
God he is not ther governour,
That holdith none his permagall,
While cove'tise is ther counsaillour,
All soche falskede mote nedis fall.

That hie on horse willith to ride
In glitterande golde of grete araie;
Paintid and portrid all in pride,
No common knight maie go so gaie;
Chauge of clothing every daie,
With goldin girdils grete and small,
As boistous as is Bere at baie,
All soche falsshed mote nedis fall.

With pride punishith thei the pore;
And some one thei sustain with sale,
Of holie churche makith an hore,
And fill ther wombe with wine and ale;
With money fille thei many a male;
And chaffrin churchis when thei fall,
And telle the peple a leude tale,
Soche false faitours foule 'hem befall.

Thei fede of many manit metes,
With song and solas sitting long,
And fillith ther wombe, and fast fretes,
And from the mete unto the gong,
And astir mete with harpe and long,
And eche man mote 'hem Lordis call,
And hote spicis evir emong,
Soche false faitours foule 'hem befall.

Miters thei werin mo than two
Iperlid as the quen'is hedde,
A staffe of golde, and pirrie lo!
As hevie as' it were made of ledde,
With clothe of gold bothe newe and redde,
With glitterande gold as grene as gall,
By dome thei dampne men to be dedde,
All soche faitours foule 'hem befall.

And Christ's peple proudly curse
 With brode boke, and braying bell,
 And to put pennies in ther purse
 Thei wolle sell bothe hevin and hell,
 In ther sentence and thou wilt dwell
 Thei willin gessie in ther gaie hall,
 And though the soth thou of hem tell
 In the grete cursing shalt thou fall.

That is yblessid, that thei blesse,
 And cursid that thei cursin wolle,
 And thus the peple thei oppresse,
 And have ther lordshippis at full,
 And many be marchauntes of wolle,
 And to purs pennies wolle come thrall,
 The pore peple thei al to pull,
 Suche false faitours foule 'hem befall.

Lordis also mote to 'hem loute
 Obeyfaunt to ther brode blessing,
 Thei ridin with ther royal route
 On a coursir, as' it were a king,
 With saddle of golde glittering,
 With curious harneis quaintly crallit,
 Stiropis gaie of golde mastling
 All suche falsched foule may befall it.

Christes ministers clepid thei bene,
 And rulin al in robberie,
 But Antichriste thei servin clene,
 Attirid al in tirannie,
 Witnesse of John his prophecie,
 Antichriste is ther admirall,
 Tiffelers attired in trecherie,
 Al suche faitours foule 'hem befall.

Who faith that some of 'hem may sinne
 He shal be domid to be ded,
 Some of 'hem wollein gladly winne
 Al ayenst that whiche God forbed,
 Al holiest they clepe ther hed,
 That of ther rule is full regall,
 Alas that evir thei ere bred!
 For al such falsched wol foule fall.

Ther hed covitith al honour,
 To be worshipped in worde and dede,
 Kingis mote to him knele and coure
 To the Apostles that Christ forbode,
 To popis heste such take more hede
 Than to kepe Christes commaundement,
 Of gold and silvir ben ther wede,
 Thei holde him hole omnipotent.

He ordaineth by his ordinaunce
 To parishe priestis a powere,
 To' anothir a gretir avaunce,
 A gretir point to his mistere,
 But for he' is highist in erth here
 To him reserveth he many' a point,
 But unto Christ, that hath no pere,
 Reservith he no pin, no joynt.

So semith he abovin all,
 And Christ abovin him nothings,
 Whan that he sittith in his stall,
 Dampnith and savith as him thinke,
 Suche pride tofore hie God doth stinke,
 An angel bad John to' him not knele,
 Only to God do his bowinge,
 Soche worship-willers mote ill fele.

Thei ne clepe Christ but sanctus Deus,
 And clepe ther hed sanctissimus,

All they that suche a secte sewis
 I trowe thei takin 'hem amisse,
 In erth here they havin ther blisse,
 Ther hie mastir is Belial,
 Christ his pore peple from 'hem wisse,
 For al suche false will foule befall.

They mowin both ybinde and lose,
 And all is for ther holy life
 To save or dampne they mowin chose,
 Betwene 'hem now is a grete strife,
 Many' a man is killed with a knife,
 To wete which havin lordship shall,
 For suche Christ suffrid woundis five,
 For all suche falsched will foule fall.

Christ said: Qui gladio percussit
 With swerde surely he shall die,
 He bad his priestis pece and grith,
 And bad 'hem not drede for to die,
 And bad them be both simple' and slye
 And carke not for no cattell,
 And truste on God that sitteth on hie,
 For al false shal full foule befall.

These wollein make men to swere,
 Ayenst Christ's commaundement,
 And Christ's members al to tere,
 On rode as he were newe yrent,
 Suche lawes thei makin by assent
 Eche on it throwith as a ball,
 And thus the pore be fully shent,
 But falsched foule it shulle befall.

Ne usin thei no simonie
 But selle churchis and priorities,
 Ne they usin to none envie
 But cursin al 'hem contraries,
 And hirith men by daies and yeres
 With strength to hold 'hem in ther stall,
 And culle all ther adversaries,
 Therefore falsched foule thou them fall.

With purse they purchase personage,
 With purse thei payin 'hem to plede,
 And men of warre thei wollein wage
 To bring ther enemies to dede,
 And lordis livis they wol lede,
 And muchil take, and give but small,
 But he' it so get, from it shal shede,
 And make suche false right foule yfall.

They halowe nothing but for hire,
 Ne churche, ne font, ne veltiment
 And make orders in every shire,
 But priestis pay for the parchment,
 Of riatours they takin rent,
 Therwith they smere the shep's skall,
 For many churches ben suspent,
 Al suche falsched foule it befall.

Some livith not in lecherie,
 But haunte wenchis, widows, and wives,
 And punish the pore for putre,
 Themselfe it usith al ther lives,
 And but a man to them him shrives,
 To hevin come he nevir shall,
 He shal be cursed as be catives,
 To hel thei saine that he shal fall.

There was more mercy' in Maximine,
 And Nero, that nevir was gode,
 Than there is now in some of them,
 Whan he hath on his furrid hode,

They

They folowe Christ that shedde his blode
To heven, as bucket to the wall,
Suche wrechis yben worfe than wode,
And al fuche faitours foule 'hem fall.

They give ther almis to the riche,
To mainteynours, and men of lawe,
For to lordis they wol be liche,
An harlottes sonne not worth an hawe,
Sothfastnesse allè fuche han flawe,
They kembe ther crokettes with cristall,
And drede of God they have doune drawe,
Al fuche faitours foule 'hem befall.

They make parsons for the pennie,
And Canons and ther Cardinals,
Unnethe amongst 'hem al is any
That ne hath glosed the gospel fals,
For Christ made ner no Cathedrals,
Ne with him was no Cardinall
With a redde hatte, as use minstrals,
But falsched foule mote it befall.

Ther tithing, and ther offring bothe
They clemith by possession,
Ne therof n'il they none forgo,
But robbin men as a raunsome,
The tithing of Turpe lucrum
With these maisters is veniall,
Tithinge of bribery, and larson
Will make falsched full foule to fall.

They takin to ferme ther sompnours
To harme the peple what they may,
To pardoners, and false faitours
Thei sell ther seles I dare well say,
And all to holdin gret arraie,
To multiplie 'hem more metall,
They drede ful liril dom'is day,
Whan al fuche falsched shal foule fall.

Suche harlottes shul men disclaunder,
For that they shullin make them gre,
And ben as proud as Alexander,
And sain to the pore, wo be ye,
By yere eche priest shal paie his fe,
For to encrese his lemmans call,
Suche herdis shul wel ivil the,
And al fuche false shal foule befall.

And if a man be falsely famed,
And wol ymake purgacioun,
Than wol the' officers be agramed,
And assign him fro toun to toun,
So nede he must payin raunsome,
Though he be clene as is cristall,
And than have an absolution,
But al fuche false shal foule befall.

Though he be giltye of the dede,
And that he may the money paie,
Al the while his purse wol yblede
He may use it fro day to day,
The bishopes officers gone gay,
And this game they use ovir all,
The pore to pil is al their pray,
But al fuche false shul foule befall.

Alas! God ordained no fuche lawe,
Ne no fuche crafte of covetise,
But he forbad it by his lawe,
Suche rulers mowen of God agrise,
For al his rulis ben rightwise,
These newe pointis ben pure papall,

And Godd'is lawe they all dispice,
And al fuche faitours shul foule fall.

2240 They saine that Peter had the key
Of heven and hel, to have and holde,
I trowe Peter toke no money
For no finnis that he yfolde,
Suche successours yben to bolde,
In winning all ther witte they wral,
2310 Ther conscience is waxin colde,
And al fuche faitours foule 'hem fal.

Peter was ner so grete a fole
To leve his key with fuche a lorell,
Or take fuche curfid soc or tole,
2250 He was advysid nothing well,
I trowe they have the key of hell,
Their maistir is of that marshall,
For there thei dresin 'hem to dwell,
And with false Lucifer to fall. 2320

Thei ben as proude as Lucifarre,
As angry, and as envious,
From a gode faith they ben ful farre,
In cove'tise they ben curious,
2260 To catche catil as covitous
As hounde, that for hungre wol yall,
Ungodly, and ungracious,
And nedely fuche false shal foule fall.

The Pope, and he were Peter's heire,
Me thinke he errith in this case,
2330 Whan choise of bishop's in dispaire
To chosin 'hem in divers place,
A lorde shal write to him for grace,
For his clerke anone pray he shal,
So shal he spedin his purchase,
2270 And al fuche false foule 'hem befall.

Although he can no manir gode
A lord'is prayir shal be spedde,
Though he be wilde of wil or wode,
2340 Nat understanding what men redde,
A leude bostir, that God forbedde,
As gode a Bishoppe' is my horse Ball,
Suche a Pope is full foule bestede,
And at the laste wol foule yfall.

2280 He makith Priestes for ertthly thanke,
And not at all for Christ'is sake,
Suche that yben ful fat and ranke,
To foul'is hele none hede they take,
Al is wel done what er they make,
For they shal answere ones for all,
2350 For world'is thank such worch and wake,
And al fuche false shal foule befall.

Suche that can nat ysay ther Crede,
With prayir shul be made Prelates,
2290 Nothir canne thei the gospels rede,
Suche shul now weldin hie estates,
The hie godes frendship 'hem makes,
Thei totith on ther summe total,
Suche bere the keyes of hell'is yates,
2360 And all fuche false shal foule befall.

Thei forsakin for Christ'is love
Travaile, and hungre, thurst, and colde,
They ben ordrid or al above,
Out of youthed til they ben olde
2300 By the' dore they go nat to the folde,
To helpe ther shepe they nought travaile,
For hirid men al fuche I holde,
And al fuche false foule 'hem befall.

A a a

For

For Christ our king thei wol forfakē,
 And knowe him nought for his povertē,
 For Christ's love they wol awake
 And drinke piement ale aperte,
 Of God they seme nothing aferde,
 As lusty live, as Lamual,
 And drive ther shepe into desert,
 Al fuche false faitours shul foule fal.

Christ yhad xii. Apostles here,
 Nowe say they, there may be but one,
 That may not erre in no manere,
 Who leve not this ben lost echone,
 Peter errid, so did not John,
 Why is he cleped the principall?
 Christe cleped him Peter, not the Stone,
 Al false faitours foule 'hem befall.

Why cursin they the croisery
 Christ's Christian creturis?
 For bytwene them is now envy
 To be enhaunlid in honours;
 Christin livers with ther labours,
 For they levin on no mortal,
 Ben do to deth with dishonours,
 And al fuche false foule 'hem befall.

What knoweth a tilloure at the plowe
 The Pop's name, and what he hate?
 His crede suffisith to' him inowe,
 And knoweth a cardi'nal by his hatte;
 Rough is the pore unrightly latte,
 That knowith Christ his God royal;
 Suche maters be not worth a gnatte,
 But fuche false faitours foule 'hem fal.

A king shal knele and kisse his shoue,
 Christ let a sinful kisse his fete,
 Me thinke he holdeth him hie inowe,
 So Lucifer did, that hie set,
 Suche one me thinke himsele foryet,
 Or to the trouthe he was nat cal,
 Christe that suffrid woundis wete
 Shall make all fuche falsched foule fall.

They layith out ther large nettes
 For to takin silvir and golde,
 Thei fillin coffers, and sackes fettes
 There as they soulis catchin sholde,
 Ther servauntes be to them unholde
 But they can doublin ther rental,
 To bigge 'hem castles, bigge 'hem holde,
 And al fuche false foule 'hem befall.

Here endeth the first parte of this tale, and hereafter foloweth the seconde parte.

TO accorde what this wordè fall
 No more Englishe ne can I finde,
 Shewin anothir nowe I shall,
 For I have moche to saye behinde,
 How priestis han the peple pinde,
 As curteis Christe yhath me kinde,
 And put this matter in my minde,
 To make this manir men amende.

Shortely to shende 'hem, and shewe nowe
 How wrongfully they werche and walke,
 Of hie God nothing tell, ne howe,
 But in Goddes worde tell many a balke,
 In harnis holde 'hem and in halke,
 And prechen' of tithis and offende,
 And untruely' of the gospel talke,
 For his mercy God it amende.

What els is Antichriste to saie
 But even Christ's adversarie?
 Suche hath now ben many a daie
 To Christ's biddingful contrarie,
 That from the trouthe clene ywarry,
 Out of the way they ben ywende,
 And Christ's peple' untruely cary,
 God for his pitie it amende.

They live contrary to Christes life,
 In hie pride against mekenesse,
 Against suffraunce they usin strife,
 And angre ayenst sobrenesse,
 Ayenst wisdom wilfulnesse,
 To Christ's talis lital tende,
 Against mesure outragiousnesse,
 But whan God wol, it may amende.

Lordely life ayenst lowlinesse,
 And demin al without mercy,
 And covetise ayenst largesse,
 Ayenst trouthe trechery,
 And ayenst almesse envy,
 Ayenst Christ they comprehende,
 For chastite mainteine leche'ry,
 God for his grace this amende.

Against penaunce thei use delightes,
 Ayenst suffraunce strong defence,
 Ayenst God they usin ill rightes,
 Ayenst pitie punishmentes,
 Open' evil ayenst continence,
 Ther wickid winning worse dispende,
 Sobirnesse sette in to dispende,
 God for his godenesse it amende.

Why cleimin they holy' his powere
 And wranglin ayenst al his hestes?
 His living folowe thei nought here,
 But livin worse than witlesse bestes,
 Of fishe and fleshe they lovin festes,
 As lordis thei ben brode ikende,
 Of Godd's pore thei hatin gestes,
 God for his mercy this amende.

With Dives fuche shal have ther dome,
 That faine that they be Christ's frendes,
 And do nothing as they should done,
 Al fuche ben falsir than ben fendes,
 On the peple they ley fuche bendes,
 As God in erth they han offende,
 Succour for such Christe now send us,
 And for his mercy this amende.

A token' of Antichrist they be
 His careckes ben now wide iknowe,
 Receved to preche shal no man be,
 Without token of him, I trowe,
 Eche christin priest to prechin owe
 From God above, thei ben yfende
 Goddes word to al folke for to showe,
 And sinful man for to amende.

Christ sent the pore for to preche,
 The royal riche he did not so,
 Now dare no pore the peple teche,
 For Antichrist is al ther foe,
 Among the peple he mote go,
 He hath biddin al fuche suspende,
 Some hath he hent, and thinketh yet mo,
 But al this God may wel amende.

Al tho that han the worlde forsake,
 And livin lowly, as God badde,

Into

Into ther prifon fhulle be take,
Betin and boundin, and forth ladde,
Hereof I rede no man be dradde,
Christ faid that his fhould be yfhende,
Eche man ought hereof to be gladde,
For God ful wel it wol amende.

They take on 'hem royall power,
And fay they havin fwerdis two,
One curfe to hel, one fle men here,
At his taking Christ had no mo,
Yet Peter had but one of tho,
And Christ to him fmite gan defende,
And into the' fheth badde put it tho,
And al fuche mifcheves God amende.

Christ bad Peter to kepe his fhepe,
And with his sworde forbade 'hem fmite,
Swerde is no tole with fhepe to kepe,
But to fhepherdas that fhepe wol bite,
Me thinke fuche fhepherdas ben to wite
Who' ayen ther fhepe with fwerde contende,
They drive ther fhepe with grete difpite,
But al this God may well amende.

Peter's fuccellours be thei nought,
Whom Christ ymade his chefe pafoure,
A fwerde no fhepherde ufin ought,
But he would fle, as a bochoure,
Who fo were Peter's fuccelloure
Should bere his fhepe til his backe bende,
And shadowe 'hem from every fhoure,
And al this God may wel amende.

Succellours to Peter ben thefe
In that, that Peter Christe forfoke,
That levir had God's love to lefe,
Than fhepherde had to lefe his hoke,
He culleth the fhepe as doth the Coke,
Of 'hem takin they woll untrende,
And fallfely glose the Gofpell boke,
God for his mercy them amende.

Whan Christ had take Peter the kay
Christ faide, he muft ydie for man,
That Peter to Christ gan withfay,
Christe bad him go behinde Sathan,
Suche counfailours many' of thefe han,
For world's wele God to offende,
Peters fuccellours they ben than,
But al fuche God may wel amende.

For Sathan is to fay no more
But he that contrary to Christ is,
In this they lernin Peter's lore,
They fegin him whan he did miffe,
They folowe him forsoth in this
That Christ would Peter reprehende,
But nat that longith to' hevin bliffe,
God for his mercy 'hem amende.

Thei none Apofle fewen, in cafe
Of ought that I can underftonde,
But him that betraied Christ, Judas,
That bare the purfe in every londe,
And al that he might fette on honde
He hidde and ftale, and it mifpende,
His rule thefe traitours han in honde,
Almighty God all fuche amende.

And at the laft his Lorde gan tray
Curfidly through falfe covetife,
So would thefe traine him for money,
And they ywifin in what wife,

2500 They be fike' of the felfe enfle,
From all fothneffe they ben yfhende,
And covetife chaunge with quentife,
Almighty God al fuche amende.

2510 Were Christ upon erth here efte fone,
Thefe wouldin dampne him to die,
All his heftis they han fordene,
And faine his fawes ben herefie,
Ayenft his commaundementes they crie;
And dampnin all his to be brende,
For thei ne like fuche lofengrie,
God Almighty all fuche amende.

2520 Thefe han more might in Englande here
Than hath the king-and all his lawe;
They han purchafid fuche powere
To takin 'hem whom list not knawe,
And fay that herefie' is ther fawe,
And fo to prifon wol 'hem fende,
It was not fo by eldir dawe,
God for his mercy it amende.

2530 The king's lawe wol no man deme
Angerliche withoutin anfwere,
But if any man thefe mifqueme
He fhall be baightid as a bere,
And yet wel worfe they wol him tere,
And in prifon wollin him pende
In ginis, and in othir gere
Whan that God woll, it may amende.

2540 The king ne taxith nat his men
But by' affent of the commi'nalte,
But thefe eche yere wol raunfom 'hem
Maiftirfully, more than dothe he,
Ther felis by yere bettir be
Than is the king's in extende,
Ther officers han gretir fe
But alle this mifcheve God amende.

2550 Who fo wol prove a testament,
That is nat al worth tennè ponde,
He fhall paye for the parchement
The thirde of the money all rounde,
Thus the pore peple is ranfoude,
They fay fuche parte t'em fhould apende;
There as they gripen' it goeth to grounde,
God for his mercy it amende.

2560 A fimple fornicacion
Twenty fhillingis he fhall pay,
And than have abfolucion
And al the yere ufe it he may,
Thus thei lettin 'hem go aftray,
Thei recke nat though the foule be brende;
Thefe kepin evill Peter's kay,
And al fuche fhepherdas God amende.

2570 Wondir is, that the parliamente,
And al the lordis of this londe,
Here to takin fo lite entente
To helpe the peple' out of ther honde;
For thei ben hardir in ther bonde,
Worfe bete, and cruellir ybrende,
Than to the king is underftand,
God him helpe this for to amende.

2580 What Bifhoppes, what religions
Han in this lande as muche lay fe,
Lordefhippis and poffeffions,
More than Lordis, it femith me;
That makith 'hem lefe charite,
They mowin not to God attende,

2590 In

In erth thei have so highe degre;
God for his mercy it amende.

The Empe'rou yafe the Pope somtime
So highe lordeship him about,
That at the last the fely kime,
The proude Pope yput him out,
So of this relme is in grete dout,
But lordes beware and them defende,
For nowe these folke be wondir stoute,
The King and Lords now this amende. 2640

Thus endeth the seconde parte of this tale, and hereafter foloweth the thirde.

MOyses lawe forbode it tho
That prestis should no lordshippes welde,
Christ's gospels biddith also
That they should no lordshippis helde,
Christes apostels were ner so bolde
No suche lordshippes to 'hem embrace,
But sklere ther shepe and kepe ther folde,
May God amende 'hem for his grace.

For thei ne ben but counterfete,
Men may yknow 'hem by ther fruite, 2650
Ther greteneffe maketh 'hem God foryete,
And take his mekenesse in dispite,
And thei were pore and had but lite,
Thei n'old nat demen' afir the face,
Norishe ther shepe, and 'hem nat bite,
May God amende 'hem for his grace.

Griffon.

What canst thou preche ayenst Chanons
That men yclepin seculere?
Peli. Thei ben curates of many tounes,
On yerth they havin grete powere, 2660
They have grete prebendis and dere,
Some two or thre, and some have mo
A parsonage to ben playing fere,
And yet thei serve the king also,

And let to ferme all that fare
To whom that wol moste give therfore,
Some wollin spende, and some woll spare,
And some wol laye it up in store,
A cure of soule they care not fore, 2670
So that they mowin money take,
Whethir ther soules be wonne or lore,
Ther profites they woll not forsake.

They have a ge'nering procuratour,
That can the pore peple enplede,
And robbe 'hem as a ravinour,
And to his lorde the mony lede,
And catche of quicke and eke of dede,
And richin him and his lorde eke,
And to robbe the pore give gode rede 2680
Of olde and yonge, of hole and sicke.

Therwith they purchase 'hem lay fe
In londe, there as 'hem likith best,
And buildin brode as a cite
Both in the Est, and in the West,
To purchase thus they ben ful prest,
But on the pore they woll nought spende,
Ne no gode give to Godd's gest,
Ne sende him some that all hath sende.

By ther service soche wollin live,
And trust that othir to trefure, 2690
Though all ther parishe die unshrive,
Thei woll nat givin a rose floure,

Ther life should be as a mirrour
Both to lerid and leude also,
And teche the folke ther lele labour,
Soche mister men ben all misgo.

Some of 'hem yben full harde nigges,
And some of 'hem ben proude and gaie, 2700
Some spendin ther gode upon gigges,
And findin 'hem of grete araie,
Alas! what thinke these men to saie
That thus dispendin Godd's gode
At the grete dredefull dom's daie?
Soche wretchis shull be worse than wode.

Some ther churchis nevir ne sie,
Ne ner o penie thi'ir sende,
Though that the pore for hungir die,
O penie' on 'hem will thei not spende, 2710
Have thei receiving of the rente
Thei recke ner of the remenaunt,
Alas! the devill hath clene 'hem blente,
Soche one is Sathanes sojournaunt.

And use horedome and harlottrie,
And covetise, and pompe, and pride,
And slothe, and wrathe, and eke envie,
And sewin sinne by every side,
Alas! where thinkin soche t' abide?
How woll thei ther accomptis yeld?
From hie God thei mowe 'hem not hide, 2720
Soche willers witte' is not worth a nelde.

Thei ben so rotid in richeffe
That Christ's povert is foryet,
Yservid with so many messe
Hem thinke that Manna is no mete, 2660
All is gode that thei mowin gete,
Thei wene to livin evirmore,
But whan that God at dome is sete,
Soche trefour is a feble store.

Unnethis mote thei Matins saie
For counting and for courtholding, 2730
And yet he jangilith as Jaie,
And understont himself nothing,
He woll yserve bothe Erle and King
For his finding and for his fe,
And hide his tithing and offring,
This is a feble charite.

Othir thei ben proude, or cove'tous,
Or elles thei ben hard, or hungrie,
Or thei ben libe'rall or lecherous,
Or els medlers with Marchandrie, 2740
Maintainers of men with maistrise,
Or stewardes, countours, or pledours,
And serve God in ypocrisie,
Soche priestis ben Christes false traitours.

Thei ben false, thei ben vengeable,
And begile men in Christ's name,
Thei ben unstedfast and unstable,
To traie ther Lorde, 'hem thinke no shame, 2750
To servin God thei ben full lame,
Godd's thevis, and falsely stele,
And falsely Godd's worde defame,
In winning is ther world's wele.

Antichrist these priestis serve all,
I praie The who maie sayin naie?
With Antichrist soche shullin fall,
Thei folowen him in dede and faie, 2690
Thei servin him in riche araie,
To servin Christ soche falsely fain,

Why,

Why, at the dredfull dom's daie
Shull thei not folowe him to pain,

That knowen 'hem self that thei doen ill
Ayenst Christ's commaundement,
And amende 'hem ner ne will,
But serve Sathan by one assent?
Who sayith sothe he shall be shent,
Or spekeith ayenst ther false living,
Who so well livith shall be brent,
For soche ben gretir than the king.

Popis, Bishops, and Cardinals,
Chanons, and Parsons, and Vicare
In Goddes service I trowe ben fals,
That Sacramentis sellin here,
And ben as proude as Lucifere,
Eche man loke whether that I lie,
Who so spekeith ayenst ther powere
It shall be holdin herefie.

Lokith how many orders take
Onely of Christ, for his service,
That the world's godis forsake;
Who so take ordirs othir wise,
I trowe that thei shall sore agrise,
For all the glose, that thei conne,
All ne sewin not this assise,
In evill time thei thus begonne.

Loke how many emong 'hem all
Ne holdin not this hie waie,
With Antichrist thei shullin fall,
For that thei wollin God betraie,
God amende 'hem that best ymaie,
For many men thei makin shende,
Thei wetin well the sothe I saie,
But the devill hath soule 'hem blende.

Some of 'hem on ther Churchis dwell
Apparailled porely, proude of porte,
The seven sacramentes thei doen sell,
In cattell catching' is ther comfort,
Of eche mattir thei wollin melle,
To doen 'hem wrong is ther disport,
To' afraie the peple thei ben fell,
And hold 'hem lower than doeth the lorde.

And for the tithing of a Ducke,
Or of an Apple, or an Aie,
Thei make men swere upon a boke,
Lo! thus thei foulin Christ's saie,
Soche berin evill hevin kaie,
Thei mowin assoile, thei mowe thrive,
With mennis wivis strongly plaie,
And with true tillers sturte and strive.

At the wrestling, and at the wake,
And the chief chauntours at the nale,
Market beters, and medling make,
Hoppen' and houtin with heve and hale,
At faire freshe, and at wine stale
Thei dine and drinke, and make debate,
The seven Sacramentes set a faile,
Kepe soche the kaies of hevin gate?

Mennis wivis thei wollin hold,
And though that thei ben right fory,
To speke thei shull not be so bold,
For sompning to' the Consistory,
And make 'hem saie with mouthe I lie,
Though thei it sawin with ther eye
His lemman holdin opiny,
No man so hardy to aske why.

2760

He woll have tithing and offring,
Maugre whofoevir it grutche,
And twise on the daie he woll sing,
Godd's priestis ne were none soche,
He mote go hunte with dogge and biche,
And blowen his horne, and cryin hey,
And forcerie usen as a Witche,
Soche kepin evill Peter's key.

2830

2770

Yet thei mote have some stocke or stone
Gaily paintid, and proudly dight,
To makin men livin upon,
And saie that it is full of might,
About soche men set up grete light,
Other soche stockes shull stande therby,
As darke as if it were midnight,
For it maie makin no mastreie.

2780

That it the leude peple se mowe,
Thou Mary, thou worchest wondir thinges,
About that, that men offrin to,
Hongin brochis, ouchis, and ringes,
The priest purchasith the offringes,
But he n'll offir to' none Image,
Wo is the soule that he forsinges,
That prechith for soche pilgrimage!

2790

To men and women that ben pore,
Which that ben Christ's owne likenesse,
Men shullin offir at ther dore,
That suffre hungir and distresse,
And to soche Image offir lesse,
That mowe not fele ne thirste ne cold,
The pore in spirite gan Christ blesse,
Therefore offrit to feble' and old.

2850

2800

Buckilers brode, and swardis long,
Baudrike, with baselardis kene,
Soche toles about ther necke thei hong,
With Antichrist soche priestis ben,
Upon ther dedes it is well sene
Whom thei servin, whom thei honouren,
Antichrist's thei ben all clene,
And Godd's godes falsly devouren.

2860

Of scarlet and grene gaie gounes,
That mote be shapin for the newe,
To clippin and kiffin in tounes
The damoseles that to the daunce sewe,
Cuttid clothis to sewe ther hewe,
With longè pikis on ther shone,
Our Godd's Gospell is not true,
Eithir thei serve the devill or none.

2170

2110

Now ben the priestis pokes so wide,
Men must enlarge the vestiment,
The holy Gospell thei doen hide
For the contrarien in raiment,
Soche priestes of Lucifer ben sent,
Like conquerours thei ben araied,
The proude pendautes at ther ars pent,
Falsely the trueth thei han betraied.

2880

2820

Shrift silvir soche wollin askeis,
And wollin men crepe to the crouche,
None of the Sacramentes save askis,
Withoutin mede shall no man touche,
On ther Bishop ther warant vouche,
That is a lawe of the decre,
With mede and money thus thei mouche,
And thus thei sain is charite.

Within the middis of ther Masse
Thei n'll have no man but for hire,

2890
And

And full shortly let forth ypassé,
 Soche shull men findin in eche shire,
 That Parsonages for game desire,
 To live in liking and in lustes,
 I dare not fain, Sans ose jeo dire
 That soche ben Antichrist's priestes.

Or thei yef the Bishoppis why,
 Or thei mote ben in his service,
 And holdin forth ther harlottrie,
 Soche Prelates ben of feble' emprise,
 Of Godd's grame soche men agrise,
 For soche mattirs that takin mede,
 How thei' excuse 'hem, and in what wise
 Me thinkith thei ought gretely drede.

Thei fain that it to no man longeth
 To reprove them though that thei erre,
 But falsly Godd's godes thei fongeth,
 And therwith maintein wo and werre,
 Ther dedes should be as bright as sterre,
 Ther living, leude mann's light,
 Thei saie the Pope ne maie not erre,
 Nede must that passin mann's might:

Though' a priest lie with his lemman' al night,
 And tellen his felowe, and he him,
 He goith to Masse anon right,
 And saie the singeth out of sinne,
 His birde abideth him at his inne,
 And dighteth his diner the mene while,
 He singeth his Masse for he would winne,
 And so he wenith God begile.

'Hem thinkith long till thei be met,
 And that thei use forth all the yere,
 Emong the folke whan he is set
 He holdith no man half his pere,
 Of the Bishop he hath powere
 To soile men, or els thei ben lore,
 His absolucion maketh them skere,
 Wo is the soule that he singeth for.

The Griffon began for to thirete
 And saied, of Monkis canst thou ought? 2930
 The Pelli'can saied, thei ben full grete,
 And in this world moche wo hath wrought,
 Sainct Benet, that ther ordir brought,
 Ne made 'hem ner in soche manere,
 I trowe it came ner in his thought
 That thei should use so grete powere.

That a man should a Monke lorde call,
 Ne serve him on knees, as a king;
 He is as proude as Prince in pall,
 In mete, and drinke, and in all thing, 2940
 Some werin a miter and ring
 With double Worstid well idight,
 With roiall mete and richè drinke,
 And ride on courser as a knight.

With haukis and with houndis eke,
 With broche or ouchis on his hode,
 Some saie no Masse in all a weke,
 Of deinties is ther moste fode,
 With lordshippis and with bondmen,
 This is a roiall regioun,
 Sainct Benet made ner non of 'hem
 To have lordship of man ne toun.

Now thei ben queint and curious,
 With fine clothe clad and servid clene,
 Proude, and angrie, and envious,
 Malice is mochil that thei mene,

In catching craftie and covetous,
 Lordly livin in grete liking,
 This living' is not religious
 According to Bener's living. 2960

Thei ben clerkes, and courts ovir se,
 Ther pore tenaunce fully thei flite,
 The hier a man amercid be
 The gladlyir thei woll it write,
 This is farre from Christes poverté,
 For all with cove'tise thei endite,
 On the pore thei have no pite,
 Ne ner 'hem cherishe but or bite.

And comminly soche ben comen
 Of pore peple', and of 'hem begete, 2970
 That this perfection han inomen,
 Ther fathirs ride but on ther fete,
 And travaile sore for that thei etc,
 In povert livith yong and old,
 Ther fathirs suffreth drought and wete,
 Many hungrie meles, thursté, and cold.

And all this the Monkes han forsake
 For Christ's love and sainct Benete,
 To pride and ese have 'hem betake,
 This religion is ill besete, 2980
 Had thei ben out of religion
 Thei must have hangid at the plowe,
 Threshid and diked fro toun to toun,
 With forie mete, not halfe inowe.

Therefore thei han this all forsake,
 And take to riches, pride, and ese,
 Full fewe for God woll Monkes 'hem make,
 Lite is soche ordir for to praise,
 Sainct Benet ordained it not so,
 But bad 'hem to be chereliche, 2990
 In churliche manir live and go,
 Boistous in yerth, and not lordliche.

Thei disclaunderin sainct Benet,
 Therefore thei have his holy curse,
 Sainct Benet with 'hem nevir met
 But if thei thought to robbe his purse;
 I can no more here of 'hem tell,
 But that thei ben like tho before,
 And clene serve the devill of hell,
 And ben his trefure and his store. 3000

And all soche othir counterfaitours
 Chanons, Canons, and soche disgised,
 Ben Godd's enemies and traitours,
 His religion han soule dispised,
 And of Freris I have before
 Told in a makin of a Crede,
 And yet I could tell worse and more,
 But men would werien it to rede.

As Goddes godenes no man tell might,
 Ne write ne speke, ne thinke in thought, 3010
 So ther falsshed, and ther unright
 Maie no man tell that ere God wrought,
 The Griffon saied, thou canst no gode,
 Thou came ner of no gentill kinde,
 Othir I trowe thou waxist wode,
 Or ellis thou hast losse thy minde.

Should holy churche yhave no hedde?
 Who should ybc her governaile?
 Who should her rule, who should her redde?
 Who should her forthren, who availe? 3020
 Eche man shall live by his travaile,
 Who best doith, shall have most mede,

With

With strength if men the churche assaile,
With strength men must defende her nede.

And if the Pope were purely pore
And nedy, and nothing ne had,
He should be drive from dore to dore,
The wickid of him n'olde not drad,
Of soche an hedde men would be fader,
And sinfully liven' as 'hem lust,
With strength amendis soche be made,
With wepin Wolves from shepe be wust.

If that the Pope and Prelates would
So begge, and bid, bowe and borowe,
Holy churche should ystande full cold,
Her servauntes sit and soupe sorowe,
And thei wer noughtie foule and horowe
To worship God men would wlate
Both on evin and on morowe,
Soche harlotrie men would hate.

And therefore men of holye churche
Shouldin be honeste in all thing,
And worshipfull God's workis werche,
So semeth it to serve Christ ther king
In honest and in clene clothing,
With vessels of gold and clothes riche
To God honestly to' make offring,
For to his lordship none is liche.

The Pellican cast an honge crie
And saied alas! why saiest thou so?
Christ is our hedde that sitteth on hie,
Heddis ne ought we have no mo,
We ben his membres bothe also,
Fathir he taught us call him als,
Maisters to call forbad he tho,
All maisters ben wickid and fals.

That takith maistrise in his name
Ghostly, and to win yerthly gode,
Kings and lordes should lordship have
And rule the peple with milde mode,
But Christ for us that shed his blode
Bad his priests no mastirship have,
Ne carke not for clothis ne fode,
From all mischief be wolle 'hem save.

Ther riche clothes shall be rightwisnesse,
Ther tresure a true life shall be,
Charite shall be ther richesse,
Ther Lordship shall be unite,
And hope in God ther honeste,
Ther vessell a clene conscience,
Pore in sprite, and humilite
Shall be holy church's defence.

What, saied the Griffon, maie The greve
That othir folkis farin wele?
What hast thou to doen with ther live?
Thy falschid every man maie felse,
For thou ne canst no cattell gete,
But livest in londe as a lorell,
With glosing gettist thou thy mete,
So farith the devil in hell.

He would that eche man there should dwell,
For he livith in clene envie,
So with the tales that thou doest tell
Thou wouldest othir peple destric,
With your glose, and your heresie,
For ye can live no bettir life
But clene in fals Hypocrisie,
And bringist The in wo and strife.

And therwith have ye not to doen,
For ye ne havin here no cure,
Ye serve the devill, not God ne man,
And he shall payin you your hire,
For ye wolle farin well at festes,
And be warm clothid for the cold,
Therefore ye glosin Godd's hestes,
And begile peple yong and old.

And all the seven Sacramentes
Ye speke ayenst, as ye were flie,
Tithings, offringes with your ententes,
And on our Lord's body lie,
All this ye doen to live in ese,
As who sayith, there ben none soche,
And fain the Pope' is not worth a pefe,
To make the peple' ayen him groche.

And this ycommith in by fendes
To bring the christin in distaunce,
For thei would that no man were frendes;
Levith thy chattring with mischaunce,
If thou live well, what wilt thou more,
Let othir men live as 'hem list,
Spendin ther gode, or kepe in store,
Othir mennes conscience ner thou n'ist.

Ye han no cure to answer fore,
What meddle' ye, that han not to doen?
Let men live as thei han doen yore,
For thou shalt answer for no man.
The Pellican sayid, sir, naie,
I ne dispisid not the Pope,
Ne no Sacrament, sothe to saie,
But speke in charite' and gode hope.

But I dispise ther hiè pride,
Ther welthe, that should be pore in sprite,
Ther wickidnesse is knowe so wide,
Thei servin God in false habite,
And tournin mekenesse into pride,
And lowlinesse into' hie degre,
And Godd's wordis tourne and hide,
And I am moved by charite.

To lettin men to livin so
With all my conning and my might,
And to warnin men of ther wo,
And to tellin 'hem trouth and right,
The Sacramentes be soul's hele,
If thei ben usid in gode use,
Ayenst that speke I ner a dele,
For than ne were I nothing wise,

But thei that use 'hem in misse manere,
Or set 'hem up to any sale,
I trowe thei shall abie 'hem dere,
This is my reson, this my tale,
Who so taketh 'hem unrightfullliche
Ayenst the ten commaundementes,
Or ellis by glose wrechidliche,
Selleth any of the Sacramentes,

I trowe thei doe the devill homage,
In that thei wetin thei doe wrong,
And thereto I dare well to wage
Thei serve Sathan for all ther song,
To tithen' and offre' is holosome life,
So it be doen in due manere,
A man to houselin and to thrive,
Wedding, and all othir in fere.

So it be nother folde ne bought,
Ne take ne give for covetise,

And

And it be so taken' it is nought,
Who selleth him so, maie fore agrife;
On our Lordes body' I doe not lie,
I saie the sothe thorough true rede,
His fleshe and blode through his misterie
Is there all in the forme of brede.

3150

How it is there, it nedeth not strive,
Whethre' it be subget or accident,
But as Christ was, whan he' was on live
So is he there in verament,
If Pope or Cardinall live gode live
As Christ us bad in his Gospell,
Ayenst that ne woll I not strive,
But me thinkith thei live not well.

For if the Pope lived as God bedde,
Pride and highnesse he should dispise,
Richesse, covetise, and croune on hedde,
Mekenesse and poverté' he should use.
The Griffon saied he should abie,
Thou shalt be brent in balefull fire,
And all thy sect I shall distrie,
Ye shall be hangid by the swire.

3160

Ye shulle be hangid and to drawe
Who givith you leve for to preche,
Or spekin against Godd's lawe,
And the peple thus falsely teche?
Thou shalt be curfed with boke and bell,
And dislevered from holie churchie,
And clene idampnid into hell,
Othirwise but ye wollin worche.

3170

The Pelli'can saied that I ne drede,
Your cursing is of lite value,
Of God I hope to have my mede,
For it is falsed that ye shewe,
For ye ben out of charite,
And wilne vengeance, as did Nero,
To suffrin I woll redy be,
I drede not all that thou canst do.

3180

Christ bad ones suffre for his love,
And so he taught all his servauntes,
But thou' amende for his sake above,
I drede not all thy maintenaunce,
For if I drede the world's hate
Me thinkith I were lite to praise,
I drede nothing your hie estate,
Ne I ne drede not your disce.

3190

Wollin ye tourne and leve your pride,
And your hie porte, and your richesse,
Your cursing should not go so wide,
God bring you into rightwisenesse,
For I drede not your tirannie,
For nothing that ye can ydoen,
To suffre I am all redie,
Sikir I recke never how sone.

The Griffon grinned as he were wode,
And lokid lovely as an Owle,
And swore by cock's herte and blode,
He would him tere every doule,
Holy churchie thou disclaundrist foule,
For thy speche I woll The to race,
And make thy fleshe to rote and moule,
Lofell, thou shalt have hardè grace.

The Griffon flewe forth on his waie,
The Pellican did sit and wepe,
And to himself he gan to saie
God would that any of Christes shepe

3210

Had herdin, and itakin kepe
Eche a worde that here sayid was,
And would it write and well ikepe,
God would it were all for his grace.

Plowman.

I answerid, and saied I would,
If for my travaile one would pey.
Pelican. He saied yes, these ther God han sold,
For thei han grete store of money.

Plowman. I sayid, tell me and thou maie,
Why tellist thou menn's trespase?

3220

Pelican. He said, to' amende'hem in gode fay
If God woll give me any grace.

For Christ himself is liken to me,
That for his peple died on Rode,
As fare I, right so farith he,
He fedith his birdes with his blode,
But these doen evill ayenst gode,
And ben his foen undir frendes face,
I told 'hem how ther living stode,
And God amende 'hem for his grace.

3230

Plowman.

What ailith the Griffon, tell why
That he holdith on the' othir side,
For thei two yben likily
And with kindis yrobin wide.
Pelican. The foule betokinith pride,
As Lucifer, that high flewe was,
And sith he did him in ill hide,
For he agiltid Godd's grace.

As birde flyith up in the aire,
And livith by birdes that ben meke,
So these ben flowe up in dispaire,
And shendin sely foulis eke,
The foulis that ben in sinnes eke:
He culleth 'hem, knele therfore alas!
For bribrie Godd's forbode breke,
But God amende it for his grace.

3240

The hinder parte is a Lioun,
A robber and a raviner,
That robbeth the peple in yerth doune,
And in yerth holdith none his pere,
So fareth this foule both ferre and nere,
With tempo'rel strength, the peple chafe,
As a Lion proude in yerth here,
May God amende 'hem for his grace.

3250

Pellican.

He flewe forth with his wingis twain
All drouping, and dafid, and dull,
But sone the Griffon came again,
Of his foulis the yerth was full,
The Pelli'can he had cast to pull,
So grete number ner sene there was,
What manir of foules telle I woll,
If God woll give me of his grace.

3260

3200

With the Griffon come foulis fele,
Ravins, Rokis, Crowis, and Pie,
And graie foulis, aga'drid wele,
Igurde above they wouldin hie,
Gledis and bosardes weren 'hem by,
White molles and purtockes toke ther place,
And lapwinges, that wel conith lie,
This Company' han forlete ther place.

3270

Long while the Pellican was oute,
But at last he commith againe,
And brought with him the Phenix stoute,

The

The Griffon would have flow ful faine,
His foulis flew as thicke as raine,
The Phenix tho began 'hem chace,
To fle from him it was in vaine,
For he did vengeaunce and no grace.

He slewe 'hem doune without mercy,
There astarte neither fre ne thrall,
On him they cast a rufull crie,
Whan that the Griffon down was fall,
He bete him not, but slewe 'hem all,
Where he 'hem drove, no man may trace,
Under the erth me thought they yall,
Alas they had a feble grace!

The Pellican then axid right
For my writing if I have blame,
Who then wol for me fight of flight?
Who shullin sheldè me from shame?
He that yhad a maide to dame,
And the lambè that slaine ywas,

Shal sheldin me from gostly blame,
For erthely harme is Godd'is grace.

3280 Therefore I pray evèry man
Of my writing have me excused,
This writing writeth the Pellican,
That thus these peple hath dispised,
For I am freshe fully advised,
I n'ill not mainteine his menace, 3300
For the Devill is ofte disguised
To bring a man to evil grace.

3290 Witith the Pelli'can and not me,
For herof I n'il not avowe,
In hie ne lowe, ne no degre,
But as fable take it ye mowe,
To holy churche I will me bowe,
Eche man to' amende him Christe sende space,
And for my writing me alowe
He that' is almighty for his grace.

Here endeth the PLOWMAN's TALE.

Here foloweth the PARSON's PROLOGUE.

BY that the Plowman had his tale endid
The sunne fro the fourthe side is discendid
So lowe, that it was nat unto my sight
Degrees of five and twenty upon hight,
Tenne of the clocke it was, so as I gesse,
For enlevin fote, a lite more or lesse
My shadowe was at thilke time, as there
Of suche fete as my length ypartid were
In fixe fete equalle of proporcion,
Therwith the mon's exaltacion
I menè Libra, alway gan ascende,
As we were entring at the throp's ende;
For which our Hoste, as he was wont to gie
Aye in this case this joly companie,
Said in this wise, lordingis everichone,
Now lackith us no tale more than one,
Fulfilled is my sentence, and my decre,
Who wol now tellin a tale let us se,
Almost fulfillid is my ordinaunce,
I pray to God so yeve him right gode chaunce, 3330
That tellith this tale to us lustily.

Sir priest (qð he) arte thou a vicary,
Or art thou a parson, say soth by fay?
Be what thou be, ne breke thou not our play,
For every man save thou hath tolde his tale,
Unbokle, and shewe us what is in thy male;
For trewily me thinkith by thy chere,
Thou shouldest knit up well a grete matere,
Tel us a fable anon, for cock's bones.
This Person him answeride al at ones, 3340
Thou gettist fable none ytolde of me,
For Poule, that writith unto Timothe,

Reprevith hem that waivin sothfastnesse,
And techin fables, and suche wretchidnesse;
Why shouldest I sowin draffe out of my filte,
Whan I may sowin whete, if that me list?
For whiche I saye, if that ye list to here
Moralite, and of vertuous matere,
And than, if ye wol yeve me audience,
I would ful faine at Christ's reverence
Doin you plesauce lesful, as I can;
But trusteth wel, I am a sotherne man,
I can not jesse, rum, ram, ruf, by letter,
And God wote, rime holde I but litle better;
And therefore if ye list, I wol not glose,
I wol you tell a litil tale in prose,
To knit up al this fest, and make an ende;
And Jesu for his grace, wit me fende
To shewin you the way in this voyage
Of thilke perfite gloriouse pilgrimage, 3360
That hight Hierusalem celestiall,
And if that you vouchsave, anon I shall Begin upon my tale, for whiche I pray
Tel your advise, I can not bettir say.

But nathelless this meditacion
I put it aye undir correccion
Of clerkis, for I am not textuell,
I take but the sentence ytrustith well,
Therefore I make a protestacion
That I woll standin to correccion. 3370

Upon this worde, we have assentid sone,
For as it semid it was for to done
To endin in some vertuous sentence,
And for to yeve him space and audience,

And

And bade our Hoste that he should to him say,
That al we to tellin his tale him pray.

Our Hoste had the wordis for us all,
Sir priest (qð he) now sayre more you befall,
Say what ye list, and we shall gladly here,

And with that worde he said in this manere, 3380
Tellith (qð he) your meditacion,
But hastith you, for the sunne wol a doun,
Berh fructuous, and that in litil space,
And to do wel God sende you of his grace.

Here endeth the PARSON'S PROLOGUE.

Here foloweth his TALE.

Jerem. vi. State super vias, & videte, & interrogate de semitis antiquis, quæ sit via bona, & ambulate in eâ: & inuenietis refrigerium animabus vestris.

OUR swete Lorde God of heven, that no man woll perysbe, but woll that we turne all to the knowlege of him, and to the blisfull life that is perdurable, amonesteth us by the Prophete Jeremie, that faith in this wise. Stonderth upon the wayes and seeth, and asketh of olde pathes: that it to saie, of olde sentences, whiche is the gode waie, and walketh in that waye, and ye shall finde refreshing for your soules, &c. Manie ben the waies espirituelles that lede folke to our Lorde Jesu Christ, and to the reigne of glory: Of whiche waies there is a full noble waye, and full convenable, whiche maye not faile to man ne to woman, that through sinne hath misgone fro the right way of Hierusalem celestia: and this waye is called penitence, of whiche man should gladly herken and enquire with al his hert, to wete what is penitence, and whiche is called penitence, and howe many maners bene of actions or werkinges of penitence, and howe many speces there ben of penitence, and which thinges apertaine and behove to penitence, and which thinges distourbe penitence.

Saint Ambrose faith, that penitence is the plaining of manne for the gilte that he hath doen, and no more to do any thing for which him oughte to playne. And some doctours faith, Penitence is the waimentinge of man that soroweth for his sinne, and paineth himselfe, for he hath misdoun. Penitence with certaine circumstaunces, is very repentance of a man that holte himself in sorow, and other payne for his giltes: and for he shall be verie penitent, he shall first bewaile sinnes that he hath done, and stedfastly purpose in his hert to have shrifte of mouthe, and to do satisfaccion, and never to doe thing, for whiche him ought more bewaile or complaine, and continewe in gode workes: or els his repentance may not availe. For as saint Hoder saith, He is a japer and a lier, and no very repentaunt, that effone doth thing, for which him ought repente. Weping and not for to finte to do sinne, maye not availe: But nathelesse men shall hope that at every time that man falleth, be it never so ofte, that he may arise through penaunce, if he have grace: But certaine it is grete doute, for as saith S. Gregory, Unnethes ariseth out of sinne, that is charged with the charge of evill usage: And therefore repentaunt folke, that finte for to sinne, and leve sinne or sinne leve them, holy Church holdeth them fiker of their salvacion. And he that sinneth, and verely repenteth him in his last end, holy church yet hopeth his salvacion, by the grete mercy of our Lorde Jesu Christe, for his repentance: but take the fiker waye.

And nowe sith I have declared you, what thing is Penitence, now ye shal understonde, that there ben thre actions of Penitence. The firste is, that a manne be baptised after that he hath sinned. Saint Augustin saith, but he be penitent for his olde sinfull life, he may not beginne the newe clene life: For certes if he be baptised without penitence of his olde gilt, he retaineth the marke of baptisme, but not the grace ne the remission of his sinnes, till he have very repentance. An other defeaute is this, that men doe dedly sinne after that they have receyved baptisme. The thirde defeaute is this, that men fall in veniall sinnes after ther baptisme, fro day to day. Thereof saith saint Augustin, that penitence of gode and humble folke, is the penitence of every daie.

The speces of penitence ben thre: That one of hem is solempne; an other is commune; and the thirde is privy. That penaunce that is solempne is in two maners: As to be put out of holy church in lent, for slaughter of children, and suche maner thinge. An other is when a man hath sinned openlye, of whiche sinne the fame is openly spoken in the countrie: and than holy church by judgment distraineth him for to do open penaunce.

Commen penaunce is, that prestes enjoyne men in certaine case: as for to go peraventure naked in pilgrimage, or bare fote. Privy penaunce is that, that men do all daie for privy sinnes, of whiche we thrive us prively, and receive privy penaunce.

Nowe shalt thou understond, what is behovefull and necessary to very perfite penitence: and this stonde on thre thinges. Contricion of herte, confession of mouthe, and satisfaccion. For whiche saith saint Johan Chrisostom. Penitence distraineth a man to accept benignely every paine, that him is enjoined, with contricion of hert, and shrifte of mouthe, with satisfaccion; and in werking of al maner humilite. And this is fruitfull penitence ayenste thre thinges, in whiche we wrathe our Lorde Jesu Christ: this is to saie, By delite in thinkinge, by retchelesse speking, and by wicked sinnefull werking. And ayenst thes wicked giltes is penitence, that maie be likened unto a tre.

The rote of this tre is contricion, that hideth him in the herte of him that is very repentaunt, right as the rote of the tre hideth him in the erth. Of this rote of contricion springeth a stalke, that bereth braunches and leves of confession, and frute of satisfaccion. For whiche Christ saith in his gospels, Doth digne frute of penitence, for by this frute men may knowe the tre, and not by the rote that is hid in the herte of manne, ne by the braunches, ne the leves of confession. And therefore our Lord Jesu Christ saith thus: By the frute of hem shal ye knowe hem. Of this rote also springeth a fede of grace, the which fede is mother of al sikernes, and this fede is eager and hote. The grace of this fede springeth of God through remembraunce on the daye of dome, and on the the paines of hell. Of this matter saith Salomon, that in the drede of God, man forleteth his sin. The herte of this fede is the love of God, and the desiring of the joy perdurable: This herte draweth the herte of man to God, and doth him hate his sinne: For sothely there is nothing that savoureth so wel to a childe, as the milke of his nourse, ne nothinge is to him more abhominable than that milke, when it is medled with other mete. Right so the sinfull man that loveth his sinne, him semeth that it is to him moste swete of any thinge, but fro that time he loveth sadly our Lorde Jesu Christ, and desireth the life perdurable, there is to him no thing more abhominable: For sothely the lawe of God is the love of God. For which David the prophete saith: I have loved thy lawe, and hated wickednesse: He that loveth God, kepeth his lawe and his worde.

This tre sawe the prophete Daniel in spirite, on the vision of Nabuchodonosor, when he counsailed him to do penitence. Penance is the tre of life, to hem that it receyve, and he that holdeth him in very penitence is blessed after the sentence of Salomon. In this penitence or contricion man shall undirstonde foure thinges, that is to say: What is contricion, and whiche ben the causes that move a man to contricion, and how he shulde be contrite, and what contricion availeth to the soule. Than is it thus, that contricion is the very sorow, that a man receiveth in his herte for his sinnes, with sadde purpose to thrive him, and to do penance, and never more to doe sinne: And this sorowe shall be in this maner, as saith saint Bernard: It shal be hevie and grievouse, and ful sharpe and poynting in herte.

First, for a man hath agilted his Lorde and his creatoure, and more sharpe and poynting, for he hath agilted his father celestiall: And yet more sharpe and poynting, for he hath wrathed and agilted him that bought him, that with his precious blode hath delivered us fro the bondes of sinne, and fro the cruelte of the divel, and fro the paines of hell.

The causes that ought move a man to contricion bene fixe, First a man shall remembre him of his sinnes, but loke that that remembraunce ne be to him no delite, by no waye, but grete shame and sorowe for his sinnes. For Job saith, sinfull men done workes worthy of confession. And therefore saith Ezechiell: I wol remembre me al the yeres of my life, in the bitternesse of my herte. And God saith in the Apocalypse: Remembre ye from whence that ye ben fall, for before that time that ye sinned, ye were children of God, and limmes of the reigne of God: But for your sin ye ben waxen thrall and foule, and membres of the fende, hate of angels, slaunde of holye churche, and fode of the false serpent, perpetuell mattere of the fyre of hell: And yet more foule and abhominable, for ye trespase so oft times, as doeth an hounde that returneth ayen to ete his owne spwing: and yet be ye fouler, for your long continuing in sinne, and your sinful usage, for whiche ye be roted in your sinne, as a beste in his donge. Suche maner of thoughtes make a manne to have shame of his sin, and no delite. As God saith, by the prophete Ezechiell: Ye shall remembre you of your waies, and they shal displese you sothly. Sinnes ben the waies that lede folke to Hell.

THE seconde cause that ought make a man to have disdaine of sinne is this, that as saith saint Peter: Who so doth sinne, is thrall of sinne, and sinne putteth a man in grete thralldome. And therefore saith the prophete Ezechiell: I wente sorowful, in disdaine of my selfe. Certes wel ought a manne have disdaine of sinne, and withdrawe him fro that thralldome and vilany. And lo! what saith Seneke in this matter? he saith thus: Though I wiste, that neither God ne manne should never knowe it, yet would I have disdaine for to do sinne. And the same Seneke also saith: I am borne to greter thinge, than to be thrall to my body, or for to make of my body a thrall. Ne a fouler thrall maye no man ne woman make of his bodie, than for to yeve his body to sinne, all were it the foulest churle, or the foulest woman that liveth, and leste of value, yet is he than more foule, and more in servitude. Ever fro the higher degre that man falleth, the more is he thrall, and more to God and to the worlde vile and abhominable. O gode God! wel oughte man have grete disdaine of sin, sith that through sinne, there he was fre he is made bonde. And therefore saith saint Augustin: If thou hast disdaine of thy servaunt, if he offende or sinne, have thou than disdaine that thou thy selfe shuldest do sinne. Take rewarde of thine owne valewe, that thou ne be to foule to thy selfe. Alas! well ought they than have disdaine to be servauntes and thralls to sinne, and sore to be ashamed of themself, that God of his endeles godenesse hath sette in highe estate, or yeve hem witte, strength of bodye, hele, beutie, or prosperite, and bought hem fro the deth with his herte blode, that thei so unkindly, ayenst his gentilesse quite him so villainously, to slaughter of ther owne soules; O gode God! ye women that ben of grete beutie, remembreth you on the proverbe of Salomon: He saith he likeneth a faire woman, that is a sole of her bodie, to a ringe of gold that were worne on the groine of a sow: For right as a sowe wrotheth in every ordure, so wrotheth she her beaute in stinking ordure of sinne.

THE thirde cause that ought meve a man to contricion, is drede of the daye of dome, and of the horrible paines of hel. For as sainte Jerom saith: At every time that me remembreth of the daye of dome, I quake: For when I ete and drinke, or what so that I do, ever semeth me that the trompe sowneth in mine ere: Riseth ye up that ben ded, and cometh to the judgment. O gode God! muche ought a manne to drede suche a judgement, there as we shall be all, as sainte Poule saith, before the sete of our Lorde Jesu Christ, where as he shal make a general congregacion, where as no man may be absent, for certes there avayleth none esoyne ne excusation, and not onely that our defaultes shal be judged, but also that all our werkes shal openly be knowne. And as saith saint Barnarde, there ne shall no pleding availe, ne no sleight: We shall yeve rekeninge of every idle worde. There shall we have a judge that maie not be disceived ne corrupt, and why? For certes, all our thoughtes ben discovered, As to him, ne for prayer ne for mede he shall not be corrupte. And therefore saith Salomon: The wrathe of God ne wol not spare no wight, for prayer ne for yeste. And therefore at the day of dome, there is no hope to escape. Wherefore, as saith saint Anselm: ful grete anguishe shall the sinnefull folke have at that time: There shal the fiers and wrothe judge sitte above, and under him the horrible pitte of hel open, to distroy him that must beknowe his sinnes, which sinnes openly ben shewed before God and before every cature: And on the leste side, mo Divels than anie herte maye thinke, for to hale and drawe the sinful soules to the paine of hell, and within the hertes of folke shal be the biting conscience, and without forth shal be the worlde al brenning, whither shal than the wretched sinfull man fle to hide him? Certes he may not hide him, he must come forth and shewe him. For certes, as saith S. Jerom, the the erth shal cast him out of it, and the se also, and the ayre that shal be ful of thonderclappes and lightnings. Now sothly, who so wel remembreth him of these thinges, I gesse that his sinne shall not turne him into delite, but to grete sorowe, for drede of the paine of hell. And therefore saith Job to God: suffre Lord, that I may a while bewaile and wepe, er I go without returning to the derke londe, covered with the derkenesse of deth, to the londe of misere and of derkenesse, where as is the shadowe of deth, where as there is none order or ordinaunce, but ferefull drede that ever shall last. Lo! here may you se, that Job praied respite a while, to bewepe and waile his trespass: for sothely one day of respite is better than all the trefour of this world. And for as much as a man may acquite himself before God by penitence in this world, and not by trefour, therefore should he pray to God to yeve him respite a while, to bewepe and waile his trespass: for certes, al the sorowe that a man might make fro the beginning of the world, n'is but a litel thing, at regarde of the sorowe of hell. The cause why that Job calleth hell the londe of derkenesse, understondeth that he calleth it londe or erth, for it is stable and never shall faile, and derkenesse; For he that is in hell hath defaute of light materiall; for certes the derke light, that shal come out of the fire that ever shall brenne, shal turne him al to pain that is in hell, for it sheweth him to the horrible Divels that him turmenteth, covered with the derkenesse of deth, that is to say, that he that is in hel, shal have defaute of the sight of God: for certes the sight of God is the life perdurable. The derkenesse of deth ben the sinnes that the wretched man hath don, which that disturbe him to se the face of God, right as the derke cloude betwixt us and the sunne. Londe of misere; bicause that there ben thre maner of defautes ayenst thre thinges that folke of this worlde have in this present life, that is to saie: honours, delices, and riches. Ayenst honour have they in hel shame and confusion: For wel ye wote, that men call honour the reverence that man doth to man, but in hell is none honour ne reverence. For certes, no more reverence shal be do ther to a kinge, than to a knave. For whiche God saith by the Prophet Jeremy: Those folke that me dispise, shal ben in dispyit. Honoure is also called grete lordship: there shal no wight serve other: but of harme and turment. Honoure is also called grete dignite and highnesse, but in hell shal thei be al fortroden of divelles. As God saith: the horrible divels shal goe and come upon the hedes of dampned folke: and this is, for as much as the higher that thei were in this present life, the more shal thei be abated and defoiled in hell. Ayenst the riches of this world shal they have misere of povertie, that shal be in foure thinges. In defaute of trefour. Of which David saith: The riche folke that embrace and knite al ther herte to trefour of this worlde, shal slepe in the slepinge of deth, and nothing ne shull they finde in ther hondes of al ther trefour. And more over the misere of hel shal be in defaute of mete and drinke. For God saith thus by Moyses: They shall be wasted with hunger, and the byrdes of hell shal devour hem with bitter deth, and the gal of the dragon shal be ther drinke, and the venom of the dragon ther morsels. Also ther misere shal be in defaute of clothing, for thei shal be naked in body, as of clothing, save the fire in whiche they brenne, and other filthes: and naked shall they be of soule, of al maner vertues, whiche that is the clothing of the soule. Where ben than the gay robes, the soft shetes, and the smal shertes? Lo! what saith God of hem by the Prophet Isaie? that under hem shal be strewed moughtes, and ther covertures shal be of wormes of hel. Also ther misere shal be in defaute of frendes, for he is not pore that hath gode frendes, but ther is no frende, for neither God ne no cature shal be frende to hem, and eche of hem shall hate other with dedly hate: The sonnes and the doughters shall rebell ayenst father and mother, and kinred ayenst kinred, chide and dispise eche other, both day and night, as God saith by the Prophet Micha: And the loving children that whilom loved so fleshly eche other, would eche of hem ete other if they might. For howe should they love together in the paines of hel, when they hated eche other in prosperite of this life? for truste wel ther fleshly love was dedly hate. As saith the Prophet David: Who so that loveth wickednesse, he hateth his soule, and who so hateth his owne soule, certes he may love none other wight in no maner: And therefore in hel is no solace ne no frendship, but ever the more kinredes that ben in hel, the more cursinges, the more chidinges, and the more dedly hate there is amonge hem. Also they shal have defaute of all maner delices, for certes delices ben after the appetites of the five wittes: As sight, hering, smellenge, favouring, and touchinge. But in Hell ther sight shal be full of derkenesse and of smokke, and therefore full of teres, and ther heringe full of waylinge and grintage of terhe: As saith Jesu Christ: Ther nostrilles shal be ful of stinking. And, as saith Isaie the prophete: Ther favouring shal be ful of bitter gall, and as of touching all ther bodies, icovered with fire, that never shall quenche, and with wormes that never shall die. As God saith by the mouth of Isaie: and for as muche as they shal not wene that they may die for paine, and by deth shie fro paine, that maye they understonde in the wordes of Job, that saith: There is the shadowe of deth. Certes a shadowe hath likenesse of the thing of whiche it is shadowed, but shadowe is not the same thing of whiche it is shadowed: right so fareth the paine of hel, it is like deth, for the horrible angustie. And why? For it paineth hem ever as though they should die anon, but certes thei shal not die. For as saith saint Greg: to wretched caitifes shal be deth without deth, and ende without ende, and defaute without failing, for ther deth shal alway live, and ther ende shal ever more begin, and ther defaute shal not faile.

And therefore saith saint John the Evangelist, they shal folowe dethe, and they shal nat fynde him, and they shal desire to die, and deth shal shie from hem. And also Job saith, that in hel is no order or rule: And al be it so, that God hath create al thing in right order, and nothing without order, but all thinges ben ordred and numbred, yet nachelesse they that ben dampned ben nothing in order, ne holde none order, for the erth ne shal bere hem no fruite. For, as the prophete David saith: God shall distroie the fruite of the erth, as for hem, ne water ne shal yeve hem no moislure, ne the eyre no refreshinge, ne fire no lighte. For as saith saint Basilie: The brenning of the fire of this world shal God yeve in hel to hem that ben dampned, but the light and the clerenesse shal be yeve in Heven to his children: right as gode men yeve fish to ther children, and bones to ther houndes. And for they shal have none hope to escape, as saith saint Job at laste; that there shal horroure and grevly drede dwell without ende. Horroure is alway drede that is to come, and this drede shal alway dwell in the hertes of hem that be dampned. And therefore have they losse all ther hope for seven causes. Firste for God that is ther Judge shal be without mercy to hem, and they may not plesse him ne none of his saintes, ne they maie not yeve nothinge for ther raunsome, ne thei shal have no voice to speke to him, ne they may not fre fro paine, ne they have no godenesse in 'hem that they maye shewe to deliver 'nem fro paine. And therefore saith Salomon: The wicked manne dieth, and whan he is ded, he shall have no hope to escape fro paine. Who so than would wel understonde the paines, and bethinke him well that he hath deserved those paines for his sinnes, certes he should have more talent to sighe and wepe, than for to singe and playe. For as saith Salomon, who so that had the science, to know the paines that ben ordained for sinne, he woulde make grete sorowe. That science, as saith saint Austin, maketh a man to weiment in his herte.

THE fourth pointe that ought make a man have contricion, is the sorowful remembraunce of the gode that he hath leste to doe here in erth, and also the gode that he hath losse. Sothly the gode werkes that he hath leste, either they be the gode werkes that he wroughte er he fill in dedly sinne, or elles the gode werkes that he wrought while he laie in sin. Sothly the gode werkes that he did before that he fill in sinne ben al mortified, astoned, and dull by ofte sinninge. The werkes that he did while he lay in sinne be ded, as to the life perdurable in Heven: than the gode werkes that ben mortified by oft sinning, whiche he did beyng in charite, may not quicke ayen without very penitence. And of it saith God by the mouthe of Ezechiel: If the rightfull man returne ayen fro his rightwisnesse and do wickednesse, shal he live? nay, for al the gode werkes that he hath do ne shal never be in remembraunce, for he shall die in his sin. And upon that chapitre saith saint Gregorie thus, that we shall understond this principally: If that we don dedly sin, it is for nought than to reherce or drawe in to memory the gode werkes that we have wrought before: for certes in the working of dedly sinne, there is no truste to no gode werke that we have doen before: that is to say, as for to have thereby the life perdurable in Heven. But nathelesse the gode werkes quicken and come againe, and helpe and availe to have the life perdurable in Heven whan we have contricion: But sothly the gode werkes that men don while they be in dedly sinne, for as moche as thei were doen in dedly sinne, thei maie never quicke: For certes, thing that never had life, maie never quicke: And nathelesse, albeit that thei availe not to have the life perdurable, yet availe thei to abredge of the paine of hell, or els to get temporell riches, or els that God woll the rather enlumine or light the hert of the sinful man to have repentaunce, and eke thei availe for to use a manne to doe gode werkes, that the fende have the lesse power of his soule. And thus the curteis Lorde Jesu Christe ne woll that no gode werke be losse, for in somewhat it shall availe. But for as moche as the gode werkes that menne doen while thei ben in godelife, ben al amortified by sinne following: and also sithe that all the gode werkes that men doen while they be in dedly sinne, ben utterly dedde, as for to have the life perdurable, well maie that manne that no gode werke ne doeth, sing that newe freshe song (Jay tout perdu mon temps, & mon labure.) For certes sinne bireveth a man bothe godenesse of nature, and also the godenesse of grace. For sothly the grace of the Holy Ghoſte fareth like fire that maie not be idell, for fire faileth anon as it forleteth his working: and right so grace faileth anon, as it forleteth his working. Than leseth the sinfull man the godenesse of glory, that onely is behight to gode men that labour and werke. Well maie he be sorie than, that oweth all his life to God, as long as he hath lived, and also as long as he shall live, that no godenesse ne hath to paie with his debt to God, to whom he oweth all his life: for trust well he shall yeve accomptes as saith saint Bernarde, of all the godes that have ben yeve him in this present life, and how he hath 'hem dispended, in so moche that there shall not perishe an here of his hedde, ne a moment of an houre ne shall not perishe of his time, that he ne shall yeve of it a reckening.

THE fifthe thinge that ought to move a man to contricion, is remembraunce of the passion that our Lorde Jesu Christ suffered for our sinnes. For as saith saint Bernarde, while that I live, I shall have remembraunce of the travailes, that our Lord Jesu Christe suffred in preching, his werinesse in travailling, his temptacions whan he fasted, his long walkinges whan he praied, his teres whan that he wept for pite of gode peple, the wo, the shame, and the filthe that menne said to him: of the foule spitting that menne spitte in his face, of the buffettes that men yave him: of the foule mowes and of the reproves that men said to him: of the nailes with whiche he was nailed to the crosse, and of all the remnaunt of his passion, that he suffred for my sinnes, and nothing for his gilte. And ye shall understonde, that in mann's sin is every maner order or ordinance tourned up side downe. For it is sothe, that God, reson, sensualite, and the body of man, ben ordained, that eche of these fower thinges, should have Lordship over that other: as thus, God should have Lordship over reson, and reson over sensualite, and sensualite over the body of man. But sothly whan man sinneth, all this order or ordinance, is turned upside down. And therefore than, for as moche as reson of man ne woll not be subiecte ne oberſaunt to God, that is his Lorde by right, therefore leseth it the Lordship that it should have over sensualite, and also over the bodie of manne. And why? For sensualite rebelleth than ayenst reson: and by that waie leseth reson the lordship over sensualite, and over the bodie: For right as reson is rebell to God, right so is both sensualite rebell to reson, and to the body also. And certes this disordinaunce and this rebellion our Lorde Jesu Christ bought upon his precious body full dere: and herkeneth in what wise. For as moche than as reson is rebell to God, therefore is man worthy to have sorow, and to be dedde. Thus suffred our Lorde Jesu Christe for manne, after that he had be betraied of his disciple, and distrained and bounde, so that his blode braſte out at every naile of his hondes, as saith S. Augustin. And furthermore, for as moche as reson of manne woll not daunt sensualite, whan it maie, therefore is manne worthie to have shame: and this suffred our Lorde Jesu Christ for man, whan thei spit in his visage. And furthermore, for as moche than as the carſive body of man is rebell both to reson and to sensualite, therefore it is worthy deth, and this suffred our Lorde Jesu Christe upon the crosse, where as there was no part of his bodie fre, without grete pain and bitter passion: and al this suffred our Lorde Jesu Christ that never forfeited. And therefore resonably maie be said of Jesu in this maner: To moche am I pained for thinges that I never deserved, and to moche defouled for shame that manne is worthy to have: And therefore maie the sinfull man well saie, as saith S. Bernarde, Acursed be the bitternesse of my sinne, for whiche there muste be suffered so moche bitternes. For certes, after the divers discordaunce of our wickednes, was the passion of Jesu Christe ordained in divers thinges: as thus. Certes sinfull mann's soule is betraied of the devill, by covetise of temporell prosperite, and scorned by disceite, whan that he cheseth fleshy delices, and yet it is turmented by impaciencie of adversite, and bespet by servage and subjection of sinne, sinne, and at the last it is slain finally. For this ordinance of sinfull man was Jesu Christ first betrayed, and after that he was bounde, that came for to unbinde us of sinne and of paine. Than was he bescorned, that onely should have be honoured in all thinges. Than was his visage that ought be desired to be sene of all mankind, in whiche visage Angels desire to loke, villainously bespet. Than was he scourged that nothing had trespassed, and finally, than was he crucified and slain. Than was accomplished the wordes of Isaie: He was wounded for our misdeds, and defoiled for our felonies. Now sithe that Jesu Christ toke on him the pain of all our wickedneses, moche ought sinfull manne wepe and bewaile, that for his sinnes, Godd's sonne of heven should all this pain endure.

THE sixt thing that should meve a man to contricion, is the hope of thre thinges, that is to saie: foryevenesse of sin, and the yeste of grace for to doe well, and the glorie of heven, with whiche God shall rewarde manne for his gode dedes: And for as moche as Jesu Christ yeveth us these yestes of his largesse, and of his soverain bounte therefore is he called (Jesús Nazarenus Rex Judæorum); Jesus is to saie, saviour or salvacion, on whom men shal hope to have foryevenesse of sinnes, whiche that is properly savacion of soulis. And therefore saied the Angel to Joseph, thou shalte call his name Jesus, that shall save his peple of ther sinnes. And hereof saith saint Peter: There is none other name under heven, that is yeve to any man, by whiche a man maie be saved, but onely Jesus. Nazarenus is as moche for to saie, as flourishinge, in whiche a manne shall hope, that he that yeveth him remission of sinnes, shall yeve him also grace well for to doe. I was at the dore of thine herte, saith Jesus, and called for to enter: he that openeth to me, shall have foryevenes of his sinne. I woll entre into him by my grace, and suppe with him by the gode werkes that he shall doe, whiche werkes ben the fode of the soule, and he shall suppe with me, by the grete joye that I shall yeve him. Thus shall man hope for his werkes of penaunce, that GOD shall yeve him his reign, as he behight him in the Gospell. Now shal a manne understonde, in whiche maner shal be his contricion: I saie, that it shall be universell and totall, this is to saie: a man shall be very repentaunt, for al his sinnes that he hath doen in delite of his thought, for delyit is full perillous.

For there ben two maner of consentinges, that one of hem is called consenting of affection, whan a man is moved to do sinne, and than deliteth him long, for to thinke on that sinne, and his reson aperceiveth it wel, that it is sinne ayenst the Lawe of God, and yet his reson refraineth not his soule delite to talent, though he se wel apertly, that it is ayenst the reverence of God, although his reson consent not, to do that sinne in dede, yet saie some Doctours, that soche delite that dwelleth long is full perillous, al be it never so little. And also a man should sorowe, namely for all that ever he hath desired ayenst the Lawe of God, with perfite consenting of his reson, for thereof is no doubte, that it is dedly sinne in consenting: for certes, there is no dedly sinne, but that it is first in mann's thought, and after that in his delite, and so forth into consenting, and into dede. Wherefore I saie that many men, ne repent hem never of soche thoughtes and delices, ne never thrive hem of it, but onely of the dede of grete sinnes outward: wherefore, I saie that soche wicked delites ben subtil begilers of hem that shall be dampned.

Moreover, man ought to sorowe for his wicked

wordes, as well as for his wicked dedes: for certes the repentaunce of a singuler sinne, and not repentaunt of al his other sinnes, or els repent him of all his other sinnes, and not of a singuler sinne, maie not availe: For certes GOD Almightye is all gode; and therefore, either he foryeve all, or els right nought. And therefore saith saint Augustin: I wote certainly, that God is enemye to every sinner: and how than he that observeth one sinne, shall he have foryevenesse of the remnaunt of his other sinnes? Naie. And moreover, contricion should be wonder sorowfull and anguishous; and therefore yeveth him God plainly his mercie: and therefore whan my soule was anguished, and sorowfull within me, than had I remembrance of God, that my praier might come to him: Ferthermore, contricion must be continuell, and that manne have stedfast purpose to thrive him, and to amende him of his life. For sothly while contricion lasteth, man maie ever hope to have foryevenes. And of this cometh hate of sinne, that distroiet both sinne in himself, and also in other folk at his power. For whiche saith David: thei that love God hate wickednesse: For to love GOD, is for to love that he loveth, and hate that he hateth. The last thing that men shal understonde is this, wherefore availeth contricion? I saie, that contricion somtime delivereth manne fro sinne: Of whiche David saith, I saie (saied David) I purposed fermely to thrive me, and thou Lorde relese me my sinne. And right so as contricion availeth not without sad purpose of shrifte, if manne have opportunitie, right so litle worth is shrift or satisfaction without contricion. And moreover contricion distroiet the stronge prison of helle, and maketh weke and feble all the strengthes of the devils, and restoreth the yestes of the Holy Ghost, and of all gode vertues, and it clensth the soule of sinne, and delivereth it fro the pain of helle, and fro the companie of the Devill, and fro the servage of sinne, and restoreth it to all gode spirituells, and to the companie and communion of holie church. Ferthermore, it maketh him that whilom was sonne of Ire, to be the sonne of Grace: And all these thinges ben proved by holie writte. And therefore, he that would set his entent to these thinges, he were full wise, for truely he ne should have than in all his life corage to sinne, but yeve his herte and bodie to serve Christ, and thereof doe him homage. For truely our Lorde hath spared us so mekely in our folies, that if he ne had pite of mann's soule, a sory song might we all sing.

Explicit prima pars penitentia, et incipit pars secunda.

THE seconde parte of penitence is Confession, that is signe of contricion. Now shull ye understonde what is confession, and whither it ought nedes be doen or no, and whiche thinges be covenable to very confession.

First shalt thou understonde, that confession is very shewing of sinnes to the Prieste: this is to saie very, for he muste confesse him of all the condicions that belong to his sinne, as ferforth as he can: all must be saied, and nothing excused ne hid, and not avaunt The of thy gode werkes. Also it is necessarie to understonde whens that sinnes spring, and how thei encrese, and whiche thei ben.

Of the springe of sinnes, saith S. Poule in this wise: that right as by one man sinne entred first into this worlde, and through sinne deth, right so the deth entreth into al men that sinne, and this man was Adam, by whom sinne entred into this world, whan he brake the commaundement of God. And therefore he that first was so mightie, that he ne shuld have died, became so that he muste nedes die, whether he would or no, and all his progeny in this worde, that in the saied manne sinned. Loke that in the estate of innocencie, whan Adam and Eve were naked in Paradise, and shamed not thereof, how the serpente, that was most wily of all other bestes that GOD made, saied to the woman: why commaunded God you, that ye should not ete of every tre in Paradise? The woman answered: of the fruit said she of the trees of Paradise he defended us nought, but of the fruit of the middle tre of Paradise, God forbode us to ete and touche, lest we should die. The serpente saied to the woman: naie, naie, ye shall not die of deth, for sothe God wotte that what daie that ye ete therof your eyen shall open, and ye shall be as Gods knowing gode and harme. The woman than sawe that the tre was gode to feding, and faire to the eyen, and delectable to sight, she toke of the fruite of the tre and etc, and yave to her husbände, and he ete, and anon the eyen of hem both opened: and whan that thei knewe that thei were naked: thei token the levys of fyge treys, and soweden hem togedere, and maden hem in maner of breches, to hide ther members. There maie ye se that dedly sin hath first suggestion of the fende, as sheweth here by the Adder, and afterwarde the delite of the fleshe, as sheweth by Eve, and after that, consenting of reson, as sheweth here by Adam. For trust wel though so it were, that the fende tempted Eve, that is to saie, the fleshe, and the fleshe had delite in the beautie of the fruite defended, yet certes till that reson, that is to saie Adam, consented to the eting of the fruit, yet stode he in the state of innocencie. Of the saied Adam toke we the saied originall sinne, for of him fleshy disceded be we all, and engendered of vile and corrupt matter: And whan the soule is put in our bodies, right anon is contract originall sinne, and that was erst but onely pain of concupiscence, is afterward both paine and sinne, and therefore we ben all borne sonnes of wrath, and of dampnacion perdurable, if it n'ere Baptisme that we receive, which benimmeth us the coulpe, but forsoth the pine dwelleth with us as to temptacion, whiche pine hight concupiscence. This concupiscence whan it is wrongfully disposed or ordained in man, it maketh him covelte by covetise of fleshe, fleshy sinne by sight of his eyen, as to yerthly things, and also covetise of highnes by pride of herte.

Now as to speke of the first covetise, that is concupiscence, after the lawe of our members, that were lawfully made, and by rightfull judgement of God, I saie, for as moche as manne is not obeissaunt to God, that is his Lorde, therefore is the fleshe to him disobeissaunt through concupiscence, whiche is called nourishing of sinne, and occasion of sinne. Therefore, all the while that a manne hath within him the pine of concupiscence, it is impossible but he be tempted somtime, and moved in his fleshe to sin. And this thing maie not faile, as long as he liveth. It maie well wexe feble by vertue of Baptisme, and by the grace of God through penitence, but fully ne shall it never quenche that he ne shall sometime be moved in himself, but if he were all refrained by sicknesse, or by malice of forcerie or cold drinckes. For lo, what saith S. Poule: the fleshe coveteth ayenst the spirite, and the spirite against the fleshe: they ben so contrarie and so striven, that a manne maie nat alwaie do as he would. The same S. Poule, after his grete Penaunce, in water and in lond: in water by night and by daie, in grete peril, and in grete pain; In lond; famine and thurst, cold and clothlesse, and ones stoned almoste to deth. Yet (saied he) alas, I caitife man! who shall deliver me fro the prisone of my caitife bodie? And saint Jerom, whan he long time had dwelled in desert, where as he had no company, but of wilde bestes, where as he had no mete, but herbes, and water to drinke, ne no bed, but the naked yerth, wherefore his fleshe was blacke, as an Ethiopien for hete, and nie distroied for cold. Yet (saied he) that the brenning of lecherie. boiled in all his bodie. Wherefore I wot well that thei be disceived that saie, thei be nat tempted in ther bodies. Witnesse sainte James that saith, that every wight is tempted in his own concupiscence, that is to saie: That eche of us hath matter and occasion, to be tempted of the nourishing of sinne, that is in his body. And therefore saith saint John the Evangelist: if we saie that we ben without sinne, we deceive our self, and truthe is not in us. Now shal ye understonde, how sinne wexeth and encrefeth in man. The first thing is the same nourishing of sinne, of which I spake before, the fleshy concupiscence, and after that cometh suggestion of the devill, that is to saie, the devil's belous, with which he bloweth in man the fire of concupiscence, and after that a man bethinketh him whether he woll doe or no, that thing to whiche he is tempted. And than if a man withstonde and weive the first entising of his fleshe, and of the fende, than it is no sinne, and if so be he doe not, than feleth he anon a flame of delite, and than it is gode to beware and kepe him well, or els he wolle fall anone to consenting of sinne, and than woll he do it, if he maie have time and place. And of this matter saith Moses by the Devill, in this manner: The fende saith, I woll chace and pursue man by wicked suggestion, and I woll take him by moving and stering of sinne, and I woll depart my prise of my praie by deliberacion, and my lust shall be accomplished in delite, I woll drawe my swerd in consenting. For certes, right as a swerde departeth a thing in two peces, right so consenting departeth God fro manne, and than wolle I flea him with my honde in dede of sinne: thus saith the fende. For certes, than is a man all dedde in soule, and thus is sinne accomplished with temptacion, by delite and consenting: and than is the sinne actuell. Forsoth sinne is in two maners, either it is veniall or dedly sinne. Sothly whan man loveth any cature more than Jesu Christ our creatour, than it is dedly sinne; and veniall sinne it is, if man love Jesu Christe lesse than him ought. Forsoth the dede of this venial sinne is full perillous, for it minisheth the love that man should have to God more and more. And therefore, if a man charge himself with many soche veniall sinnes: certes but if so be that he sometime discharge him of hem by shrifte. Thei maie full lightly minishe in him al the love that he hath to Jesu Christ, and in this wise skippeth veniall sinne into dedly sinne. For certes, the more that a man chargeth his soule with veniall sinnes, the more he is enclined to fall into dedly sinne. And therefore let us not be negligent, ne to boold to charge us of veniall sinnes. For the Proverbe saith, that many small make a grete. Herken this ensample. A grete wave of the sea cometh sometime with so gret a violence, that it drouneth the shippe. And the same harme doeth sometime the smal droppes of water, that entreth through a little creveis into the timber, and into the botome of the shippe, if men be so negligent, that thei discharge hem not by times. And therefore although there be a difference, betwixt these two causes of drouning, al gates the shippe is drouned. Right so fareth it sometime of dedly sinne, and of anioous veniall sinnes, whan thei multiplie in man so gretly; that those worldly things that he loveth, through whiche he sinneth venially, is as grete in his hert as the love of God, or more: and therefore the love of every thing is not beset in God, ne doen principally for Godd's sake, although that a manne love it lesse than than God, yet is it veniall sinne, and dedlie sinne whan the love of any thing weieth in the hert of man as moche as the love of God or more. Dedly sinne as saieth saint Augustine, is whan a man tourneth his herte fro God, whiche that is very soveraine bountie, that maie not chaunge, and yeveth his hert to thing that maie chaunge and flit: and certes, that is every thing save God of heven. For soth is, that if a man yeve his love, which that he oweth to God with all his herte, unto a cature, certes, as moche of love as he yeveth to the same cature, so moche he bireveth fro God, and therefore doeth he sinne: For he that is debtour to God, ne yeldeth not to God al his debt, that is to saie, all the love of his herte. Now sith manne understondeth generally, whiche is veniall sinne, than it is covenable to tell specially of sinne, whiche that many a man peraventure demeth hem no sinnes, and shriveth him not of the same thinges, and yet natheles thei be sinnes sothly, as these clerkes write, this is to saie: At every time that manne eteth and drinketh more than sufficeth to the sustenance of his body, in certene he doeth sinne: and also whan he speketh more than it nedeth, it is sinne.

Also whan he herkeneth not benignely the complainte of the pore: Also whan he is in hele of body, and wolle not fast whan other folke fast, without cause resonable: also whan he slepeth more than nedeth, or whan he cometh by thilke encheson the lattere to Church, or to other werkes of charite: Also whan he useth his wife without soveraine desire of engendrure, to the honour of God, or for the entent to yelde to his wife the debte of his bodye. Also whan he wol not visite the sick, or the prisoner, whanne he may flo it. Also if he love wife or child, or other worldly thing, more than reson requireth. Also if he flatter or blandise more than him ought for any necessite. Also if he minish or withdrawe the almose of the pore. Also, if he appaile his mete more deliciously than nede is, or ete to hastely by likoroufnes. Also, if he talke vanities at church, or at Goddis service, or that he be a talker of idle wordes of folie or vilanie, for he shall yelde accomptes of it at the daie of dome. Also, whan he behighteth or assureth to doe thinges, that he maie not performe. Also, whan that he by lightnesse of folie mislaie the scorneth his neighbour. Also, whan he hath any wicked suspicion of thing, that he ne wote of if no sothfastnesse. These thinges and mo without nomber be sinnes, as saieth S. Augustine. Now shall men understonde, that all be it so that non yerthly manne maie eschue all veniall sinnes, yet maie he refrain him, by the brenning love that he hath to our Lorde Jesu Christ, and by praiers and confession, and other gode workes, so that it shall be but little grete. For as saith S. Augustin, If a man love God in soche maner, that all that ever he doth is the love of God, or for the love of God verely, for he brenneth in the love of GOD: loke how moche that one drop of water, whiche doeth fall into a grete fourneis full of fire, anoieth or greveth the brenning of the fire: in like maner anoieth or greveth a veniall sinne unto that manne, whiche is stedfast and perfite in the love of our Saviour Jesu Christ. Ferthermore, men maie also refraine and put awaie veniall sinne, by commoning and receiving worthely the body of our saviour Jesu Christ. Also, by taking of holy water, by almose dede, by general confession of Confiteor at Masse, and at Complin, and by blessing of Bishops, and priestes, and by other gode workes.

NOW it is behovely thinge to tell, whiche ben the seven dedly sinnes, that is to saie, chieftains of sinnes. Al thei ten in o lees, but in divers maners. Now ben thei called seven Sins, for as moche as thei be chiefe, and springe of all other sinnes. Of the roote of these seven sinnes, than is Pride the general rote of all harmes. For of this rote springeth certain braunches: as Ire, Envie, Accidie or Sloth, Avarice or Covetise, to common understonding, Glotonie and Lecherie: and eche of these chief sinnes have ther braunches and twigges, as it shall be declared in ther chapiters following. And though so be, that no manne can utterly tell the number of twigges, and of the harmes that come of Pride, yet wolle I shewe a part of hem, as ye shall understonde: There is inobedience, avaunting, ipocrisie, dispite, arrogance, impudence, swelling of hert, insolence, elacion, impacience, strief, contumacie, presumption, irreverence, pertinacie, vainglorie, and many other twigges that I can not declare. Inobedience is he that disobeieth for dispite the commaundementes of God, to his soveraines, and to his ghostly father: Avaunter is he that bosteth of the harme or of the bountie that he hath doen. Ipocrite is he that hideth to shewe him soche as he is, and sheweth him to seme soche as he is nat. Dispitous, is he that hath disdain of his neighbour, that is to saie, of his evin Christen, or hath dispite to doe that him ought to doe. Arrogance is he that thinketh that he hath those bounties in him, that he hath nat, or weneth that he should have hem by his desertes, or els that he demeth he is that he is nat. Impudent, is he that for his pride hath no shame of his pride ne sinne. Swelling of herte is whan man rejoiseth him of harme that he hath doen. Insolence is he that dispiseth in his judgement all other folke, as in regarde of his value, of his conning, of his speking, and of his bearing. Elacion is whan he ne maie neither suffer to have maister ne felowe. Impacience is he that wolle not be taughte, ne rebuked of his vice, and by strief denieth trouthe wittingly, and defendeth his folie. Contumacious is he that through his indignacion is ayenst every auctorite or power of hem that ben his Soveraines. Presumption is whan a manne undertaketh an emprise that him ought not to do, or els that he maie not doe, and this is called surquidrie. Irreverence, is whan man doeth not honor there, as him ought to doe, and awaytith to be revered. Pertinacie, is whan men defende their folie, and trust to moche on ther own wit. Vainglorie, is for to have pompe, and delite in his temporel hinesse, and glory him in worldly estates. Jangling, is whan men speke to moche before folke, and clappeth as a mille, and take no kepe what thei saie.

And yet there is a privie spice of pride, that waiteth first to be sawed, or he wolle save, all be he lesse worthy than that other is. And also he waiteth or desireth to sit, or els to go above him in the waie, or kisse paxe, to be encenced, or go to offring before his neighbour, and soche semblable thinges, ayenst his dutie peraventure, but that he hath his herte and his entent in soche a proude desire to be magnified and honoured before the peple.

Now ben there two maner of prides. One of hem is within the hert of a man, and that other is without. Of whiche forsaide thinges sothly, and mo than I have said, appertain to pride, that is in the hert of man, and other spices of pride ben without, but nathelesse, that one of these spices of pride is

signe of that other, righte as the gaie leuefell at the Taverne is signe of the Wine that is in the Cellere. And this is in many thinges: as in speche and countenance, and outrageous arraie of clothing: for certes, if there had ben no sinne in clothing, Christ wuld not so sone have noted, and spoken of the clothing of thilke riche man in the Gospell. And as S. Grego. saith, that precious clothing is culpable, for the derth of it, and for his softenesse, and for his straungenesse and disguising: And for the superfluite, or for th' inordinate scantnes of it. Alas! maie not a man se as in our daies the sinnefull coslewe arraie of clothing, and namely in to moche superfluite, or els in to disordinate scantnesse?

As to the first sinne in superfluite of clothing, soche that maketh it so dere, to the harme of the peple, nat only the cost of enbraudering, the disguised indenting, or barring, ounding, paling, winding, or bending, and semblable wast of clothe in vanite. But there is also the coslewe Furring in ther gounes, so moche pounsing of chesel to make holes, so moche dagging with Sheres forth, with the superfluite in length of the forsaied gounes, trailing in the dong and in the mire, on hors and also on fote, as well of man as of woman. That all that trailing is verely as in effect wasted, consumed, treadbare, and rotten with dounge, rather than it is yeve to the pore, to grete damage of the forsaied pore folke, and that in fondrie wise, this is to saie that the more the clothe is wasted, the more must it cost to the pore peple for the scarfenesse. And more over, if so be that thei wuld yeve suche pounsed and dagged clothing to the pore peple, it is nat convenient to were for ther estate, ne sufficient to ther necessite, to kepe hem fro the distemperaunce of the firmament. Upon that other side, to speke of the horrible disordinate scantnesse of clothing, as ben these cutted sloppes or hanselines, that through ther shortnesse cover not the shamefull membres of manne, to wicked entent. Alas! some of hem shewe the bosse of ther shap, and the horrible swole membres that semeth like the madaye of Hernia, in the wrapping of ther hosen, and also the buttockes of hem fare as it were the hinder parte of a she Ape in the full of the mone. And more over the wretched swollen membres that they shewe throughe disguising, in departing of ther hosen, in white and red semeth that halfe ther shamefull privy membres were flain. And if so be that they departe ther hosen in other colours, as is white and blew, or white and blacke, or blacke and red, and so forth: Than semeth it as by variaunce of colour that the halfe part of ther privy membres ben corrupt by the fire of saint Anthony, or by canker, or other suche mischaunce. Of the hinder parte of the buttockes it is full horrible for to se, for certes in that partie of ther body there as thei purge ther stinking ordure, that foule partie shewe thei to the peple proudly in dispite of honestie, whiche honestie that Jesu Christ and his frendes observed to shewe in ther life. Now as to the outrageous aray of women, God wote that though the vilages of some of hem seme full chaste and debonaire, yet notify in ther aray or attire, licorousnesse and pride: I say not that honestie in clothing of man or woman is uncovenable, but certes the superfluite of disordinate quantite of clothing is reprovab. Also the sinne of ornament or of aparaile is in thinges that appertaine to riding, as in company, delicate horses that ben holden for delite, that ben so faire, fatte, and coslewe and also in many a vitious knave, that is susteined bicause of hem, in curious harneis, as in sadels, cropers, peitrels, and bridels covered with precious clothing, and riche barres of plates, of golde and of silver. For which God saith by Zacharie the prophete, I wold confounde the riders of suche horses. These folke take litel regarde of the riding of Godd's sonne of heven, and of his harneis when he rode upon the Ass, and had none other harneis but the pore clothes of his disciples, ne we rede not that ever he rode on other best but on an asse. I speke this for the sinne of superfluite, and not for resonable honestie, when reson it requirith. And more over, certes pride is gretly notified in holdinge of grete meine, when they ben of lill profite or of right no profite, and namely when that meine is felonous and dammageous to the peple by hardinesse of highe lordship, or by waye of offices. For certes, suche lordes sell than ther lordeshippe to the Devill of Hell, whan they susteine the wickednesse of ther meine. Or els, whan these folke of lowe degre, as those that kepe hostelryes, susteine theste of ther hostellers, and that is in manie maner of disceites: those maner of folke ben the flies that folow the hony, or els the houndes that folowe the caraine. Suche forsaied folke strangell spirituallly ther lordships: For suche thus saith David the Prophete. Wicked deth might come on those lordeshippes, and GOD yeve that they might discende into Hell, all doun, all doun: For in ther houses ben iniquities and shreudenesse, and not GOD of heven. And certes, till they doen amendement, right as God yave his blessing to Pharao by the service of Joseph, and to Laban by the service of Jacob: Right so God wold yeve his malis on to suche lordshippes, as susteine the wickednesse of ther servauntes, but they come to amendement. Pride of the table appereth also full ofte: for certes, riche menne be called to festes, and pore folke ben put awaye and rebuked. And also in excesse of divers metes and drinckes, and namely suche maner bake metes and dishe metes brenninge of wilde fire, peynted and castelled with paper and semblable waste, so that it is abusion to thanke. And also in to grete preciousnesse of vessell, and curiosite of minstrelcy, by whiche a man is sterred more to delices of lecherie, if so be that he sette his herte the lesse upon our Lorde Jesu Christe, certeinly it is a sinne. And certeinly the delices mighte be so grete in this case, that a manne might lightly fall by hem into a dedly sinne. The especes that fourde of pride, lothely whan they fourde of malice imagined, avised, and forecaste, or els of usage, ben dedly sinne, it is no doute. And when they fourde by frelte un-avised sodenly, and sodenly withdrawe ayen, all be they grevous sinnes, I gesse that they be not dedly. Nowe mighte menne kepe, whereof that pride fourdeth and springeth. I say that somtime it springeth of the godes of nature, somtime of the godes of fortune, and somtime of the godes of grace. Certes the godes of nature stondeth onely in godes of bodye, or godes of the soule. Certes godes of bodye ben hele of body, strength, deliverance, beaultie, gentrie, franchise. Godes of nature of the soule ben gode with sharpe understanding, subtil engine, vertue naturel, gode memory. Godes of fortune be riches, hie degrees of lordships, prayssinges of the peple. Godes of grace ben science, power to suffise spirituall travaille, benigne, vertuous contemplacion, understanding, of temptation, and semblable thinges: of whiche forsaied godes certes it is a full grete folie a manne to have pride in any of hem all. Now, as for to speke of godes of nature, God wote that somtime we have hem in nature as muche to our damage as to our profit. As to speke of hele of body, truly it passeth full lightly, and also it is full ofte occasion of sickenesse of the soule: for God wote the fleshe is a grete enemy to the soule: and therefore the more that the body is hole, the more we be in perill to fall. Also for to have pride in his strength of body it is an hie folie, for certes the flesh coveteth ayenst the the spirite: and the more strong that the fleshe is, the forier maye the soule be. And over all this strength of body and worldly hardinesse causeth full ofte manie manne to perill and mischaunce; and also to have pride of his gentry, is right grete foly: for ofttime the gentry of the bodye taketh awaye the gentry of the soule: and also we ben all of o father and mother: and all we ben of o nature, rotten and corrupt, both riche and pore. Forsoth o maner gentry, is for to praise, that apparelleth mann's courage, Witte, vertue, and moralite, maketh him Christ's childe. For truste well, that over what manne that sinne hath maystry, he is a very churle to sinne.

Nowe ben there generall signes of gentilnesse: as eschewing of vice and ribaudrie, and servage of sinne: in worde, in werke, and continuance of using and vertue, curtesy, and clennesse, and to be liberall: that is to saye, large by mesure: for that that passeth mesure, is foly and sin: Another is to remembre him of bounte, that he of other folke hath received: An other is to be benigne to his gode subjectes. Wherefore saith Seneca: there is nothing more convenient to a manne of highe estate than debonairite and pite. And therefore these flies that men call bees, whan they make ther kinge, they chese one that hath no pricke, wherwith he may stinge.

Another is, manne to have a noble herte and a diligent, to attayne to the highe vertuous thinges. Nowe certes, a manne to have pride in the godes of grace is also an outrageous foly: for those giftes of grace that shuld have turned him to godenesse, and to medicine, tourneth him to venom and confusion, as saith saint Gregory. Certes also, who so hath pride in the godenesse of fortune, he is a full grete sole: For sometime is a manne a grete Lord by the morne that is a caitife and a wyrtche or it be nyght: and sometime the riches of a manne is cause of his deth. Sometime the delices of a manne is cause of grevous maladie through whiche he dieth. Certes, the commendacion of the peple is sometime full false and brotell for to truste. This day they praise, to morowe they blame. God wote, desire to have commendacion of the peple hath caused deth to manie a busse manne. Nowe sith that so is, that ye have understonde what is pride, and whiche be the spes of it, and whence it fourdeth and springeth: nowe ye shall understonde whiche is the remedy ayenst it. Humilite or mekenesse is the remedy ayenst pride, that is a vertue, thorowe whiche a manne hath very knowlege of him self, and holdeth of himselfe nor price ne daintie, as in regarde of his desertes, considering ever his frelte. Nowe ben there thre maner of humilites: As humilite in hert, an other humilite is in mouthe, and the thirde is in werkes. The humilite in hert is in four maners: That one is, whan a manne holdeth himselfe as nought worth before GOD of heven. The second is, whan he dispiseth none other man. The thirde is, whan he ne recketh nat, though men hold him noughte worthe. And the fourth is, whan he is not sory of his humiliacion. Also the humilite of mouthe is in four things. In a temperate speche, in humilite of spech, and when he confesseth with his owne mouth, that he is such as him thinketh that he is in his herte: Another is when he prayseth the bounte of another manne and nothing therof miniseth. Humilite also in werke, is in four maners. The firste is, when he putteth other menne before him, the seconde is to chese the lowest place over al, the thirde is gladly to assent to gode counsaile, the fourth is, to stonde gladly to the awarde of his soveraines, or of him that is in hier degre: Certaine this is grete werke of humilite.

De Invidia.

After pride woll I speke of the foule sinne of Envy, whiche that is after the worde of the Philosopher, sorowe of other mennes prosperite. And after the worde of saint Augustin: it is the sorowe of other mennes wele, and the joy of other mennes harme. This foule sinne is platly ayenst the Holie Ghoste: All be it so, that every sinne is ayenst the Holy Ghoste: Yet nathelesse, for as muche as bounte apertaineth properly to the Holy Ghost, and Envy cometh properly of malice, therefore it is properly ayenst the bounte of the Holy Ghost. Now hath malice two spices, that is to saie, hardinesse of herte in wickedness, or els the fleshe of a manne is so blinde, that he considreth nat that he is in sinne, or recketh not that he is in sinne, which is the hardinesse of the devil. That other spice of Envy is, when that a man denieth trouth, when he knoweth that it is trouth, and also when he repenteth the grace that God hath yeve to his neighbour: and all this is by Envy. Certes, than is Envy the worst sinne that is, for sothly, all other sinnes be sometime onely ayenst o speciall vertue: but certes, envy is ayenst al vertues and al godenesse. For it is sory ayenst all the bountes of ther neighbour, and in this maner, it is divers from al other sinnes. Alas! For there ne is any sinne that it ne hath some delite in it selfe, save only Envy, that ever hath in it self anguish and sorowe. The spes of Envy ben these: there is firste sorowe of other mennes godenesse and of ther prosperite, and prosperite is kindly matter of joye: Than is envy a sinne ayenst kinde. The seconde spece of Envy is joye of other mennes harme, and that is properly like to the Devill, that ever rejoyseth him of mann's harme. Of these two spes cometh backbiting, and this sinne of backbitinge or detracting hath certaine spes, as thus: Some manne praiseth his neigbour by a wicked entent, for he maketh alway a wicked knot at the last ende, alwaie he maketh a but at the last ende, that is digne of more blame, than is worth al the praising. The seconde spece is, that if a man be gode, or doth or saith a thing to gode entent, the backbiter wol turne al that godenesse up side down, to his shreude entent. The thirde is to aminishe the bounte of his neighbour. The fourthe spece of backbiting is this, that if menne speke godenesse of a manne, than wol the backbiter saye: Perfay suche a manne is yet better than he, in dispraising of him that menne praise. The fifthe spece is this, for to consent gladly and herke gladly to the harme that men speke of other folke: This sinne is full grete, and aye encreseth after the wicked entent of the backbiter. After backbiting cometh grutchinge or murmuracion, and sometime it springeth of impaciencie ayenst God, and sometime ayenst manne. Ayenst God it is whan a man grutcheth ayenst paine of hell, or ayenst poverty, or losse of cattell, or ayenst raine or tempest, or els grutcheth that shrewes have prosperite, or els for that gode menne have adversite: and all these thinges shoud menne suffre patiently, for they come by the rightful judgement and ordinaunce of God. Sometime cometh grutching of avarice, Judas gruched ayenst Maudelein, whan she anointed the hed of our Lorde Jesu Christ, with her precious ointment. This maner murmuring is such as whan man grutcheth of godenesse that himself doth, or that other folke doen of ther owne cattell. Sometime cometh murmure of pride, as whan Simon the Pharise gruched ayenst Maudelein whan she aproched to Jesu Christ and wepte at his fete for her sinnes. And sometime it fourdeth of Envy, whan men discover a man's harme that was privy, or berith him an honde honde thing that is false. Murmure also is ofte among servauntes that grutche whan ther souveraines bidde hem do lefull thinges, and for as much as they dare not openly withsaye the commaundement of ther souveraines, yet wol they say harme and grutche and murmure prively for very dispite: which wordes they call the divels Pater noster, though so be that the divell had never Pater noster, but that leude folke yeveth it suche a name. Somtime it cometh of ire or privy hate, that norissheth rancour in the hert, as afterward I shall declare. Than cometh also bitterness of herte, thorowe which bitternes every gode dede of his neighbour semeth to him bitter and unfavory. Than cometh discorde that unbindeth al maner of frendship. Than cometh scornage of his neighbour, all do he never so well. Than cometh accusing, as whan man seketh occasion to anoie his neighbour, which is like the crafte of the divel, that waiteth both day and night to accuse us all. Than cometh malignite, through which a manne anoie his neighbour prively if he may, and if he maye not, algate his wicked wil shall not let as for to brenne his house prively, or enpoison or sle his bestes, and semblable thinges. Nowe woll I speke of the remedie ayenst this foule sinne of envy. Firste is the love of God principally, and loving of his neighbour as himselfe: for sothly that one ne may not be without that other. And trust well that in the name of thy neighbour thou shalt understande the name of thy brother, for certes all we have one father fleshy and one mother, that is to saie Adam and Eve, and also one father spirituall, that is God of heven. Thy neighbour art thou bound for to love, and will him all godenesse, and therefore saith God: Love thy neighbour as thy self, that is to say, to salvation both of life and soule. And more over thou shalt love him in worde and in benigne admonishing and chastisinge, and comfort him in his noyaunces, and praye for him with all thy herte. And in dede thou shalt love him in soche wise that thou shalt do to him in charite, as thou woldest that it were don to thin owne person: and therefore thou ne shalt doe him no damage in wicked worde, ne harme in his body ne in his catel, ne in his soule by entising of wicked ensample. Thou shalt nat desire his wife ne none of his thinges. Understond also that in the name of neighbour is comprehended thyn enemy: Certes man shall love his enemy by the commaundement of God: and sothly thy frende thou shalt love in God. I saie thin enemy, shalt thou love for Godd's sake, by his commaundement, for if it were reson that man should hate his enemy, forsoth God n'olde not receive us to his love that ben his enemies. Ayenst thre maner of wronges that his enemy doth to him, he shal do thre thinges, as thus: ayenst hate and rancour of hert, he shal love him in hert: Ayenst chiding and wicked wordes he shal praye for his enemy: Ayenst wicked dedes, he shall doe him bountie. For Christ saith: Love your enemies, and praie for hem that speke you harme, and for hem that chace and pursue you: and do bountie to hem that hate you. Lo! thus commaundeth our Lorde Jesu Christe to do to our enemies: Forsothe nature driveth us to love our frendes, and parfay our enemies have more nede of love than our frendes, and they that more nede have, certes to hem shall men rather do godenesse. And certes in that dede have we remembrance of the love of Jesu Christe, that died for his enemies: And in as much as that love is more grevous to perfourme, so muche is the more grete the merite, and therefore the loving that our Lord loved his enemys hath confounded the devils venom: For right as the devill is discumfited by humilite, right so is he wounded to the deth by the love of our enemy, certes than is love the medicin that casteth out the venom of envie fro man's man's herte. The spices of this mattere shal be more largely schewed in the chapteris that folwen here afterward.

De Ira

After Envy wol I discrive the sinne of Ire, for sothely who so hath Envy upon his neighbour, anone he woll comenly finde him a matter of wrahte in worde or in dede, ayenst him to whome he hath Envy: And as well cometh Ire of pride as of Envy, for sothly he that is proude or envious is lightly wrothe.

This sin of Ire, after the discriving of S. Austin is wicked wil to be avenged by worde or by dede. Ire after the Philosopher is the fervent blode of man quickened in his herte, through which he would harme to him that he hateth: for certes the herte of manne by eschaufing and moving of his blode, wexeth so troubled, that it is out of all maner judgement of reson. But ye shal understonde that Ire is in two maners, that one of hem is gode, and that other is wicked. The gode ire is by jelousie of godenes throughe whiche a man is wrothe with wickednesse, and ayenst wickednesse. And therefore saith a wise man, that ire is bet than playe. This ire is with debonaire, and it is wroth without bitterness, not wroth ayenst the man, but wrothe with the misdede of the manne. As saith the prophete David: Iracimini, et nolite peccare. Nowe understonde that wicked Ire is in two maners, that is to saye, sodaine ire or hasty ire without avisement and consenting of reson: The meninge and the sence of this is, that the reson of a man ne consente not to that sodeine ire, and than it is veniall. Another ire is ful wicked, that cometh of villoney of herte, avised and cast before with wicked wil to do vengeance, and thereto his reson consenteth: and sothly this is dedly sin. This ire is so displeaunt to God, that it troubleth his house, and chafeth the Holy Goste out of man's soule, and wasteth and distroiet that likenesse of God, that is to say, the vertue that is in man's soule, and putteth in him the likenesse of the devill, and taketh the man fro God that is his rightfull Lord. This ire is a full grete plesaunce to the devill, for it is the devils forneis that is eschaufed with the fire of Hell: For certes right so as fire is more mighty to distroye erthly thinges, than any other element, right so ire is mighty to distroie al spirituel thinges. Loke howe that fire of smale coles that ben almost ded under ashen, woll revive or quicke ayen whan thei ben touched with brimstone, righte so ire woll ever more quicke ayen when it is touched, by the pride that is covered in man's herte. For certes fire ne maie not come out of nothings, but if it were first in the same thing naturelly: as fire is drawn out of flintes with steel. And right so as pride is many times matter of ire, right so is rancour norice and keper of Ire. There is a maner tre, as saith saint Isidore, that whan a manne maketh fire of the said tre, and cover the coles of it with ashen, sothely the fire of it wol last a yere or more: And right so fareth it of rancour, when it is ones conceived in the hert of some men, certes it woll laste peraventure from one Ester day untill an other Ester daye or more. But certes the same man is ful ferre from the mercy of God all that while.

In this forsaide devils forneis there forge thre shrewes: Pride that aye bloweth and encrefeth the fire by chiding and wicked wordes: Than stondeth envy and holdeth hotte yron in the fire upon the hert of man, with a payre of long tonges of longe rancoure. And than stondeth the sinne of contumelie

or grief and chesse, and battereth and forgeth by villainous reprevings. Certes this cursed thing anoieth bothe to the manne himself and also his neighbour. For sothely almoste all the harme or damage that any man dothe to his neighbour cometh of wrath: for certes outrageous wrathe dothe all that ever the foule sende willeth or commaundeth him, for he ne spareth neither our Lorde Jesu Christ, nether his swete mother. And in his outrageous angre and ire, alas alas! full many oon at that time, feleth in his herte full wickedly bothe of Christ, and also of all his halowes: Is not this a cursed vice? yes certes. Alas! it taketh fro man his witte and his reson, and all his debonayre life spirituall that shoulde kepe his soule. Certes it benymyth God his dewe lordship, and that is man's soule, and the love of his neighbours. It striveth also al daye ayenst trouthe, it reveth him the quiete of his hert, and subverteth his soule.

Of ire cometh these stinking engendrures. Firste hate, that is olde wrath. Discorde, thorowe which a man forsaketh his olde frende that he hath loved full longe. And than cometh warre and every maner of wrong that a man dothe to his neighbour in bodye or in catell. Of this cursed sinne of ire cometh also manslaughter. And understonde well that homicide, that is manslaughter, is in divers wise.

Some maner of homicide is spirituall, and some is bodely. Spirituell manslaughter is in vi. thinges. Firste by hate as saith sainte John. He that hateth his brother is an homicide. Homicide is also by backbiting, of whiche backbiting saith Salomon, that thei have two swerdes, with whiche they sle thei neighbours: For sothely as wicked is to take fro him his gode name as his life. Homicide is also in yevinge of wicked counsell by fraude, as for to yeve counsaile to areyse wrongfull customes, and talages. Of whiche saith Salomon: A Lion roringe and a Bere hungry, be like to the cruell Lordes in withholding or abredging of the shepe or the hire or the wages of Servauntes, or elles in usurie, or in withdrawinge of the Almesse of pore folke. For whiche the wise man saith: Fedeth him that almoste dieth for hongery, for sothly but if ye fede him ye sle him. And all these ben dedly sinnes. Bodily manneslaughter is when thou sleest him with thy tounge: An other maner is, when thou commaundest to sle a man, or elles yevest counsaile to sle a man. Manslaughter in dede is in four maners. That one is by lawe, right as a Justice dampneth him that is culpable to the deth. But let the Justice beware that he doe it rightfully, and that he doe it not for delite to spill blode, but for keping of rightwisnesse. An other homicide is done for necessite, as when a man sleeth an other in his defence, and that he ne may none other wise escape his owne deth; but certeynly if he may askape without flauttere of his adversarie, and sleeth him, he doth sinne, and he shall bere penaunce as for dedly sinne. Also if a manne by cale or adventure shote an arrowe or caste a stone, with which he sleeth a man, he is an homicide. Also if a woman by negligence overlieth her child in her slepinge, it is homicide and dedly sin. Also whan man disturbeth concepcon of a childe, and maketh a woman either bareyne by drinking of venomous herbes, throughe which she may not conceive, or sleeth a childe by drinke, or els putteth certaine materiall thinges in her secret places to sle the childe, or els doth unkindly sinne, by whiche a man or a woman shedeth her nature in maner or in a place there as a childe maye not be conceived. Or els if so be that a woman hath conceived, and hurteth her selfe, and by that mishappe the childe is slayne, yet it is homicide. What say we of those women that murder ther children for bicause of eschewynge of worldly shame? Certes it is an horrible homicide. Homicide is also if a manne approche to a woman by desire of lechery, thorowe whiche the child is perished, or els smiteth a woman wittingly, through which she leseth her childe: Al these ben homicides and horrible dedly sinnes. Yet come there of ire mo sinnes, as well in worde as in thought, and dede. As he that arreteth upon God, or blameth God of the thing of which he is himselfe guilty, or dispiseth God and all his halowes, as don the cursid hafardours in divers countreis: This cursid sinne don they, whan they fele in ther herte full wickedly of God and of his halowes. Also whan they trete unreverently the sacrament of the auge, that sin is so gret that unneth it may be reled, but that the mercy of God passeth al his werkes, it is so gret and he so beuigne. Than cometh of ire an atterly angre, whan a man is shaply amonested in his shriste to leve his sinne: Than wolle he be angrie, and answer hokerly and angerly, or defende or excuse his sinne by unjustfastnesse of his fleshe, or els he did it for to holde companie with wyse felowes, or els he saith the sende enticed him, or els he doth it for his youthe, or els his complexcion is so coragious that he may not forbere, or els it is his destenie he saith unto a certaine age, or els he saith it cometh him of gentilnesse of his auncesters, and semblable thinges. All these maner of folke so wrappe hem in ther sinnes, that thei ne wolle deliver hemselfe: For sothly no wight that excuseth himselfe wilfully of his sinne, maye not be delivered of his sinne, till that he mekely beknoweth his sinne. After this than cometh sweringe, that is expresse ayenste the commaundement of God, and this befallith often of angre and of ire: God saith, Thou shalt not take the name of thy Lorde God in veine or in idell. Also our Lorde Jesu Christ saith by the worde of sainte Mathew: Ne shall ye not swere in no maner, neither by heaven, for it is Godd's trone, ne by erth, for it is the benche of his fete, ne by Hierusalem, for it is the cite of a grete King, ne by thing hed, for thou maiste not make an here neyther white ne blacke: but saye by youre worde, ye, ye, naye, naye: and what that is more, it is of evill. Thus saith Christe. For Christ's sake swere not so sinfully in dismembringe of Christe: By soule, herte, bones, and body, for certes it semeth that ye thinke that the cursed Jewes ne dismembred not inoughe the precious person of Christ, but ye disembre him more. And if so be that the lawe compell you to swere, than ruleth you after the lawe of God in your swering, as saith Jeremie, iiii. cap. Thou shalt kepe thre condicions, thou shalt swere in trouthe, in dome, and in rightwisnesse, this is to saye, thou shalt swere soth. For every lesinge is ayenst Christ, for Christe is verie trouthe. And thinke well this that every grete swerer not compelled lawfully to swere, the plage shall not departe fro his hous, while he useth such unlesful swering. Thou shalt swere also in dome, whan thou arte constreined by thy dom's manne to witnesse the trouthe: Also thou shalt not swere for envie, neither for favour, nether for mede, or rewarde, but onely for rightwisnesse and for declaringe of it to the honour and worshippe of God, and to the aydinge and helpe of thinge even Christen. And therefore every man that taketh Godd's name in idell, or falsely swerith with his mouth, or els taketh on him the name of Christe to be called a Christen man, and liveth ayenst Christ's livinge and his teching, all they take Godd's name in idell. Look also what saith saynt Peter, Actum iiii. capite: Non est aliud nomen sub celo, &c. There is none other name saith saint Peter under heven yave to men, in which they may be saved, that is to say, but the name of

Jesu Christe. Take hede eke howe precious is the name of Jesu Christe, as saith sainte Poule, ad Philippenes ii. In nomine Jesu, &c. That in the name of Jesu every knee of Hevenly cretures, erthly, and of hel should bowe, for it is so hie and so worshipfull, that the cursed fende in hell should tremble to here it named. Than semeth it that men that swere so horribly by his blessed name, that they dispise it more boldely than the cursed Jews, or els the devel that trembleth whan he hereth his name.

Nowe certes sithe that swering, but it be lawfully done, is so hie defended: moche wers is it for to swere falsely, and yet nedelesse.

What say we also of 'hem that delite 'hem in swering, and holde it a gentye or a manly dede to swere gret othes? And what of 'hem that of very usage ne cese not to swere gret othes, all be the cause not worthe a strawe? Certes, this is horrible sinne. Swering sodeinly withouten avisement is also a perous sinne. But lette us go now to that horrible sinne, swering of adjuration and conjuration, as doen these fals Enchauntours, or Necromancers in Basins full of water, or in bryght swerdis blade, in a circle, in a fire, or in the shulder bone of a shepe? I can not saie, but that thei doe cursedly and damnable ayenst Christ, and all the faith of holie churche.

What say we of 'hem, that beleve on Devinales, as by flighte or by noise of birdes or of best, or by sorte, by Geomancie, by dremes, by chirking of dores, or craking of houses, by gnawing of rattes, and soche maner wretchidnesse? Certes, all these thinges ben defended by God, and holy churche, for whiche thei ben accursed, till thei come to amendement, that on soch filth set ther beleve. Charmes for woundes, or maladie of menne, or of bestes, if thei take any effect, it maie be paraventure that God suffreth it, for folke shuld yeve the more faith, and reverence to his name.

Nowe wolle I speke of lesinges, whiche generally is false signifiante of worde in entent, to disceive his evin Christen. Some lesing is of whiche there cometh none avauntage to no wight, and some lesing turneth to the profite and ese of a man, and to the damage of an other man. An other lesing is, for to save his life or his catel. Another lesing theer is which cometh of delite for to lie, in which delite thei wolle forge a long tale, and peinte it with all circumstances, where al the ground theroffe is false. Some lesing cometh, for he wolle susteine his wordes: Some lesing cometh of retchelesnesse without avisement, and semblable thinges.

Let us now touche the vice of flatterie, whiche ne cometh not gladly but for drede, or for covetise. Flatterie is generally wrongfull praising. Flatterers ben the devil's norices, that norishe his children, with milke of losingerie: forsoth Salomon saith, that flatterie is worse than detraction, for sometime detraction maketh an hautein manne be the more humble, for he dredeth detraction, but certes flatterie maketh a man t'enhaunce his herte and his countenance. Flatterers be the Devill's enchauntours, for thei make a manne to wene himself be like that he is nat like. Those be like to Judas, that betraie a manne, to sell him to his enemy. Flatterers ben the devill's: Chapeleins, that ever sing Placebo. I reken flatterie in the vices of ire: for oft time if a man be wroth with an other, than wolle he flatter some wight, to susteine him in his quarrell.

Speke we now of soche cursing, as cometh of irous hert. Malison generally may be saied, every maner power of harme: soche cursing bereveth man fro the teigne of God, as saith S. Poule. And ofte time soche cursing wrongfully returneth ayen to him that curseth, as a birde that turneth again to his owne nefte. And over all thing, men oughte eschue to curse ther children, and yeve to the Devill ther engendrure, as ferre forth as in 'hem is: certes, it is grete peril and grete sinne.

Let us than speke of chiding and reproch whiche ben full grete woundes in mann's herte, for thei unfowe the semes of frendship in mann's herte: For certes, unneth maie a man plainly be accorded with him, that him openly hath reviled and reprieved, and disclaunders: This is a full grisely sinne, as Christe saith in the Gospel. And take hede now, that he that repriveth his neighbour, ether he repreve him by some harme of pain, that he hath upon his bodie, as Mesell, croked, harlot, or by some sinne that he doeth. Nowe if he repreve him by any enfirmitis of Godd's visitation that is harm to hym or payn, than turneth the repreve to Jesu Christ: for pain is send by the rightwise sonde of God, and by his sufferance, be it meselrie, maim, or malady: and if he repreve him uncharitably of sinne that he useth, as thou holour, thoudronkelewe harlot, and so forth, than pertaineth that to the rejoising of the devill, whiche ever hath joie that men doen sin. And certes, chiding maie not come but of vilanous herte, for after the haboundance of the herte speketh the mouth full oft. And ye shall understond, that loke by any waie, whan any man shall chastise or correct an other, that he beware from chiding or repreving: for truly but he beware, he maie ful lightly quicken the fire of angre and of wrath, whiche he should quenche: and peraventure, slaeth him, which he might chastise with benigne. For as saith Salomon: the amiable tongue is the tre of life, that is to saie, of life spirituall. And sothly, a dissolute tong slaeth the spirites of 'hem that repreve, and also of him whiche is reprieved. Lo! what saith saint Augustin: There is nothing folike the devil's child, as he whiche oft chideth. Saint Poule seyth also, a servaunte of GOD behoveth not to chide. And though that chiding be a villainous thing, betwixt al maner folke, yet it is certes moste uncovenable, betwene a man and his wife, for there is never reste. And therefore saith Salomon: An hous that is uncovered in reyne, and a chiding wife, ben a like.

A manne, which is in a dropping hous in many places, though he eschue the dropping in o place, it droppeth on him in an other place: So fareth it by a chiding wife, if she chide him in one place, she wolle chide him in an other: And therefore better and gretly more plesant is a morsell, or little gobet of brede with joye, than an hous filled full of delicies, with chiding and gnerring, saith Salomon. Saint Poule saith, O ye women, beth ye subgette to your husebandes, as you behoveth and ought in God: And ye men loveth your wives. Ad Colossenses. iii.

Afterward speke we of scorning, whiche is a wicked sinne, and namely whan he scorneth a man for his gode werkes: For certes, soche scorners fare like the foule Tode, that maie not endure to smell the swete savour of the vine, whan it flourisheth. These scorners ben parting felowes with the devil, for thei have joie whan the Devill winneth, and sorowe if he leseth. Thei ben adversaries of Jesu Christ, for thei hate that he loveth, that is to saie, salvation of soulis.

Speke we now of wicked counsaile, the whiche is a Traiture, for he disceiveth him that trusteth in him: Ut Achitophel ad Absalom. But nathelesse, yet is his wicked counsaile, first ayenst himself, for as saith the Wiseman: Every false living man hath this propertie in himself, that he that wolle anoie an other man, he anoie first himself. And men shall understond, that man shall not take his counsaile of false folke, ne of angrie folke, or grevous folke, ne of folke that that love specially to moche here owne proffit, ne to moche worldly folke, namely in counsailling of soules.

Now cometh the sinne of 'hem that sowe and make discorde emong folke, whiche is a sinne that Christ hateth utterly, and no wonder is: for he died for to make concorde. And more shame doe thei to Christe, than did thei that him crucified: for God loveth better that frendship be emonges folke, than he did his owne body, whiche that he gave for unite. Therefore ben thei likened to the devill, that ever be about to make discorde. Now cometh the sinne of double tounge, soche as speke faire before folke, and wickedly behind, or els thei make semblaunte, as though thei spake of gode entencion, or els in game and plaie, and yet thei speke of wicked entent.

Now cometh bewraying of counsaile, through whiche a man is defamed: certes unneth maie he restore the damage. Now cometh menace, that is an open folle, for he that ofte menaceth, he thretteth more than he maie performe ful oft time. Now cometh idel wordes, that is without profite of him that spekethe the wordes, and also of him that harkeneth the wordes: Or els idell wordes ben those that ben nedelesse, or without entente of naturell profite. And albeit that idel wordes be somtime veniall sinne, yet should men doubt 'hem, for we shall yeve rekening of 'hem before God. Now cometh jangling, that may not be without sinne. And as saith Salomon: it is a sign of apert foly. And therefore a Philosopher saied, whan menne asked him how that men shulde plesse God, he answerde: Doe many gode werkes, and speke few vanities. After this cometh the sin of japeries, that ben the devill's Apes, for thei make folke to laugh at ther japerie, as folke doe at the gaudes of an ape: whiche japes defendeth saint Poule. Loke how that vertuous wordes and holy comfort 'hem that travaile in the service of Christe. Right so comforteth the villainous wordes and knackes of japers 'hem, that travaile in the service of the devill. These ben the sinnes of the tounge, that come of ire, and of other sinnes.

The remedie ayenst Ire.

THE remedie ayenst Ire, is a vertue that men klepen mansuetudo that is debonaire, and also an other vertue that menne clepe pacience or sufferaunce.

Debonaire withdraweth and refraineth the stringes and movinges of mann's corage in herte, in soche maner that thei ne skip nat out by anger ne Ire. Sufferaunce suffreth swetely all the anoiaunces and wronges that men doen to man outward. S. Jerome saith this of debonaire, that it doeth no harme to no wight, ne saith: ne for no harme that men doe ne saie, he ne chafeth ayenst reson. This vertue somtime cometh of nature: for as saith the Philosopher, A man is a quicke thinge by nature, debonaire and trefable to godenes: but whan debonaire is enformed of grace, than it is the more worth.

Pacience is an other remedie ayenst ire, and is a vertue that suffreth swetely every mann's godenes, and is nat wroth for no harme that is doen to him. The Philosopher saith, that pacience is the vertue that suffreth debonairely all the outrages of adversite, and every wicked worde. This vertue maketh a man like to God, and maketh him Godd's owne child: as saith Christ. This vertue discomfiteth thine enemies. And therefore saith the Wiseman: if thou would venquish thine enemy, lerne to suffre. And thou shalt understonde, that a man suffereth fower maner of grevaunces, in outward things, a-yenst the whiche fower he must have fower maner of paciencies.

The first grevaunce is of wicked wordes, whiche suffered Jesu Christe without grutching full patiently, whan the Jews dispised him full oft. Suffer thou therfore patiently, for the Wiseman saith: if thou strive with a fole, though the fole be wroth, or though he laugh, alwaie thou shalt have no reste. That other grevaunce outward, is to have dammage of thy cattell: There ayenst suffred Christ full patiently, whan he was dispoiled of all that he had in this life, and that was but his clothes. The thirde grevaunce, is a man to have harme in his body: that suffred Christ full patiently in all his passion. The fourth grevaunce, is an outrageous labour in werkes: wherefore I saie, that folke that make ther servauntes to travaile to grevously, or out of time, as in holy daies, sothly thei do grete sinne. Here ayenst suffred Christe full patiently, and taught us pacience, whan he bare upon his blessed sholders the crosse, upon which he should suffre dispitous deth. Here maie men lerne to be patient, for certes, not onely Christen be patiente for love of Jesu Christ, and for guerdon of the blisse of hevене, and of the blissfull life that is perdurable, but certes the olde Painems, that never were christened, commended and used the vertue of pacience.

A Philosopher uppon a time, that would have bete his disciple, for his grete trespase, for whiche he was moved, and brought a yerde to skore the childe, and whan this child sawe the rodde, he said to his maister: what thinke ye to doe? I woll bete The saied the maister for thy correction: Forsothe saied the childe, ye ought firste correcte your selfe, that have lost all your pacience, for the offence of a childe. Forsoth saied the maister al weping, thou saiest soth: have thou the rodde my dere childe, and correcte me for mine impacience. Of pacience cometh obedience, through whiche a manne is obedient to Christ, and to all 'hem to which he ought be obedient in Christe. And understonde well, that obedience is perfite, whan that a man doeth gladly and hastily, with gode herte entierly all that he should doe. Obedience generally, is to performe the doctrine of God, and of his soveraines, to whiche him ought to be obeisaunt in all rightwisnesse.

De Accidia.

After the sinnes of Envie and Ire, now woll I speke of the sinne of Accidie: for envie blindeth the herte of a manne, and ire troubleth a man, and Accidie maketh him hevvy, thoughtfull and pensive. Envy and ire maken bitternesse in herte, whiche bitternesse is moer of accidie, and benymyth him the love of all godenesse, than is accidie the anguiste of trouble of herte. And saint Augustin saith: It is anoie of godenesse and anoie of harme. Certes this is a dampnable sinne, for it doeth wrong to Jesu Christ, in as moch as it benommeth the service that men ought to doe to owre Lorde Jesu Crist with all the diligence, as saith Salomon: but Accidie oeth no soche diligence. He doeth al thing with anoie, and with wrawnnesse, slackenesse, and excusacion: with idelnesse and unlust. For whiche the boke saith. Accursed be he that doeth the service of God negligently. Than is accidie enemy to every estate of man. For certes the estate of man is in thre maners. Either it is in the estate of innocencie, as was the estate of Adam, before that he fell into sinne, in which estate he was holde to worke, as in praising and lauding God. An other estate is the estate of sinfull men: in whiche estate men ben holden to labour in praying to God, for amendement of ther sinnes, and that he would graunt 'hem to rise out of ther sinnes.

An

An other estate is the estate of grace, in whiche state he is holden to do workes of penitence: and certes, to all these thinges is accidie contrary, for he loveth no busynesse at all. Now certes, this foule sinne accidie is also a full grete enemy to the livelode of the body, for it hath no purveiaunce ayenst temporell necessite, for it forlewethed and forflugged, and that distroiet al godes temporell by rechelesnes.

The fowrth thing is, that accidie is like hem that ber in the paine of hell, bicause of ther sloth and hevines; for thei that be damned ben so bound, that thei may neither wel doe ne thinke. Of accidie cometh first that a manne is anoied and encombred to doe any godenesse, and maketh that God hath abhominacion of soche accidie, as saith S. John.

Now cometh sloth, that woll nat suffre no hardnesse ne penaunce: for sothly slothe is so tender and so delicate, as saith Salomon, that he woll suffer no hardnesse ne penaunce, and therefore he marreth all that he doeth. Ayenst this rotten hertid sinne of accidie and slothe, should men exercise hem self, and use hem to do gode workes: and manly and vertuously catch corage to doe, thinking that our Lorde Jesu Christ quitteth every gode dede, be it never so lite. Usage of labour is a grete thing. For it maketh, as saith S. Bernarde, the labourer to have strong armes, and hard senewes: and slothe maketh hem hevy, feble, and tender. Than cometh drede to beginne to worke any gode workes. For certes, he that enclineth to sin, him thinketh it is so gret an emprise for to undertake the workes of godenesse, and casteth in his herte, that the circumstaunces of godenesse ben so grevous and weightie for to suffre, that he dare not undertake to doe workes of godenes, as saith saint Gregorie.

Now cometh wanhope, that is dispeire of the the mercie of God, that cometh somtime of to moche outrageous sorowe, and sometime of to moche drede, imagining that he hath doe so moche sinne, that it woll not availe him, tho he would repent him, and for take it and doon good: through whiche dispeire or dred, he abandoneth all his herte to every maner sinne, as saith saint Augustine. Whiche dampnable sinne, if it continieth unto his ende, it is called finning in the Holy Ghost. This horrible sinne is so perillous, that he that is dispeired, ther n'is no felonie ne no sinne, that he doubteth for to doe, as sheweth well by Judas. For certes, above all sinnes than is this sinne moche displeaunte to Christe, and moche adversarie. Sothly, he that dispeireth him, is like to the coward champion recreaunt, that flieth without nede. Alas alas! nedeles is he recreaunt, and nedelesse dispaired. For certes, the mercie of God is ever redy to the penitent persone, and is above al his workes. Alas! can not a man bethinke him on the Gospell of S. Luke xv. Where as Christ saith, that as well shal there be joie in heaven upon a sinfull manne that doeth penitence, as upon xcix. rightfull men that nedre no penitence. Loke ferther in the same Gospel, the joy and the fest of the gode man, that had lost his sonne, when his sonne with repentaunce was returned to his father. Can thei not remember hem also, that (as saith Saint Luke) Chapi. xxiii. How that thief that was hanged beside Jesu Christe, saied: Lord remember me, when thou comest in thy reigne. Forsoth saied Christ, I saie to The: to daie shalt thou be with me in Paradise. Certes, there is non so horrible sinne in man, that he maie in his life be distroied by penitence, through vertue of the passion and of the deth of Christe. Alas! what nede men than to be dispaired, sith that his mercy is so redy and large? but aske and have. Than cometh sompnolence, that is sluggie, slombring, whiche maketh a man hevie, and dull in bodie and in soule, and this sinne cometh of slothe: And certes, the time that by waie of reson, man should not slepe, is by the morowe, but if ther were cause reasonable. For sothly, the morowe tide is moche covenable, a manne to saie his praiers, and for to thenke on God, and to honor God, and to yeve almose to the pore that cometh first in the name of Jesu Christ.

Loe! what saith Salomon? Who so woll by the morowe awake to seke me, he shal find me. Than cometh negligence or rechelesnes that recketh of nothing. And though that ignorance be mother of all harmes, certes, negligence is the novice. Negligence ne doth no force, when he shall doe a thing, whether he doe it well or evill.

The remedy of these two sinnes is, as saith the Wiseman: that he that dredeth God, spareth not to doe that he ought to doe, and he that loveth GOD, he woll doe diligence to plesse GOD by his workes, and abandone himself with all his might, well for to doe. Than cometh idelnesse, that is the yate of all harmes. An idell manne is like to a place that hath no walles, the devill maie enter on every side, or shote at him that is discoverte, by temptacion on every side. This idleness is the thorruke of all wicked and vileynous thoughts and of all janglingis. Certes, blis of hevne is yeve to hem that will labour, and not to idel folke. Also David saith, that thei ne be not in the labour of menne, ne thei shall not be whipped with men, that is to saie in Purgatorie. Certes, than semeth it thei shall be turmented with the devils in hell, but if thei do penaunce.

Than cometh the sinne, that men call tarditas, as when a man is so latered, or taryng or he woll tourne to God: and certes, that is a grete foly. He is like him that falleth in the ditch, and woll not arise. And this vice cometh of fals hope, that he thinketh he shal live long, but that hope faileth full oft.

Than cometh lacheffe, that is he that when he beginneth any gode worke, anon he woll leve and stint it, as doen thei that have any persone to governe, and ne take of him no more hede, anon as thei finde any contrary or any anoie. These ben the newe shepherdes, that let ther shepe wittingly go ren to the Wolfe, that is in the breres, or doe not force of ther owne governaunce. Of this cometh povertie and distruction, both of spirituall and temporell thinges. Than cometh a maner coldnesse, that freeth the herte of man. Than cometh undevocion, through whiche a man is so blont, and as saith S. Bernard, hath soche langoure in his soule, that he maie neither redene sing in holy churche, ne here ne think of no devocion, ne travaille with his bondes in no gode worke, that it n'is to him unsavery and all appalled. Than wexeth he slow and slombry, and sone woll be wroth, and sone is enclined to hate and envy. Than cometh the sinne of worldly sorowe, soche as is called Tristitia, that slaeth a man, as saith sainte Poule. For certes, soche sorowe worketh the deth of the soule and the bodie also, for thereof cometh that a man is anoied of his own life. Wherefore soche sorowe shorteth ful oft the life of man, er that his time is come by waie of kinde.

Remedium contra peccatum Accidie.

Ayenst this horrible sinne of accidie, and the branches of the same, there is a vertue that is called Fortitudo or strengthe, that is an affection, through whiche a man dispiseth anyous thinges: this vertue is so mightie and so vigorous, that it dare dare withstonde mightlie, and wisely kepe himself fro perilles that ben wicked, and wraustell ayenst the assautes of the devill, for it enhaunceth and enforceth the soul, right as accidie abateth and maketh it feble: for this fortitude maie endure by long sufferance the travailes that ben covenable.

This vertue hath many spes, the first is called Magnanimite, that is to saie, grete corage. For certes, there behoveth grete corage ayenst Accidie, lest that it ne swallowe the soule by the sinne of sorrowe, or distroie it by wanhope. Certes, this vertue maketh folke undertake hard and grevous things by their own will, wisely and resonably. And for as moche as the devil fighteth ayenst a manne, more by subtilte and sleight, than by strength, therefore shall a man withstande him by wit, reson, and discrecion. Than are there the vertues of faith, and hope in GOD and in his sainctes, to eschue and accomplishe the gode workes, in the whiche he purposeth fermely to continue. Than cometh suretie or sikernes, and that is whan a man ne doubteth no traivale in time comming of the gode workes that he hath begon. Than cometh Magnificence, that is to saie, whan a man doth performe grete workes of godenes, that he hath begon, and that is th'ende, why that men should doe gode workes. For in th'accomplishing of gode workes lieth the grete guerdon. Than is there Constaunce, that is stablesnes of corage, and this should be in herte by stedfast faith, and in mouth, in bering, in chere, and in dede. Also there ben mo speciall remedies ayenst accidie, in divers workes: as in consideracion of the paines of hell, the joyes of heven, and in trust of the grace of the Holy Ghost, that will yeve him might to performe his gode entent.

De Avaritia.

After Accidie, woll I speke of Avarice, and of Covetise. Of whiche sinne S. Poule saith: the rote of all harmes is Covetise. Ad Timoth. vi. For sothly, whan the hert of manne is confounded in it self and troubled, and that the soule hath lost the comforte of God, than seketh he an idell solace of worldly thinges.

Avarice, after the discripcion of S. Augustine, is a licorousnes in hert to have yerthly thinges. Some other folke saie, that Avarice is for to purchase many yerthly thinges, and nothing to yeve to hem that have nede. And understonde, that avarice standeth not onely in lande ne cattell, but somtime in science and glorie, and in every maner of outragious thinges is avarice and covetise; and the difference betwixe avarice and covetise is this.

Covetise, is for to covete soche thinges, that thou hast nat. And Avarice is to withholde and kepe soch thinges, as thou hast without rightfull nede. Sothly, this avarice is a sinne, that is full dampnable, for all holy writ curseth it, and speketh ayenst that vice, for it doeth wrong to Jesu Christe: for it taketh fro him the love that men to him owe, and tourneth it backwarde ayenst all reson, and maketh that the avaricious man hath more hope in his cattell, than in Jesu Christe, and doth more observaunce in keping of his tresour, than he doeth in the service of Jesu Christe. And therefore saith saint Poule: Ad Ephesios quinto: That an avaricious man is the thraldome of Idolatrie.

What difference is there betwixt an Idolaster, and an avaricious man? But that an Idolaster, peraventure ne hath nat but a Maumet or two, and the avaricious manne hath many. For certes, every Florein in his cofer, is his Maumet. And certes, the sinne of maumetrie, is the first that God defended, as in the x. commaundmenttis it berith witnes, in Exodi. Capi. xx. Thou shalt have no false Goddess before me, ne thou shalt make to The no graven thing. Thus is an avaricious man that loveth his tresure before God, an Idolaster. And through this cursed sinne of avarice and covetise, cometh these hard lordshippes, through whiche thei ben streined by taylliagys, customes, and cariages, more than ther duetie or reson is, or els take thei of ther bonde menne amerciamentes, whiche might more resonably be called extorcions, than amerciamentes. Of which amerciamentes, or raunsoming of bondmen, some Lordes stewardes saie, that it is righfull, for as muche as a churle hath no temporell thing, that it ne is his lordes, as thei saie. But certes, these lordshippes doe wrong, that bereve their bondemen thinges that thei never yave hem. Augustinus de Civitate Dei. Libro. ix. Sothe is that the condicion of thraldome, and the first cause of thraldome was for sinne.

Thus maie ye se, that the offence deserved thraldome, but nat nature. Wherefore these Lordes ne should not moche glorifie hem in ther Lordshippes, sithe that thei by naturall condicion ben not lordes over thralles, but for that thraldome came firste by the deserte of sinne. And more over, there as the Lawe saith, that temporell godes of bonde folke ben the godes of ther Lorde: yea, that is for to understonde, the godes of the Emperour, to defende hem in ther right, but not to robbe hem ne reve hem. Therefore saith Seneca: Thy prudence should teche The for to live benignly with thy thrall. Those, that thou callest thy thralles, ben Godd's peple: and for humble peple ben Christ's frendes, thei ben consuberniall with the Lord.

Thinke also, that if soche fede as churles spring, of soche fede spring Lordes: As well may the chorle be saved as the Lord. The same deth that taketh the chorle, soche deth taketh the Lorde. Wherefore I rede doe right so with thy chorle, as thou wouldest that thy lorde did with The, if thou wer in his plight. Every sinfull manne is a chorle to sinne: I rede The Lorde certes, that thou werke in soche wise with thy chorles, that thei rather love The than dred The. I wote well, that there is degre above degre, as reson is, and skill is that menne doe ther devour, there as it is due. But certes, extorcions, and dispote of your underlinges is dampnable.

And ferthermore understande well, that these Conquerours or Tyrautes, make full oste thralles of hem: that ben borne of as roiall blode, as ben thei that hem conquere. This name of Thraldome was never erst knowe, till that Noe saied that his sonne Canaan should be thrall to his brethren for his sinne. What saie we than of hem, that pil and doe extorcions to holie Church: Certes, the swerd that menne yeve first to a knight, whan he is newe dubbed, signifieth that he should defende holie Church, and not robbe and pill it, and whoso doeth is Traitor to Christe. And as saith saint Augustine, thei ben the Devill's Wolves, that strangle the Shepe of Jesu Christe, and doen worse than Wolves, for sothely, whan the Wolfe hath full his wombe, he stinteth to strangle shepe: But sothly, the pillours and distroiers of holie Church godes, ne doe not so, for thei ne stinte never to pill. Now as I have saied, sith so is that sinne was first cause of thraldome, than is it thus, that at the time that all this worlde was in sin, than was all this worlde in thraldome, and in subjection, but certes, sithe the time of grace came, GOD ordained that some folke should be more hie in estate and in degre, and some folke more lowe, and that eche should be served after his estate and in degre.

And therefore, in some countreis there thei be thralles, whan thei have tourned hem to the faith, thei

thei make thier thralles fre out of the thraldome: and therefore, certes the Lord oweth to his man, that the man oweth to the lorde. And therefore the Pope clepyth himself servaunt of the servautes of God, but for as the estate of holy Church ne might not have ben, ne the common profite might not have be kept, ne pece ne reste in erth, but if God had ordained that some manne hath hier degre, and some menne lower: Therefore was soverainte ordained to kepe, maintaine, and defende ther underlinges and ther subjectes in reson, as fer forthe as it lieth in ther power, and not to distroy ne confounde 'hem. Wherefore I saye, that those lordes that ben like woulves that devour the possessions or the cattell of pore folkes wrongfully, without mercy or mesure, they shall receive by the same mesure that they have mesured to pore folke the mercy of Jesu Christ, but it be amended. Nowe cometh disceite betwixt marchaunt and marchaunt. And thou shalt understond that marchaundise is in two maners, that one is bodily, and that other is ghostly: that one is honest and lesful, and that other is dishonest and unlesful. The bodely marchaundise that is lesful and honeste is this: that there as God hath ordained that a reigne or a countrie is soficiente and plenteous withinne himselfe, than it is honest and lesful that of haboundaunce of this countrie menne helpe an other countrie that is nedey: And therthere muste be marchautes to bring fro one countrie to that other ther marchaundise. That other marchaundise that menne haunten with fraude, and trecherie, and disceite, with lesinges and false othes, is righte cursed and dampnable. Espirituell Marchaundise is properly Simonie, that is ententise desire to bie any thing espirituell, that is a thinge, whiche apertaineth to the saintuarie of GOD, and to cure of the soule. This desire if so be that a manne do his diligence to perfourme it, all be it that his desire ne take none effect, yet it is to him a dedly sinne, and if he be ordred, he is irreguler. Certes Simonie is called of Simon Magus, that would have boughte for temporell cattel the yeste that God had yeve by the Holy Ghost to Saint Peter, and to the Apostels: And therefore understonde, that he that selleth and he that bieth thinges espirituels, ben called Simoniackes, be it by cattel, be it by procuring or by fleshy praier of his frendes, fleshy frendes or spirituel frendes, fleshy in two maners, as by kinred or other frendes: Sothly if they praie for him that is not worthy and able, it is Simonie if he take the benefice, and if he be worthy and able there is none. That other maner is whan man or woman praieith for folke to avaunce him onely for wicked fleshy affection which thei have unto the persons, and that is soule simonie. But certes in service, for whiche menne yeven thinges espirituell unto there servautes, it must be understonde that the service muste be honest, or els not, and also that it be without bargeining, and that the person be able. For as saith saint Damascen: All the sinnes of the worlde at regarde of this sinne, are as thing of noughte, for it is the grettest sinne that maie be after the sinne of Lucifer and of Antichriste: For by this sinne GOD forleseth the Church and the Soule, which he bought with his precious blode, by 'hem that yeve Churches to 'hem that ben nought able of aunninge, for they put in theves hondes that stele the soules of Jesu Christe, and distroie his patrimonie. By suche unworthy priestes and curates have leude menne lesse reverence of the Sacramentes of holy Church, and suche yovers of churches put the children of Christ out, and put in the Church the Divels owne sonnes: thei sell the soules of the lambys that thei shold kepe fro the wolf that strangleth 'hem: and therefore shall they never have parte of the pasture of lambes, that is the blisse of Heven. Nowe cometh hasardrie with his apurtynauncis, as tables and raffles, of whiche cometh disceite, false othes, chidinges, and all ravinelle, blaspheminges, and renyings of God, and hate of his neighbours, waste of godes, mispendinge of time, and sometime manslaughter. Certes hasardours ne mowe not be without grette sinne whiles that thei haunte that crafte. Of Avarice cometh also lesinges, theft, false witnesse, and false othes: and ye shall understonde that these be grette sinnes, and expresse ayenst the commaundementes of God, as I have saide. False witnesse is in worde, and also in dede: In worde, as for to bireve thy neighbour's gode name by thy false witnesse, or bireve him his cattell or his heritage, by thy false witnessing, whan thou for ire or for mede, or for envie, berest false witnesse, or accusest him, or excusest thy selfe falsely. Ware ye questmongers and notaries: certes for false witnessing was Susan in ful grette sorow and paine, and many an other mo. The sin of theft is also expresse ayenst Godd's hest, and in two maners, corporel and spirituel, the temporell theft is: As for to take thy neighbour's cattel ayenst his will, be it by force or by sleight, be it by mette or by mesure: by steling also of false enditementes upon him, and in borowing of thy neighbour's cattel, in entent never to pay it ayen, and semblable thinges. Espirituel theft is sacrilege, that is to say, hurting of holy things sacred to Christ in two maners, by reason of the holy place, as churches or chirchhawis: For which every vilainous sinne that men done in suche places, may be called sacrilege, or every violence in the semblable places. Also thei that withdrawe falsely the rightes that long to holy church and pleasing. And generally sacrilege is to reve holy thing fro holy place, or unholy thing out of holy place, or holy thinge out of unholy place.

NOwe shall ye understond, that relieving of Avarice is misericorde and pite largely taken. And menne might aske why that misericorde and pite are relievinge of Avarice? Certes the avaricious man sheweth no pite ne misericorde to the nedefull man.

For he deliteth him in the keeping of his trefure; and nat in the rescuing ne relieving of his evin Christen. And therefore speke I first of misericorde. Than is misericorde (as saith the Philosopher) a virtue, by whiche the corage of manne is stered by the misere of him that is disced. Upon whiche misericorde foloweth pite, in performing and fulfilling of charitable workes of mercy, helpeth and comforteth him that is misced. And certes these thinges move and stere a man to misericorde of Jesu Christe; that he yave himselfe for our offence, and suffred deth for misericorde, and foryave us our original sinnes, and therby relefed us fro the paines of hell, and minished the paines of purgatory by penitens; and yeveth grace well to doe, and at laste the blisse of Heven. The spes of misericorde ben for to releve, and also for to yeve: for to foryeve and relece, and for to have pite in herte and compassion of the mischief of his evin Christen, and also to chastise there as nede is. An other maner of remedy ayenst Avarice, is resonable largesse: but sothly here behoveth the consideracion of that grace of Jesu Christ, and of the temporell godes, and also of the godes perdurable that Jesu Christ yafe to us, and to have remembraunce of the deth whiche he shal receive, he knoweth not whan, where, ne who: and also that he shall forgo all that he hath, save onely that which he may dispende in worldly gode.

But for as muche, as some folke ben unmesurable, menne oughte for to avoide and eschue folish largesse, the whiche some peple call waste.

Certes

Certes, he that is fole large, yeveth not his cattell, but he lefeth his cattell.

Sothly what thing that he yeveth for vein-glory, as to minstrels and to folke that bere his renome in the world, he hath sinne thereof and none almesse: Certes he lefeth foule his gode that he ne seketh with the yest of his gode nothing but sinne. He is like to an horse that seketh rather to drinke drovy or troubled water, than for to drinke water of the clere wel. To hem appertainen the saide cursing, that Christ shall yeve at the daie of dome, to hem that shall be dampned.

Sequitur de Gula.

After Avarice cometh Gloteny, which is expresse ayenst the commaundement of God. Gloteny is unmesurable appetite to ete or to drinke, or els to do inough to the unmesurable appetite, and disordeined covetise to ete or to drinke. This sinne corrupteth all this worlde, as is well shewed in the sinne of Adam and of Eve. Loke also what saith sainte Poule of gloteny. Many (saith he) gon, of whiche I have often said to you, and now I saye it weping, that ben the enemies of the crosse of Christ, of whiche the ende is deth, and of which ther wombe is ther God and ther glorye, in confusion of hem that so devour erthly thinges. He that is used to this sinne of Gloteny, he ne maie no sinne withsonde, he must be in servage of all vices, for it is the Devil's houre, there he hideth and resteth him. This sinne hath manie spes: The firste is dronkenesse, that is the horrible sepulture of man's reason: and therefore whan a manne is dronke he hath loste his reson: And this is dedly sinne. But sothly whan that a manne is not wonte to stronge drinke, and paraventure ne knoweth not the strength of the drinke, or hath feblese in his hed, or hath travailed, through whiche he drinketh the more, all be he so dainly caught with drinke, it is no dedly sinne, but veniall. The second spece of gloteny is, that the spirite of a manne wexeth al troubled, for dronkenesse bireveth him the discrecion of his wit.

The thirde maner spece of Glotenie is whan a manne devoureth his mete, and hath not right full maner of eting. The fowerth is, whan through the grete abundaunce of his mete the humours in his body ben distempered. The fift is, foryetfulness by to moch drinking, for whiche sometime a man forgetteth er the morning what he did att even or the night byforne.

In other maner ben distinct the spes of glotenie, after sainte Gregorie. The first is, for to ete before time to ete. The second is, whan a man giveth him to delicate mete, or drinke. The third is, whan men take to moche over mesure. The fourth is, curiosite, with gret entent to make and appareill his mete. The fift is, for to ete to greedely.

These ben the five fingers of the devill's hond, by whiche he draweth folke to sinne.

The remedie ayenst Glotenie.

Ayenst Glotenie, the remedie is abstinence, as saith Galiene: but that I holde nat meritorious, if he doe it for the hele of his bodie. Sainte Augustine woll that abstinence be doen for vertue, and with pacience. Abstinence (saith he) is little worthe, but if a man have gode will thereto, and but if he be enforced by pacience and charite, and that men doe it for Godd's sake, and in hope to have blisse in heven.

The fellowes of abstinence be attemperance, that holdeth the mene in all thinges. Also shame that eschueth al dishonestie. Suffisaunce, that seketh no riche metes ne drinks, ne doeth not force of outrageous appareling of mete. Mesure also, that restraineth by reson, the unmesurable appetite of eting. Sobernesse also, that restraineth the outrage of drinke. Sparing also, that restraineth the delicate ese to sit longe at mete, wherfore some folke standen of ther owne will whan thei ete, bicause thei woll ete at lesse lesure.

De Luxuria.

After Glotenie cometh lecherie, for these two sinnes ben so nigh cosins, that oft time thei wol nat depart. God wote this sin is ful displefant to God, for he sayd himself: doe no lecherie. And therefore he putteth grete paines ayenst this sinne of lecherie in the olde lawe.

For in the old law, if a woman thrall wer take in this sinne, she should be bete with staves to deth. And if she were a gentill woman, she should be slain with stones. And if she were a Bishop's daughter, she should be brent by Godd's commaundement.

More over by the sinne of Lecherie God drowned all the worlde, at the deluve of Noe, and after that he brent five citees with thunder and lightning, and sanke hem into hell.

Now let us speke than of the said stinking sinne of Lecherie, that menne call avoutrie of wedded folke, that is to saie, if that one of hem ben weddid, or els bothe. Saint John saith, that avouterers shall be in hell, in stynke brenning of fire and of brimstone, for the stynche of the ordure: certes the breking of this Sacramente is an horrible thing: it was made of God himself in Paradise, and confirmed by Jesu Christe, as witnesseth S. Mathew in the Gospell: A manne shall leve father and mother, and take him to his wife, and thei shall be two in one fleshe.

This Sacramente betokeneth the knitting together of Christe and holie Church. And not only that God forbade avoutrie in dede, but also he commaunded that thou shouldest not covete thy neighbour's wife. In this heste saith saint Augustine, is forbidden all maner covetise to do Lecherie. Lo! what saith saint Mathewe in the Gospell? that who so seeth a woman, to covetise of his luste, he hath doen Lecherie with her in his herte. Here maie ye se, that not onely the dede of this sinne is forbidden, but also the desire to that sinne. This cursed sinne anoieth grevously hem that it haunt: and first to ther foule, for he obligeth it to sinne, and to paine of deth, whiche is perdurable. Unto the bodie anoieth it grevously also, for it drieth him and wasteth, and shenteth him, and of his blode he maketh Sacrifice to the fend of helle: It wasteth his cattell and his substance. And certes, if it be a fouler thing, a manne to waste his cattell on women: yea it is a fouler thing, whan that for soche ordure women dispende upon menne, ther cattel and ther substance. This sinne as saith the prophete, taketh from manne and woman ther gode fame and ther honour, and it is full delectable, and plesant to the devill. For therby winneth he the more parte of this wretched worlde. And righte as a Marchaunte delireth him moste in that chaffare, whiche he hath moste avauntage and profite of, right so deliteth the fend in this ordure.

This is that other honde of the devill, with five fingers, to catche the peple to his vilanie. The firste is the folishe looking of the folishe woman and of the folishe man, that sleeth right as the Basilisk or Cocatrice sleeth folke by venom of his sight, for the covetise of the eyen foloweth the covetise of the hert.

The second finger is the villainous touching in wicked maner. And therefore saith Salomon: that who so toucheth and handeleth a woman, he fareth as the manne that handeleth the scorpion, which stingeth and sodainly sleeth through his enveming, or as who so that toucheth warme pitch blemisheth his fingers. The thirde is foule wordes, whiche fareth like fire, whiche right anon brenneth the herte. The fourthe finger is the kissing: And truly he were a grete sole that would kisse the mouthe of a brenninge oven or of a forneis. And more soles ben they that kisse in vilanie, for that mouthe is the mouthe of hel, and namely these olde dotardes holours, whiche wolle kisse and flicker, and besie hem self though they maie nought do. Certes they ben like to houndes: For an hounde whan he cometh nigh to the roser, or by other benches, though he be that they maie not pisse, yet wolle he heve up his legge, and make a countenance to pisse. And for that manie manne weneth that he maie not sinne for no licorousnesse that he doth with his wife, truly that opinion is false: God wote a manne maie sle himselfe with his owne knife, and make himselfe dronke with his owne tonne. Certes be it wife, be it childe, or any worldly thing, that he loveth before God, it is his maumette, and he is an idolaster. A manne should love his wife by discrecion, patiently and attemperatly, and than is she as though it were his suster. The fiftie finger of the Divell is honde is the stinking dede of lechery. Truly the five fingers of glotonie the Divell putteth into the wombe of a man: And with his five fingers of lecherye he gripeth him by the reines, for to throwe him into the forneis of Hell, there as they shall have the fire and the wormes that ever shall laste, and weping and wailing, and sharpe hungre and thrust, grimnesse of Divels, whiche shall all to trede hem withouten ende. Of lecherie as I saide soun-eth and springeth divers especes: as fornicacion, that is betwene man and woman whiche be not married, and is dedly sinne, and ayenst nature: All that is enemye and distruccion to nature is ayenst nature. Perfaie the reson of a man telleth him wel also that it is dedly sinne, for as much as God forbade lecherie. And saint Poule yeveth hem the reigne that n'is dewe to no wight but to hem that done dedly sinne. Another sinne of lechery is to bireve a maidens maidenhed, for he that dothe, certes he casteth a maiden out of the hieft degre that is in this presente life, and bireveth her that precious fruite that the boke calleth the hundreth fruites, I ne can faye it none other wife in Englishe, but in Latin it highte (Centesimus fructus.) Certes he that so doth is the cause of many damages and vilanies, mo than any manne can reken: righte as he is cause of many damages somtime that bestes doe in the felde, that breke the hedge or the closure through which he distroieth that maie not be restored: For certes no more maye maidenhed be restored, than an arme that is smitte fro the bodie maie retorne ayen and wexe: She maie have mercy, this wote I well, if that she have will to doe penitence, but never shall it be that she n'as corrupte. And all be it so that I have spoke somewhat of avoutrie, also it is gode to shewe the perilles that longe to avoutrie, for to eschewe that foule sinne. Avoutrie in latin is for to saie, approching of an other mann's bedde, through whiche those that sometime were one fleshe, abandon ther bodies to other persons. Of this sinne as saith the wise man folowe many harmes: Firste breking of faithe, and certes in faithe is the keye of christendome: and whan that faithe is broke and losse, sothly christendom stont veine and withoute fruite. This sinne is also a theef, for theste generally is to reve a wight his thing ayenst his will. Certes, this is the foulest theft that may be, whan that a woman steleth her body fro her husbonde, and yeveth it to her holour to dofoyle her, and steleth her soule fro Christe, and yeveth it to the Devill: This is a fouler theste than for to breke a churche and stele away the chalice, for these avouterers breke the temple of God spiritu-ally, and stele the vessell of grace that is the bodie and the soule: For whiche Christe shall distroy hem, as saith saint Poule. Sothely of this theste doubted gretly Joseph, whan that his Lord's wife prayed him of vilanie, whan he saide: Lo my Lady how my Lorde hath take to me under my warde, all that he hath in this world, ne nothing of his thinges is out of my power, but onely ye that be his wife: and how should I than do this wickednesse and sinne so horrible ayenst God, and ayenst my lorde! God it forbode. Alas! all to litell is suche trouthe now founde. The third harme is the filth, through which they breke the commaundement of God, and defoule the auter of matrimonie, that is Christ. For certes, in so muche as the Sacrament of mariage is so noble and so digne, so muche it is greter sin for to breke it: For God made mariage in paradise in the estate of innocencie, to multiplie mankind in the service of God, and therefore is the brekinge thereof the more grevous, of whiche breking come false heires oft time, that wrongfully occupie folkes heritages: and therefore wolle Christe putte hem out of the reigne of heaven, that is heritage to gode folke. Of this brekinge cometh also oft time that folke unware wedde or sin with ther own kinrede: and namelye these harlottes that haunte bordels of these foule women, that maie be likened to a commune gonge, where as menne purge ther ordure. What saie we also of putours, that live by the horrible sinne of putrie, and constreine women to yeve to hem a certaine rente of ther bodely puterie, yea somtime of his own wife or his childe, as don these baudes: Certes, these ben cursed sinnes. Understond also that avoutrie is sette gladly in the ten commaundementes bitwene theste and manslaughter, for it is the gretest theste that maie be, for it is theste of bodie and of soule, and it is like to homicide, for it kerveth a two and breketh a two hem that firste were made of one flesh. And therefore by the olde lawe of GOD they should be slaine, but nathelesse by the lawe of Jesu Christ, that is law of pite, whan he said to the woman that was founde in avoutrie, and should have be slaine with stones after the will of the Jewes, as was ther lawe: Go said Jesu-Christ, and have no more will to do sinne. Sothely the vengeance of avoutrie is awarded to the paines of Hell, but if so be that it be distroyd by penitence. Yet ben there mo especes of this cursed sinne, as whan that one of hem is religious or els bothe, or of folke that ben entred into ordre, as Subdeken, Deken, or Prieste, or hospitaliers. And ever the hier that he is in ordre, the greter is the sinne. The thinges that gretly agredge ther sinne is the breking of ther avowe of chastite, whan they receiveth the ordre. And more over sothe is that holy order is chefe of all the tresorie of GOD and his especieell signe and marke of chastite, to shew that they ben joyned to chastite, whiche is the moste precious life that is: and these ordred folke ben specially tited to God and of the speciall meine of GOD, for whiche whan they doen dedly sinne they ben the traitours of GOD and of his peple, for they live by the peple for to preye for hem. Priestes ben Aungelles as by the dignite of ther misterie, but forsoth saint Poule saith, that Sathanas transfourmeth him in an Aungell of lighte. Sothely the Prieste that haunteth dedly sinne he may be likened to the Aungell of darkenesse, transfourmed in the Aungell of light, he semeth Aungell of light, but forsoth he is Aungell of darknesse. Such Priestes be the sonnes of

of Hely, as sheweth in the boke of Kinges, that they were the sonnes of Beliall, that is the Divell. Beliall is to saie without judge, and so fare they, 'hem thinketh they be fre and have no judge, no more than hath a fre bulle that taketh whiche Cowe that him liketh in the toun. So fare thei by women, for right as one fre Bull is inough for all a toun, right so is a wicked Priest corrupcion inough for all a parisse, or for al a countrey: These Priestres, as saith the boke, ne can not minstre the misterie of priesthode to the peple, ne they know not GOD, they ne helde 'hem not apayed, as saith the boke, of sodden fleshe that was to 'hem offred, but they toke by force the fleshe that was raw. Certes, so these shrewes ne helde 'hem not apayed of rosted and sodde fleshe, with whiche the peple fedde 'hem in grete reverence, but they woll have rawe fleshe of folkes wives and ther doughters, and certes these women that consent to ther harlotry don grete wrong to Christ and to holy Church, all Halowes, and ail Soules, for they bireve all these 'hem that should worship CHRIST and holy Church, and praie for christen Soules, and therefore have suche Priestres and ther lemans also that consent to ther lecherie, the cursing of all the courte christien, till they come to amendement. The thirde spece of avourtie is somtime betwixt a manne and his wife, and that is whan they take no regarde in ther assembling, but onely to ther fleshy delite, as saith saint Jerome, and ne reken of nothing but that they ben assembled bicause they ben married, all is gode inoughe, as they thinke: but in suche folke hath the Divell power, as said the angell Raphael to Tobie, for in ther assembling they put Jesu Christe out of ther herte, and yeve 'hem selfe to all ordure. The fourthe spece is the assemble of 'hem that ben of one affinite, or els of 'hem, with which ther fathers or ther kinred have deled in the sinne of lecherie: This sinne maketh 'hem like to houndes, that take no kepe to kinrede. And certes parentele is in two maners: either ghostly or fleshy: ghostly as for to dele with his godsib, for right so as he that engendreth a childe is his fleshy father, right so is his Godfather his father esprituell: for whiche a woman may in no lesse sinne assemble with her Godsib, than with her owne fleshy brother. The fifthe spece is that abhominable sinne, of whiche abhominable sinne no man unneth ought speke ne write, nathelesse it is openly rehersed in holy writ. This cursed sinne doen menne and women in divers entent and in divers maner: But though that holy writte speke of horrible sinne, certes holy writte maie not be defoiled, no more than the sunne that shineth on the donghill. An other sin apperteineth to lechery that cometh sleping, and this sinne cometh often to 'hem that ben maidens, and also to 'hem that be corrupt, and this sinne menne cal Pollucion, that cometh of iiiii manners: Somtime of languishing of bodie, for the humours ben to ranke and habundaunt in the body of man, sometime of infirmite, for febleness of the vertue retentive, as phisike maketh mention: Somtime for surfete of mete and drinke, and somtime of villainous thoughtes that ben enclosed in mann's minde whan he goeth to slepe, whiche maie not be without sinne, for whiche menne muste kepe 'hem wisely, or els maie men sinne ful grevously.

NOwe cometh the remedie ayenst lechery, and that is generally chastite and continence, that restrayne all disordinate mevinges that come of fleshy talentes. And ever the greter merite shall he have that most restraineth the wicked chaufinges of the ordour of this sin, and this is in two maners: That is to saie, chastite in mariage, and chastite in widowhede. Nowe shalte thou understonde that matrimony is lesful assembling of man and woman that receiven by vertue of this Sacrament, the bonde through whiche they maie not be departed in all ther life, that is to say, while that thei live bothe. This, as saith the boke, is a ful grete sacrament, God made it as I have said in paradise, and wold himselfe be borne in mariage: and for to halowe mariage he was at a weddinge, where as he tourned water into wine, whiche was the first miracle that he wrought in erth before his disciples. Trew effecte of mariage clenseth fornicacion and replenisheth holy church of gode linage, for that is the ende of mariage, and chaungeth dedly sinne into veniall sin, bitwene 'hem that ben wedded, and maketh the hertes as one of 'hem that ben wedded, as well as the bodies.

Very mariage was established by God, er that sinne began, whan naturall lawe was in his right pointe in Paradise. And it was ordained that o man should have but o woman, and o woman but o man, as saith saint Augustin, by many resons.

First, for mariage is figured betwix Christ and holy church.

An other is for a man is hed of a woman, alway by ordinaunce it should be so. For if a woman had mo menne than one, than should she have mo hedes than one, and that were a right horrible sinne before God, and also a woman mighte not plesse so many folke at ones: and also there should never be reste ne quiete among 'hem, for eche of 'hem would aske ther owne righte. And furthermore, no manne should knowe his owne engendrure, ne who shoulde have his heritage, and the woman should be the lesse beloved fro that time that she were comitted to many menne.

Now cometh how that a man should bere him with his wife, and namely in two thinges: that is to saye, in sufferance and reverence, as shewed Christe whan he first made woman. For he ne made her of the hed of Adam, for she should nat claime to grete lordshippe, for there as the woman hath the maistrise, she maketh to muche variaunce, there nede no mo ensample of this, the experience of this day by day ought inough suffice.

Also certes, God ne made not woman of the fote of Adam, for she should not be holde to lowe, for she cannot patiently suffre, but God made woman of the ribbe of Adam, for woman should be felow unto man.

Man should bere him to his wife in faith, in trouthe, and in love (as saith sainte Poule) that a man should love his wife, as Christ loveth holy Church, that loved it so well that he died for it: So should a man die for his wife, if it were nede.

Now how that a woman should be subject to her husbände: that telleth S. Peter, first in obedience. And also as saith the Decree: a woman that is a wife, as long as she is a wife, she hath none auctorite to swere ne bere witnesse, without leave of her housebände, that is her Lorde, alwaie he should be so by reson. She should also serve him in al honeste, and be attemperate of her arraie.

I woll well that thei should set ther entent to plesse ther husbondes, but nat by queintise of ther arraie. Sainte Jerom saith: Wives that be apparelled in filke and precious purple, ne mowe not clothe 'hem in Jesu Christe. S. Gregorie saith also: that no wight seketh precious array, but onely for vainglory, to be honoured the more of the peple. It is a grete folie, a woman to have gret arraie outward, and in her self be soule inward. A wife shuld also be mesurable in loking, in bering, and in laughing, and discrete in all her wordes and her dedes, and above all worldly thinges, she should love her husbände with al her hert, and to him be true of her body: so should an husbonde be to his wife: For sith that all the body is the husbondes, and the husbonde is the wyv's, so should her hert be, or els ther is betwixt 'hem two, as in that no perfite mariage. Than shal men understonde, that for thre thinges, a manne and his wife fleshely maie assemble. The firste is, forth' entent of engendrure of children, to the service of God, for certes, that is the cause final of matrimonie. An other cause is, to yeld eche of 'hem to other the debtes of ther bodies for neither of 'hem hath power over ther own bodies. The thirde is, for to eschue lecherie and vilanie. The fowerth is, forsoth dedly sinne. As to the first is meritorie: the second also, for as saith the Decree, that she hath merite of chastite, that yeldeth to her husbonde the debte of her bodie, ye though it be ayenst her liking, and the lust of her hert. The third maner is venial sinne, and truly scarce maie any of these be without venial sinne, for the corrupcion and for the delite. The fowerth maner is for to understonde, if thei assemble onely for amoros love, and for none of the forsaied causes, but for to accomplishe the brenning delite, thei recke not how ofte, sothly it is dedly sinne: and that with sorowe some folke woll pain 'hem more to doe, than to ther appetite suffiseth.

The second maner of chastite, is for to be a clene widow, and eschue the enbrasinges of a man, and desire the enbrasing of Jesu Christe. These ben those that have ben wives, and have forgone ther husbondes, and also women that have doen lecherie, and ben received by penitence. And certes, if that a wife could kepe her all chaste, by licence of her husebande, so that she yeve never none occasion that he offende, it wer to her a grete merite. This maner of women that observeth chastite, mote ben clene in herte as well as in body and in thought, and mesurable in clothing and in countenance, abtinent in eting and drinking, in speking, and in dede, she is the vessell or the boxe of the blessed Magdelain, that fulfilleth holy Church of gode odour. The thirde maner of chastite is virginite, and it behoveth that she be holy in hert, and clene of bodie, than is she spouse of Jesu Christe, and she is the life of Aungels: she is the praising of this World, and she is as these martyrs in regalite: she hath in her, that tong maie not tel, ne herte thinke. Virginite bare our Lorde Jesu Christ, and virgin was himself.

An other remedie against lechere, is specially to withdrawe soche thinges, as yeve occasion to that vilanie: as ese, eting, and drinking: for certes, whan the pot boileth strongly, the best remedie is to withdrawe the fire. Sleeping long in grete quiet is also a grete nourice to Lecherie.

An other remedie ayenst lecherie is that a manne or a woman eschue the companie of 'hem, by whiche he doubteth to be tempted: For all be it so that the dede is withstonde, yet is there grete temptacion. Sothly, a white wall, although it ne brenne not fully, by sticking of the Candell, yet is the wall blac of the leyte. Full oft time I rede, that no man trust in his owne perfection, but he be stronger than Sampson, or holier than Daniell, or wiser than Salomon.

Now after that I have declared you, as I can, the seven dedly sinnes, and some of ther braunches, with ther remedies. Sothly if I could, I would tell you the ten commaundementes, but so hie doctrine I put to divines. Nathlesse I hope to God, thei ben touched in this tretise in Englishe eche of 'hem.

Sequitur secunda pars penitentia.

NOW forasmoche as the second part of penitence stonde in confession of mouth, as I began in the first cap. I saie saint Augustine saith: Sin is every worde and every dede, and all that men conveyten ayenst the lawe of Jesu Christe, and this is for to sinne in herte, in mouthe, and in dede, by the five wittes, whiche ben sight, hering, smelling, tasting or savoure, and feling. Now is it gode to understande, that that agregeth moche every sinne. Thou shalte consider what thou art that doest the sinne, whether thou be male or female, young or old, gentill or thrall, fre or servaunt, hole or sicke, weddid or single, ordred or unordred, wife or sole, clerke or secular, if she be of thy kinrede bodily or ghostly, or no, if any of thy kinrede have sinned with her or no, and many mo thinges.

An other circumstance is this, whether it be doen in fornicacion or in advoutrie or no, in theefte or noon, in mayden or noon, in maner of homicide or no, horrible grete sinnes or smalle, and howe longe thou hast continued in sinne. The thirde circumstance is, the place there thou hast doen sin, whether in other mennes houses, or in thine own, in field, in church or in churchyarde, in church dedicate or no. For if the church be halowed, and man or woman spill his kinde within that place, by waie of sinne or wicked temptacion, the church is enterdited, tyl it were reconfyed by the Bychfehope, and the priest that did soche a vilanie, the terme of all his life he should no more sing Masse, and if he did, he should doe dedly sinne, at every time that he so song Masse. The fowerth circumstance is, by whiche mediatours or by whiche mesfangers, or for enticement, or for consentment, to bere companie with felowshippe. For many a wretche for to bere companie, woll go to the devill of hell. Wherefore, thei that egge or consente to the sinne, ben parteners of the sinne, and of the dampnacion of the sinner. The fifth circumstance is, how many times that he hath sinned, if it be in his minde, and how oft he hath fallen. For he that oft falleth in sinne, he dispiseth the mercie of God, and encreseth his sinne, and is unkinde to Christe, and he wexeth the more feble to withstande sinne, and sinneth the more lightly, and the later riseth, and is more slowe to thrive him, and namely to him that is his confessor. For whiche that folke whan thei fall ayen to ther olde folies, either thei leve their old confessor, or els thei depart ther shrifte in divers partes. But sothly soche departed shrifte deserveth no mercie of God for ther sinnes. The sixte circumstance is, why that a man sinneth as by temptacion: and of him self procure that temptacion, or by the exciting of other folke, or if he sin with a woman by force or by her assente, or if the woman maugre her hed, have be aforced or none. This shall she tell, whether it were for covetise or for povertie, or if it were by her procuremente or no, and soche other thinges. The seventh circumstance is, in what maner he hath doe his sinne, or how that she hath suffred that folke have doe to her. And the same shall the manne tell plainly, with all the circumstances, and whether he hath sinned with common bordell women or none, or doen his sinne in holy times, or none, in fasting time or none, or before his shrift, or after his latter shrifte, and hath paraventure broke thereby his penance enjoined, by whose helpe or whose counsaile, by forcery or craft, all must be tolde, and al these thinges after as thei be gret or smalle, agrege the conscience of manne or woman. And eke the priest that is thy judge, maye the better be avised of his judgement in yeving of penance, and that is after thy contricion. For understonde well that after time that a man hath defoiled his baptisme by sinne, if he wol come to salvacion, there is none other waie but by penance, shrifte, and satisfaction, and namely by thei two, if there be a confessour to whom he maie thrive him, and the thirde if he have life to performe it. Than shall a man loke and consider, that if

if he wolle make a trewe and a profitable confession, there must be foure condicions. First it must be in sorowfull bitternesse of hert, as saith the king Ezekiah to God, I wol remembre me all the yeres of my life in bitternesse of my herte. This condicion of bitternesse hath five signes. The first is, that confession must be shamefast, not for to cover ne hide ther sinne, for he hath offended his Lorde God, and defouled his soule. And herof saith S. Augustin: The hert travaileth for shame of his sinne, and for he hath grette shamefastnesse he is worthy to have gret mercy of God, whiche was the confession of the Publican, that would not heve up his eyen to heven, for he had offended God of heven: for which shamefastnesse he had anon the mercy of God. And therof saith saint Augustin: that suche shamful folke be nixte foryevenesse and mercy.

An other signe is humilite in confession of whiche saith saint Peter: Humbleth you under the mighte of GOD: the honde of God is strong in confession, for therby God foryevech The thy sinnes, for he alone hath the power. And this humilite shal be in hert, and in outward signes: For right as he hath humilite to God in his hert, right so should he humble his body outwarde to the priest, that sitteth in Godd's stede. For which in no maner, sith that Christ is soveraine, and the priest mene and mediatour betwixt Christ and the sinner, and the sinner is the laste by waie of reson. Than should not the sinner sitte as hie as his confessour, but knele before him or at his fete, but if sickenesse cause it: For he shall not take hede who sitteth there, but in whose place he sitteth. A manne that hath trespassed to a Lorde, and cometh to aske mercie and make his accorde, and sitteth him doune by him, men would hold him outrageous and not worthie so sone for to have remission of his trespase.

The thirde signe is, howe thy shrift should be full of teres if thou maie, and if thou maie not wepe with thy bodily eyen, than wepe in thine herte, whiche was the confession of saint Peter. For after that he had forsake Jesu Christ, he went out and wepte ful bitterly.

The fourth signe is, that thou ne lette not for shame to shewe thy confession: Such was the confession of Magdalein, that ne spared for no shame of hem that were at the fest, to go to our Lord Jesu Christ and beknow to him her sinnes. The fiftie signe is, that a manne or a woman be obeisaunte to receive the penaunce that hem is enjoined. For certes Jesu Christ, for the offences of man was obedient to deth. The seconde condicion of very confession is, that it be hastily done. For certes, if a man had a dedly wounde, ever the lenger that he tarieth to hele him self, the more would it corrupt and haste him to his deth, and also the wounde would be the worfe for to hele. And right so fareth sinne, that longe time is in a manne unshewed. Certes a man oughte hastily shewe his sinnes for manie causes, as for drede of deth, that cometh oft sodainly, and no certaine what time it shall be, ne in what place; and also the drenching of o sinne draweth in an other: and also the lenger that he tarieth the farther he is fro Christ. And if he abide to his last daie, scarcely maie he shrive him or amende hym for his sinnes, or repente for the grevous malady of his deth. And for as muche as he ne hath in his life herkened Jesu Christ whan he hath spoken, he shall crie to Jesu Christ at his last daie, and scarcely wolle he herken him. And understonde that this condicion muste have four thinges.

Thy shrifte must be provided before and avised, for wicked hast doth no profite, if a man shrive him of his sinnes: be it of pride, or envy, and so forth with the speces and circumstaunces of sinne. And that he have comprehended in his minde the nombre and gretenesse of his sinnes, and howe longe he hath lien in sinne. And also that he hath be contrite for his sinnes, and in stedfast purpose (by the grace of God) never ayen to fal to sinne. And also that he drede and counterwayte himselfe that he flie the occasion of sinne, to whiche he is enclined. Also thou shalt shrive The of all thy sinnes to o manne, and nat parte to o manne, and parte to another. That is to understonde, in entent to departe thy confession for shame or drede, for it is but strangling of thy soule. For certes Jesu Christ is entierly all gode, in him is none imperfection, and therefore ether he foryevech al perfetely, or els never a dele, I saie nat that if thou be assigned to thy penitencer for certaine sin that thou are bounde to shewe him all the remenant of thy sinnes, of whiche thou hast beshriven of thy curate, but if it like to The of thy humilite, for this is no departing of shrifte. Ne I say not there as I speke of division of confession, that if thou have licence to shrive The to a diskreete and honeste man, a gode priest, and where The liketh, and by licence of thy curate, that thou ne maieste well shrive The to him of all thy sinnes. Lette no sinne be untolde as ferre as thou haste remembraunce. And whan thou shalt be shriven to thy curat, tell him all thy sinnes that thou hast do sith thou were last shriven. This is no wicked entent of division of shrifte.

Also the very shrift asketh certaine condicions. Firste that thou shrive The by thy fre will, nat constrained for shame of folke, sicknesse, ne such other thinges. For it is reson, that he that trespaceth by his fre will, that by his fre will he confesse his trespase, and that none other man tel his sin but himself, ne he shal nat nay ne deny his sin, ne wrathe him ayenst the priest for amoneshing him to leave his sin. The seconde condicion is that thy shrift be lafull, that is to saie, that thou shrivest The, and also the priest that hereth thy confession be verely in the faithe of holy churche, and that a man ne be not dispeired of the mercy of Jesu Christe, as Cain or Judas. And also a man must accuse himself of his owne trespase and not an other, but he shall blame and wite him selfe and his owne malice of his sinne, and none other: But nathelesse, if that an other man be occasion or enticer of his sinne, or the estate of a person be soche by whiche his sinne is agreedged, or els that he maie not plainly shrive him, but he tel the persone with whiche he hath sinned, than maie he tell, so that his entente ne be not to backbite the persone, but onely to declare his confession.

Thou ne shalt not also make no lesinges in thy confession for humilite, paraventure, to saie that thou hast commised and doen soche sinnes, as of which that thou ne wer never giltye. For saint Augustin saith, if that thou because of thine humilite, makest lesinges on thy self, though thou wer not in sinne before yet arte thou than in sinne through thy lesing. Thou must also shewe thy sinne, by thin owne proper mouth, but thou be dombe, and not by no letter: for thou that haste doen the sinne, shalt have the shame therefore. Thou shalt not eke paint thy confession with faire subtell wordes, to cover the more thy sinne: for than begilest thou thy self, and nat the priest, thou must tell it plain, be it never so foule ne horrible. Thou shalt also shrive The to a priest that is discrete to counsaile The, and also thou shalt not shrive The for vainglorie, ne for ipocrisie, ne for no cause, but onely for the love and fere of Jesu Christ, and hele of thy soule. Thou shalt nat also ren to the priest sodainly, to tell him lightly thy sinne, as who saith, to tell a jape or a tale, but avisedly and with gode devocion: and generally shrive The ofte, if thou ofte fall, ofte arise by confession.

And

And though thou thrive The ofter than ones of the sinne, whiche thou haste be shriven of, it is the more merite. And as faith saint Augustine, thou shalt have the more lightly foryevenesse and grace of God, bothe of sinne and pain. And certes ones a yere at lest, it is lawfull to be houseled, for surely ones a yere all thinges renovellen.

Now have I tolde you of verie confession, that is the second part of penitence.

Explicit secunda pars penitentia: Et sequitur tertia pars.

THE thirde part of penitence is satisfaction, and that stont most generally in almose dede and and bodily paine. Now ben there thre maner of almose. Contricion of herte, where a man offreth himself to God. An other is, to have pite of the defaultis of his neighbour. And the third is, in giving of gode counsaile, ghostly and bodily, where as men have nede, and namely in sustenance of mann's fode. And take kepe that a man hath nede of these thinges generally, he hath nede of fode, of clothing, and of herborowe: he hath nede of charitable counsaile, visiting in prison: in sickenesse, and sepulture of his bodie. And if thou maiest not visite the nede-full in prison in thy person, visite 'hem with thy message and yestes. These ben generally the almose and workes of charitie, of 'hem that have temporell richesse, or discrecion in counsailling. Of these workes shalt thou here at the daie of dome.

These almose shalt thou doe of thine own proper thinges, and hastely and prively if thou maiest: but nathelesse, if thou maiest nat doe it prively, thou shalt not forbere to doe almose though men se it, so that it be not doe for thanke of the worlde, but only for thanke of Jesu Christ. For as witnesseth saint Mathewe. Capi. v. A cite maie not be hid that is set on a mountaine, ne men light nat a lanterne, to put it under a bushell, but set it upon a condillsticke, to yeve light to menne in the hous. Right so shull your light light before menne, that thei maie se your gode workes, and glorifie our father that is in heaven.

Now as to speke of bodily pain, it stont in praers, waking, fasting, vertuous teching of orisons. And ye shall understonde, that orisons, or praers, is to saie, a pitous will of hert, that setteth it in God, and expresseth by worde outward to remeve harmes, and have thinges spirituall and perdurable, and sometime temporell thinges. Of whiche orisons certes in the orison of the Pater noster hath Jesu Christ enclosed moste thinges. Certes it is privileged of thre thinges in his dignite, for whiche it is more digne than any other praier, for that Jesu Christe himself made it, and it is short, for it should be lerned the more lightly, and to hold it the more esie in hert, and helpe himself the ofter with that orison: And for a man should be the lesse wery to say it, and nat excuse him to lerne it, it is so short and esie, and for it comprehendeth in it self, all gode praers. The expocion of this holie praier, that is so excellent and digne, I refer to the maisters of theologie, save thus moche wol I saie, that whan thou praieest, that God should foryeve The thine offences, as thou foryevest 'hem that have offended The, be well ware that thou be nat out of charite. This holy orison aminisheth also veniall sin, and therefore it apperteineth specially to penitence.

This praier muste be truely saied, and in parsite faith, and that men praie to God ordinatly, discretely, and devoutly, and alwaie a manne shall put his will to be subject to the will of God. This orison must also be saied with grete humbleesse, and full pure and honestly, and not to the anoiaunce of any man or woman. It must also be continued with the workes of charite. It availeth also ayenst the vices of the soule: for as saith S. Jerom by fasting ben saved the vices of the fleshe, and by praier the vices of the soule.

After this thou shalt understonde, that bodily payne stont in waking. For Jesu Christe saith: wake ye and praie, that ye ne entre into wicked temptacion. Ye shull understonde also, that fasting stont in thre thinges: in forbering of bodily mete and drinke, in forbering of worldely jolite, and in forbering of dedly sinne: this is to saie, that a man shall kepe him fro dedly sinne with all his might.

And thou shalt understonde also, that God ordained fasting, and to fasting partaineth four thinges. Largenesse to pore folke, gladnesse of herte spirituall: nat to be angrie ne anoied, ne grutché for he fasteth, and also resonable houre to ete by mesure, that is to saie, a man shall not ete in untyme, ne sit the lenger at the table for he fasteth.

Than shalt thou understonde, that bodily pain stont in discipline, or teching by worde or writing, or by ensample. Also in wering of here or flamin, or of habergeons on ther naked fleshe for Christ's sake, but be wele awaar that soch maner penaunces ne make nat thine herte bitter or angrie, ne anoied of thy self, for better is to cast awaie thin here, than to cast awaie the swetenesse of Jesu Christe. And therefore saith sainte Poule: clothe you, as thei that ben chosen of God in hert, of misericorde, debonairete, suffraunce, and soche maner of clothing, of whiche Jesu Christ is more plesed than with the heres or herbergeons.

Than is discipline also in knocking of thy brest, in scourging with roddes, in kneling, in tribulacion, in suffring paciently wronges that ben doen to The, and also in pacient suffring of sickenesse, or lesing of worldly godes or cattell, or wife, child, or other frendes.

Than shalt thou understand, whiche thinges distourbe penaunce, and that is in fower maners, drede, shame, hope, and wanhope, that is desperacion. And for to speke first of drede, for which he weneth that he maie suffre no penaunce. There ayenst is remedy, for to thinke that bodily penaunce is but shorte and little, at regard of the pain of hell, that is so cruel and so longe, that it lasteth without ende.

Now ayenst the shame that a man hath to thrive him, and namely these Ipocrites, that would be holde so parsite, that thei have no nede to thrive 'hem. Ayenst that shame should a man thinke, that by waie of reson, that he that hath nat be ashamed to doe foule thinges, certes him ought not be ashamed for to doe faire thinges, and that is confessions. A manne should also think, that God seeth and knoweth all his thoughtes, and all his werkes: to him maie nothing be hid ne covered. Men should also remember 'hem of the shame that is to come at the daie of dome, to 'hem that be nat penitent, and shriven in this present life: for al the cretures in yerth and in hell shall se apertly all that thei hid in this worlde.

Now for to speke of the hope of 'hem, that ben so negligent and slowe to thrive 'hem: that stonde in two maners. That one is, that he hopeth for to live long, and for to purchase moche richetie for his delite, and than he woll thrive him: And as he saith, him semeth than timely inough to come to shrifte. An other is, of surquidrie that he hath in Christ's mercie: Ayenst the first vice, he shall thinke that our life is no sikernes, and also that all the riches in this worlde ben in adventure, and passe as a shadowe on the wal. And as saith saint Gregorie, that it appartaineth to the grete rightwisenesse of God, that never shall the paine stinte of 'hem, that never never would withdrawe 'hem fro sinne ther thanks, but ever continued in sinne: for that perpetuell will to doe sinne, shall thei have perpetuell paine. Wanhope is in two maners. The first wanhope is, in the mercie of God. That other is, that thei think that thei ne might not long persever in godenes.

The firste wanhope cometh of that, he demeth that he hath sinned so gretly and so oft, and so long lien in sinne, that he shal not be saved. Certes ayenst that cursed wanhope should he thinke, that the Passion of Jesu Christe is more strong for to unbinde, than sinne is strong for to binde. Ayenst the second wanhope he shall thinke, that as often as he falleth, he maie rise again by penitence: and though he never so long hath lien in sinne, the mercie of Christ is alwaie redy to receive him to mercie. Ayenst the Wanhope that he demeth he should not long persever in godenesse, he shall thinke that the feblenesse of the devill maie nothing be, but if men wol suffre him, and also he shall have strength of the helpe of Jesu Christ, and of all holy church, and the protection of angels, if him list.

Than shall men understonde, what is the fruit of penance; and after the wordes of Jesu Christ, it is an endlesse blisse of heven. There joie hath never ende, no contrarie of wo ne grevaunce: there al harmes ben passed of this presente life, there as is the sikernes fro the paine of hell, there as is the blisfull companie, that rejoice 'hem ever mo, everiche of o-ther's joye: there as the body of man that sometime was foule and derke, is more clere than the Sunne: there as the body that sometime was sicke, feile, and feble, and mortall, is immortall, and so strong and hole, that there ne maie appeire: there as is neither hungre, thruste, ne colde, but every soule replenished with the sight of the parfit knowing of God. This blisfull reigne maie men purchase by poverte espi-ruell, and the glorie by lownesse, the plente of joie by hungre and thrust, and the reste by traveile, and the life by deth, and mortification of sinne: to whiche life he us bring, that bought us with his precious blode. Amen.

Here endeth the PARSON'S TALE.

What follows is published out of MS. Ch. with some amendments out of other MSS. where the sense required it.

When I preye I to hem alle, that herken this litle tretise or reden it, that if ther be any thing in it, that likith hem, that theroff they thanke our Lord Jesu Crist, of whom procedith all witte and all godenesse; and if there be any thing that displeith hem, I preye hem also that they arrette it to the defawte of myn uncunninge, and nat to the wille of my simple witte, that wold full fayn have seyde bettere, if that I hadde had cuninge: for oure Boke seythe, all that is writen is writen for our doctrine, and that is myn entent. Wherefore I beseeke you mekely for the mercie of God, that ye preye for me; that Crist have mercie on me, and forgyve me my gyltes, and namely for my transacions and enditinges of worldye vaniteis, the whiche I revoke me in my Retractions; as is the Boke of Troylus, the boke also of Fame, the boke of Seinte Valentines Day, of the Parlement of Birdis, the boke of the xiiij Ladies, the Tales of Canterbury, thiske that sounen into synne; the boke of the Lyon, and many an othir boke, if they were in my remembraunce, and manye a song, and manye a lecherous lay: Crist of his grete mercie forgyve me the synne. But of the transacion of the Consolacion of Boys, and other bokes of Legendes of Seintes, and Omelies, and Morallite, and Devocion, that thanke I oure Lord Jesu Crist and his blisfull Mother, and alle the Seintes of Heven, beseeke him and hem that they fro hensforth unto my lyv'is ende, sende me grace to bewaile my gyltes, and to studie to the savacion of my soule, and graunte me grace of verray penitence, confession and satisfacion to don in this present lif, through the beningne grace of hym that is Kinge of all Kinges, and Prest of all Prestes, that boughte us with the precious blode of his herte, so mote I be oon of hem atte the day of dome, that shall be saved. Qui cum Patre, &c.

Here endeth the Tales of Canterbury, compiled by GIFFREY CHAUCERIS, of whos Sowle Jesu Crist have mercy. Amen.

The Romaunt of the Rose.

This Book was begun in French verse by William de Lorris, and finish'd 40 Years after by John Clopinell, alias John Moone, born at Mewen upon the River of Loyer, not far from Paris, as appeareth by Molinet the French Author upon the morality of the Romaunt; and afterward translated for the most part into English Metre by Geffrey Chaucer, but not finish'd. It is entituled the Romaunt of the Rose, or the Art of Love; wherein are shew'd the helps and furtherances, as also the lets and impediments, that Lovers have in their suits. In this Book the Author hath many glances at the Hypocrisy of the Clergy, whereby he got himself such hatred amongst 'em, that Gerson, Chancellor of Paris, writeth thus of him; say' th he, There was one called Johannes Meldinensis, who wrote a Book called the Romaunt of the Rose; which Book if I only had, and that there were no more in the World, if I might have 500 Pound for the same, I would rather burn it than take the Money. He saith more, that if he thought the Author thereof did not repent him for that Book before he dyed, he would vouchsafe to pray for him no more than he would for Judas that betrayed Christ.

M Any menne saine that in sweveninges
Ther n'is but fables and lesinges,
But yet menne maie some swevin sene,
Whiche hardily that false ne bene,

But aftirwarde ben apparaunt,
This maie I drawin to warraunt.

An authour that hight Macrobes,
That halte not dremis false ne lese.
But undoth us the avisioun,
That whilom mette king Cipioun.

And who so saith, and weneth it be
A jape or els a nicete
To wene that dremis aftir fal,
Let who so liste a sole me cal,
For this trowe I, and say for me,
That dremis signifiante be
Of gude and harme to many wightes,
That dremis in ther slepe a nightes
Full many thingis covirtly
That fallin aftir opiny.

Within my twenty yere of age,
Whan that love takith his corage
Of yonge folke, I wente sone
To bed, as I was wont to done,
And faste I slepte, and in sleping
Me mette suche a swevining,
That likid me wondrous wele,
But in that swevin' is ner a dele
That it n'is aftirwarde befall,
Right as this dreame wol tell us al.

Now this dreame wol I rime a right,
To make your hertis gay and light.
For love it prayith, and also
Commaundith me that it be so.

And if there any askin me
Whether that it be he or she,
And how this bokè, whiche is here,
Shal hate, which that I rede you here,
It is the Romaunt of the Rose,
In whiche all the arte of love I close.

The matir faire is of to make,
God graunt in gre that she it take
For whom that it begonnin is,
And that is she, that hath iwis

So mokil prife, and therto she
So worthy is beloved to be,
That she wel ought of prife and right
Be clepid Rose of every wight.
That it was Mey me thoughtin tho,
It is five yere or more ago,

That it was Mey, thus dremid me,
In time of love and jolite,
That al thing ginnith waxin gay,
For there is nethir buske nor hay,
In Mey that it n'ill shroudid bene,
And it with newe levis wrene;

These woddis eke recoveren grene,
That drie in winter ben to sene,
And the erth wexith proude withall
For sote dewis that on it fall,
And the povir estate forgette,
In whiche that winter had it sette,

And than becometh the grounde so proude,
That it wol have a newe shroude,
And make so queint his robe and fayre,
That it had hewes an hundrid payre
Of grasle and flouris, Inde and Pers,
And many hewis full divers,

That is the robe I mene iwis,
Through whiche the ground to praisin is.
The birdis that han lest ther songe
While thei han suffrid colde ful stronge
In wethers grille, and derke to sight,
Ben in Mey, for the sunne bright.

So glad, that they shewe in finging,
That in ther hert is suche liking,
That thei mote singin and ben light;
Than dothe the nightingale her might
To makin noise, and singen blithe,
Than is blisfull many a lithe,

The chelaundre', and the popingay;
Than yonge folke entendin aye,
For to ben gaie and amorous,
The time is than so savourous.

Harde is his herte that lovith nought
In Mey, whan al this mirth is wrought,
Whan he may on these braunchis here
The smale birdis singin clere

Ther

Ther blisfull swete song pitous,
 And in this sefon delitous,
 Whan love affirmith allè thing,
 Me thought one night, in my sleping,
 Right in my bed, ful redily,
 That it was by the morowe erly,
 And up I rose, and gan me clothe,
 Anon I wishe mine hondis bothe,
 A silvir nedil forth I drowe
 Out of aguiler quaint inowe,
 And gan this nedill threde anone,
 For out of tounne me list to gone,
 The sounne of briddis for to here,
 That on the buskis singin clere,
 In the swete sefon, that lefe is,
 With a threde basting my slevis,
 Alone I went in my playing,
 The smale foulis songe herkening,
 That painid 'hem ful many' a paire
 To sing on bowis blossomed faire,
 Jolife and gaie, full of gladnesse,
 Towarde a River gan me dresse,
 Which that I herde renne faste by,
 For fairir playin none saugh I,
 Than playin me by that rivere,
 For from an hill that stode there nere
 Come doune the streme full stille and bold,
 Clere was the watir, and as cold
 As any welle is, sothe to saine,
 And somdele lasse it was than Saine,
 But it was straitir, wele away,
 And nevir saugh I er that daie
 The watir that so wele liked me,
 And wondir glad was I to se
 That lusty place, and that rivere;
 With that watir, that ran so clere,
 My face I wishe, tho sawe I wele
 The botome ipaved everidele
 With gravell, ful of stonis shene,
 The medowis softe, softe, and grene,
 Beet right upon the watir side;
 Ful clere was than the morowe tide,
 And ful attempre out of drede;
 Tho gan I walkin throwe the mede
 Downwarde evir in my playing
 Nigh to the River's side coasting.
 And whan I had a while igone,
 I sawe a Gardin right anone
 Full long and brode, and everidele
 Enclosid was, and wallid wele,
 With hie walis enbataillid,
 Portrayred without, and well entaylid
 With many full riche portreitures,
 And both the' imagis and peintures,
 Gan I beholdin besily,
 And I wol tel you redily
 Of thilke imagis the semblaunce,
 As ferre as I have remembraunce.
 Amiddis sawe I Hate yfonde,
 That for her wrathe and ire, and onde
 Semid to be a mainoresse,
 An angry wight, a chidireffe,
 And ful of gile; and fell corage,
 By semblaunt, was that ilke image,
 And she was nothing wele araide,
 But like a wode woman afraide,
 Yfrouncid foule was her visage,
 And grinning for dispitous rage,
 Her nose yfnortid up for tene,
 Ful hidous was she for to sene,
 Ful foule and rusty was she this,
 Her hed iwrithin was iwis
 Ful grimly with a grete rowaile,
 An image of anothre' entaile

A lifte halfe was her fast yby,
 Her name above her hed sawe I,
 And she was callid Felony.
 Anothre' image, that Villany
 Yclepid was, sawe I and fonde
 Upon the wall on her right honde;
 This Villany was like somdele
 That othre' image, and trustith wele
 She semid a wickid creature,
 By countenance in portreiture
 She semid be ful dispitous,
 And eke ful proude, and outragious.
 Wel coude he paint, I undertake,
 That such an image coude imake;
 Ful foule and chorlich semid she,
 And eke villeinous for to be,
 And litil could of noriture
 To worshippe any creature.
 And nexte was painrid Covetise,
 That eggith folke in many' a gife
 To take and yeve right nought again,
 And grete tresouris up to laine.
 And that is she, that for usure
 Lenith to many a creature
 The lasse for the more winning,
 So covitous is her brenning!
 And that is she for pennis fele,
 That techith for to robbe and stele
 These thevis, and these smale harlotes,
 And that is routhe, for by ther throtes
 Ful many one hongith at last;
 She makith folke compasse and cast
 To takin othir folkis thing
 Through robbery, or miscoveting;
 And that is she that makith trechours,
 And she that makith false pledours,
 That with ther termis and ther domes
 Do maidins, childrin, and eke gromes
 Ther heritage alas! forgo.
 Ful crokid were her hondis two,
 For covetise is evir wode
 To gripin othir folkis gode,
 For covetise, for her winning,
 Ful lese hath othir mennis thing.
 Another image set saugh I
 Nexte unto Covetise fast by,
 And she was clepid Avarice;
 Ful foule in painting was that vice,
 Ful sad and caitife was she eke,
 And also grene as any leke,
 So evill hewed was her coloure
 Her semed to' have livid in langoure,
 She was like thing for hungir ded,
 That lad her life onely by bred
 Knedin with eisel strong and egre;
 And therto she was lene and megre,
 And she was clad ful povirly
 Al in an olde torne courtpye,
 As she were all with doggis torne,
 And bothe behinde and eke before
 Ycloutid was she beggirly.
 A mantil honge her faste by
 Upon a benche both weke and smale,
 A burnette cote honge there withal,
 Yfurrid with no menivere,
 But with a furre rough of here,
 Of lambe skynnys hevy and blake,
 It was full olde I undirtake,
 For Avarice to clothe her wele
 Ne hastith her nevir adele,
 For certainly it were her lothe
 To werin of that ilke clothe,
 And if it were forwerid, she
 Would havin full gret nicete

Of clothing, er she bought her newe,
Al were it bad of wol and hewe.

This Avarice helde in her hande
A purse which that honge by a bande,
And that she hid and bonde so stronge,
Men must abidin wondir longe
Out of the purse er there come ought,
For that ne comith in her thought,
It was not certaine her entent
That fro that purse a peny went.

And by that image nigh inough
Was paintid Envy that nere lough,
Nor nevir wel in her hert ferde
But if she either sawe or herde
Some grete mischaunce, or grete disese,
Nothing ne may so much her plese
As mischese and misaventure,
Or whan she seeth discomfiture
Upon any worthy man fall,
Than likith her right well withall,
She is full glad in her corage
Yf she se any grete linage
Be brought to naught, in shamful wise,
And if a man in honour rise
Or by his wit, or his prowesse,
Of that she hath gret hevinesse;
For trustith wele she goeth nie wode
Whan any chaunce yhapith gode.
Envy is of suche cruelte,
That faith ne trowth ne holdith she
To frende ne felowe, badde or gode;
Ne she hath kinne none of her blode
That she n'is ful ther enemy;
She n'olde, I dare saine hardily,
That her own fathir farid wele.
And fore abieth she every dele
Her malice, and her male talent,
For she is in so grete turment
And hate suche, whan that folke doth gode,
That nigh she meltith for pure wode,
Her hert so kervith and so breketh,
That God the peple wel a wrekeith.

Envy I wis shall nevir let
Some blame upon the folke to set,
I trowe that if Envy i-wis
Yknew the bestè man that is
On this side or beyonde the se,
Yet somewhat lackin him wold she;
And if he were so hende and wise,
That she ne might abate his prife,
Yet would she blame his worthinesse,
Or by her wordis make it lesse.
I sawe Envy in that painting
Yhad a wondirful lokig,
For she ne lokid but awrie
Or ovirthwarte, all baggingly,
And she had a full foule usage
She mightin loke in no visage
Of man ne woman forth right plaine,
But shette her one eye for disdaine,
So for Envie ybrennid she,
Whan she might any man yse,
That faire, or worthy were, or wise,
Or ellis stode in folkis prife.

Sorowe was paintid next Envie
Upon that wal of masonrie;
But wel was sene in her colour
That she had livid in langour,
Her semid to have the jaundice;
Not halfe so pale was Avarice,
Ne nothing alike of lenesse,
For sorowe, thought, and grete distresse,
That she had suffrid day and night,
Made her yelow, and nothing bright:

Ful fade, pale, and megre also,
Was nevir wight yet halfe so wo,
As that her semid for to be,
Nor so fulfilled with yre, as she;
I trow that no wight might her plese,
Nor do that thing that might her ese;
Nor she ne would her sorowe slake,
Nor comforte none unto her take,
So depe ywas her wo begonne,
And eke her hert in angre ronne!
A frowful thing wel semid she;
Nor she had nothing slowe ybe
For to bescratchin all her face,
And for to rent in many place
Her clothes, and for to tere her swire,
As she that was fulfilled of ire,
And all to torne laie eke her here
About her shulders, here and there,
As she that had it all to rent
For angre and for male talent.

And eke I tell you certainly
How that she wept full tendirly,
In worlde n'is wight so hard of herte,
That had yfene her sorowes smerte,
That n'olde have had of her pite,
So wo begon a thing was she!
She all to dasht her self for wo,
And smote togiðir her hondes two,
To frowe was she full ententise,
That wofull rechilese caitife,
Her roughte little of playing,
Or of clipping or of kissing,
For who so frowfull is in herte
Him lustith not to plaie ne sterre,
Nor for to dauncin, ne to sing,
Ne maie his herte in temper bring
To make joie on even or morowe,
For joie is contrary to sorowe.

Elde was ypaintid after this,
That shortir was a fote i-wis
Than she was wont in her yonghede,
Unneth her self she might yfede,
So feble and so old was she
That fadid was all her beaute,
Full salowe was waxen her colour,
Her hedde for hore was white as flour,
Iwis grete qualme ne were it none,
Ne sinne, although her life were gone,
All woxin was her body' unwelde,
And drie and dwinid all for elde,
A foule forwelkid thing was she,
That whilom round and soft had be,
Her heris shokin fast withall,
As from her hedde they wouldin fall,
Her face yfrouncid and forpined,
And bothe her hondis lorne fordwinid,
So old she was, that she ne went
A fote, but it were by potent.
The time, that passith n ght and daie,
And restilesse travailith aie,
And stelith from us privily,
That to us semith sikirly
That it in one point dwellith ever,
And certis it ne restith never,
But goeth so fast, and passith aie,
That there n'is man that thinkin maie
What time that now present is,
Askith at these grete clerkis this;
For men thinkin it redily
Thre timis ben ypassid by,
The time, that maie not sojourne,
But goth, and maie nevir retourne,
As watir that doune runnith aie,
But nevir droppe retournè maie,

K k k

There

There maie nothing as time endure,
 Ne metall, nor yerthly cature,
 For alle thing is frette and fliall,
 The time eke, that ychaungith all,
 And all doeth waxe, and foltrid be,
 And alle thing distroyith he,
 The time that eldith our auncestours,
 And eldith Kinges and Emperours,
 And that us all shall ovircomen,
 Er that deth us shall have nommen,
 The time, that hath all in welde
 To elding folke, had made her elde
 So inly, that to my weting
 She mightin helpe her self nothing,
 But tourned ayen unto childhede,
 She had nothing her self to lede,
 Ne witte ne pithe within her hold,
 More than a child of two yere old.
 But nathelesse I trowe that she
 Was faire somtime, and freshe to se,
 Whan she was in her rightfull age,
 But she was past all that passage,
 And was a dored thing becomen,
 A furrid cappe on had she nommen,
 Well had she cladde her self and warme,
 For cold might els doin her harme,
 These old folke havin alwaie cold,
 Ther kinde is soche, whan thei ben old.
 An othir thing was down there write,
 That semid like an Ipocrite,
 And it was clepid Papelardie,
 That ilke is she, that privilie
 Ne sparith ner a wicked dede,
 Whan men of her takin none hede,
 And makith her outward precious,
 With pale visage and pitous,
 And semith a simple cature,
 But there n'is no misaventure,
 That she ne thinketh in her corage;
 Full like to her was thilke image,
 That makid was like her semblaunce,
 She was full simple of countenaunce,
 And she was clothid and eke shod,
 As she were for the love of God
 Yholdin to Religion,
 Soche semid her devocion.

A Psaltir helde she fast in honde,
 And busily she gan to fonde
 To make many a faint praier
 To God, and to his sainctis dere,
 Ne she was gaie, freshe, ne jolife,
 But semed to be full ententife
 To godè werkis, and to faire,
 And therto she had on an haire.

Ne certis she was fatte nothing,
 But semid werie for fasting,
 Of colour pale and dedde was she;
 From her the gates aie warnid be
 Of Paradise, that blisfull place,
 For soche folke makin lene ther grace,
 As Christ saieth in his Evangile,
 To get 'hem prise in toun a while,
 And for a little glory veigne
 Thei lesin God and eke his reigne.

And aldir last of everichone
 Was paintid Poverte' all alone,
 That not a peny had in hold,
 Although that she her clothis sold,
 And though she shold an hongid be,
 For nakid as a worme was she,
 And if the wether stormie were,
 For cold she shold have dyid there.

She ne had on but a straite old sacke,
 And many a cloute on it there stacle,

This was her cote, and her mantele,
 No more was there nevir a dele 460
 To clothe her with, I undirtake
 Grete lesir haddè she to quake;
 And she was put, that I of talke,
 390 Ferre fro these othre, up in an halke,
 There lurkid, and there courid she;
 For povir thing where so it be
 Is shamefast, and dispisid aie;
 A cursid maie well be that daie,
 That povir man conceivid is,
 For God wote all to selde i-wis 470
 Is any pore man well ifed,
 Or well arayid or icled,
 Or well beloved, in soche wise
 400 In honour that he maie arise.

Allè these thingis well avised,
 As I have you er this devised,
 With gold and asure ovir all
 Depaintid were upon the wall;
 Square was the wall, and high somdele, 480
 Enclofid, and ibarrid wele,
 In stede of hegge, was that gardin,
 Came nevir no Shepherd therein,
 Into that gardin, well ywrought,
 410 Who so that me coud have ybrought
 By ladders, or els by degre,
 It wouldè well have likid me,
 For soche solace, soche joie, and pleie
 I trowe that nevir man ne seie
 As was in that place delicious,
 The gardin was not daungerous, 490
 To herborowe birdes many one,
 So riche a yere was nevir none
 Of birdis song, and braunchis grene,
 420 Therin were birdis mo I wene
 Than ben in all the relme of Fraunce,
 Full blisfull was the accordaunce
 Of the swete petous song thei made,
 For all this worlde it ought to glade.

And I my self so mery ferde,
 Whan I ther blisfull songis herde, 500
 That for an hundrid pounce would I,
 If that the passage opinly
 Haddin ybe unto me fre,
 430 That I n'olde entrin for to se
 Th' assemble (God kepe it fro care)
 Of birdis, whiche that therein ware,
 That songin through ther mery throtes
 Dauncis of love, and mery notes.

Whan I thus herd the foulis sing,
 I fell fast in a waimenting, 510
 By whiche art, or by what engin
 I might come into that gardin,
 440 But waie I couthe ne findin none
 Into that gardin for to gone,
 Ne nought wist I if that there were Eithir a hole or a place where
 By whiche I mightin have entre,
 Ne there was none to techin me,
 For I was all alone i-wis,
 For wo and for anguishe of this, 520
 Till at the laste bethought I me;
 That by no waie ne might it be,
 450 There n'as ladder ne waie to pace,
 Or hole, into so faire a place;
 Tho gan I go a full grete pace
 Environ, evin in compas,
 The closing of the square wall,
 Till that I founde a wicket small
 So shette, that I ne might in gone,
 And othir entre was there none. 530

Upon

Upon this dore I gan to smite,
That was so fetis, and so lite,
For othir waie coud I not seke,
Full long I shofe, and knockid eke,
And stode full long all herkining
If I herd any wight coming,
Till that the dore of thilke entre
A maidin curteis opened me;
Her here was as yelow of hewe
As any basin scourid newe,
Her fleshe tendir as is a chike,
With bent browis both smothe and slike,
And thereto by mesure large were
The opening of her eyin clere,
Her nose of gode proportion,
Her eyen graie as is a faucon,
With swete breth, and well favoured,
Her face white, and well coloured,
With little mouthe and round to se,
A clovin chinne eke had she,
Her necke was of gode fashion,
In length and gretnesse by reson,
Withoutin bleine, or scabbe, or roine,
Fro Hierusalem to Burgoine.
There n'is a fairer necke i-wis,
To fele how smothe and soft it is;
Her throte also so white of hewe
As snowe on braunche ysnowid newe,
Of body full well wrought was she,
Men nedin not in no countre
A fairer bodie for to seke,
And of fine Orfrais had she eke.
A chapilet, so semely on,
Ne nevir werid maide upon,
And faire above that chapilet
A rose garlande had she yset;
She had also a gaie mirrour,
And with a richè golde tresour
Her hedde was tressid full queintly,
Her slevis sowid fetously;
And for to kepe her hondis faire
Of glovis white she had a paire;
And she had on a core of grene
Of cloth of Gaunt, withoutin wene,
Well semid by her aparaille
She was not wont to grete travaile,
For whan she kempt was fetecously,
And well araied and richily,
Than had she doen all her journe,
For mery' and well begon was she.
She had a lustie life in Maie,
She had no thought, by night ne daie,
Of nothing, but it were onely
To graieth her well and uncouthly.

Whan that this dore had opened me
This Maidin, semely for to se,
I thonkid her as I best might,
And askid her how that she hight,
And what she was I askid eke,
And she to me was nought unmeke,
Ne of her answeere daungerous,
But faire answerde, and sayid thus.

Lo sir, my name is Idilnesse,
So clepin men me, more and lesse,
Full mightie and full riche am I,
And that of one thing namily,
For I entending to nothing
But to my joie, and my playing,
And for to kembe and tressè me;
Acquaintid am I and prive
With Mirthe, the Lorde of this gardin,
That fro the' londe of Alexandrin
Made the treis hithir be fet,

That in this gardin ben iset,
And whan the trees were woxe an hight,
This wall, that stant here in thy sight,
Did Mirthe enclosin all about,
And these Imagis all without,
He did 'hem bothe entaile and paint,
That neither ben jolife ne quaint,
But thei ben full of f'rowe and wo,
As thou hast sene a while ago.

540 AND oft timis him to solace
Sir Mirthe comith into this place,
And eke with him come his meine:
That liven' in lust and jolite,
And now is Mirthe therein, to here
The birdis how they singin clere,
The Mavis and the Nightingale,
And othir joly birdis smale;
And thus he walkith to solace
550 Him and his folke, for swettir place
To playin in he maie not finde,
Although he sought one in till Inde;
The althir fairist folke to se,
That in this worlde maie founde ybe,
Hath Sir Mirthe with him in his rout,
That folowen him alwaies about.

Whan Idilnesse had tokde all this,
And I had harkened well i-wis,
Than saied I to dame Idilnesse,
560 Now all so wisely God me blesse,
Sith Mirthe, that is so faire and fre,
Is in this yerde, with his meine,
Fro thilke assemble, if I maie,
Shall no man wernè me to daie,
That I this night ne mote it se,
For well wene I there with him be

A faire and joly companie,
Fulfillid of all curtisie;
And forth withoutin wordis mo
570 In at the wickit went I tho,
That Idilnesse had opened me,
Into that gardin faire to se.

And whan that I was in i-wis
Mine hertè was full glad of this,
For well wende I full sikirly
Have ben in Paradise yerthly,
So faire it was, that trustith well
It semed a place espiituell,

580 For certis, as at my devise,
There is no place in Paradise
So gode in for to dwell or be,
As in that gardin thoughtin me;
For there was many' a birde singing,
Thoroughout the yerde all thringing,

In many placis Nightingales,
And Alpes, and Finches, and Wodewales,
That in ther swete song deliten,
In thilke placis as thei habiten.

There mightin men se many flockes
Of Turtels and of Laverockes,
590 Chalaundris fele ysawe I there,
That very nigh forsongin were,
And Thrustils, Terins, and Mavise,
That songin for to winne 'hem prise,
And eke to surmount in ther song
That othir birdis 'hem emong,

By note ymadin faire servise
These birdis, that I you devise,
600 Thei song ther song, as faire and wel
As angels doen espiituell;
And trustith me, whan I 'hem herde
Full lustie and full well I ferde,
For nevir yet soche melodie
Was herd of man that mightin dig,

Soch

Soche swete song as was 'hem emong,
That me thought it no bird's song,
But it was wondir like to be
Song of Meremaids of the se,
That for her singing is so clere;
Though we Meremaids clepe 'hem here
In Englishe, as is our usaunce,
Men clepin 'hem Sereins in Fraunce.

ENtentife werin for to sing
These birdis, that not unkonning
Were of ther craft, and a prentise,
But of song subtile and eke wise;
And certis, whan I herd ther song,
And sawe the grene place emong,
In herte I wext so wondir gaie,
That I was never er that daie
So jolife, nor so well bigo,
Ne mery' in herte, as I was tho;
And than wist I, and sawe full well,
That idilnesse me servid well,
That me put in soche jolite,
Her frende well ought I for to be,
Sithe she the dore of that gardin
Had opinid, and let me in.

From hennis-forthe how that I wrought
I shall you tellin as me thought,
First whereof Mirthe yserved there,
And eke what folke there with him were,
Without fable I woll discrive,
And alle that gardin eke as blive,
I woll you tellin aftir this
The faire fassion all i-wis,
That well ywrought was for the nones,
I maie not tell you all at ones,
But as I maie and can, I shall
By order tellin you it all.

Full faire service, and eke full swete
These birdis madin as thei sete,
Layis of love full well souning
Thei songin in ther jargonig,
Some hie, and some eke lowe ysong
Upon the braunchis grene isprong,
The swetenesse of ther melodie
Made all mine herte in reveltrie.

And whan that I had herd I trowe
These birdis singing on a rowe,
Than might I not withholdin me
That I ne went in for to se,
Sir Mirthe, for all my desiring
Was him to sene ovir all thing,
His countenance and his manere
That sight was unto me full dere.

THO went I forthe on my right honde,
Doun by a little pathe I fonde
Of Mintis full, and Fenell grene,
As faste by withoutin wene
Sir Mirthe I founde, and right anon
Unto sir Mirthe gan I to gon,
There as he was him to solace,
And with him, in that lustie place,
So faire folke and so freshe had he,
That whan I sawe, I wondrid me
Fro whennis soche folke mightin come,
So faire thei werin all and some,
For thei weren like, as to my sight,
To angels, that ben fethered bright.

These folke, of whiche I tell you so,
Upon a karole wentin tho,
A Ladie karoled 'hem, that hight
Gladnesse the blisfull and the light,
Well could she sing and lustily,

None halfe so well and femily,
And cothe make in song soche refraining,
It fate her wondir well to sing,
680 Her voice full clere was and full swete,
She was not rude ne yet unmete,
But couthe inough for soche doing
As longith unto karolling,
For she was wonte in every place
To singin first, folke to solace,
For singing mozte she gave her to,
No crafte had she so lese to doe.

THO mightist thou karollis sene
And folkè daunce, and merie ben,
690 And made many a faire touning
Upon the grene grasse springing.
There mightist thou se these Flutours,
Minstrallis and eke jogelours
That well to singin did ther paine
Some songin songis of Loraine,
For in Loraine ther notis be Full swetir than in this contre;
There was many a Timbestere
And sailours, that I dare well swere
700 Ycothe ther craft full parfity,
The Timbris up full subtrilly
Thei castin, and hent them full oft
Upon a fingir faire and soft,
That thei ne failid never mo.
Full fetis damosellis two
Right yong, and full of semelyhede,
In kirtils, and none othir wede,
And faire ytreffid every tresse
Had Mirthe ydoen for his noblesse
710 Amidde the carole for to daunce.
But hereof lieth no remembrance
How that thei daunsid queintily,
That one would come all privily
Ayen that othre', and whan thei were Togithre' almoste, thei threwe isere
Ther mouthis so, that through ther plaie
It semid as thei kist alwaie;
To dauncin well couthe thei the gife,
What should I more to you devise?
720 Ne bode I never thennis go
Whiles that I sawe 'hem dauncin so;
Upon the karoll wondir fast
I gan beholde, till at the last
A Ladie gan me for to' espie,
And she was clepid Curtesie
The worshipfull, the debonaire,
I praie to God er fall her faire,
Full curtisly she callid me,
What do you there, Beau sire? (qð she)
800 Comith, and if it likith you
To dauncin, daunsith with us now.
And I withoutin tarying
Ywent into the karoling,
I was abashid ner a dele,
But it to me likid right wele
That Curtesie me clepid so,
And bade me on the daunce ygo,
For if I haddè durst certain
I would have karollid right fain,
810 As man that was to daunce right blithe.
Than gan I lokin oftè sithe
The shape, the bodies, and the cheres,
The countenance, and the maneres
Of all the folke that dauncid there
And I shall tellin what thei were.

Full faire was Mirthe, full longe and high,
A fairer man I never figh,
As rounde as aple was his face,
Full roddie' and white in every place,

820
Fetis

Fetis he was and well befeie,
With metely mouthe, and eyin greie,
His nose by meſure wrought full right,
Crispe was his here, and eke full bright,
His ſhulderis of large brede,
And ſmalſhe in the girdelſtede,
He ſemid like a purtreiture,
So noble he was of his ſtature,
So faire, ſo jolie, and ſo fetiſe,
With limmis wrought at point devife,
Deliver, ſmerte, and of grete might,
Ne ſawe thou nevir man ſo light,
Of berde unneth had he nothing,
For it was in the fiſte ſpring,
Full yong he was, and merie of thought,
And in ſamette, with birdis wrought,
And with golde bete full fetouſly
His bodie was clad full richely,
Wrought was his robe in ſtraunge giſe,
And all to ſlittered for queintife
In many a place, lowe and hie,
And ſhode he was with grete maiſtrie
With ſhone decopid, and with lace,
By drurie, and eke by ſolace
His leſe a roſin chapilet
Had made, and on his hedde it ſet.

And wetin ye who was his leſe?
Dame gladdeſte there was him ſo leſe,
That ſingeth ſo well with glad corage,
That from ſhe was twelve yere of age
She of her love graunt to him made;
Sir Mirthe her by the fingir hade
A daunſing, and ſhe him alſo,
Grete love there was a twix hem two,
Bothe were thei faire and bright of hewe,
She ſemid like a roſe newe
Of colours, and her fleſhe ſo tender,
That with a Brere ſmale and tender
Men might it cleve, I dare well ſain,
Her forhedde frounciles all plain,
Bent werin her eye-browis two,
Her eyin graie, and glad alſo,
That laughdin aie in her ſemblaunt,
Fiſt or the mouthe by covaunt.
I n'ot what of her noſe diſcrive,
So faire hath no woman alive,
Her here was yelow, and clere ſhining,
I wot no lady ſo liking.

Of Orfraies freſhe was her garlande,
I, whiche that ſene have a thouſande,
Sawe ner i-wis no garlande yet
So well ywrought of ſilke as it;
And in an ovir gilt ſamite
Ycladde ſhe was, by grete delite,
Of whiche her leſe a robe ywerde,
The merier ſhe in herte ferde.

Next her went, on her othir ſide,
The God of love, that can devide
Love, and as him likith it be,
But he can cherliſ dauntin, he,
And many folkis pride fallen,
And he can well theſe lordis thrallen,
And ladies put at lowe degre,
When he maie hem to proude yſe.

This God of love of his faſcion
Was like no knave, ne no quiſtron,
His beutie gretely was to priſe,
But of his robis to devife
I drede encombrid for to be,
For not icladde in ſilke was he,
But all in flouris and flourettes,
Ipaintid all with amorettes,
And with loſingis and ſcochons,

With birdis, Liberdes, and Lions,
And othir beſtis wrought full wele,
His garment was every dele
Ipurtraied and iwrought with floures,
By divers medeling of coloures,
Flouris there were of many giſe
Iſet by compaſe in a fiſe,
There lackid no floure, to my dome,
Ne not ſo moche as floure of Brome,
Ne violet, ne eke pervinke,
Ne floure none, that men can on thinke,
And many a roſe leſe full long
Was entermedlid there emong,
And alſo on his hedde was ſet
Of roſes redde a chapilet.

But Nightingales a full grete rout,
That ſien ovir his hedde about,
The levis ſeldin as thei ſien,
And he was all with birdis wrien,
With Poppingaie, with Nightingale,
With Chalaundre, and with Wodewale,
With finche, with larke, and with archangel,
He ſemid as he were an angell,
That doune were come fro hevin clere.

Love had with him a bachilere
That he made alwaies with him be,
And ſwete lokin clepid was he.
This bachilere ſtode beholding
The daunce, and in his honde holding Turke bowes two, well deviſed had he,
That one of hem was of a tre
That berith fruit of ſavour wicke,
Full crokid was that ſoule ſticke,
And knottie here and there alſo,
And blacke as berie, or any flo.

That othir bowe was of a plant
Withoutin wemme, I dare warant,
Full even and by proporcion
Treciſ and long, and of gode faſcion,
And it was paintid well and thwitten,
And ore all diaprid and written,
With ladies and with bachileres,
Full lightſome and full glad of cheres;
Theſe bowis two held Swete lokin,
That ne ſemid like no gadling;
And ten brode arowes helde he there,
Of whiche five in his honde were,
But thei were ſhavin well and dight,
Nockid and fetherid a right,
And all thei were with golde begon,
And ſtrong ypoinctid everichon,
And ſharpe for to ykervin wele,
But iron was there none ne ſtele,
For all was golde, men might it ſe,
Out take the fethers and the tre.

THE ſwiftiſt of theſe arowes five
Out of a bowe for to drive,
And the beſt fethered for to ſlie,
And fairiſt eke, was cleped Beutie.

That othir arowe, that hurteth leſſe,
Was clepid (as I trowe) Simpleſſe.

The thirde yclepid was Fraunchiſe
That fethered was in noble wiſe
With valour and with curtiſie.

The fowerth was clepid Companie,
That hevie for to ſhotin is,
But who ſo ſhotith right i-wis
Maie therwith doen grete harme and wo.

The fiſt of theſe, and laſte alſo,
Faire Semblaunt men that arowe call;
'Tis the leſte grevous of hem all,
Yet can it make a full grete wounde,
But he maie hope his ſoris ſounde,

That hurte is with that arowe' i-wis,
His wo the bette bestowid is,
For he maie soner have gladnesse,
His langour ought to be the lesse.

FIve arowes were of othir gife,
That ben full foule for to devise,
For shaft and ende, sothe for to tell,
Were all so blacke as fende in hell.

The first of 'hem is callid Pride;
That othre' arowe next him beside
It was yclepid Vilanie,
That arrowe was with felonie
Envenimed, and with spitous blame;
The third of 'hem was clepid Shame;
The fowerth Wanhope yclepid is,
The fift the Newe thought iwis.

These arowes, that I speke of here,
Werin all five on one manere,
And all were thei resemblable,
To them was well sitting and able
The foule crokid bowe hidous,
That knottie was, and all roinous;
That bowe ysemid well to shete
The arowes five, that ben unmete
And contrary to that othir five;
But though I tellin not as blive
Of ther powir, ne of ther might,
Hereaftir shall I tellin right
The sothe, and eke signifaunce,
As ferre as I have remembraunce,
All shall be saied I undirtake,
Er of this boke an ende I make.

Now come I to my tale againe,
But aldirfirst, I woll you saine
The fashion and the countenaunces
Of all the folke that on the daunce is;
The God of Love, jolife and light,
Ladde on his honde a Ladie bright
Of high prife, and of grete degre,
This Ladie callid was Beutie;
And an arowe, of whiche I tolde,
Full well ythewid was she holde,
Ne she was derke ne broune, but bright
And clere as is the Monè light,
Again whom all the Sterris semen
But small candelis as we demen,
Her fleshe was tendre' as dewe of floure,
Her chere was simple' as birde in boure,
As white as Lilie' or Rose in rise,
Her face was gentill and tretise;
Fetis she was, and smale to se,
No Wintrid browis hadde she,
Ne popped here, for it nedid nought
To windir her, or to paint ought;
Her tresses yelowre, and long straughten,
Unto her heles doune thei raughten,
Her nose, her mouthe, and eye and cheke
Well wrought, and all the remnaunte eke,
A full grete savour and a sote
Me thoughtin in mine herte rote,
As helpe me God, whan I remember
Of the fassion of every member,
In worlde is none so faire a wight;
For yong she was, and hewid bright
Sore plesaunt, and fetis with all,
And gent, and in her middle small.

Beside Beute yede richesse,
And hight Ladie of grete noblesse,
And grete of price in every place,
But who so durst to her trespace,
Or till her folke, in werke or dede,

He were ful hardie out of drede,
For bothe she helpe and hindir maie,
And that is not of yesterdaie
That riche folke havin full grete might
To helpe, and eke to greve a wight.

The best and gretist of valour
Diddin Richesse full grete honour,
And busie werin her to serve,
For that thei would her love deserve,
Thei cleped her Ladie grete and small,
This wide worlde her dredith all,
This worlde is all in her daungere,
Her courte hath many' a losingere,
And many' a traitour envious,

That ben full busie' and curious
For to dispreisin and to blame
That best deservin love and name,
To forne the folke, 'hem to begilen,
These losengeours 'hem prife and smilen.

And thus the worlde with worde anointen,
But aftirward thei prill and poincten
The folke, right to the bare bone,
Behinde ther backe whan thei ben gone,
And foule abatin folkis prife,
Full many' a worthie man and wife
Han hindrid, and idoen to die
These losingeours with ther flatt'erie,
And makith folke full straunge be,
There as 'hem ought to ben prive,
Well evill mote thei thrive,
And evill arived mote thei be,
These losingeours, full of envie,
No gode man loveth ther companie.

Richesse a robe of purple' on had,
Ne trowe not that I lie or mad,
For in this world is none it liche,
Ne by a thousande dele so riche,
Ne none so faire, for it full wele,
With Orfreis laied was every dele,
And purtraied in the ribaninges
Of Dukis stories, and of Kinges,
And with a bend of golde tassiled,
And knoppis fine of golde amiled;
About her necke of gentle' entaile
Was shet the riche Chevesaile,
In whiche there was full grete plente
Of stonis clere, and faire to se.

Richesse a girdle had upon,
The bokill of it was of ston
Of vertue grete, and mokil might,
For who so bare the stone so bright,
Of venim durst him nothing doubt
While he the stone had him about;
That stone was gretely for to love,
And till a riche mann'is behove
Worth all the golde in Rome, and Frise;
The Mourdaunt wrought in noble gife
Was of a stone full precious,
That was so fine and vertuous,
That whole a man it couth ymake
Of palsie, and of the tothe ake,
And yet the stone had soche a grace
That he was sikre' in every place
All thilke daie not blinde to ben,
That fasting might that stone sene;
The barris were of gold full fine,
Upon a tiffue of Satin,
Full hevie, grete, and nothing light,
In everiche was a befaunt wight.

Upon the tressis of richesse
Was set a circle of noblesse
Of brende golde, that full light yshone,
So faire trowe I was nevir none,
But

But he were konning for the nones
That could devisin all the stones,
That in that circle shewin clere,
It is a wondir thing to here,
For no man could or preise or gesse
Of 'hem the value or richesse;
Rubies there were, Saphirs, Ragounces,
And Emeraudes, more than two unces,
But all before full subtilly
A fine Carboncle set sawe I,
The stone so clere was and so bright,
That all so sone as it was night
Men mightin sene to go for nede
A mile or two, in length and brede,
Soche light ysprang out of the stone,
That richesse wondir bright yshone,
Bothe on her hedde, and all her face,
And eke about her all the place.

Dame Richesse on her honde gan lede
A yong man full of semelyhede,
That she best loved of any thing;
His lust was moche in housholding,
In clothing was he full fetise,
And loved well to have hors of prife,
He wende to have reprovied be
Of theft or murder, if that he
Had in his stable an hackenaie,
And therefore he desirid aie
To ben aqueintid with Richesse,
For all his purpose, as I gesse,
Was for to makin grete dispence
Withoutin warning or defence,
And Richesse might it well sustain,
And her dispences wele maintain,
And him alwaie soche plentie sende
Of golde and silvir for to spende
Withoutin lacking or daungere,
As it were pourde in a garnere.

And aftir on the dauncè went
Largesse, that set all her entent
For to ben honourable and fre,
Of Alexander's kinne was she,
Her moste joie it was i-wis
Whan that she yafe, and faied; have this;
Not Avarice the foule caitife
Was halfe to gripe so ententife,
As Largesse is to yeve and spende,
And God alwaie inowe her sende,
So that the more she yave awaie
The more i-wis she had alwaie;
Grete loos hath Largesse; and grete prife,
For bothe the wise folke and unwise
Were wholly to her bandon brought,
So well with yestis hath she wrought.

And if she had an enemy,
I trowe that she couth craftily
Make him full sone her frende to be,
So large of yestes, and wise was she,
Therefore she stode in love and grace
Of riche and pore in every place.

A full grete fole is he i-wis
That riche, and pore, and nigard is.
A Lorde maie have no manir vice,
That grevith more than Avarice;
For Nigarde ner with strength of hande
Maie winne him grete lordshipe or lande,
For frendis all to fewe hath he
To doen his will performid be,
And who so wolle have frendis here
He maie not holde his trefour dere,
For by ensample tell I this,
Right as an Adamant i-wis
Can drawin to him subtilly

The Iron, that is laied therby;
So drawith folkis hertes i-wis
Silvir and golde that yevin is.

Largesse had on a robe freshe
Of riche purpure Sarlinishe,
Well formid was her face and clere;
And opened had she her colere,
For she right there had in present
Unto a Lady made present
Of a Gold broche, ful wel ywrought;
And certis it missate her nought,
For through her smocke ywrought with filke
The fleshe was sene as white as milke.
Largesse, that worthy was and wise,
Helde by the honde a knight of prife,
Was sibbe to Arthour of Breteigne,
And that was he that bare the' enseigne
Of worship, and the Gonfannoun,
And yet he is of suche renoun,
That menne of him say faire thinges
Before Barons, and Erles, and Kinges.

This knight was comin al newly Fro tourneying there faste by,
Where he had done grete chivalry
Through his vertue and his maistrise,
And for the love of his lemman
He caste doune many' a doughty man.

And next him dauncid dame Franchise
Arayid in ful noble gise,
She n'as not broune ne dunne of hewe,
But white as snowe ifallin newe;
Her nose was wrought at point devise,
For it was gentill and tretise,
With eyin glad, and browis bent,
Her here doune to her helis went,
And she was simple' as dove on tre,
Ful debonaire of hert was she.

She durste neither say ne do
But that, that hir belongith to,
And if a manne were in distresse,
And for her love in heviness,
Her hert would have ful grete pite,
She was so amiable and fre,
For were a manne for her bestadde
She would ben right sore a dradde,
That she did ovir gret outrage,
But she him holpe his harme t' aswage
Her thought it all a vilanie;
And she had on a suckiny,
That not of hempè herdis was,
So faire was none in all Arras,
Lorde! it was ridded fetisly,
There ne was not a point truly,
That it n'as in his right assise,
Ful wel iclothid was Fraunchise,
For there n'is no clothe sittith bette
On damosell, than doth roquette,
A woman wel more fetise is
In roquette, than in cote i-wis,
The white roquette riddilid faire
Betokenith that full debonaire
And swete was she that it ybere.

By her dauncid a Bachelere,
I can not tell you what he hight,
But faire he was and of gode hight,
Al had he ben, I saie no more,
The lord's sonne of Windesore.

And next that dauncid Curtisy,
That preisid was of lowe and hie,
For nethir proude ne fole was she,
She for to dauncè callid me,
I praie God give to her gode grace,
For whan I come first to the place

She

She n'as not nice, ne outrageous,
But wise and ware, and vertuous,
Of faire speche, and of faire answere,
Was nevir wight mistaide of here,
She bare no rancour to no wight,
Clere broune she was, and therto bright
Of face, and body avenaunt,
I wotte no lady so plesant,
She werin worthy for to bene
An Empèresse or crounid Quene.

And by her went a knight dauncing,
That worthy was, and wel speking,
And ful wel coude he don honour,
The knight was faire and stiffe in stour,
And in armure a femely man,
And wel beloved of his lemman.

Faire Idilnesse than nexte laugh I,
That alway was me false by,
Of her have I withoutin faile
Tolde you the shape and appareile,
For (as I said) Lo! that was she,
That did to me so grete bounte,
She me the gate of that gardin
Undid, and let me passin in,
And aftir dauncid, as I gesse.

And she fulfilled of lustinesse,
That n'as not yet xii. yere of age,
With herte wilde, and thought volage,
Nice she ywas, but she ne mente
None harme ne sleight in her entente,
But onely luste and jolite,
(For yonge folke, wel wetin ye,
Have litill thought, but on ther play;) Her lemman was beside alway
In suche a gise, that he her kiste
At alle timis that him list,
That al the daunce might it se,
They make no force of privity,
For who spake of 'hem ill or wele,
Thei were ashamid nere a dele,
But men might sene 'hem kisse there,
As though it two yonge doves were,
For yonge was thilke Bachilere,
Of beute wot I non his pere,
And he was right of suche an age
As Youthe his lefe, and suche corage.

The lusty folke that dauncid there,
And also othir that with 'hem were,
That werin all of ther meine,
Ful hendè folke, bothe wise, and fre,
And folkè of faire porte truely
There werin allè cominly.

Whan I had sene the countenaunces
Of them that laddin thus these daunces,
Than had I will to go and se
The gardin that so likid me,
And tokin on these faire Laureres,
On Pine trees, Cedres, Oliveres,
The dauncis than endid ywere,
For many' of 'hem that dauncid there
Were with ther lovis went away,
Undir the trees to have ther play.

A Lorde thei livid lustily!
A grete sole were he sikirly
That n'oude his thankes suche life to lede,
For this dare I faine out of drede,
That who so might so weil yfare
For bettir life durst him not care,
For there n'is so gode paradise
As to have a love at his devise;
Out of that place went I tho,
And in that gardin gan I go,
Playing a long full merrily.

The God of Love full hastily
Unto him Swete Loking yclept,
No lengir would he that she kept
His bowe of Gold, that shone so bright.
He haddin him bent anon right,
And he full sonè set an ende,
And at a braide he gan it bende,
And toke him of his arowes five,
Ful sharpe and redy for to drive.

Now God, that sitteth in majeste,
Fro dedly woundis he kepe me,
If so be that he had me shete,
For if I with his arowe mete,
It had me grevid fore i-wis,
But I, that nothing wist of this,
Went up and doune, ful many' a waie,
And he me folowed fast alwaie,
But no where would I reste me
Til' I had in all the gardin be.

THE Gardin was by mesuring
Right even' and square in compassing,
It as longe was as it was large,
Of fruite had every tre his charge,
But it were any hidous tre,
Of whiche there werin two or thre.

There were (and that wote I full wele)
Of Pomgranetts a full grete dele,
That is a frute ful wel to like,
Namely to folke whan thei ben sike,
And trees there werin grete foison,
That berin nuttes in ther selson,
Suche as menne nutemiggis ycall
That fote of savour ben withall,
And of Almandris grete plente,
Figgis, and many a Date tre,
There werin, if that menne had nede,
Through the Gardin, in length and brede.

There was eke waxing many' a spice,
As Clowe, Gilofre', and Licorice,
Gingiber, and Grein de Paris,
Canell, and Setewale of pris,
And many' a spice delitable
To etin whan men rise fro table.

And many homely trees there were,
That Peches, Coines, and Apples bere,
Medlers, Plommis, Peris, Chesteinis,
Cherise, of whiche many one faine is,
Notis, and Aleis, and Bolas,
That for to sene, it was solas,
With many high Laurer, and Pine,
Was rengid clene all that gardine
With Cipris, and with Oliveris,
Of whiche that nigh no plenty here is.

Ther werin Elmis grete and strong,
Maplis, Ashe, Oke, Aspe, Planis long,
Fine Ewe, Popler, and Lindis faire,
And othir trees full many' a paire.

What should I tell you more of it?

There werin so many trees yet,
That I should al encombrid be Er I had rekenid every tre.

These trees were set, that I devise,
One from an othir in assise

Five fadome or sixe, I trowe so,
But they were hie and gret also,
And for to kepe out wel the Sunne
The croppis were so thicke ironne,
And every braunche in othir knitte,
And ful of grene levis sitte,
That Sunne might there none discende,
Lest that the tendir grassis shende.
There might men Does and Roes ise,
And of squirels ful grete plente,

From

From bow to bow alwaie leping;
Connis there were also playing,
That comin out of ther clapers,
Of sondry colours and maners,
And madin many' a tourneying
Upon the freshe grasse springing.
In placis sawe I wellis there,
In whichè there no froggis were,
And faire in shadowe was eche wel;
But I ne can the nombre tel
Of stremis smal, that by devise
Mirth had done come thorough condise;
Of whichè the watir in renning
Gan makin a noise ful liking.

About the brinkis of these wellis;
And by the stremes ovir al ellis
Sprange up the grasse, as thicke iset
And soft eke as any velvet,
On which men might his lemman ley,
As on a fethirbed to pley,
For the erth was ful softe and swete,
Thorough moisture of the wel wete
Sprong up the sote grenè gras,
As faire, as thicke, as mister was;
But moche amendid it the place
That the erth was of suche a grace,
That it of flouris hath plente,
That both in somre' and wintir be.

There sprange the violet al newe,
And freshe pervinkè riche of hewe,
And flouris yelowè, white and rede,
Suche plente grewe there ner in mede,
Ful gaie was al the grounde and queint,
And poudrid, as men had it peint,
With many' a freshe and sondry floure,
That castin up ful gode favour.

I wol not longe holde you in fable
Of al this gardin dilectable,
I mote my tonge stintin nede,
For I ne maie withoutin drede
Naught tellin you the beutie all,
Ne halfe the bounte there withall.

I went on right honde and on leste
About the place, it was not leste,
Till I had al the gardin bene
In the estris that men might sene.

And thus while I went in my playe,
The God of love me folowed aye,
Right as an Hunter can abide
The beste till he seith his tide
To shote at godenesse to the dere,
Whan that him nedith go no nere.

And so besil, I restid me
Besides a wel undir a tre,
Whiche tre in Fraunce men cal a Pine,
But sihe the time of king Pepine
Ne grewe there tre in mann's sight
So faire, ne so wel woxe in hight,
In al that yarde so high was none;
And springing in a marble stone
Had nature set, the sothe to tell,
Undir that Pinè tre a well,
And on the bordir al without
Was writtin in the stone about
Letteris smal, that saidin thus,
Here whilome starfe faire Narcissus.

Narcissus was a bachilere,
That love had caught in his daungere,
And in his nette gan him so straine,
And did him so to wepe and plaine,
That nede him must his life forgo,
For a faire lady hight Echo,
Him loved ovir any cature,
And gan for him suche paine endure,

That on a timè she him tolde
That if he her ne lovin wolde,
That her behovid nedis die,
There laie none othir remedie.

1480

1410 But nathèlesse for his beaute
So feirs and daungerous was he,
That he n'olde grauntin her asking,
For weping, he for faire praying.

And whan she herde him werne her so;
She had in hert so gretè wo,
And toke it in so grete dispite,
That she withoutin more respite
Was ded anon: but ere she deide
Ful pitously to God she preide,
That the proude hertid Narcissus;
That was in love so daungerous,
Might on a day ben hampered so
For love, and ben so hote for wo;
That ner he might to joie attaine,
Than should he fele in every vaine
What sorowe trewe loveris maken,
That ben villainously forsaken.

1490

1420 THis prayir was but refonable,
Therefore God helde it ferme and stable, 1500
For Narcissus, shortly to tell;
By aventure came to that well;
To rest him in the shadowing;
O day, whan he came from hunting.

This Narcissus had suffrid paines
For renning al daie in the plaines;
And was for thirst in grete distresse
Of herte, and of his werinesse,
That had his breth almost benomen,
Whan he was to that wel icomen,

1510

1440 That shadowed was with braunchis grene,
He thought of thilkè watir shene,
To drinke, and freshe him wele withall,
And doune on knees he gan to fall,
And forth his necke and hed outstraught,
To drinkin of that well a draught,
And in the watre' anon was sene
His nose, his mouthe, his eyin shene,
And he therof was all abashed,

1520

1450 His owne shadowe had him betrashed,
For wel wende he the forme to se
Of a childe of full grete beaute,
Full well couth love him wreke tho
Of daungir and of pride also,
That Narcissus somtime him bere,

He quite him well his guerdon there,
For he musid so in the well,
That shortly, the sothe to tell,
He lovid his owne shadowe so,
That at the last he starfe for wo;
For whan he sawe that he his will Might in no manir way fulfill,
And that he was so faste caught,
That he him couthè comfort naught,
He lost his witte, right in that place,
And deide within a litill space,
And thus his warison he toke
For the lady that he forsoke.

1530

Ladies, I praie ensample taketh,
Ye that ayenst your love mistaketh,
If of ther deth you be to wite,
God can ful wel your wilè quite.

1540

1470 Whan this letter, of whichè I tell,
Had taught me that it was the well
Of Narcissus in his beaute,
I gan anon withdrawè me,
Whan it fel in my remembraunce
That him betide suche a mischaunce;

M m m

But

But at the laste than thoughtin I,
 That scathèlesse full sikirly
 I might unto the welle go,
 Wherof shull I abashin so?
 Unto the welle than went I me,
 And doune I loutid for to se
 The clere watir in the stone,
 And eke the gravel, whiche that shone,
 Doune in the botome, as silvir fine,
 For of the welle this is the fine,
 In world is none so clere of hewe,
 The watre' is evir fresh and newe,
 That welmith' up with wavis bright
 The mountenaunce of two fingir hight,
 About it is the graspe springing
 For moiste so thicke and well liking,
 That it ne may in wintir die
 No more than may the fee be drie.

DOune at the botome set sawe I
 Two cristall stonis craftily
 In thilkè freshe and fairè well;
 But o thinge sothly dare I tell,
 That ye wol holde a grete mervaille
 Whan it is tolde, withoutin faile,
 For whan the sunnè clere in sight
 Cast in that welle his bemis bright,
 And that the hete discendid is,
 Than taketh the cristall stone i-wis
 Againe the sunne an hundrid hewis,
 Blewe, yelow, red that fresh and new is,
 Yet hath the mervailous cristall
 Suche strength, that the place ovir all,
 Both foule and tre, and levis grene,
 And all the yerde in it is sene,
 And for to don you to' undirstonde
 To make ensample wol I fonde,
 Right as a mirroure opinly
 Shewith al thing that stondeth thereby,
 As well the colour, as figure,
 Withoutin any covirture,
 Right so the cristall stone shining,
 Withoutin any disceving,
 The entrees of the yerde accuseth
 To him that in the watir museth,
 For evir in whiche halfe ye be
 Ye may wel halfe the Gardine se,
 And if ye turne, ye may right wele
 Sene the remenaunt every dele,
 For there is none so litil thing
 So hid ne closin with shitting,
 That it n'is sene, as though it were
 Ypainted in the cristall there.
 This is the mirroure perillus,
 In whiche the proude Narcissus
 Sey al his faire face so bright,
 That made him sith to lie upright,
 For who so loke in that mirroure,
 There may nothing ben his socour;
 That he ne shal there se somthing,
 That shal him lede into laughing;
 Ful many' a worthy man hath it
 Yblent; for folke of gretist wit
 Ben sone ycaught here and ywaited,
 Withoutin respite ben thei baited:
 Here comith to folke of newe rage,
 Here chaungith many wight corage,
 Here lithe no rede ne witte therto,
 For Venus sonne, dan Cupido,
 Hath sown there of love the fede,
 That helpe ne lithe there none, ne rede,
 So cerclith it the welle about,
 His ginnis hath ne set without,
 Right for to catche in his panteris

1550 These Damofels and Bachilers,
 Love wil none othir birdis catche,
 Though he set eithir nette or lache,
 And for the fede, that here was sowne,
 This welle is cleped, as well is knowen,
 The welle of Love, of very right,
 Of whiche there hath ful many wight
 Spokin in bokis diversely,
 But thei shul ner so verily
 1630 Discripcion of the welle here,
 Ne eke the sothe of this matere,
 1560 As ye shul, whan I have undo
 The crafte that here belongith to.

ALway me likid for to dwell,
 To sene the cristall in the well,
 That shewid me ful opinly
 A thousande thingis faste by,
 But I may saie in sory houre
 1640 Stode I to lokin or to poure,
 For sithin I sore have yfiked,
 That Mirroure hath me now entriked,
 But had I first knowen in my wit
 1570 The vertue and strengthis of it,
 I n'oldè not have musid there,
 Me had bettir ben ellis-where,
 For in the snare I fell anone,
 That had bitreshid many one.

In thilkè Mirroure sawe I tho
 Among a thousande thingis mo
 1650 A rosir chargid ful of rosis,
 That with an hedge aboute enclosed is,
 1580 Tho had I suche lust and envie,
 That for Paris ne for Pavie
 N'olde I have left to gone and se,
 There gretist hepe of rosis be,
 Whan I was with this rage yhente,
 That caught hath many' a man and shente,
 Towarde the Rosir gan I go,
 And whan I was not ferre there fro,
 1660 The favour of the rosis sore
 Me smote right to the hertè rote,
 1590 As I had all enbaumid me,
 And if I n'ad endoutid me,
 To have ben hatid or assailed,
 My thankis wol I not have failed,
 To pull a rose of al that route,
 To berin in mine honde aboute,
 And smellin to it where I went,
 But er I dredde me to repent,
 1670 And leste it grevid or forthought
 The lorde that thilkè gardin wrought;
 Of rosis there werin grete wone,
 So faire werin nevir in Rone;
 Of knoppis close some sawe I there,
 And some wel bettir woxin were,
 And some there ben of othir moison,
 That drowè nigh to ther seson,
 And spedde 'hem faste for to spredde,
 I lovè wel suche rosis redde,
 1680 For brode rosis, and open' also Ben passid in a daie or two,
 But knoppis wollin freshe be
 Two daies at lest, or ellis thre;
 The knoppis gretely likid me,
 For fairir maie there no man se,
 Who so might havin one of all
 It ought him ben ful lese withall,
 Might I garlondè of 'hem getten,
 For no richesse I wolde it letten.

Amonges the knoppis I chese one
 So faire, that of the remenaunt none
 1690 Ne preise I halfe so wel as it,
 Whan I avisin in my wit,
 It

It so well was enluminid,
With colour red, as well finid
As nature couth it makin faire,
And it hath levis wel foure paire,
That kind hath set through his knowing;
About the redde rosis springing
The stalke ywas as rishe right,
And theron stode the knoppe upright,
That it ne bowed upon no side,
The sote smell ysprong so wide
That it died al the place aboute;
Whan I had smelled the savour sote,
No will had I fro thence yet go,
But somdele nere it went I tho
To take it, but mine honde for drede
Ne durst I to the Rose bede
For thisteles sharpe of many maners,
Netlis, thornis, and hokid briers;
For muche they distourblid me,
For fore I dradde to harmid be.

THE God of Love, with bowe ybent,
That al daie set had his talent
To pursue and to spyin me,
Was stonidin by a figge tre,
And whan he sawe how that I
Had chosin so ententifely
The bothum more unto my pay
Than any othir that I say,
He toke an arowe, sharpely whette,
And in his bowe when it was sette,
He streight up to his ere ydrough
The stronge bowe, that was so tough,
And shotte at me so wondir smerte,
That through mine eye unto mine herte
The takil smote, and depe it wente,
And therwith al such colde me hente,
That undir clothis warme and softe
Sin that day I have chivered ofte.

Whan I was hurte thus, in ffounde
I fell doune plat unto the grounde,
Mine herte failid, and faintid aie,
And longè time in swoune I laie,
But whan I came out of swouning,
And hadde my witte, and my feling,
I was all mate, and wende full wele,
Of blode t' have lorne a full grete dele,
But certes the' arowe, that in me stode,
Of me ne drewe no droppe of blode,
For why, I founde my woundes all drie.

Than toke I with mine hondis tweie
The' arowe, and full fast it out plight,
And in the pulling fore I sight,
So at the last the shaft of tre
I drough out, with the fethirs thre,
But yet the hokid hedde i-wis,
The whiche beaute ycallid is,
Gan so depe in mine herte pace,
That I it ne might not arace,
But in mine herte still it stode,
All bledde I not a droppe of blode,
I was bothe anguifous and trouble
For the perill, that I sawe double,
I ne wist what to saie or doe.
Ne get a leche my woundis to,
For neither thorough grasse ne rote
Ne had I helpe of hope ne bote,
But to the bothum evir mo
Mine herte drewe, for all my wo,
My thought was in none othir thing,
For had it ben in my keping,
It would have brought my life again,
For certis evenly, I dare sain,
The sight onely, and the savour

Aleggid moche of my langour.

Than gan I for to drawe me
Toward the bothum faire to se, 1770 And Love had gette him in this throwe,
An othir arowe into' his bowe,
And for to shotin gan him dresse,
The arowes name was Simplenesse,
And whan that Love gan nigh me nere,
He drowe it up withoutin were,
And shotte at me with all his might,
So that this arowe anone right
Throughout myne eigh, as it was founde,
1780 Into mine herte hath made a wounde;
Than I anone did all my craft
For to ydrawin out the shaft,
1710 And therewithall I sighid eft,
But in mine hert the hedde was left,
Whiche aie encrefid my desire,
Unto the bothum drowe I nere,
And evirmo that me was wo
The more desire had I to go
Unto the Rosir, where that grewe
The freshe bothum, so bright of hewe, 1790 Bettir me were to' have lettin be,
But it behovid nedis me
To doen right as mine herte badde,
1720 For er the body must be ladde
Aftir the herte, in wele and wo,
Of force togethir thei must go,
But nevir this archir would fine
To shotte at me with all his pine,
And for to make me to him mete.

The thirde arowe he gan to shete,
1800 Whan best his time he might espie,
The whiche was namid curtise,
Into mine herte he did avale,
1730 A swoune I fell, bothe dedde and pale,
Long time I laie, and stirid nought,
Till I abraied out of my thought,
And faste than I avifid me
To drawin out the shaft of tre,
But aye the hedde was lefte behinde,
1810 For ought I couthè pull or winde,
So fore it sticket whan I was hit,
That by no crafte I might it flit,
But anguifous and full of thought,
1740 I felt soche wo, my wounde aie wrought,
That somoned me alwaie to go
Toward the Rose, that plesed me so,
But I ne durst in no manere,
Bicause the archir was so nere.

For evirmore gladly, as I rede,
1820 Brent child of fire hath mochil drede.
And certis yet for all my pain
Though that I sigh, yet arowes rein,
And ground quarelis, sharpe of stele,
1750 Ne for no pain that I might fele
Yet might I not my self with hold
The faire Rosir to behold,
For Love me yave soche hardiment
For to fulfill his commaundement,
Upon my fete I rose up than 1830 Feble, as a forwounded man;
And forthe to gon my might I set,
And for the Archir n'olde I let,
Toward the Rosir fast I drowe,
1760 But thornis sharpe mo than inow
There were, and also thisteles thicke,
And breris brimmè for to pricke,
That I ne might ygettin grace
Through the rough thornis for to pace
To sene the Rosis freshe of hewe,
1840 I must abide, though it me rewe,
The

The hedge about so thickè was,
That closed the Rosis in compas.

But o thing likid me right wele,
I was so nigh that I might fele
Of the bothum the sore odour,
And also se the freshe coloure,
And that right gretely likid me
That I so nere mightin it se,
Soche joie anon thereof had I,
That I forgate my malady,
To sene it I had soche delite
Of woe and angre' I was all quite,
And of my woundes that I had thore,
For nothing likin me might more
Than dwellin by the Rosir aie,
And thens nevir to passe awaie;
But whan a while I had be thare,
The God of love, whiche all to share
Mine herte with his arowis kene,
Casteth him to yeve me woundis grene,
He shote at me ful hastily
An arowe namid Companie,
The whichè takil is full able
To make these Ladies merciable;
Than I anon gan chaungin hewe
For grevaunce of my woundè newe,
That I again fell in swouning,
And sighid sore in complaining.

Sore I complainid that my fore
On me gan grevin more and more,
I had none hope of Allegiaunce,
So nigh I drowe to disperaunce,
I ne rought of deth, ne of life,
Whethir that love ywould me drife,
If me a martir would he make,
I might his powir not forsake;
And while for angir thus I woke,
The God of Love an arowe toke,
Full sharpe it was and full poinaunt,
And it was callid Faire semblaunt,
The whiche in no wise would consent
That any lovir him repent
To serve his love, with herte and all,
For any perill that maie fall:
But though this arowe was kene grounde,
As any rasour that is founde,
To cutte and kervin at the point,
The God of Love it had anoint
With a full precious ointment,
Some dele to yeve alegement
Upon the woundis, that he hade
Thorough the eye in my herte made,
To helpe ther foris, and to cure,
And that thei maie the bette indure,
But yet this arowe, without more,
Made in mine herte a large sore
That in full grete pain I abode,
But aie the ointment went abrode,
Throughout my woundis large and wide
It sprede about in every side,
Thorough whose vertue, and whose might Mine hertè joifull was and light,
I had ben dedde and all to shent
But for the precious ointment.
The shaft I drowe out of the arowe,
Roking for wo right wondir narowe,
But the hedde, whiche that made me smerte,
I left behindè in mine herte,
With othir fower, I dare well saie
That nevir woll be toke awaie.
But the ointment halpe me wele,
And yet soche sorowe did I fele,
That allè daie I chaungid hewe,
Of my woundis so freshe and newe,

As men might se in my visage,
The arowes were so full of rage,
So variaunt of diversite,
That men in evèriche might se
Both grete anoie, and eke swetenesse,
And joie ymeint with bittirnesse;
Now were thei esy, and now wode,
In them I felt bothe harme and gode,
Now fore without alleggement,
Now softning with the ointment,
It softenid here, and prickid there,
Thus ese and angir were yfere.

THE God of Love deliverly
Came lepande to me hastily,
And sayid to me in grete jape
Yelde The, for thou maie not escape,
Maie no defence availe The here,
Therefore I rede make no daungere,
If thou wolt yelde The hastily,
Thou shalt the rathir have mercie;
He is a sole in sikirnesse
That with daungir or with stoutnesse
Rebellith, there that he should plesse,
In soche folie is little ese;
Be meke, where thou must nedis bowe,
To strive ayen is not thy prowé,
Come at onis, and have idoe,
For I wollè that it be so,
Than yelde The here debonairly.
And I answerid full humbly,
All gladly, sir, at your bidding
I woll me yelde in allè thing,
To your service I woll me take,
For God defende that I shoud make
Ayen your biddin resistence,
I woll not doen so grete offence,
For if I did, it were no skill,
Ye maie doe with me what ye will,
Or save or spill, and also flo,
Fro you in no wise may I go,
My life, my deth, is in your honde,
I maie not lasse out of your bonde,
Plaine at your liste I yeldè me,
Hoping in hert, that sometime ye
Comforte and ese shul to me sende,
Or els shortly, this is the ende,
Withoutin helth I mote aie dure,
But if ye take me to your cure:
Comforte or helth how shoud I have,
Sithe ye me hurte, but ye me save?
The helth of Love mote be yfounded
Where as thei tokin first ther wounde,
And if ye liste of me to make
Your prisoner, I woll it take
Of herte and will fully at gre,
Wholy and plaine I yeldè me,
Withoutin feining or feintise
To be governed by your emprise;
Of you I here so mochil prise,
I wol ben whole at your devise,
For to fulfill all your liking,
And to repent in for nothing,
Hoping to have yet in some tide
Mercy, of that that I abide,
And with that covenant yelde I me,
Anon doune kneeling on my kne,
Proffring for to kisse his fete,
But for nothing he would me lete.

And said, I love The both and preise,
Sens that thine answer doth me ese,
For thou answered so curtisly,
For nowe I wote well uttirly

That

That thou art gentil by thy speche,
For though a man ferre woude seche,
He should not findin in certaine
No suche answere of no vilaine,
For suche a worde ne mighte nought
Issue out of a vilaines thought;
Thou shalt not lesin of thy speche,
For thy helping wollin I eche,
And eke encresin, that I maie,
But first I woll that thou obaie
Fully for thine own avauntage
Anone to do me here homage,
And sithin kisse thou shalt my mouthe,
Whiche to no vilaine was ner couthe
For to' aproche it, ne for to touche,
For saufe of cherlis I ne vouche
That thei shal nevir nigh it nere;
For curteis, and of faire manere,
Wel taught, and ful of gentilnesse
He must yben, that shall me kisse,
And also of ful highe fraunchise,
That shal atteine to that emprise.

And first of a thing warne I The,
That paine and gret adversite
He mote endure, and eke travaile,
That shal me serve, withoutin faile;
But there against The to comforte,
And with thy service to disporte,
Thou maist ful glad and joyfull be,
So gode a maistir to' have as me,
And lordè of so high renoun,
I bere of love the Gonfenoun,
And of Curtisie the banere,
For I am of selfe the manere,
Gentill and curteis, meke, and fre,
That who evir ententise be
Me to honour, re-doute, and serve,
And also that he him observe
Fro trespase and fro villanie,
And him gouverne in curtisie,
With will and with entencion,
For when he first in my prison
Is caught, than must he uttirly
Fro thennis-forth ful besily
Ycast him gentill for to be,
Yf he desire helpe of me.

Anone withoutin more delaie,
Withoutin daungir or affraie,
I become his vassal anone,
And gave him thanks many a one,
And knelid doune with hondis joint,
And made it in my porte full queint,
The joye went to my hertis rote,
Whan I had kised his mouthe so sote,
I had suche mirth and such liking,
It curid me of languishing.
He asked of me than hostages,
I have takin fele homages
Of one and othir, where I have bene,
Distreinid ofte, withoutin wene,
These felons ful of falsite
Have many sithes begilid me,
And through falsheid ther lust achived,
Wherof I repent, and am greved,
And I hem gette in my daungere,
Ther falsheed shul thei bie ful dere;
But for I love The, I saie The plaine,
I woll of The be more certaine,
For The fore I woll now ybinde
That thou away ne shalt not winde,
For to denien thy covenant,
Or done that is not avenant,
That thou were false, it were grete ruth,
Sithen thou semist so ful of truth.

Sir, if The liste to understaunde,
I merveile The' asking this demaunde,
For why or wherefore shoulde ye
Hostage or borowes aske of me,
Or any othir sikirnesse,
Sithin ye wote in sothfastnesse
That ye me have surprisid so,
And whole mine herte takin me fro,
That it woll doe for me nothing,
But if it be at your bidding?
Mine hert is yours, and mine right nought,
As it behoveth, in dede and thought,
Redy in all to worche your will,
Whethir so tourne to gode or ill,
So fore it lustith you to plesse,
No man therof maie you disese,
Ye have theron set soche justice,
That it' is werried in many wise,
And if ye doubt it n'olde obaie,
Ye maie therof doe make a kaie,
And hold it with you for hostage.

Now certis this is none outrage
(Qd Love) and fully I accorde,
For of the body' he is full Lorde
That hath the herte in his trefore,
Outrage it were to askin more.

THan of his aumener he drough
A little keie ferise inough,
Whiche was of gold polishid clere,
And saied to me, with this keie here,
Thine herte to me now woll I shet,
For all thy joifull loke and knet,
I binde undir this little keie,
That no wight maie cary awaie.

This keie is full of grete polle,
With whiche anone he touchid me
Undir the side full softly,
That he mine herte sodainly
Without any doute hath so spered,
That yet right nought it hath me dered.

Whan he had doen his will all out,
And I had put him out of dout,
Sir I saied: I have right grete will
Your lust and plesure to fulfill,
Loke ye my service take at gre.
By thilkè faith ye owe to me,
I saie nought for recreaundise,
For I nought doubt of your service.

But the servaunt travaileth in vain,
That for to servin doeth his pain
Unto that lorde, whiche in no wise
Conne him no thanke for his service.

LOve sayid tho, dismaie The nought,
Sithen thou for succour hast me fought,
In thanke thy service woll I take,
And high of degre woll The make,
If wickidnesse ne hindir The,
But (as I hope) it shall nought be;
To worship no wight by' aventure
Maie come, but that he pain endure.

Abide and suffre thy distresse,
That hurtith now, it shall be lesse,
I wote my self what maie The save,
What medicine thou wouldist have.

And if thy truth to me thou kepe,
I shall unto thine helping eke,
To cure thy woundes and make hem clene,
Where so that thei be old or grene,
Thou shalt be holpen' at wordis few,
For certainly thou shalt well shewe
Where that thou servist with gode will,
For to accomlishe and fulfill

My

My commaundementis daie and night,
Whiche I to lovirs yeve of right.

Ah sir, for Godd's love (saied I)
Er ye passe hens ententifely
Your commaundementes to me ye saie,
And I shall kepe 'hem if I maie,
For them to kepen' is all my thought,
And if so be I wote 'hem nought,
Than maie I erre unwittingly;
Wherfore I praie you entirely
With all mine herte, me for to lere;
That I trespase in no manere.

The God of love than chargid me
Anon, as ye shall here and se
Wordè by worde, by right emprise,
So as the Romaunt shall devise.

The maistr lefith time to lere
Whan the disciple woll not here,
It is but vain on him to swinke
That on his lerning woll not thinke,
Who so lust love, let him intende,
For now the Romance ginneth to' amende.

Now is gode to herin in faie
If any be that can it saie,
And point it as the reson is,
Yfet for othir gate, i-wis,
It shall nat well in allè thing
Be brought to gode understanding;
For a reder, that pointith ill,
A gode sentence maie oftin spill.
The boke is gode at the ending,
Ymade of newe and lustie thing
For who so woll the ending here,
The craft of love he shall now lere,
If that he woll so long abide
Till I this Romance maie unhide,
And undoe the signifaunce
Of this dremè into Romaunce,
The sothfastnesse, that now is hid,
Without coverture shall be kid,
Whan I undoen have this dreming,
Wherein no worde is of lesing.

Villanie at the beginning
I woll, saied love, ovir all thing
Thou leve; if that thou wolt ybe
False, and trespase ayenist me,
I curse and blame generally
All them, that lovin villanie;
For villanie makith villaine,
And by his dedes a chorle is seine.

These villains arne without pite,
Frendship and love, and all bounte,
I n'll receive to my service
Them that ben vilains of emprise.

But undirstonde in thine entent,
That this is not mine entement
To clepin no wight in no age,
Onely gentill for his linage,
But who so that is vertuous,
And in his port not outrageous;
Whan soche one thou seest The beforene,
Though he be not gentill yborne,
Thou mayist well seine this in soth
That he' is gentill, bicause he doth
As longith to a gentil man,
Of them none othir deme I can;
For certainly withoutin drede
A chorle is demid by his dede,
Of hie or lowe, as ye maie se,
Or of what kinrid that he be;
Ne saie nought for none evill will Thing which that is to holdin still,

It is no worship to misseie,
Thou maiest ensample take of Keie,
That was somtime for missaying
Yhatid bothe of old and yong,
As ferre as Gawein the worthie
Was praisid for his curtise,
Kaie was hatid, for he was fell,
Of worde dispitous and cruell;
Wherefore be wise and aqueintable,
Godelie of worde, and resonable,
Bothè to lesse and eke to mare;
And whan thou comist there men are,
Loke that thou have in custome aie
First to salve 'hem if thou maie,
And if it fall that of 'hem somme
Salve The first, be thou not domme,
But quite him curtisly anon,
Without abiding, er thei gon.

For nothing eke thy tong applie
To spekin wordes of ribaudrie,
To vilaine speche, in no degre,
Late not thy lippe unboundin be,
For I nought holde him in gode faith
Curteis, that foule wordis saith.
And allè women serve and preise,
And to thy power ther honour reise;
And if that any missayere
Dispise women, that thou maist here,
Blame him, and bidde him holde him still,
And sette thy might, and al thy will,
Women and ladies for to plese,
And to do thing that may 'hem ese,
That thei evir speke gode of The,
For so thou maist best praisid be.

Loke that fro pride thou kepe The wele,
For thou maist both perceive and felle
That pride is both foly and sinne,
And he, that pride hath him within,
Ne may his herte in no wise
Mekin, ne souplin to service,
For pride is founde in every parte
Contrarie unto Lov's arte,
And he that lovith truily
Should him containe jolily
Withoutin pride in sondry wise,
And him disguisin in queintice,
For queinte aray, withoutin drede,
Is nothing proude, who takith hede,
For freshe aray, as men may se,
Withoutin pride may oftin be.

Maintaine thy selfe aftir thy rent
Of robe and eke of garment,
For many a fithe faire clothing
A man amendith in mucche thinge.
And loke alway that thei be shape,
(What garment that thou shalt The make)
Of him that can the best ydo,
With al that parteinith therto,
Pointis and lleses be wel sittande,
Ful right and streight upon the hande;
Of shone and botis, newe and faire,
Loke at the lest thou have a paire,
And that thei sitte so fetously,
That these rude men may uttirly
Mervaille, sith that thei sitte so plaine,
How thei come an or of againe.
Were streightè glovis with aumere
Of silke, and alway with gode chere
Thou yeve, if that thou have richesse,
And if thou have nought spende the lesse,
Alway be mery, if thou maie,
But wastè not thy gode alwaie.
Have hatte of flouris freshe as May,
Chapelet of Rosis of' Whitsondaie,

For

For soche araie costnith but lite.
 Thine hondis washe, thy terhe make white, 2280
 And let no filthe upon The be,
 Thy nailis blacke if thou maiest se,
 Voide it awaie delivirly,
 And kembe thine hedde right jolily;
 Farce not thy visage in no wise,
 For that of love is nat th' emprise,
 For love doeth hatin, as I finde,
 A beautie, that cometh nat of kinde;
 Alwaie in herte I redè The Full glad and mery for to be, 2290
 And be as joifull as thou can,
 Love hath no joie of so'rowfull man,
 That ill is full of curtisie,
 That knowith in his maladie,
 For evir of love the sickenesse
 Is meint with swete and bittirnesse;
 The fore of love is mervailous,
 For now the lovir is joious,
 Now can he plain, now can he grone,
 Now can he singe, now makin-mone, 2300
 To daie he plaineth for hevinesse,
 To morue' he plaineth for jolinesse;
 The life of love is full contrarie
 Whiche stounde mele can oftin varie;
 But if thou canist mirthis make,
 That men in gre woll gladly take,
 Doe it godely, I commaunde The;
 For men shoud, where so'er thei be,
 Doe thing that 'hem besitting is,
 For therof cometh gode loos and pris; 2310
 Wherof that thou be vertuous
 Ne be nat straunge ne daungerous,
 For if that thou gode ridir be,
 Pricke gladly that men maie The se;
 In armis also if thou conne,
 Pursue till thou a name hast wonne;
 And if thy voice be faire and clere,
 Thou shalt makin no grete daungere,
 Whan The to sing thei godely praie,
 It is thy worship for to' obaie; 2320
 Also to you it longith aie
 To Harpe and Giterne, daunce and plaie,
 For if he can well fote and daunce,
 It maie him gretely doe avaunce,
 Emong eke for thy Ladie sake
 Songis and complaints that thou make,
 For that woll mevin in her herte,
 Whan that thei redin of thy smerte;
 Loke that no man for scarce The holde,
 For that maie greve The manifolde; 2330
 Refon woll that a lovir be
 In his yestis more large and fre
 Than chorles that ben not of loving;
 For who therof can any thing,
 He shall be lese aie for to yeve,
 In londis lore who so would leve,
 For he that through a sodain sight,
 Or for a kissing anon right
 Yave whole his herte, in will and thought,
 And to himself kepith right nought, 2340
 Afir this swift gift 'tis but reason
 He give his gode too in a bandon.

NOW woll I shortly here reherce
 Of that I have ysaied in verce,
 Alle the sentence by and by,
 In wordis fewe compendiously,
 That thou the bet maiest on 'hem thinke,
 Wher so it be thou wake or winke,
 For the wordis do little greve
 A man to kepe, whan thei be breve. 2350
 Who so with Love woll gon or ride

He mote be curteis, voide of pride,
 Merie, and full of jolite,
 And of Largeffe a losid be.

First I joigne The here in penaunce
 That evir without repentaunce
 Thou set thy thought in thy loving
 To last withoutin repenting,
 And think upon thy mirthis swete,
 That shall solue' afir whan ye mete. 2360

And for thou true to Love shalt be
 I will, and eke commaunde The
 That in one place thou set all whole
 Thine herte, withoutin halfin dole,
 For trecherie and sikirnesse,
 For I loved nevir doublenesse;
 To many' his herte that woll depart,
 Everiche shall have but little part,
 But of him drede I me right nought
 That in one place settith his thought; 2370
 Therefore in o place thou it set,
 And let it nevir thennis flet,
 For if thou yevest it in lening,
 I holde it but a wretchid thing.
 Therfore yevith it whole and quite,
 And thou shalt have the more merite,
 If it be lent than afir soen
 The bounte and the thanke is doen,
 But in Love a fre yevin thing
 Requirith a grete guerdoning. 2380

Yeve it in yest all quite fully,
 And make thy gift debonairly,
 For men that yest holdin more dere,
 That yevin is with gladsome chere.
 That giftè nought to praisin is
 That a man gevith mal gre his;
 Whan thou hast yeven thine hert (as I Have said The here all opiny)
 Than aventuris shull The fall,
 Whiche hard and hevy ben with all, 2390
 For ofte whan thou bethinkist The
 Of thy loving, where so thou be,
 Fro folke thou must depart in hie,
 That none perceive thy maladie,
 But hide thine harme thou must alone,
 And go forth sole, and make thy mone.
 Thou shalt no while be in o state,
 But whilom colde, and whilom hate,
 Now red as Rose, now yelowè and fade,
 Such sorow I trow thou ner had, 2400

Cotidien, ne the quarteine
 It is not half so full of peine,
 For oftin timis it shal fal
 In love, among thy painis al,
 That thou thy selfin all wholly
 Foryettin shalt so uttirly,
 That many timis thou shalt be Still as an image made of tre,
 Domme as a stone, without stering
 Of fote or bonde, without speking. 2410

And than sone afir al thy paine
 To memo'rie shalt thou come againe,
 A man abashid wondir fore,
 And afir sighin more and more,
 For wit thou wele withoutin wene,
 In suche astate ful ofte have bene,
 That have the' evill of love assaide,
 Where thorough thou art so dismaide.

A Ffir a thought shal take The so,
 That thy love is to ferre The fro, 2420
 Thou shalt sa (God) what may this be
 That I ne may my lady se?

Mine

Mine hert alone is to her go,
And I abide al sole in wo,
Departid fro mine ownè thought,
And with mine eyin se right nought.

Alas! mine eien sene I ne may
My carefull hertè to convey,
Mine hert's guide but thei be,
I praise nothing what er thei se;
Shul thei abidin than? why nay,
But gone and se without delay
That whiche mine hert desirith so,
For certainly, but if thei go,

A sole my selfe I may well holde,
Whan I ne se what mine hert wolde,
Wherefore I wol gone her to sene,
Or esid shall I nevir bene,
But that I have some tokining.

Than goest thou forth without dwelling,
But ofte thou failest of thy desire,
Er thou maist come her any nere,
And waitist in vaine thy passage,
Than falist thou in a newe rage,
For want of sight thou ginnist murne,
And homwarde pensife doft returne;
In grete mischefe than shalt thou be,
For than againe shal come to The Sighis and plaintis with newe wo
That no itching prickith The so;
Who wote it nought, he maie go lere
Of them that buyin love so dere.

No thing thine hert appesin maie,
That oft thou wolt gone and assaie,
If thou maist sene by aventure
Thy liv'is joye, thine hert's cure,
So that by grace, if that thou might
Attaine of her to have a sight,
Than shalt thou done non othir dede
But with that sight thine cyin fede,
That fairè freshe whan thou maist se,
Thine hert shal so ravishid be,
That ner thou woldest thy thankis lete
Ne remove, for to se that swete;
The more thou seest, in sothfastnesse,
The more thou covitest that swetenesse,
The more thine herte brennith in fire,
The more thine herte is in desire,
For who confidrih every dele,
It may be likened wondir wele
The paine of love unto a fere,
For evirmore thou neighist nere,
In thought, or how so that it be,
(For very sothe I tel it The)
The hotter evir shal thou brenne,
As experience shall The kenne,
Where so comist in any coste,
Who is next fire he brennith moste;
And yet forsothe for al thine here,
Though thou for love swelte and swete,
Ne for no thing thou selin may
Thou shalt not wille to passe away,
And though thou go, yet must The nede,
Thinkin al day on her faire hede,
Whom thou behelde with so gode will,
And holde thy selfe begilid ill
That thou ne haddest none hardiment
To shewe her aught of thine entent,
Thine hert ful sore thou wolt dispise,
And eke repreve of cowardise,
That thou so dull in every thing
Were domme for drede, without speking.

Thou shalt eke thinke thou diddest foly,
That thou were her so faste bie,
And durst not venture The to say
Some thing, er that thou came away,

For thou haddist no more wonne
To speke of her whan thou begonne;
But yet if she would for thy sake
In armis godely The have take,
It should have be more worthe to The
Than of tresour a grete plente.

Thus shalt thou morne and eke complaine,
And get encheson to' gon againe
Unto thy walke, or to thy place,
Where thou behelde her fleshy face,
And n'ere for false suspection
Thou woldist finde occasion

For to gone in unto her house,
Thou arne than so desirous
A sight of her but for to have,
If thou thine honour mightist save,
Or any erande mightist make
Thi'ir, for thy lov'is sake,
Ful faine thou woldist, but for drede
Thou goest not, lest that men take hede;
Wherefore I rede, in thy going,
And also in thine againe comming,
Thou be wel ware that men ne wit,
Feine The othir cause than it
To go that waie, or faste bie,
To helin wel is no folie;
And if so be it happè The

That thou thy love there maiste yse,
In sikir wise thou her salewe,
Wherwith thy coloure wold transmewe,
And eke thy bloud shal al to quake,
Thy hewe eke chaungin for her sake,
But worde and wit with chere ful pale,
Shul want for to tellin thy tale,
And if thou maist so ferforth winne
That thou to reson durst beginne,
And woldist faine thre thinges or mo,
Thou shalt ful scarsly faine the two,
Though thou bethinke the ner so wele,
Thou shalt foryetin yet iomdele.

BUT if thou dele with trechery,
For false lovirs mowe all fully
Sain what 'hem lust withoutin dred,
Thei be so double in ther falschid,
For thei in hert can thinke o thing,
And faine an othre' in ther speking;
And whan thy speche is endid all,
Right thus to The it shal befall;
If any worde than come to minde,
That thou to say hast left behinde,
Than thou shalt brenne in grete martire,
For thou shalt brenne as any fire,
This is the strife and eke the' affraie,
And the batill that lastith aie,
This bargaine ende may nevir take,
But if that she thy pece wil make.

And whan the night is come anon,
A thousand angres shal come on,
To bed as fast thou wolte The dight,
Where thou shalt have but smal delight,
For whan thou wenist for to slepe,
So ful of paine shalt thou crepe,
Sterte in thy bed about ful wide,
And turne ful ofte on every side,
Now downward grouse, and now upright,
And walow in wo the long night,
Thine armis shalt thou sprede a brede,
As man in warre were forwerede,
Than shal The come a remembraunce
Of her shape, and of her semblaunce,
Wherto none othir may be pere;
And wete thou wel withoutin were

That

That The shal se somtime that night
 That thou hast her, that is so bright,
 Nakid bitwene thine armis there,
 Al sothfastnesse as though it were,
 Thou shalt make castels than in Spaine,
 And dreme of joy, al but in vaine,
 And The delitin of right nought,
 While thou so slombriest in that thought,
 That is so swete and delitable,
 The whiche in sothe n'is but a fable,
 For it ne shal no while last;
 Than shalt thou fighe and wepe fast,
 And say dere God! what thing is this?
 My dreme is turnid al amis,
 Whiche was ful swete and apparent.
 But now I wake it is al shent,
 Now yede this mery thought away,
 Twenty timis upon a day
 I would this thought would come againe,
 For it alegith wel my paine,
 It maketh me ful of joyfull thought,
 It sleeth me that it lastith nought:
 Ah lorde! whi n'il ye me socoure?
 The joye I trowe that I langoure,
 The deth I would me shoulde slo
 While I lie in her armis two;
 Mine harme is harde withoutin wene
 My gret unese ful ofte I mene.

BUT wouldè Love do so I might
 Have fully joye of her so bright,
 My paine were quitte me richily,
 Alas! to gret a thing aske I,
 It is but foly, and wrong wening
 To aske so outrageous a thing,
 And who so askith folisly
 He mote be warnid hastily,
 And I ne wote what I may say,
 I am so ferre out of the way,
 For I would have ful grete liking
 And ful grete joy of lase thing;
 For would she of her gentilnesse,
 Withoutin more, me onis kesse,
 It were to me a grete guerdon,
 Relese of all my passion;
 But it is harde to come therto,
 Al is but foly that I do,
 So highe I have mine herte sette
 Where that I may no comfort gette,
 I n'ote wher I say well or nought,
 But this I wote well in my thought,
 That it were bette of her alone
 For to stintin my wo and mone,
 A loke on her I cast godely,
 Than for to have al utirly
 Of an othir al whole the play,
 Ah lord! where I shal bide the day
 That ere she shal my lady be!
 He is ful cured, that may her se.
 Ah God! whan shal the dauning springe,
 To liggin thus is angry thing,
 I have no joy thus here to lie,
 Whan that my love is not me bie;
 A man to lien hath grete disele,
 Which maie not slepe, ne rest in cse,
 I would it dawed, and were now day,
 And that the night were went away;
 For were it daye, I would up rise.
 Ah slowè sonne! shewe thine enprise;
 Spede The to spredé thy bemis bright,
 And chace the derknesse of the night,
 To put away the stoundis strong,
 Whiche in me lastin al to long.
 The night shalt thou continue so

Withoutin rest, in paine and wo,
 If er thou knew of love distresse,
 Thou mowe lerne it in that sikenesse,
 And thus enduring shalt thou lie,
 And rise on morow up erly
 Out of thy bed, and harneis The Er evir dawning thou maist se,
 Al privily than shalt thou gone,
 What wethre' it be, thy selfe alone,
 For reine, or haile, for snowe, for slete,
 Thiðir she dwelleth, that is so swete,
 The whiche maie fal a slepè be,
 And thinkith but lite upon The.
 Than shalt thou go, ful foule asferde,
 Loke if the gatè be unsperde,
 And waite without in woe and paine,
 Ful ill a colde in winde and raine,
 Than shalt thou go the dore before,
 If thou maiste findin any shore,
 Or hole, or reſte, what ere it were,
 Than shalt thou stoupe, and lay to ere,
 If thei within a slepè be,
 I mene al save thy lady fre,
 Whom waking if thou maist asprie,
 Go put thy selfe in jupardie,
 To askin grace, and The bimene,
 That she maie were withoutin wene,
 That thou all night no rest hast had,
 So fore for her thou were bestad.
 Women wel ought pite to take
 Of them that sorowen for ther sake;
 And loke, for love of that relike,
 That thou thinkè none othir like,
 For whan thou hast so gret anney,
 Shall kisse The er thou go away,
 And hold that in ful grete deinte;
 And for that no man shal The se
 Before the house, ne in the way,
 Loke thou be gon againe er day;
 Suche comming, and suche going,
 Suche hevinesse, and suche walking,
 Makith lovirs withoutin wene
 Undir ther clothis pale and lene;
 Love ne leveth coloure, ne clerenesse,
 Who lovith trewe hath no farnesse,
 Thou shalt wel by thy selfin se,
 That thou must nedes assayid be,
 For men that shape 'hem othir way
 Falsely ther ladies to betray,
 No wondir is though thei be fatte,
 With false othis ther loves thei gatte;
 For ofte I se suche losungeours
 Fattir than Abottes or Priours.
 Yet with o thing I wolde The charge,
 That is to say, that thou be large
 Unto the maide, that her doth serve,
 So best her thanke thou shalte deserve.
 Yeve her gettis, and get her grace,
 For so thou may thanke purchase,
 That she The worthy holde and fre,
 Thy lady, and al that may The se,
 Also her servauntes worship aie,
 And plesin as muche as thou maie,
 Grete gode through them may come to The,
 Bicause with her thei ben prive,
 Thei shal her tel how thei The fande
 Curteis and wise, and wel doande,
 And she shal preise The wel the more.
 Loke out of londe thou be not fore,
 And if suche cause thou have, that The Behoveth to gone out of countre,
 Leave wholly thine hert in hostage,
 Til thou againe make thy passage,
 O o o

Thinke

Thinke long to se the swete thing,
That hath thine hert in het keping:
Now have I tolde The, in what wise
A lovir shal do me service;
Do it than, if that thou wolt have
The mede, that thou dost after crave.

WHan Love al this had bodin me,
I said him; fir, how may it be,
That lovirs may in such manere
Endure the paine ye have said here?
I marvailin me wondir faste
How any man may live or laste
In such paine, and in such brenning,
In sorue' and thought, and such sighing,
Aie unreliefid wo to make,
Wher so it be thei slepe or wake,
In such anoy continually,
As helpe me God this mervaile I,
How man, but he were made of stele,
Might live a month, such paines to fele.

THE God of Love than said to me,
Frende, by the faith I owe to The,
May no man have gode, but he' it bre,
A man lovith more tendirlye
The thing, that he hath bought most dere;
For were thou well withoutin were,
In thanke that thing is takin more,
For which a man hath suffrid sore;
Certis no wo ne may attaine
Unto the fore of lov's paine,
None evil therto may amounte
No more than a man may counte
The droppes that of the watir be,
For drie as wel the grete se
Thou mightist, as the harmis tell
Of all them, that with love ydwell,
In service, for peine them fleeth,
And that eche woulde fle the deeth,
And trowe thei should never escape,
Ne were that hope ycouth hem make
Glad, as a man in prison sete,
And maie not gettin for to ete
But Barlie bred, and watir pure,
And lieth in vermin and ordure,
With alle this yet can he live,
Gode hope such comfort hath him yve,
Whiche makith wene that he shal be
Reliefed and come to liberte;
In fortune is fully his trust,
Although he lie in strawe or dust,
In hope is al his sustaining,
So fare Lovirs in ther wening,
Whiche Love hath sette in his prison,
Gode hope is ther salvacoun,
Gode hope (how sore that thei smerte)
Yevith hem bothe will and herte
To offre ther bodie to martyre,
For Hope so fore dorth hem desire
To suffre eche harme that men devise,
For joye that afterwarde shal rise.

Hope in desire catche victory,
In hope of Love is al the glory,
For hope is all that Love maie yve,
Nere hope, there shoulde no lengir live;
Blessid be hope, whiche with desire
Avanceth lovirs in such manere.
Gode hope is curese for to plete,
To kepe Lovirs from all difete,
Hope kepeth his londe, and wolt abide
For any peril maie betide,
For hope to lovirs, as most chere,

Doth hem endurin all mischefe,
Hope is ther helpe whan mistir is;
And I shal yve The eke i-wis
Thre othir thinges, that grete solace
Doth to them that be in my lace.

2720 The first gode that maie be yfounde
To them that in my lace be bounde,
Is Swete thought, for to recorde
Thing wherwith thou canst accorde
Best in thine herte, whethir she be Thinking in absence gode to The.
Whan any lovir doth complaine,
And livith in distresse, and paine,
Than Swete thought shal come as blive,
Awaie his angre for to drive;
2730 It maketh lovirs have remembraunce
Of comforte, and of highe plesaunce,
That hope hath hight him for to winne;
For thought anone than shal beginne,
As ferre God wot, as he can finde,
To make a mirroure of his minde,
For to beholde he wol not let,
Her person he shal fore him set,
Her laughing eyen persaunt and clere,
Her shape, her forme, her godely chere;
2740 Her mouthe, that is so gracious,
So swete, and eke so savirous,
Of al her fetirs shal take hede,
His eyen with al her limmis fede.

Thus Swete thinking shal aswage
The paine of lovirs, and ther rage;
Thy joye shal double without gesse,
Whan thou thinkest on her semelinese,
Or of her laughing, or her chere,
That to The made thy lady dere.
2750 This comforte wol I that thou take,
And if the nexte thou wolte forsake,
Which is not lesse savirous,
Thou shouldest not ben to daungirous.

THE second shal be swete speche,
That hath to many one be leche,
To bring hem out of wo and were,
And helpe many a bachilere,
And many a lady sent socour,
That hath ylovid Paramoure,
Thorough speking (whan thei might here)
Of ther lovirs to them so dere;
To me it voidith al ther smerte,
The whiche is closid in ther herte,
In hert it maketh hem glad and light,
Speche, whan thei mowe not havin sight.
And therefore nowe it cometh to minde,
In olden dawis, as I finde

That Clerkis writtin that her knewe,
There was a lady freshe of hewe,
Whiche of her love madin a song,
On him for to remembre among,
In which she said, whan that I here
Spekin of him, that is so dere
To me, it voidith alle smerte,
Iwis he sitteth so nere mine herte,
To speke of him at eve or morowe,
It curith me of al my sorowe,
To me is none so high plesaunce
As of his person daliaunce;
2780 She wist ful wel that Swete speking
Comfortith in ful moche thing,
Her love she had full well assaide,
Of him she was ful wel apaide,
To speke of him her joye was set.
Therefore I rede The that thou get
A felowe that can wel concele,
And kepe thy counsaile, and wel hele,

To whom go shewe wholly thine herte,
Both wele and woe, and joye and smerte,
To get comforte to him thou go,
And privily bitwene you two
Ye shal speke of that godely thing,
That hath thine hert in her keping,
Of her beaute and her semblance,
And of her godely countinaunce,
Of al thy state thou shalt him saie,
And aske him counsaile how thou maie
Do any thing that maie her please,
For it to The shal do gret ese,
That he maie wete thou trust him so
Both of thy wele and of thy wo,
And if his herte to love be sette,
His companie is moche the bette,
For Reson wol he shewe to The Al uttirly his privitye,
And what she is he lovith so
To The plainly he shal undo,
Withoutin drede of any shame,
Both tel her renome and her name,
Than shall he forthir ferre and nere,
And namely to thy lady dete
In sikir wise, ye every other
Shal helpin as his owne brother,
In trouthe withoutin doublenesse,
And kepin close in sikinesse.
For it is noble thing in fay
To have a man thou darste say
Thy privy counsaile every dele,
For that woll comforte The right wele,
And thou shalt holde The wel apaid
Whan suche a frende thou hast assaid.

THE thirde gode of grette comfort,
That yevith lovirs most disport,
Comith of sight and beholding,
That is yclepid Swete-looking,
The whichè may none ese ydo
Whan thou art ferre thy lady fro,
Wherefore thou prese alway to be,
In place, where thou maist her se,
For it is thing most amorous,
Moste delitable and favours,
For to assuage a man's sorow,
To sene his lady by the morow;
For it is a ful noble thing,
Whan that thine eyin have meting
With that relike so precions,
Whereof thei be so desirous;
But al daie aftir forth it is Thei have no drede to faren amis,
Thei dredin neithir winde ne raine
Ne non othir manir of paine;
For whan thine eyen were thus in blisse,
Yet of ther curtisie inwisse
Alone thei can not have othir joye,
But to the herte thei souvoye
Parte of ther blisse, to him thou sende
Of al this harme to make amende.

The eye is a gode messenger,
Which can to the hert in such manere,
Tidings sende, that he hath sene,
To voide him of his painis clene;
Wherof the hert rejoyseth so
That a grette partie of his wo
Is voided, and put away to flight,
Right as the derkenesse of the night
Is chased with clerenesse of the mone,
Right so is al his wo fulfild
Devoidid clene, whan that the sight
Beholdin may that freshe sight,
Whiche that the hert desirith so,

2860 That al his derkenesse is ago,
For than the herte is all at ese,
When thei sene that that maie hem please.
Now have I declared The al out
Of that thou were in drede and doute,
For I have tolde The faithfully
What The may curin uttirly,
And al Lovirs that wolle be Faithful, and of stabilite;
2870 Gode hope alway kepe by thy side,
And swete thought make eke abide,
Swete Loking, and swete Speche,
Of al thine harmes thei shal be leche,
Of bale thou shalt have grette pleaseunce,
Yf thou canst bide in sustenance,
And servin wele without feintise,
Thou shalt be quite of thine emprise
With more guerdoun, if that thou live,
But al this time this I The yeve.

2880 THE God of Love, whan al the day
He had taught me, as ye have herd say,
And enformid compendouly,
He vanisid al sodainly,
And I alone ylefte al sole,
So full of complaint and of drole,
For I sawe no man there me by;
My woundes me grevid wondirly,
Me for to cure nothing I knewe,
2890 Save the bothum so bright of hewe,
Wheron was sette wholly my thought,
Of othir comforte knewe I nought,
But it were through the God of Love,
I knew nat else to my behove,
That might me ese or comfort gette,
But if he would him entremette.

The Rosir was withoutin dout
Yclosid with an hedge without,
As ye to forne have herde me saie,
And fast I besied, and would saie
Have passid the hay, if I might Have gettin in by any sleight
2900 To the bothum so faire to se,
But evir I dradde blamed to be,
Yf men would have suspicion,
That I would of entencion
Have stole the Rosir that there were,
Therefore to entre I was in fere;
But at the laste, as I bethought
Whethir I shulde passe or nought,

2910 I sawe come, with a gladdè chere,
To me a lusty Bachilere
Of gode stature and of gode height,
And Bialacoil forsoth he height,
Sonnè he was to Curtisie,
And he me grauntid ful gladlie
The passage of the artir hay,
And saide sir: how that ye may,
Passe, if that it your wille ybe
The freshe Rosir for to se,
2920 And ye the swete savour se
Your warrant I may be right wele,
So thou The kepin fro folie,
Shal no man do The yllanie,
Yf I maie helpin you in ought
I shall not faine, dredith right nought,
For I am bounde to your service
Fully devoide of all feintise
2930 Than unto Bialacoil saide I,
I thanke you for ful hartily,
And your behest I call at grete,
That ye so godely profir me,
To you it cometh of grette franchise
That ye me profir your service,

Than

Than aftir ful delivirly
Through the breris anonie went I,
Wherof encombrid was the haie,
I was well plesed, the sothe to saie,
To se the bothum, faire and sore,
So freshe ysprong out of the rote.

AND Bialacoil me servid wele,
Whan I so nigh me mightin fele
Of the bothum the swete odoure,
And so lusty hewed of coloure:
But than a chorle, foule him betide,
Beside the Rosis gan him hide,
To kepe the Rosis of that Rosefe,
Of whom the name was Daungere.
This chorle was hid there in the greves,
Ycovirid with grasse and leves,
To spie, and take whom that he fonde
Unto that Rosir put an honde.

He was not sole, for there was mo,
For with him werin othir two,
Of wickid manirs, and ill fame,
That one was clepid by his name
Wickid tonge, God yeve him sorowe,
For neithir at eve ne at morowe
He can of no man gode yspeke,
On many' a juste man doth he wreke.

There was a woman that eke hight
Shame, that who can rekin right,
Trespas ywas her fathir's name,
Her mothir Refon; thus was shame
Ybrought forth of these ilke two,
And yet had trespas nere adoe
With Refon, ne nere leie her by,
He was hidous and so ugly;
I mene this, that Trespas hight,
But Refon conceveth of a sight
That shame, of which I spake aforne,
And whan that Shame was thus yborne,
It was ordained, that Chastite
Should of the Rosir Lady be,
Whiche of the bothums more and las
With sondrie folke assailid was,
That she ne wiste what to doe,
For Venus her assailith so,
That night and daie fro her she stail
Bothoms and Rosis ovir all;
To Refon than praieth Chastite,
Whom Venus hath flemed ore the fe,
That she her doughtrir would her lene,
To kepe the Rosir freshe and grene.

Anon Refon to Chastite
Is fully assentid that it be,
And grauntid her, at her request;
That Shame, bicause she is honest,
Shall kepir of the Rosir be,
And thus to kepe it there were thre,
That none should hardie be ne bolde,
(Were he yongè, or were he olde)
Again her will awaie to bere
Bothoms ne Rosis, that there were.
I had well sped, had I nat ben
Awaitid with these thre and sene;
For Bialacoil, that was so faire,
So gracious and debonaire,
Quitte him to me ful curtilly,
And me to plesin baddie that I
Should drawe to the bothom nere,
Prese in to touchin the Rosefe,
Whiche bare the Rose, he yase me leve,
This graunt ne might but still greve;
And for he sawe it likid me
Right nigh the bothom pullid he
A lefe all grene, and yave me that,

The whiche full nigh the bothom sat;
I madin of that lefe full queint,
And whan I felt I was aquente
With Bialacoil and so prive,
I wende all my will had ybe,
Than wext I hardie for to tell
To Bialacoil how me befell
Of Love, that toke and woundid me,
And sayid sir, so mote I The,
I maie no joie have in no wise
Upon no side, but it arise
For sithè (if I shall not faine)
In herte I have had so grete paine,
So grete anoie, and soche affraie;
That I ne wotte what I shall saie,
I drede your wrothe to deserve,
Levir me were that knivis kerve
My bodie should in pecis small,
Than in any wise it should fall
That ye wrothid should ben with me.

Saie boldily thy will (quod he)
I n'll be wrothe, if that I maie,
For nought that thou shalt to me saie.

THAN saied I sir, not you displese
To knowin of my grete unese,
In whiche only Love hath me brought,
For painis grete, disese and thought
Fro daie to daie it doeth me drie,
Supposith not, sir, that I lie;
In me five woundis did he make,
The sore of whiche shall never flake,
But ye the bothom graunte me,
Whiche is most passaunt of beaute,
My life, my deth, and my martyre,
And tresour that I moste desire.

Than Bialacoil affrayid all
Sayid sir, it maie not befall,
That ye desire, it maie not rise,
What would ye shende me in this wise?
A mokill solè than I were,
If I suffrid you' awaie to bere
The freshe bothom, so faire of sight,
For it were neithir skill ne right
Of the Rosir ye broke the rinde,
Or take the Rose aforne his kinde,
Ye are not curteis to aske it,
Let it still on the Rosir sit,
Let it growe till it' amendid be,
And perfily come to beaute,
I n'olde not that it pullid were,
Fro the Rosir that doth it bere,
To me it is so lefe and dere.
With that anon stert out Daungere
Out of the place where he was hidde,
His malice in his chere was kidde;
Full grete he was and blacke of hewe,
Sturdie and hidous, who so' him knewe,
Like sharpe urchons his heere was growe,
His eyes red-sparking as fire glowe,
His nose frouncid full kirkid stode,
He come criande as he were wode,
And saied, Bialacoil tel me why
Thou bringist hi' so boldely
Him that so nigh to the Rosefe,
Thou worchist in a wrong manere,
He thinkith to dishonour The,
Thou art well worthy to have malgre,
To let him of the Rosefe Witte,
Who servith Fellone is ill quitte.

Thou wouldist have doon grete bounte,
And he with shame would quite The.
Flic hens felowe, I rede The go,
It wantith lite he wol The slo

For

For Bialacoil ne knewe The nought,
Whan The to serve he set his thought,
For thou wolt shame him if thou might,
Bothe again refon and 'gainst right,
I woll no more in The affie,
That comest so slightly for t' espie,
For it provith wondirly wele
Thy sleight and trefon every dele.

I durst no more make there abode,
For the chorle, he was so wode,
So gan he thretin and manace,
And through the haie he did me chace,
For fere of him I trembled and quoke,
So chorlishely his hedde he shoke,
And saied, if eft he might me take,
I shoud nat from his hondis scape.
Than Bialacoil is fled and mate,
And I all sole disconsolate
Was left alone in pain and thought,
Fro shame to deth I was nigh brought;
Than thought I on my high folie,
How that my bodie uttirlic
Was yeve to pain and to martire,
And therto had I so grete ire,
That I ne durst the hayis passe,
There was no hope, there was no grace,
I trowe nevir man wiste of pain
But he were laced in Lov's chain,
Ne no man wist (and soth it is)
But if he love, what angir is.

Love holdeth his heste to me right wele,
Whan pain (he sayid) I shoud fele,
No herte maie thinke, no tonge sain
A quartir of my wo and pain,
I might not with the angir last,
Mine herte in point was for to brast,
Whan I thought on the Rose, that so
Was thorough Daungir cast me fro;
A long while stode I in that state,
Till that me sawe so madde and mate
The Ladie of the high ward,
Whiche from her toure loked thi'ward.

Refon men clepin that Lady,
Whiche from her toure delivirly
Came doune to me withoutin more;
But she was neither yong ne hore,
Ne high, ne lowe, ne fatte, ne lene,
But best, as it were in a mene;
Her eyin two were clere and light
As a candill, that brennith bright,
And on her hedde she had a croune,
Her semid well and high persoune,
For round environ her crounet
Was full of riche stonis afret,
Her godely semblaunt by devise
I trowe was made in Paradise,
For nature had nevir soche grace
To forge a worke of soche compace,
For certain, but if the' lettir lie,
Grete God himself, that is so hie,
Formid her aftir his image,
And yafe her sithe soche avauntage,
That she hath might and seignorie
To kepe men from all folie,
Who so woll trowe wele her lore,
Ne maie offendin nevirmore.

And while I stode thus derke and pale
Refon began to me her tale,
She saied, al haile my swete frende,
Folie and childhod woll The shende,
Whiche The have put in grete affraie,
Thou hast bought dere the time of Maie,

That made thine herte merie to be,
In evill time thou wentest to se
The gardin, whereof Idilnesse
Ybare the keie and was maistresse,
Whan that thou yedist in the daunce
With her, and haddin acquaintaunce;
Her acquaintaunce is perillous,
First soft, and aftir full noious,
She hath The trashid without wene,
The God of Love had The nat sene,
Ne had Idilnesse The conveide
Within the verge, where Mirthe him pleide;
If Folie have surprisid The,
Doe so that it recovered be,
And be well ware to take no more
Counsaile, that grevith aftir sore,
He' is wise that woll himself chastise.

Though a yong man in any wise
Trespasse emong, and doe folie,
Let him nat dwelle, but hastilie
Let him amende what so be mis;
And eke I counsaile The i-wis
The God of Love wholly foryete,
That hath The in soche pain yfete,
And The in herte tourmentid so,
I can not sene how thou maiest go
Othir waies The to garisoun,
For daungere, that is so feloun,
Fellie purposeth The to werreie,
Whiche is full cruill, sothe to seie.

AND yet of Daungere cometh no blame,
In reward of my doughtir shame,
Whiche hath the Rosis in her warde,
As she that maie be no musarde,
And wickid tong is with these two,
That suffrith no man thi'ir go,
For er a thing be doe, he shall,
Where that he comith ovir all,
In fourtie placis, if' it be sought,
Saie thing that nere was don ne wrought,
So moche traifon is in his male,
Of falsenesse for to faine a tale.
Thou delest with angrie folke iwis,
Wherefore to The the bettir is
From these folkis awaie to fare,
For thei woll make The live in care;
This is the ill that love thei call,
Wherein there is but folie all,
For love is folie every dell,
Who loveth, in no wise maie doe well,
Ne set his thought on no gode werke,
His schole he leseth, if he be clerke,
Or othir craft, if that he be,
He shall not thrive therein, for he
In love shal have more passioun
Than Monke, or Hermite, or Chanoun.
This pain is herd out of mesure,
The joie maie no while endure,
And eke in the possession

Is mochil tribulacion,
The joie it is so short lasting,
And but in hape is the getting,
I se there many in travaile,
That at the last shall foully faile,
I was nothing thy counsailler,
Whan thou were made the homager
Of God of Love to hastily,
Where was no Wisedome, but Folie,
Thine harte was jolie, but not sage,
Whan thou were brought in soche a rage,
To yelde The up so redily
To Love of his grete maistiry.

P p p

I rede

I Rede The Love awaie to drive
That maketh The reche not of thy live,
The Folie more fro daie to daie
Shall growe, but thou it put awaie,
Take with thy tethe the bridill faste
To daunt thy herte, and eke The caste,
If that thou maiest, to get defence
For to redresse thy first offence.
Who so his herte alwaie woll leve
Shall finde emong that shall him greve.

Whan I her herd thus me chastise,
I answerde in full angrie wise,
I prayid her cesse of her speche,
Eithir to chastise me or teche,
To biddè me my thought refrein,
Whiche Love hath caught in his demein:
What wenin ye Love woll consent
(That me assayith with bowe bent)
To drawe mine herte out of his honde,
Whiche is so quickly in his bonde?
That ye counsaile maie nevir be,
For whan he first arestid me,
He toke mine herte so sore him till,
That it is nothing at my will,
He taught it so him for to obeie,
That he it sparrid with a keie.
I praie you let me be all still,
For ye maie well, if that ye will,
Your wordis waste in idilnesse,
For uttirly, withoutin gesse,
All that ye saine is but in vain,
Me were levir die in the pain,
Than Love to meward should arette,
Falshe de or treson on me sette,
I woll me gettin pris or blame,
And Love true for to save my name,
Who me chastisith, I him hate.
With that worde Reson went her gate
Whan she sawe for no sermoning
She might me fro my folie bring.
Than dismayid I left all sole,
For werie, for-wandred as a sole,
For I ne knewe no cherifaunce.
Than fell into my remembraunce
How Love ybadde me to purveie
A felawe, to whom I might seie,
My counsaile and my privite,
For that should moche availin me.

With that bethought I me, that I
Yhad a felaw faste by,
True and sikir, curteis, and hende,
And he called was by name a frende,
A truer felawe was no where none.
In hast to him I went anothre,
And to him all my wo I told,
Fro him right nought I would withhold,
I tolde him all withoutin were,
And made my compleint on Daungere,
How for to seie he was hidous,
And to meward contrarious,
The whichè through his cruilte
Was in point to have meimid me,
With Bialacoil whan he me seie
Within the gardin walke and pleie,
Fro me he made him for to go,
And I be left alone in wo:
I durst no lengir with him speke,
For Daungir saied he would be wreke,
Whan that he sawe how that I went
The freshe bothom for to hent,
If I were hardie to come nere
Bitwene the haie and the Rosere.

This frende, whan he wist of my thought,
He discomfortid me right nought,

But saied felawe, be nat so madde,
Ne so abashid nor bestadde,
My selfe I knowe full well Daungere,
And how that he is fiers of chere,
At primè temps, Love to manace,
Full oft I have ben in his case,
A felon first though that he be,
Aftir thou shalt him souple se;
Of long passid I knewe him wele;
Ungodelie first though men him seie,
He woll meke aftre' in his bering
Ben, for service and obeiffing;
I shall The tell what thou shalt doe;
Mekely I rede thou go him to,
Of herte praie him specially
Of thy trespase to have mercie,
And hotin him well here to plesse,
That thou shalt ner more him displese;
Who can best serve of flatiry
Shall plesse Daungir most uttirly.

My frende hath saied to me so wele,
That he me esid hath somede le,
And eke allegged of my tourment,
For through him had I hardiment
Again to daungir for to go,
To preve if I might make him so.

TO Daungir cam I all ashamed,
The whichè asorne me had yblamed,
Desiring for t' apese my wo,
But ovir hedge durst I nat go,
For he forbode me the passage,
I founde him cruill in his rage,
And in his honde a grete bourdoun;
To him I knelid lowe adoun,
Full meke of port, and simple' of chere;
And saied sir, I am comin here
Onely to ask of you mercie,
It grevith me full gretily,
That evir I have wrathid you,
But for to' amende I am come now,
With all my might, bothe loude and still,
To doin right at your owne will,
For Love madin me for to do,
That I have trespassed hi' derto,
Fro whome I ne maie drawe mine herte,
Yet shall I nere for joie ne smerte
(What so befall me, gode or ill)
Offendin more again your will,
Levir I have endure disese
Than doe that whichè should you displese.

I You require, and praie that ye
Of me have mercie and pite,
To stint your ire that grevith so,
That I woll swere for evir mo
To be redressed at your liking,
If I trespase in any thing,
Save that (I praie The) grauntè me
A thing, that maie nat warnid be,
That I maie love all onily,
None othir thing of you aske I,
I shall doin all wele i-wis,
If of your grace you graunt me this,
And that ye maie nat lettin me,
For well wote ye that love is fre,
And I shall loven soche that I will,
Who evir like it well or ill,
And yet ne would I for all Fraunce
Doe thing to doe you displesaunce.

Than Daungir fill in his entent
For to foryeve his male talent,

But

But all his wrathe yet at the last
He hath relefed, I praied so fast,
Shortly (he sayid) thy request
Is nat to mokill dishonest,
Ne I woll nat wernin it The,
For yet nothing engrevith me;
For though thou love thus evirmore,
To me is neithir softe ne fore,
Love where The list, what rechith me?
So ferre thou fro my Rosis be,
Trust not on me for none assaie
In any time to passe the haie.

Thus hath he grauntid my praier.
Than went I forthe withoutin were Unto my frende, and told him all,
Whiche was right joifull of my tale;
(He saied) now goeth well thine affaire,
He shall to The be debonaire,
Though he aforne was dispitous,
He shall hereaftir be gracious,
If he were touched on some gode vein,
He should yet rewin on thy pein,
Suffir, I rede, and no bofte make,
Till thou at gode mes maieft him take.

By suffraunce, and by wordis soft
A man maie ovircomin oft
Him, that aforne he had in drede,
In bokis sothly as I rede.
Thus hath my frende with grete comfort
Avauncid me with high disport,
Whiche would me gode as moche as I;
And than anon full sodainly
I toke my leve, and streight I went Unto the haie, for grete talent
I had to sene the freshe bothom,
Wherin laie my salvacion,
And Daungir toke kepe, if that I,
Kepe him covinaunt truely,
So sore I drede his manasing,
I durst not brekin his bidding,
For lest that I were of him shent,
I brake not his commaundiment,
For to purchasin his gode will,
It was for to comin there till,
His mercie was to ferre behinde
Ykept, for I ne might it finde,
I complainid and fighid sore,
And languishid evir the more,
For I ne durst nat ovir go
Unto the Rose I lovid so,
Throughout my deming uttirly
That he had knowlege certainly:
Than Love me ladde in sochẽ wife,
That in me there was no feintise,
Ne falsshedde, ne no trecherie,
And yet he full of villanie,
And of disdaine, and cruilte,
On me ne would have no pite,
His cruill will for to refrain,
Tho I wept aie, and me complain.

AND while I was in this turment
Were come of grace, by God ysent
Dame Fraunchise, and with her Pite
Fulfilde the bothom of bounte;
Thei go to Daungir anon right
To ferthir me with all ther might,
And helpe me, in worde and in dede,
For well thei sawe that it was nede.
First of her gracẽ dame Fraunchise
Ytaken hath of this emprise,
She saied, Daungir, grete wrong ye doe
To worche this man so mochil woe,
Or pinin him so angirlic,

3440 It is to you grete villanie,
I can not se, ne why ne how
That he hath trespassed again you,
Save that he loveth, wherefore ye shold
The more in charite' of him hold,
The force of love maketh him doe this,
Who would him blame he did amis,
He levith more than he maie doe,

3450 His pain is harde, ye maie se, lo!
And Love in no wife would consent
That he have powir to repent,
For though that quicke ye would him slo,
Fro Love his herte ne maie nat go.

Now swete sir, it is your ese
Him for to angir or disese,
Alas! what maie it you avaunce
To doen to him so grete grevaunce?
What worship is' it again him take,
Or on your man a werre make,

3460 Sithe he so lowlie every wife
Is redy, as ye luste devise?
If Love have caught him in his lace
You for t' obaie in every cace,
And ben your subject at your will,
Should ye therfore willin him ill?
Ye should him sparin more all out
Than him that is bothe proude and stout,
Curtisie would that ye succoure
Them, that ben meke undir your cure,

3470 *His herte is hard, that woll not meke,
Whan men of mekenesse him beseke.*

THIS is certain, sayid Pite,
We se oft that Humilite,
Bothe ire, and also felonie
Venquish'eth, and also' melancolie,
To stondin forthe in soche dureffe
This cruilte and wickidnelie;
Wherefore I praie you, sir Daungere,

3480 For to maintein no lengir here
Soche cruill werre again your man,
As wholly your's, as er he can,
Nor that ye worchin no more wo
On this caitife languishing so,
Whiche woll no more to you trespase,
But put him wholly in your grace;
And his offence ne was but lite,
The God of love it was to wite,
That he your thrall so gretely is,

3490 If ye him harme, ye doen amis,
For he hath had full hard penaunce,
Sith that ye reft him th' aquaintaunce
Of Bialacoil, his moste joie,
Whiche all his painis might acioie,
He was before anoyid sore,
But than ye doublid him well more,
For he of blisse hath ben full bare,
Sith Bialacoil was fro him fare;
Love hath to him done grete distresse,

3500 He hath no nede of more dureffe,
Voidith from him your ire, I rede,
Ye maie not winnin in this dede,

3510 Maketh Bialacoil repaire again,
And havith pite on his pain,
For Fraunchise woll, and I Pite,
That mercifull to him ye be,
And sithe that she and I accorde;
Have upon him misericorde,
For I you praie, and eke moneste,
Nought to refusin our requeste,

3520 For he is hard, and fell of thought,
That for us two woll doe right nought.
Daungir ne might no more endure,
He mekid him unto mesure.

I woll

I woll in no wife, saieth Daungere,
Denie that ye have askid here,
It wete to grete uncurtisie,
I woll ye have the companie
Of Bialacoil, as ye devise,
I woll him lett n in no wife.
To Bialacoil than went in hie,
Fraunchise, and saied full curtisie,
Ye have to long yben deignous
Unto this lovir, and daunge'rous,
Fro him to withdrawe your presence,
Whiche hath doe to him grete offence,
That ye not would upon him se,
Wherefore a so'rowfull man is he,
Shape ye to paie him, and to plesse,
Of my love if ye woll have ese,
Fulfill his will, sith that ye knowe
Daungir is dauntid and brought lowe,
Through helpe of me and of Pite,
You dare no more aferde to be.

I shall doin right as ye will,
Saieth Bialacoil, for it is skill,
Sith daungir woll that it so be;
Than Fraunchise hath him sent to me.

Bialacoil at the beginning
Saluid me in his comming,
No straungenessse was in him sene,
No more than he ne' had wrathid ben,
As faire semblaunt than shewed he me,
And godely, as aforne did he,
And by the honde withoutin doubt
Within the haie right all about
He lad me with a right gode chere,
All environ on the vergere
That daungere had me chasid fro.
Now have I leve ovre' all to go,
Now am I raised at my devise
Fro hell up unto Paradise.
Thus Bialacoil of gentilnesse
With all his pain and businesse
Hath shewid me onely of grace
The eftirs of the sote place.

I sawe the Rose, whan I was nigh,
Was gretir woxin, and more high,
Freshe, and roddy, and faire of hewe,
Of colour evir iliche newe.
And whan I had it longe sene,
I sawe that through the levis grene
The Rose spred to spannishing,
To sene it was a godely thing,
But it ne was so sprede on brede
That men within might knowe the sede,
For it covert ywas and close
Bothe with the leves and with the Rose,
The stalke was even' and grene upright,
It was thereon a godely sight,
And well the bettir without wene
For that the sede was not ysene,
Full faire it sprad the God of blesse,
For soche an othir, as I gesse,
Aforne ne was, ne more vermaile;
I was abawid for marveile,
For er the fairir that it was,
The more I am boundin in love's laas.
Long I abode there, sothe to saie,
Till Bialacoil I gan to praie,
Whan that I sawe him in no wife
To me to warnin his service,
That he to me would graunt a thing,
Whiche to remembre' is well siting,
This is to saine, that of his grace
He would me yewe leisar and space,

To me that was so desirous
To have a kissing precious
Of the so godely freshe Rose
That so swetely smelleth in my nose,
For if it you displeid nought,
I woll gladly, as I have sought,
Havin a kisse thereof frely
Of your yeste, for certainly
I woll none have, but by your leve,
So lothe me were you for to greve.

HE sayid, frende so God me spede,
Of Chastite I have soche drede,
Thou shouldest not warnid be for me,
But I dare not for Chastite,
Again her dare I not misdooe,
For alwaie biddith she me so,
To yeve no lovir leve to kisse,
For who thereto may winnen i-wisse,
He of the surplus of the praie
May live in hope to get some daie,
For who so kissing maie attain,
Of Lov's pain hath (soth to sain)
The best and the mooste avinaunt,
And ernest of the reminaunt.

Of his answer I sighid fore,
I durst assaie him tho no more,
I had suche drede to greve him aie;
A man should not to mucche assaie,
To chafe his frende out of mesure,
Nor put his life in avinture;
For no man at the firste stroke
Ne may not fel adoune an oke,
Nor of the reifins have the wine,
Till grapes be ripe and wel a-fine,
Be fore empresse, I you ensure,
And drawin out of the presure:
But I forpeinid wondir strong,
Thoughte that I abode right long
Aftir the kisse, in paine and wo,
Sith I to kisse desirid so;
Till that rewing on my distresse
There comin Venus the goddesse,
(Whiche aie werryith Chastite)
Came of her grace to socour me,
Whose might is knowin ferre and wide,
For she is mothir of Cupide
The God of Love, as blinde as stone,
That helpith lovirs many one.
This lady brought in her right honde
Of brenning fire a blasing bronde,
Whereof the flame and hotte fire
Hath many' a Lady in desire
Of Love ybrought, and sore yhette,
And in her service her herte sette.
This Lady was of gode entaile,
Right wondirful of appaile,
By her atire so bright and shene
Men might percevin well and sene
She was not of Religioun,
Nor I n'il makin mencioune,
Nor of her robe, nor of tresour,
Of broche, ne of her riche attour,
Ne of her girdle' about her side,
For that I n'il not long abide,
But knowith well, that certainly
She was arrayid richily,
Devoide of pride certaine she was.
To Bialacoil she went a paas,
And to him shortely in a clause
She sayid, sir: what is the cause
Ye ben of porte so daungirous
Unto this lovir, and dainous,

To

To graunt him nothing but a kisse,
To warne it him ye done amisse,
Sithe well ye wotin how that he
Is Love's servaunt, as ye may se,
And hath beaute, wher through he is Worthy of Love to have the blis,
How he' is semely, beholde and se,
How he is faire, how he is fre,
How he is sote, and debonaire,
Of age yonge, lusty, and faire,
There is no Lady so hauteine,
Duchesse, Countesse, ne Chastelaine;
That I n'olde holde her ungodely
For to refuse him uttirly.

His brethe is also gode and swete,
And his lippes roddy, are thei mete
Only to plaine, and not to kisse?
Graunt him a kisse of gentilnesse.

His teth arne also white and clene,
Me thinkith wrong withoutin wene
If ye now warne him, trustith me,
To graunte that a kisse have he,
The lasse ye helpe him that ye haste,
And the more tyme shul ye waste.

Whan the flame of the very bronde,
That Venus brought in her right honde,
Had Bialacoil with his hete smete,
Anone he bade me without lete,
And grauntid me the Rose to kisse,
Than of my paine I ganne to lisse,
And to the Rose anon went I,
And kistid it ful faithfully;
Nede no man aske, if I was blith,
Whan the savour so softe and lich
Stroke to mine hert withoutin more,
And me alleggid of my fore,
So was I ful of joye and blisse,
It is faire suche a floure to kisse,
It was so sote and savourous
I might not be so anguissous,
That I mote glad and joly be,
Whan that I do remembre me,
Yet evre' among (sothly to faine)
I suffre noie and mochil paine.

THE se may never be so still,
But with a litill winde at will
May overhelme and tourne also,
As it were wode in wawis go,
Aftir the calme the trouble lone
Mote folow, and chaunge as the mone.

Right so fareth Love, that selde in one
Holdeth his ancre, for right anone,
Whan thei in ese wene best to live,
They ben with tempest all fordrive.
Who servith Love, can tel of wo,
The stoundmele joye mote ovirgo,
Now he hurtith, and now he cureth,
For selde in o pointe Love endureth.

Now is it right me to procede,
How Shame gan medle and take hede,
Through whom fel angirs I have hade,
And how the stronge wall was made,
And the Castill of brede and length,
That God of Love wan with his strength,
Al this in Romance will I set,
And for no thing ne will I let,
So that it liking to her be,
That is the floure of all beaute,
For she may best my labour quite,
That I for her Love shal endite.

Wickid tonge, whiche that the covine
Of every Lovir can devine

3730 Worste, and aie addith more somdele,
(For wickid tonge faith never wele)
To mewarde bare he right gret hate,
Espying me erly and late,
Til he hath sene the grette chere
Of Bialacoil and me ifere,
He ne might not his tonge withstonde
Worse to reportin than he fonde,
He was so ful of curfid rage;
3810 It sat him wele of his linage,

3740 For him an Irishe woman bare,
His tonge was filid sharpe and square;
And right poignaut, and right kerving,
And wondir bittir in speking;
For whan that he me gan espie,
He swore (affirming sikirly)
Bitwene Bialacoil and me
Was ill aquaintaunce and prive.
He spake therof so folilie,
3820 That he awakid Jelousie,

3750 Whiche all affraied in his rising,
Whan that he herdè the jangling;
He ran anon as he were wode
To Bialacoil there that he stode,
Whiche had levir in this caas
Have ben at Reines or Amias,
For fote-hote in his felonie
To him thus saidè Jelousie:

3760 "Why hast thou ben so negligent
"To kepin, whan I was absent, 3830 "This vergir here leste in thy warde!
"To me thou haddist no regarde,
"To trust (to thy confusion)
"Him thus, to whom suspicion
"I have right grete, for it is nede,
"It is well shewid by the dede;
"Grete faute in The now have I founde;
"By God anon thou shalt be bounde,
"And faste lockin in a Toure, 3840 "Withoutin refuite or socoure.

3770 "FOR shame to long hath be The fro,
"Ovir sonè she was ago,
"Whan thou hast lost both drede and fere,
"It semid well she was not here;
"For she was besy in no wise
"To kepin The and to chastice,
"And for to helpin Chastite,
"To kepe the Rosir, as thinketh me;
"For than this boie knave so boldly 3850 "Ne shouldè nat have be hardy,
"Ne in this vergir had suche game, 3780 "Which now me tournith to grete shame.

Bialacoil n'is what to saie,
Ful faine he would have fled awaie,
For fere have hyid, n'ere that he
All sodainly toke him with me;
And whan I sawe that he had so,
This Jelousie, takin us two,
I was astoned, and knewe no rede;
But fledde away for very drede.
3860

3790 Than Shame came forth ful simply,
She wende have trespaced ful gretely,
Humble' of her porte, and made it simple,
Wering a vaile in stede of wimple,
As Nonnis done in ther Abbey,
Bicause her hert was in affray,
She gan to speke within a throwe
To Jelousie, right wondir lowe.

3800 First of his grace she him besought,
And sayid, sir, ne levith nought
Q q q 3870 Wickid

Wickid tongè, that false espie,
Which is so glad to faine and lie,
He hath you made through flatering,
On Bialacoil a false lesing,
His falsnesse is not now a newe,
It is to longe that he him knewe,
This ne is not the frste daie,
For wickid tonge hath custome aie
The yongè folkis to bewrie,
And false lesingis on 'hem lie.

Yet nere-thelesse I se among
That the soigné it is so long
Of Bialacoil, hertis to lute
In Lov's servise for to endure,
Ydrawing suchè folke him to
That he hath nothing with to do,
But in sothnesse I trowe nought
That Bialacoil had er in thought
To do trespase or vilanie,
But for his mothir Curtisie
Hath taught him evir for to be
Gode of aqueintaunce and prive,
For he lovith none hevinesse,
But mirth and play, and all gladnesse,
He hatith eke allè trechours,
And soleine folke and envious,
For ye wele wetin how that he Wol evir glad and joyful be
Honestly with folke to pley;
I have be negligent in fey
To chastise him, therefore now I
Of herte ycrie you here mercy,
That I have ben so rechiles
To tamin him, withoutin lees,
Of my foly I me repent,
Now wol I whole set mine entent
To kepin bothè low and still
Bialacoil, to do your will.

O Shame, O Shame, faide Jelousie,
To be bitrashed grete drede have I,
Lecherie hath yclombe so hie;
That almost blerid is mine eie;
No wondir is, if drede have I,
Ovir al reignith Lechery,
Whose might ygrowith night and dey,
Both in Cloistre and in Abbey,
Chastite' is werried ovir all;
Therefore I woll with sikir wall
Close both the Rosis and Rosere,
I have to long in this manere
Leste 'hem unclofid wilfully,
Wherfore I am right inwardly
Sorrowfull, and repentè me,
But now thei shall no lengir be
Unclofid, and yet I drede fore
I shall repentè ferthirmore,
For the game goith all amis
Counsaile I mustè newe i-wis,
I have to long ytrustid The,
But now it shal no lengir be,
For he may best in every coste
Decevin, that men trustin moste;
I se well that I am nigh shent,
But if I set my full entent
Some remedie for to purveie,
Wherfore closin I shall the wey
From them that woll the Rose espie,
And come to waite me vilonie,
For now in gode faith and in trouth,
I wol not lettin for no flouth
To live the more in sikirnesse;
Do make anon a fortirese,
Than close the Rosis of gode favour,

In middis shal I make a tour,
To put Bialacoil in prison,
For evir I drede me of trefon,
I trow I shal him kepe so,
That he shal have no might to go
About to makin compaignie
To them that thinke of vilanie,
Ne to no suche as hath ben here
Aforne, and founde in him gode chere,
Whiche han assailid him to shende,
And with ther trowandise to blende;
A fole is eith to begile,
But may I live a litil while,
He shal forthinke his faire semblaunt.

And with that worde came Drede avaunt,
Whiche was abashed, and in grete fere,
Whan he wist Jelousie was there,
He was for drede in fache affray,
That not a wordè darste he say,
But quaking stode ful still alone,
(Til Jelousie his way was gone)
Save Shame, that him not forsoke,
Both Drede and she ful sore quoke,
That at the lastè Drede abraide
And to his Cosin Shame saide.

Shame (he said) in forthfastnesse
To me it is gret hevinesse.

That the noise is so fette ygo,
And eke the sclaudir of us two,
But sithin that it is besall,
We maie it not againe call,
Whan onis sprongin is a fame;
For many' a yere withoutin blame
We have ben, and many a day,
For many' an Aprill, many a May
We han ypassid nothing shamed,
Til Jelousie hath us yblamed,
Of mistrust and suspicion
Causèlesse, without encheson;
Go we to Daungir hastily,
And let us shewe him opinly
That he hath not aright ywrought,
Whan that he settè not his thought
To kepin bettir the purprise,
In his doing he is not wise,
He hath to us do grete wrong,
That hath suffrid now so long
Bialacoil to have his will,
Allè his lustis to fulfill,
He must amende it uttirly,
Or els shal he villainously
Exilid be out of this londe,
For he the werre maie not withstonde
Of Jelousie, nor bere the grese,
Sithè Bialacoil is at mischese.

TO Daungir Shame and Drede anon
The rightè way ben both ygon,
The chorle thei foundin 'hem aforne
Ligging undir an hawethorne,
Undir his hed no pilowe was,
But in the stede a trusse of gras,
He slombrid, and a knappe he toke,
Til Shame pitoufly him shoke,
And grete manace on him gan make.

Why slepiest thou, whan thou should wake?
(Qd Shame) thou doest us vilanie,
Who trustith The, he doth folie,
To kepe rosis or bothoms,
Whan thei ben faire in ther scions;
Thou arte woxe to familiere,
Wher thou should be strannge of chere,

Stoute

Stoute of thy porte, redy to greve,
Thou doest gret folie for to leve
Bialacoil here inne to call
The yongir man, to shenden us all,
Though that thou slepe, we mowin here
Of Jelousie grete noise here;
Art thou now late, rise up at hie,
And stoppe sone and delivirly
Alle the gappis of the hay,
Do no favour, I do The pray,
It fallith nothing to thy hame
To make fayre semblant where thou mayste blame.

IF Bialacoil be swete and fre,
Doggid and fel thou shouldest be,
Froward and outrageous i-wis,
A chorle chaungith that curteis is,
This have I herde oft in saying
That man ne maie for no daunting
Make a sperhauke of a bolarde,
Al men wol hold The for musarde,
That debonaire have foundin The,
It sitteth The notight curteis to be,
To do men plesaunce or servise
In The it is recreaundise,
Let thy werkis ferre and nere
Be like thy name, whiche is Daungere.

Than al abashid in shewing
Anon spake Drede, right thus saying,
And sayid, Daungir I drede me
That thou ne wolte bely be
To kepin that thou hast to kepe,
Whan thou shouldest wake, thou art a-slepe,
Thou shalt be grevid certainly,
If The aspyin Jelousie,
Or if he finde The in blame;
He hath to day assailid Shame,
And chased away, with grete manace
Bialacoil out of this place,
And swerith shortly that he shall
Enclose him in a sturdy wall,
And al is for thy wickidnesse,
For that The failith straungenesse,
Thine hert I trowe be failid all,
Thou shalt repent in speciall,
If Jelousie the sothe knewe,
Thou shalt forthinke, and fore rewe,

With that the chorle his chubbe gan shake,
Frowning his eyin gan to make,
And hidous chere, as man in rage,
For yre he brent in his visage,
Whan that he herde him blamid so,
He said, out of my witte I go,
To be discomfite I have grete wrong,
Certis I have now lived to long,
Sith I may not this clofir kepe,
Al quicke I would be dolvin depe,
Yf any man shal more repayre
To this gardin for foule or fayre,
Mine hert for ire goith a-fore
That I let any entre here,
I have do foly now I se,
But now it shal amendid be,
Who settith fote here any more
Truly he shall repent it fore,
For no man more into this place
Of me to entre shall have grace,
Levir I had with swerdis twaine
Throughout mine hert, in every vaine,
Percid to be, with many a wounde,
Than slouth should in me be founde
From hennisforth by night or day,
I shall defende it if I may,

Withoutin any exception
Of eche manir condicion,
And if I it any man graunte,
There holdith me for recreaunte.

THan Daungir on his fete gan stonde,
And hent a burdon in his honde,
Wrothe in his ire ne left he nought,
But through the vergir he hath sought
If he might findin hole or trace,
Where through that he mote forth by pace,
Or any gappe, he did it close,
That no man might touchin a Rose
Of the Rosir alle about,
He shittith every man without.

Thus day by day Daungir is wers,
More wondirfull and more divers,
And fellir eke, than evre he was,
For him ful oft I singe alas,
For I ne may nought, through his ire,
Recovir that I moste desire,
Miht hert alas! wol brete a-two
For Bialacoil I wrathid so;
For certainly in every membre

I quake, whan that I me remembre
Of the bothom, whiche that I wolde
Ful oft a day sene and beholde;
And whan I thinke upon the kisse,
And how much jole, and how much blisse
I haddè through the savour swete,
For want of it I grieve and grete,
Me thinketh I fele yet in my nose
The sote savour of the Rose,
And now I wote that I mote go
So ferre the freshe flouris fro,

To me ful welcome were the deth,
Absence therof (alas!) me slethe,
For whilom with this Rose, alas!
I touchid nose, and mouthe, and face,
But now the deth I must abide,
But Love consent an othir tide,
That onis I touche maie and kisse,
I trow my paine shal never lisse
Theron is all my covetise,

Whiche brent my hert in many wise:
Now shal repaire againe sighing,
Long wathe on nightes, and no sleeping,
Thought in wishing, turment, and wo,
With many a tourning to and fro,
That halfe my paine I cannot tell,
For I am fallin into hell
From paradise and welthe, the more
My turment grevith more, and more,
Anoyith now the bittirnesse,
That I to forne have felte swetnesse,
And wickid tonge, throughe his falsheede,
Ycausith all my wo and drede,
On me he lieth a pitous charge,
Bicause his tonge was to large.

Now is it time shortly that I
Tel you somthing of Jelousy,
That was in grete suspeccion;
About him leste he no mason,
That stonè could laie, ne no quertour,
He hirid hem to make a tour;
And first the Rosir for to kepe
About hem made he a dicke depe,
Right wondir large, and also brode,
Upon the whiche also stode,
Of squarid stonè, a sturdy wall,
Whiche on a cragge was foundid all,
And right grete thicknesse, eke it bare,
About it was yfoundid square

An

An hundrid fa'ome' on every side,
It was alliche both long and wide,
Lest any time it were assailed,
Ful wel about it was batailed,
And rounde environ eke were set
Ful many' a riche and faire tournet,
At every cornir of this wall
Was set a tour ful principall,
And everiche had without fable
A portcolise defensible,
To kepe of en'emies, and to greve
That there ther force would ypreve.

And eke amidde this purprise
Was made a tour of grete maistrise,
A fairir saugh no man with sight,
Large and wide, and of grete might,
Thei draddè nought none assaut,
Of ginn, or gonn, nor of skaffaut,
The tempereure of the mortere
Was made of lycoure wondir dere,
Of quicklime persaut and egre,
Which temprid was with vinegre.

The stone was harde of Adamaunt,
Wherof thei made the foundemaunt,
The tour was rounde made in compas,
In al this world no richir was,
Ne bettir ordained therewithall;
About the tour was made a wall,
So that betwixt that and the toure
Rosis were set of swete savoure,
With many Rosis that thei bere;
And eke within the castil were Springoldis, Gones, Bowes, and Archers,
And eke about at the corners
Men seinin ovir the wall stonde
Gret engins, which ywere nere honde,
And in the kernils here and there
Of arblastirs grete plentie were,
None armour mighte ther stroke withstonde,
It were foly to prese to honde;
Without the diche were listis made
With wal batailid large and drade,
For men and horse should not attaine
To nigh the diche ovir the plaine;
Thus Jelosie hath environ
Yfette about his garnison
With wallis rounde, and dichè depe,
Onely the Rosir for to kepe,
And Daungir bothe erly and late
The keyes kept of the uttir gate,
The whiche opened towarde the est,
And he had with him at the lest
Thurty servautes echone by name.

That othir gate was kept by Shame,
Whiche opinid, as it was couthe,
Towardis the parte of the Southe,
Sergeautes assignid were her to Full many, her will for to do.
Than dredè had in her baillie
The keping of the constable'rie
Towarde the North I understonde,
That opened upon the leste honde,
The whiche for nothing may be sure
But if she do her besy cure
Erly on mor'we', and also late
Strongly to shette and barre the gate;
Of every thing that she may se
Drede is aferde, where so she be,
For with a pufte of litill winde
Drede is astonied in her minde,
Therefore for steling of the Rose
I rede her nat the yate unclofe,
A foul'is flight would make her fle,
And eke a shadowe, if she' it se.

4160 THan wickid tonge full of Envy,
With soudiers of Normandy,
As he that causith all debate,
Was kepir of the fourthè gate,
And also to the tothir thre
He went ful oftè, for to se,
Whan his lotte was to walke a night,
His instrumentis would be dight,
2240 For to blowin and makin soun
Oftir than he hath enchesoun,
4170 And walkin oft upon the wall,
Cornirs and wickittes ovir all
Ful narowe serchin and espie,
Though he nought fonde, yet would he lie,
Discordaunt er fro armonie,
And dissonid fro melodie,
Controve he would, and foulè faile,
2250 With hornpipis of Cornèwaile
In floitis made he discordaunce,
And in his musike with mischaunce
4180 He wouldè seine with notis newe,
That he ne fonde no woman trewe,
Ne that he sawe nere in his life
Unto her husbonde a trewe wife,
Ne none so ful of honeste,
That she n'il laugh and mery be,
Whan that she hereth or may espie
4260 A man spekin of Lecherie,
Everiche of 'hem hath some vice,
One is dishonest, tothir nice,
4190 Yf one be ful of vilanie,
An othir hath a lico'rous eie,
If one be ful of wantonesse,
An othir is a chidireffe.

Thus wickid tonge, God yeve him shame,
Can put 'hem everichone in blame,
Without desert and causileffe,
4270 He lieth, though thei ben gultileffe,
I have pity to sene the sorowe
4200 That wakith bothe evin and morowe,
To innocentes doth suche grevaunce,
I pray God yeve him evil chaunce,
That he evir so besy is
Of any woman to' seine amis.
Eke Jelousie may God confounde,
That hath makid a toure so rounde,
And made about a garison,
4380 To sette Bialacoil in prison,
The whiche is shette there in the tour,
4210 Ful long to holdè ther sojour,
There for to livin in penaunce,
And for to do him more grevaunce,
Whiche hath ordainid Jelousie,
An oldè vecke for to espie
The manir of his governaunce,
The whiche Devil in her insaunce
Had lernid all of lov'is arte,
4290 And of his pleyis toke her parte,
She was expert in his servise,
4220 She knewe eche wrenche and every gife
Of Love, and every secreet wile,
It was right harde her to begile.

Of Bialacoil she toke aie hede,
That er he liveth in wo and drede,
He kepte him coye and eke prive,
Lest that in him she haddè se
Any lite foly countinaunce, 4300 For she knew all the oldè daunce.
And after this, whan Jelousie
4230 Had Bialacoil in his Baillie,
And shette him up, that was so fre,
For sure of him he would ybe,

He trustith fore in his castell,
The stronge werke him likith well,
He draddè nat that no glotons
Should stele his Rosis or bethoms;
The Rosis weren assurid all,
Defencid with the stronge wall,
Now Jelousie full well may be
Of drede devoide in liberte,
Whether that he or slepe or wake
Of his Rosis may none be take.

BUT I (alas) now mornè shall
Bicause I was without the wall,
Ful mochil dole and mone I made,
Who so had wist what wo I had,
I trowe he would have had pite,
Love all to dere had foldè me,
The gode that of his love had I,
I went about it al queintly,
But nowe through dubling of my paine
I fe he woll it sell again,
And me a newè bargain lere,
The whiche all out the more is dere,
For the solace that I have lorne,
Than I had it nevèr aforne;
Certain I am full like in dede
To him that caste in yerth his fede,
And hath joie of the newe springing,
Whan it grenith in the ginning,
And is so faire and freshe of floure,
Lustie to sene, sote of odoure,
But er he it in shevis shere,
Maie fall wethir that shall it dere,
And makin it to fade and fall
The stalke, the greine, and flouris all
That to the tiller is fordoen
The hope he had conceved to sone,
I drede certaine that so fare I,
For hope and travaile sikirly
Ben me birafte all with a storme,
The floure n'ill sedin of my corne,
For Love hath so avauncid me,
Whan I began my privite
To Bialacoil all for to tell,
Whom I ne founde froward ne fell,
But toke agre all whole my plaie,
But Love is of so harde affaie,
That all at ones he revid me,
Whan I wened best above to have be;
It is of Love, as of fortune,
That chaungith oft, and n'ill contune,
Whiche whilom will on folke smile,
And glombe on 'hem an othir while,
Now frende, now foe, thou shalt her fele,
For a twincing tournith her whele.
She can writhin her hedde awaie,
This is the concourse of her plaie,
She can areise that doith mourne,
And whirle adoune and ovirtourne
Who sittith hiest, but as her lust,
A sole is he that woll her trust,
For it is I that am come doune
Through charge and revolucioun,
Sithe Bialacoil mote fro me twin,
Shette in her prison yonde within,
His absence at mine herte I fele,
For all my joie and all mine hele
Ywas in him, and in the Rose,
That but you woll, whiche him doeth close,
Opin, that so I maie him fe,
Love woll not that I curid be
Of the painis that I endure,
Nor of my cruill avinture.

AH! Bialacoil mine own dère,
Though thou be now a prisonere,
Kepith at lest thine herte to mè,
Suffir not that it dauntid be,
Ne let not jelousie in his rage
Puttin thine herte in no servage,
Although he chastice The without;
And make thy bodie to him lout,
Have herte as harde as Diamoant,
Stedfast, and stout, and naught pliaunt,
In prison though thy bodie be,
At large kepe thine herte fre,
A trewe hert ne will not plie,
For no manace that it maie drie.
If Jelousie doith The pain,
Quite him his will thus again,
To venge The at lest in thought,
If othir waie thou mayist nought,
And in this wise full subtilie,
Worchin, and winne the maistiry.
But yet I am in grete affraie
Lest thou sholdest nat doe as I saie,
I drede thou canst me grete maugre,
That thou enprisoned art for me,
But yet right nought for my trespas,
For through me nere discovered was Yet thing, that ought to be secre,
Well more annoie is in me
Than is in The of this mischaunce,
For I endure more hard penaunce
Than any man can saie or thinke,
That for the sorowe almoste I sinke,
Whan I remembir me of my wo,
Full nigh out of my witte I go.
Inward mine herte I felè blede,
For comfortlesse the deth I drede;
Owe I nat well to have distresse,
Whan false, through ther wickidnesse,
And traitours, that arne envious
To noien me, be so coragious.
Ah! Bialacoil full well I fe,
That thei 'hem shape to deceve The,
To make The buxum to ther lawe,
And with ther cordè The to drawe,
Where so 'hem lust, right at ther will;
I drede thei have The brought there till,
Withoutin comfort, thought me slaeth,
This game would bring me to my deth,
For if that I your gode will lese,
I mote be dedde, I maie not chese,
And if that thou foryetè me,
Mine herte shall nere in liking be,
Nor elliswhere findin solace,
If I be put out of your grace,
As it shall nevèr ben I hope,
Than shuldin I fall in wanhope.
Alas, in wanhope! naie parde,
For I woll nere dispeirid be,
If hope me faile, than alle am I
Ungracious and unworthy,
In hope I woll comfortid be,
For Love, whan he betaught her me,
Sayid, that Hope where so I go,
Should aie be relese to my wo.
But what and she my balis bete,
And be to me curteis and swete,
She is in nothing full certain,
Lovirs she put in full grete pain,
And makith 'hem with wo to dele,
Her faire behestè decevith fele,
For she woll behote sikirly,
And failin astir uttirly.
Ah! that is a full noious thing,
For many a lovir in loving
R r r

Hangeth upon her, and trustith fast,
Whiche lese ther travaile at the last.

Of thing to comme she wote right nought,
Therefore if it be wisely sought,
Her counsaile Folie is to take,
For many times, whan she woll make
A full gode syllogisme, I drede
That aftirwarde there shall in dede
Folowe an ill conclusion,
This put me in confusion,
For many times I have it sene
That many have begilid bene
For trust that thei have set in hope,
Whiche fell hem aftirward a-slope.

BUT nath'les yet gladly she wold,
That he that woll him with her hold
Had all timis her purpose clere, Withoutin deceipt any where,
That she desirith sikirly,
Whan I her blamed I did folly.
But what availith her gode will,
Whan she ne maie staunche my ffound ill?
That helpith lite that she maie doe,
Out take beheste unto my wo,
And heste certain in no wise
Without ifete is not to preise.

Whan heste and dede a sondir vary,
The doin a grete contrary;
Thus am I possid up and doune
With dole, thought, and confusioun,
Of my disese there is no nomber,
Daungir and Shame me encomber,
Drede also, and Jelosie,
And wickid Tong full of envie,
Of whiche the sharpe and cruill ire
Full oft me put in grete martire,
Thei have my joie fully let,
Sith Bialacoil thei have beset
Fro me in prison wickidly,
Whom I love so entierly,
That it wolle my banè be,
But I the sonir maie him se.

And yet moreovir worst of all
There' is set to kepe, soule her befall,
A rimplid vecke ferre ronne in age,
Frowning and yel'we' in her visage,
Whiche in awaite lieth daie and night,
That none of him maie have a sight.

NOW mote my sorowe enforced be,
Full sothe it is that Love yafe me
Thre wondir yestis of his grace,
Whiche I have lorne now in this place,
Sith thei ne maie withoutin drede
Helpin but lite who takith hede,
For here availith no Swete thought,
And swete Speche helpith right nought,
The thirde was callid swete Loking,
That now is lorne without lesing.

Yestis were faire, but nat for thy Thei helpin me but simplilly,
But Bialacoil losid be
To gone at large and to be fre,
For him my life lieth all in dout,
But if he come the rathir out.

Alas! I trowe it woll nat ben,
For how should I ere more him sene?
He maie nat out, and that is wrong,
Bicause the tourè is so strong,
How should he' out, or by whose prouesse,
Out of so strong a fortirese?

By me certain it n'll be doe,
God wotte, I have no witte therto,
But well I wote I was in rage
Whan I to Love did my homage,
Who was the cause (in sothfastnesse)
But her self dame Idilnesse?
Whiche me conveide through faire praier
To' entir into that faire vergere;
She was to blame me to leve,
4460 The whiche now doeth me fore greve; 4530
A fol's worde is nought to trowe,
Ne worthe an apple for to lowe,
Men should him snibbe bittirlic
At primè temps of his folie;
I was a fol, and she me leved,
Through whom I am right nought releved,
She accomplishid all my will,
That now me grevith wondir ill.

Reson me sayid what should fall,
4470 A sole my self I maie well call, 4540
That Love aside I had not laied,
And trowid that dame Reson saied,
Reson had bothè skill and right,
Whan she me blamed, with all her might,
To medle' of Love that hath me shent,
But certain now I woll repent.

AND should I repent? Naie parde,
4480 A false traitour than should I be, 4550
The devil's engins would me take,
If evir I love would forsake,
Or Bialacoil falsly betraie,
Should I at mischief hate him? naie,
Sith he now for his curtisie
Is in prison of Jalousie,
Curtisie certain did he me
So moche, it maie not yoldin be,
Whan he the haie passin me lete
To kisse the Rosè, faire and swete,
Should I therefore conne him maugre?
4490 Naie certainly, it shall nat be, 4560
For Love shall nevir save gode will,
Here of me, ne through worde or will,
Offence or complaint, more or lesse,
Neithir of Hope nor Idilnesse;
For certis it were wrong that I
Hatid hem for ther curtisie,
There is not els, but suffre' and thinke,
And wakin whan I shouldè winke,
Abide in hope, till love through chaunce,
Sende me soccour or allegaunce,
4500 Expectaunt aie till I maie mete 4570
To gettin mercie of that swete.

Whilom I thinke how Love to me
Sayid that he would take at gre
My service, if unpacience
Ycausid me to doen offence,
He saied, in thanke I shall it take,
And high maistir eke The ymake,
If wickidnesse ne reve it The,
But sone I trowe that shall nat be;
4510 These were his wordis by and by, 4580
It semed he lovid me truely.

Now is there not but serve him wele,
If that I thinke his thanke to sele,
My gode, mine harme, lithe whole in me
In Love maie no defaute ybe,
For true Love ne failed nevir man,
Sothly the faute mote nedis than,
As God forbide, be founde in me,
And how it cometh, I can not se.

4520 Now

Now let it gone as it maie go,
 Wher Love woll foccour me or flo,
 He maie do whole on me his will,
 I am so fore ybounde him till,
 From his service I maie not fene,
 For life and deth withoutin wene
 Is in his hande, I maie nat chese,
 He maie me doe bothe winne and lese;
 And sithe so fore he doeth me greve,
 Yet if my lust he would achieve,
 To Bialacoil godely to be,
 I yeve no force what fell on me,
 For though I die, as I mote nede,
 I praie Love of his godelihede
 To Bialacoil doe gentilnesse,
 For whom I live in soche distresse,
 That I mote dyin for penaunce.
 But first, withoutin repentance
 I will me confesse in gode entent,
 And make in haste my Testament,
 As lovirs doen that felin smerte,
 To Bialacoil leve I mine herte
 All whole, withoutin departing,
 Or doublenesse or repenting.

Coment Raïson vient a L'amaunt.

THUS as I madin my passage
 In compleint, and in cruill rage,
 And I n'ot where to finde a leche,
 That couthe unto mine helping eche,
 Sodainly again comin doun
 Out of her toure I sawe Refoun,
 Discrete and wise, and full plesant,
 And of her porte full avenant,
 The right waie she toke unto me,
 Whiche stode in grete perplexite,
 That was possid in every side,
 That I n'ist where I might abide,
 Till she demurely sadde of chere
 Sayid to me as she came nere.
 Mine ownè frende, art thou agreved,
 How is this quarell yet acheved
 Of lov'is side? Anon me tell
 Hast thou not yet of Love thy fill?
 Art thou nat werie' of thy service?
 That The hath grevid in soche wise?
 What joie haste thou in thy loving?
 Is it a swete or bittir thing?
 Canst thou yet chesin, let me se,
 What best thy succour mightin be?

Thou servist a full noble Lorde,
 That maketh The thrall for thy rewarde,
 Whiche aie renewith thy tourment,
 With folie so he hath The blent,
 Thou fell in mischief thilkè daie,
 Whan thou diddist, the sothe to saie,
 To him obeisaunce and homage,
 Thou wroughtist nothing as the sage
 Whan thou became his liegè man,
 Thou diddist a grete folie than,
 Thou wistist nat what fell therto,
 With what Lorde thou haddist to doe,
 If that thou haddist him well knowe,
 Thou haddist nought be brought so lowe,
 For if that thou wiste what it were
 Thou n'oldist serve him halfe a yere,
 No, nat a weke, nor halfe a daie,
 Ne yet an houre without delaie.
 Ne nevir I loyed paramours,
 His Lordship is so full of shours,
 Knowist him ought?
 L'amaunt. Ye, dame, parde.

Raïfoun. Naie naie. L'amaunt. Yes I. 4660
 Raïfoun. Wherefore let se.
 Lamaunt. Of that he sayid I should be Glad to have soche a Lorde as he,
 And maistrir of soche feignorie.
 Raïfoun. Knowest him no more?
 Lamaunt. Naie certis I,
 Save that he yafe me rulis there,
 And went his waie, I ne wist where,
 And I abode bounde in balaunce,
 Lo, there a noble cognisaunce!

Raïfoun.

BUT I woll that thou knowe him now
 Ginning and ende, sithin that thou 4670
 Art so anguishous and so mate,
 Disfigurid out of astate,
 There maie no wreche have more of wo,
 Ne catife non endurin so,
 It were to every man fitting
 Of his Lorde to have knowleging,
 For if thou knewe him our of dout
 Lightly thou shouldist scapin out
 Of thy prison that marrith The.

L'amaunt.

YE A dame, sithin my Lorde is he, 4680
 And I his man made with mine hande,
 I wouldè right faine undirstonde
 To knowin of what kinde he be,
 If any would enformè me.

Raïfoun.

I Would (sayid Refon) The lere,
 Sithe thou to lerne hast soche desire,
 And shewin The withoutin fable
 A thing that is not demonstrable,
 Thou shalt knowe withoutin science,
 And withoutin experience 4690
 The thing that maie not knowin be,
 Ne wist ne shewed in no degre,
 Thou maiest the sothe of it not witten,
 Although in The it were ywritten,
 Thou shalt not knowin thereof more
 While thou art rulid by his lore,
 But unto him that love will flie,
 The knottè maie unclofid be,
 Whiche hath to The, as it is founde,
 So longe to knitte and not unbounde;
 Now set well thine entencion,
 To here of Love the discipcion. 4700

LOvè it is an hateful pese,
 A fre' acquitaunce without relese,
 And through the fret full of falshede
 A sikirnesse all set in drede,
 In herte is a dispering hope,
 And full of hope it is wanhope,
 A wise Wodenesse, and voide Reson,
 A swetè perill in to droun, 4710
 An hevie burthin light to bere,
 A wickid wawe awaie to were,
 It is Charybdis perilous,
 Disagreable and gracious,
 It' is discordaunce that can acorde,
 And accordaunce unto discorde,
 It is conning without science,
 And wisdom without sapience,
 Witte withoutin discrecion,
 Havoire without possession, 4720
 It

It is like hele and whole sicknesse,
 A trust drounid and dronkinesse,
 And helth all full of maladie,
 And Charite full of envie,
 And angre full of aboundaunce,
 And a full gredie suffisaunce,
 Delite right full of hevinesse,
 And drerines full of gladnesse,
 Bittir swetenesse, and swete errour,
 Right evill favoured gode favour,
 A sin that pardone hath withinne,
 And pardone spottid without sinne,
 A paine also it is joious,
 And felonie right piteous,
 Also a plaie that selde is stable,
 And stedfastnes right mevable,
 A strength weikid to stonde upright,
 And a feblenesse full of might,
 Witte unavisid, sage folie,
 And joie full of tourmentrie,
 A laughtir it is weping aie,
 Rest that travailith night and daie,
 Also a swete hell it is,
 And a sorowfull Paradis,
 A plesaunt gaile and esie prisoun,
 And full of Frostis Somir sesoun,
 Prime temps full of Frostis white,
 And Maie devoide of all delite,
 With fere braunchis blossoms ungrene,
 And newe fruit filled with Wintir tene,
 It is a slowe maie not forbere,
 Ragges ribanid with gold to were,
 For all so well woll love be sette.
 Undir raggis as riche rotchete,
 And eke as well by amorettes
 In mourning blacke, as bright burnettes,
 For none is of so mokill prise,
 Ne no man foundin is so wise,
 Ne no man so high of parage,
 Ne no man founde of witte so sage,
 No man so hardie ne so wight,
 Ne no man of so mokill might,
 None so fulfillid of bounte,
 That he with Love maie dauntid be,
 All the worldè holdith this waie,
 Love makith all to gone miswaie,
 But it be thei of evill life,
 Whom Genius cursid, man and wife,
 That wrongly werke again nature,
 None soche I love, ne have no cure
 Of soche as lov'is servautes ben,
 And woll nat by my counsaile fleen,
 For I ne preisn that loving,
 Where through man at the last ending
 Shall call 'hem wretchis full of wo,
 Love grevith 'hem and shendith so;
 But if thou wolt well love eschewe
 For to escape out of his mewe,
 And make all whole the sorowe flake,
 No bettir counsaile maieest thou take
 Than thinke to flein well i-wis,
 Maie nought helpe els, for wit thou this,
 If thou fle it, it shall fle The,
 Folowe' it, and folowen shall it The.

L'amaunt.

WHan I had herid Refon fain,
 Whiche had yspilt her speche in vain,
 Dame (sayid I) I dare well saie,
 Of this avaunt me well I maie,
 That from your schole so deviaunt
 I am, that nere the more avaunt
 Right nought am I through your doctrine,

I dulle undir your discipline,
 I wot no more than I wiste ever,
 To' me so contrarie and so fer
 Is every thing that ye me lere,
 And yet I can it all by partivere,
 Mine herte foryeteth thereof right nought,
 It is so writtin in my thought,
 And depe gravin it is so tender,
 That all mine herte I can it render,
 And rede it ovir comunely,
 But to my self lewdist am I.

BUT sithe ye Love discrivin so,
 And lacke and preise it bothè two,
 Definith it into this letter,
 That I maie thinke on it the better,
 For I herd nevir defined here,
 And wilfully I would it lere.
 Raifoun. If love be serchid well and sought,
 It is a sicknesse of the thought,
 Annexid and knedde betwixt tweine,
 Which male and female with o cheine
 So frelie bindeth, that thei n'ill twinne,
 Whe'ir thereof thei lese or winne.
 The rote springith through hote brenning
 In to disordinate desiring
 For to kissin and to enbrace,
 And at ther lust them to solace,
 Of othir thing love retchith nought,
 But setteth ther herte and all ther thought
 More for ther delectacioun

Than any procreacioun
 Of other fruit by engendrure,
 Whiche love to God is nat plesure,
 For of ther bodie fruit to get
 Thei yeve no force, thei are so set
 Upon delite to plaie in fere;
 And some have also this manere
 To fainin 'hem for Love seke,
 Soche love I preise not at a leke,
 For paramours thei doe but faine,
 To lovin truely thei disdaine,
 Thei falsin ladies traitourfly,
 And swerne 'hem othis uttirly,
 With many' a lesing, many' a fable,
 And all thei findin disceivable.

And whan thei han ther lust ygetten,
 The hote ernes thei all foryetten,
 Women the harme byin full sore,
 But men this thinkin evirmore
 The lasse harme is, so mote I The,
 Disceive them, than disceivid be,
 And namily where thei ne maie
 Findin none othir mene ne waie,
 For I wote well in sothfastnesse,
 That who doeth now his businesse
 With any woman for to dele,
 For any lust that he maie fele,
 But if it be for engendrure,
 He doeth trespassse I you ensure,
 For he should settin all his will
 To gotten a likely thing him till,
 And to sustain, if that he might,
 And kepin forth by kind'is right
 His owne likenesse and semblable,
 For bicause all' is corruptable,
 And failin should successioun,
 Ne were there generacioun,
 Our sect'is strenè for to save,
 Whan fa're' or mothir arne in grave,
 Ther childrin shulde, whan then ben dede,
 Full diligent ben in ther stede
 To use that worke on soche a wife,
 That one maie through an othir rise.

Therefore

Therefore set kinde therein delite,
 For men therein should 'hem delite,
 And of that dede be not erke,
 But ofte fithis haunt that werke,
 For none would drawe thereof a draught,
 Ne were delite, whiche hath him caught,
 This had subtill dame Nature,
 For none goeth right I The ensure,
 Ne hath entent whole ne parfite,
 For ther desire is for delite,
 The whiche fortенid crese, and eke
 The plaie of Love, for oft thei seke
 And thrall 'hem self, thei be so nice,
 Unto the Prince of every vice,
 For of eche sinne it is the rote
 Unlesfull lust, though it be sote,
 And of all evill the racine,
 As Tullius can determine,
 Whiche in his timè was full sage,
 In a boke whiche he made of age,
 Where that more he ypraisith elde,
 Though he be crokid and unwelde,
 And more of commendacioun
 Than youth in his discripcioun,
 For youth set bothe man and wife
 In all perill of soule and life,
 And perill is, but men have grace,
 The perill of youth for to pace
 Without any deth or distresse,
 It is so full of wildenesse,
 So oft it doeth shame and damage
 To him or unto his linage,
 It ledith man, now up now down,
 In mokill dissolucioun,
 And maketh him love ill companie,
 And lede his life disfulilie,
 And halte him paied with none estate,
 Within himself is soche debate,
 He chaungith purpose and entent,
 And yalte into some covent,
 To livin astir ther emprise,
 And lesith fredome and fraunchise,
 That nature in him had yset,
 The whiche again he maie not get,
 If there he make his mansion,
 For to abide profession,
 Though for a time his herte absent
 It maie not faile, he shall repent,
 And eke abidin thilkè daie
 To leve' his abite, and gon his waie,
 And leseth his worship and his name,
 And dare not come again for shame,
 But all his life he doeth so mourne,
 Bicause he dare not home retourne,
 Fredome of kinde so lost hath he
 That nevir maie recurid be,
 But that if God him grauntin grace,
 That he maie, er he hennis pace,
 Contein undir obedience,
 Through the vertue of pacience;
 For youth set man in all folie,
 In unthrift and in ribaudrie,
 In lecherie, and in outrage,
 So oft it chaungith of corage;
 Youth ginnith oft soche a bargain
 That maie not ende withoutin pain;
 In grete perill is set youth-hede,
 Delite so doeth his bridill lede,
 Delite this hangith, drede The nought,
 Bothe mann'is bodie and his thought,
 Onily through youth'is chambere,
 That to doen ill is customere,
 And of naught ellis takith hede
 But onely folkis for to lede

Into disport and wildenesse,
 So froward is it from sadnesse,
 But elde ydrawith 'hem therfro;
 Who wote it not, he maie well go;
 And mo of 'hem, that now arne old,
 That whilom youth yhad in hold,
 Whiche yet remembre' of tendir age,
 How it 'hem brought in many' a rage,
 And many' a folie therin wrought,
 But now that elde hath 'hem through sought,
 Thei repent 'hem of ther folie,
 That youth 'hem put in jeopardie,
 In perill, and in mokill woe,
 And made 'hem oft amisse to doe,
 And sewin evill companie,
 And riot and advouterie.

BUT elde gan againe restraine
 From suchè folie, and refraine
 And set men by her ordinaunce
 In gode rule and in governaunce,
 But ill she spendith her servise,
 For no man wol her love, ne preise,
 She is hatid, this wote I wele,
 Her acquentaunce would no man fele,
 Ne han of elde companie,
 Men hate to be of her alie,
 For no man wold becomin olde,
 Ne die, whan he is yonge and bolde,
 And elde mervailith right gretely
 Whan thei remembre 'hem inwardly
 Of many' a perillous emprise,
 Whiche that thei wrought in sondry wise,
 How evir thei might without blame
 Escape awaie withoutin shame,
 In youth without any damage,
 Without represe of ther linage,
 Losse of membre, sheding of blode,
 Perill of deth, or losse of gode.
 Wotist thou nat where youth abit,
 That men so preisin in ther wit?
 With delite she yhalte sojour,
 For both thei dwellin in o tour,
 As long as youthe is in selson
 Thei dwellin in one mansion,
 Delite of youth woll have service,
 To do what so he woll devise,
 And youth is redy evirmore
 For to obey for smerte or fore
 Unto Delite, and him to yeve
 Her service, while that she maie live.

Where elde abitte, I wol The tell
 Shortily, and no while ydwelle,
 For thi'bir behoveth The to go,
 Yf deth in youthè The not slo,
 Of this journey thou maiste not faile;
 With her labour and eke travaille
 Lodgid ben with sorow and wo,
 That nevir out of her court go,
 Paine and distresse, sickenesse, and ire,
 And melan'coly that angry fire
 Ben of her paleis senatours,
 Groning and grutching her herbegeours,
 The day and night her to tourment
 With cruill deth thei her present,
 And tellin her erliche and late,
 That death stondeth armid at her gate,
 Than bring thei to her remembraunce
 The folie dedes of her enfaunce,
 Whiche causin her to mourne in wo,
 That youth hath her begilid so,
 Whiche sodainly awaie is hasted,
 She weped the time that she hath wasted,
 S f f
 Complaining

Complaining of the preteritte,
 And the present, that nat abitte,
 And of her oldè vanite,
 That but aforne her she maie se
 In the future some smale focoure
 To leggin her of her doloure,
 To graunt her time of repentaunce,
 For her sinnis to do penaunce,
 And at the last so her governe,
 To winne the joye that is eterne,
 Fro whiche go backwarde youth her made,
 In vanite to drowne and wade;
 For present time abidith nought,
 It is more swifte than any thought,
 So litill while it doth endure,
 That there ne is compte ne mesure.

But how that evir the game go,
 Who list love joye and mirth also
 Of love, be it or he or she,
 Or hie, or lowe, who so it be,
 In frute thei shouldin 'hem delite,
 Ther parte thei maie not ellis quite,
 To save 'hem self in honeste.
 And yet full many one I se
 Of women, forthly for to faine,
 That desirin, and wouldin faine
 The plaie of Love, thei be so wilde,
 And not coveite to go with childe;
 And if with childe thei be perchaunce,
 Thei wol it holde a grete mischaunce;
 But whar so evir wo thei fele,
 Thei wol not plainin, but concele,
 But it be any fole or nice,
 In whome that shame hath no justice;
 For to Delite echone thei drawe
 That haunt this worke, both hie and lawe,
 Save fuche that arnè worth right nought,
 That for money wol be ybought
 Suche love I preisin in no wise,
 Whan it is given for covetise
 I preise no woman, though she 'is wode
 That yeveth her selfe for any gode,
 For kithill should a man ytelle
 Of her, that wil her body selle,
 Be she a maide, or be she wife,
 That quicke wol selle her by her life,
 How faire chere that evir she make,
 He is a wretche I undirtake
 That love fuche one, for swete or soure,
 Though she him called her paramoure,
 And laugheth on him, and maketh him fest,
 For certainly no fuchè best
 To be lovid is nat worthy,
 Or berin the name of Drury;
 None should her plese, but he wer wode,
 That wol dispoile him of his gode.
 Yet nathèlesse I wol not saie
 That she for solace and for plaie
 Maie a Jewil or othir thing
 Take of her lov'is fre yeving,
 But that she aske it in no wise
 For drede of shame, or covetise,
 And she of hers maie him certaine
 Without sclaundir yevin againe,
 And joyne ther hertes togidir so
 In love, and take and yeve also;
 Trowe nat that I wollin 'hem twime,
 Whan in ther love there is no sinne,
 I wol that thei togidir go,
 And done al that thei han ado,
 As curtis should and debonaire,
 And in ther love berin 'hem faire
 Withoutin vice, both he and she,
 So that alwaie in honeste

Fro folly love to kepe 'hem clere,
 That brennith hertis with his fere,
 And that ther love in any wise
 Be devoide of all covetise.
 Gode lovè should engendrid be
 Of trewe hert, juste, and secrete,
 And not of fuche as set ther thought
 To have ther lust, and ellis nought,
 So are thei caught in lov'is lace,
 Trewly for bodily solace,
 Flefhely delite is so present
 With The, that set al thine entent
 Withoutin more, what should I glose?
 For to gettin and have the Rose,
 Whiche makith The so mare and wode,
 That thou desirest none other gode,
 But thou art not an inche the netre,
 But evre' abidest in forrue' and werre,
 As in thy face it is ysene,
 It makith The bothe pale and lene,
 Thy might, thy vertue gothe awaie,
 A sory gest in gode faie
 Thou herborist than in thine inne,
 The God of Love whan thou let inne,
 Wherefore I rede thou shette him oute,
 Or he shal greve The out of doute,
 For to thy profite it wol turne,
 If he no more with The sojournen,
 In grete mischefe and sorow sonken
 Ben hertis, that of Love arne dronken,
 As thou peraventure knowen shall,
 Whan thou hast lost thy timè all,
 And spent thy thought in idilnesse,
 In waste, and woful lustinesse,
 Yf thou maist live the time to se
 Of love for to delivered be,
 Thy time thou shalt bewepè fore,
 The whiche nevir thou maist restore,
 For time ylost, as men may se,
 For nothing may recovered be,
 And if thou scape yet at the laste
 Fro lovè that hath The so faste
 Yknitte and boundin in his lace,
 Certaine I holde it but a grace,
 For many one, as it is seine,
 Have losse, and spent also in veine
 In his service without focour,
 Body and soule, gode, and tresour,
 And witte, and strength, and eke richesse,
 Of whiche thei had nevir redressè.

L'amant.

Thus taught and prechid hath Reson,
 But Love yspilte hath her sermon,
 That was so impid in my thought,
 That her doctrine I set at nought,
 And yet ne saide she nevre' a dele,
 That I ne understode it wele
 Wordè by worde the matir all,
 But unto Love I was so thrall,
 Whiche callith ovir all his praie,
 He chasith so my thoughtis aie,
 And holdeth mine herte undir his sele
 As trusty' and trewe as any stele,
 So that I no devocion
 Ne haddè in the wise sermon
 Of dame Reson, ne of her rede
 I toke no sojour in mine hede,
 For allè yede out at one ere
 That in that othir she did lere,
 Fully on me she lost her lore,
 Her speche me grevid wondir fore.

That

THat unto her for ire I saide,
 For angir, as I did abraide,
 Dame, and is it your will algate
 That I not Love, but that I hate
 All men, as ye me now do teche?
 For if I do aftir your speche,
 Sith that you seine Love is not gode,
 Than must I nedis say with mode,
 Yf I it leve, in hatrid aie
 Livin, and voidin Love awaie
 Ferrè from me a sinful wretche,
 Yhatid of allè that tette,
 I may not go none othir gate,
 For eithir must I love or hate,
 And if I hatin men of newe,
 More than Love it wol me rewe,
 As by your preching semith me,
 For Love nothing ne praisith The,
 Ye yeye gode counsaile sikirly,
 That prechith me al day, that I
 Ne should not lov'is lore alowe,
 He were a sole woulde you not trowe,
 In speche also ye han me taught
 Anothir love, that knowen is naught,
 Whiche I have herde you not repreve;
 To love eche othir, by your leve,
 If ye would definin it me,
 I wouldin gladly here to se
 At the left if I mowin lere
 Of sondry lovis the manere.

Raïson.

Certis frende, a grete sole art thou,
 Whan that thou nothing wolt alow
 Whiche that I for thy profite saie,
 Yet wol I saie The more in faie,
 For I am redy at the left
 To accomplishin thy request,
 But I n'ot where it wol aveile,
 In vaine perav'enture I travaille;
 Love there is in sondrie wise,
 Right as I shall The here devise.
 For some love lesul is and gode,
 I mene not that whiche maketh The wode,
 And bringith The in many' a fitte,
 And ravisheth fro The al thy witte,
 It is so marveilous and queint,
 With suche love be no more aqueint.

Comment Raïson diffinist Aunfete.

Love of frendshippe also there is,
 Whiche makith no man don amis,
 Of wille yknitte betwixtin two,
 That wol not breke for wele ne wo,
 Whiche long is likely to contune,
 Whan wil and godes ben in commune,
 Groundid by Godd'is ordinaunce,
 All whole withoutin discordaunce,
 With them yholding commauncè,
 Of al ther gode in charite,
 That there be none exceptioun
 Through chaunging of ententioun,
 That eche helpe othir at ther nede,
 And wisely hele both worde and dede,
 Trewe of mening, devoide of flouthe,
 For wit is nought withoutin trouthe,
 So that the t'one dare all his thought
 Saine to his frende, and sparin nought,
 As to him selfe, without dreding
 To be discovered by wreying,
 For glad is that conjunctioun

Whan there is none suspectioun
 Betwixtin 'hem, whome thei wold prove,
 That trewe and perfite weren in Love;
 For no man may be amiable,
 But if he be so ferme and stable,
 That fortune chaunge him not ne blinde,
 But that his frende alway him finde
 Bothe pore and riche in one estate;
 For if his frende through any gate
 Wol complaine of his poverte,
 He should not bide so long, til he
 Of his helping doth him require,
 For gode dede done thorough prayire
 Is solde and bought to dere i-wis
 To hert that of grete valure is,
 For hert fulfilled of gentilnesse
 Can evill demene his distresse.

And man that worthy is of name
 To askin oftin hath grete shame.

A gode man brennith in his thought
 For shame whan that he askith ought,
 He hath grete thought, and dredith aie;
 For his disese whan he shal praie
 His frende, lest that he warnid be,
 Till he preve his stabilite,
 But whan that he hath foundin one,
 That trusty is and trewe as stone,
 And hath assayid him at all,
 And founde him stedfast as a wall,
 And of his frendshippe be certaine,
 He shal him shewe bothe joie and paine,
 And all that he dare thinke or saie,
 Withoutin shame, as he well maie,
 For how should he ashamid be
 Of suche an one as I tolde The?
 For whan he wot his secret thought,
 The third shall know therof right nought,
 For twey in nombre 'is bet than thre
 In every counsaile and secre,
 Repreve he dredith nevre' a dele,
 Who that beset his wordis wele,
 For every wise man out of drede
 Can kepe his tong till he se nede.

And folis can not holde ther tonge;
 A fol'is belle is sone yronge,
 Yet shall a trewe frende doin more,
 To helpe his felowe of his fore,
 And socour him whan he hath nede,
 In all that he may done in dede,
 And gladdir that he him plesith
 Than his felowe that he esith,
 And if he do nat his request,
 He shal as mochil him molest
 As his felowe, bicause that he
 Maie not fulfill his volunte
 All fully, as he hath required,
 If both the hertis love hath fired,
 Bothe joye and wo thei shall departe,
 And take evinly eche his parte,
 Halfe his anoye he shal have aie,
 And comforte him what that he maie,
 And of his blisse parte shal he,
 If Love wollin departid be.

AND whilom of this unite
 Spake Tullius in a dite,
 A man should makin his request
 Unto his frende, that is honest,
 And he godely should it fulfill,
 But it the more were out of skill,
 And othirwise not graunt therto,
 Except only in causis two.

If men his frende to dethe would drive,
 Let him be besy to' save his live.

Also

Alfo if men wollen him affaile
Of his worship to make him faile,
And hindrin him of his renoun,
Let him with ful entencioun
His devir done in eche degre,
That his frende ne shamid be.

In thefe two casis with his might,
Taking no kepe to skill nor right,
As ferre as Love may him excufe,
This ought no man for to refufe.

This Love, that I have tolde to The,
Is nothing contrarie to me,
This wol I that thou folowe wele,
And leve the t'othir every dele,
This Love to vertue al entendeth,
The t'othir folis blent and shendeth.

An othir Love alfo there is,
That is contrary unto this,
Which defire is fo constrainid,
That it ne is but will fainid,
Away fro trouth it doth fo varie,
That to gode Love it is contrarie,
For it maymith, in many wife,
Sike hertis with covetife,
All in winning and in profite
Suche love yfettith his delite;
This love fo hangith in balaunce,
That if it lese his hope parchaunce
Of lucre, that he' is fet upon,
It wol failin, and quenche anon,
For no man maie be amorous,
Ne in his living vertuouus,
But if he lovin more in mode,
Men for 'hem felfe, than for ther gode,
For love that profite doth abide
Is false, and bidith not no tide,
Soche Love comith of dame Fortune,
That litil while woll contune,
For it fhall chaungin wondir sone,
And take Eclips as doth the Mone,
Whan that she is from us ylet
Through erth, that betwixtin is fet
The Sonne and her, as it may fall,
Be it in partie, or in all,
The shadowe makith her bemes merke,
And her hornis to shewin derke
That part, where she hath lost her light
Of Phebus fully, and the fight,
Till whan the shadowe' is ovirpafte
She' is enlumined agein as fafte
Through the brightnes of the Sonne bemes,
That yevith to' her againe her lemes;
That Love is right of fuche nature,
Now is it faire, and now obscure,
Now bright, now Clipfy of manere,
And whilom dimme, and whilom clere,
As sone as poverte ginnith take,
With mantil and with wedis blake
Hidith of Love the light away,
That into night it tournith day,
It may not fein richeffe shine,
Till that the blacke shadowis fine,
For whan that richeffe shinith bright
Love recovereth ayen his light,
And whan it failith, he wol flit,
And as she greveth, fo grevith it.

Of this Love herith what I faie,
The riche men are ylovid aie,
And namely tho that sparande bene,
That wol not washe ther hertis clene
Of the filthe, nor of the vice
Of gredy brenning Avarice.

The riche man ful fonde is i-wis

That wenith that he lovid is,
If that his hert it understode,
It is not he, it is his gode,
He may wel wetin in his thought
His gode is loved, and he right nought,

5300 For if he be a nigarde eke,
Men wol not fet by him a leke,
But hatin him, this is the sothe,
Lo what profite his catil dothe!
Of every man that may him fe
It getteth him nought but enmite,
But he amende him of that vice,
And know himfelfe, he is not wife.

5310 Certis he should aie frendly be,
To get him love, also ben fre,
Or els he is not wife ne sage,
No more than is a gote ramage,
That he not lovith his dede proveth,
Whan he his richeffe so well loveth,
That he wol hide it aie and spare,
His pore frendis sene forfare,
To kepin aie his ill purpose,

5320 Till that for drede his eyin close,
And til a wickid deth him take,
Him had levir a sondre shake,
And let al' his limmes a sondre rive,
Than leve his richeffe in his live,
He thinketh to part it with no man,
Certain no love is in him than,
For how should love within him be
Whan in his hert is no pite?
That he trespasith well I wate,
For eche man knowith his eftate,
For wel him ought to be reproved,
That lovith nought, ne is not loved.

5330 But fith we arne to fortune comen,
And hath our fermon of her nomen,
A wondir will I tell The now,
Thou herdift nere fuche one I trow,
I n'ot where thou me levin fhall,
Although sothfastnesse it be all,
As it is writtin, and is sothe,
That unto men more profite dothe
The frowarde fortune and contraire,
Than doth the fote and debonaire,
And if The thinke it is doutable,
5340 It is through argument provable,
For fortune debonaire and softe
Yfalsith and begilith ofte,
For liche a mothir she can cherifhe,
And milkin as dothe a norice,
And of her gode to him ydeles,
And yeveth 'hem parte of her joweles,

5350 With grete richis and dignite,
And 'hem she hoteth stabilite
In a state that is nothing stable,
But chaunging aie and variable,
And fedith 'hem with glory veine,
And worldely blisse nothing certeine,
Whan she 'hem fettith on her whele,
Than wenin thei to be right wele,
And in fo stable state withall,
That nevir thei wene for to fall,
And whan thei sette so high to be,
Thei wene to have in certainte
Of hertly frendis to grete nombre,
5360 That nothing might ther state encombre,
Thei trust 'hem so on every side,
Wening with 'hem thei would abide
In every perill and mischaunce,
Withoutin chaunce or variaunce,
Bothe of catil and of gode,
And also for to spende ther blode,

And

And al ther membris for to spill,
 Only to fulfill ther will,
 Thei maken it whole in many wise,
 And hotin 'hem ther ful service,
 How fore so that it do 'hem smerte
 Into ther very nakid sherte,
 Herte and hande also whole thei give,
 For all the time that thei may live,
 So that with this ther flatiry,
 Thei makin folis glorifie
 Onely of ther wordis speking,
 And han chere of a rejoying,
 And trow 'hem as the Evangile,
 And it is al falshe and gile,
 As thei shal afterwardis se,
 Whan thei arne fal in poverté,
 And ben of gode and catil bare,
 Than should thei sene who frendis ware;
 For of an hundrid certainly,
 Nor of a thousande ful scarfly,
 Ne shall thei finde unethis one,
 Whan poverté is comen upon.

For thus Fortune that I of tell,
 With men whan that her lust to dwell,
 Maketh 'hem to lese ther conisaunce,
 And noriseth 'hem in ignoraunce.

But frowarde Fortune and perverse,
 Whan high estates she doth reverse,
 And makith 'hem to tumble doune
 Of her whele with a sodaine tourne,
 And from ther richesse dothe 'hem fle,
 And plongith 'hem in poverté;
 As a stepmothir envious,
 And laieth a plaistir dolorous
 Unto ther hertis woundid egre,
 Whiche is not tempered with vinegre,
 But with poverté and indigence,
 For to shewe by experience
 That she is Fortune veritie,
 In whom no man ne should affie,
 Nor in her yeftis have fiaunce,
 She is so ful of variaunce.

Thus can she makin hie and lowe,
 Whan thei from richesse arne throwe,
 Fully to knowin without were
 Frende of affecte, and frende of chere,
 And whiche in love weren trew and stable,
 And whiche also weren variable,
 Aftir Fortune ther goddesse,
 In poverté, eithir in richesse,
 For all that yeveth here out of drede
 Unhappe yberith it in dede,
 For Infortune lette not one
 Of frendis, whan fortune is gone,
 I mene tho frendis that woll fle
 Anone, as entrich poverté;
 And yet thei wol not leve 'hem so,
 But in eche place where that thei go,
 Thei callin 'hem wretche, scorne, and blame,
 And of ther mishappe 'hem diffame,
 And namely suche as in richesse
 Pretendith moste of stablenesse,
 Whan that they sawe 'hem set on losse,
 And werin of 'hem sucoured ofte,
 And moste iholpe in all ther nede,
 But now thei take no manir hede,
 But seine in voice of flatirie
 That now apperith ther folie,
 Ovir al wher so that thei fare,
 And singe, go farewell Feldefare.

Allé suche frendis I beshrewe,
 For of trewe frendes there be to fewe,
 But sothfast frendes, what so betide,

In every fortune wollen abide,
 Thei han ther hertes in suche noblesse,
 That thei n'il love for no richesse,
 Nor for that fortune may 'hem sende,
 Thei wollen 'hem socour and defende,
 And chaungin for softe ne for fore,
 For who his frende loveth evirmore,
 Though men drawe swerdis him to flo,
 Thei may not hewe ther love a two,
 But if in case that I shall fay
 For pride and ire lese it he may,
 And for reprove by nitere,
 And discovering of privite
 With tonge wounding, as felon,
 Through venemous detraccioun.

Frende in this case wol gon his way,
 For nothing greve him more ne may,
 And for nought ellis wol he fle,
 If he love in stablite,
 And certaine he is well begone
 Among a thousande that findeth one,
 For there ne may be no richesse
 Ayenst frendship of worthinesse,
 For it ne may so high attaine
 As may the valoure, sothe to faine,
 Of him that lovith trewe and well,
 Frendship is more than is catell,
 For frende in courte aie bettir is
 Than peny is in purse certis,
 And than is fortune mishaping,
 Whan upon men she is fabling,
 Thorough misturning of her chaunce,
 And castith 'hem out of balaunce.

She maketh through her adversite
 Men ful and clerly for to se
 Him that is frende in existence
 From him that is by apparence,
 For infortune makith anone
 To know thy frendis fro thy sone,
 By experience right as it is,
 The whiche is more to praise i-wis,
 Than in muche richesse and trefour,
 For more depe profite and valour
 Poverté, and suche adversite
 Before, than doeth prosperite,
 For that one yevith conisaunce,
 And t'othir grevith ignoraunce.

And thus in poverté is in dede
 Trouthe declarid fro falshe,
 For faint frendis it wol declare,
 And trewe also, what way they fare,
 For whan he was in his richesse,
 These frendis ful of doublenesse
 Offrid him in many wise
 Ther herte and body, and service,
 What would he then have you to have bought
 To knowin opinly ther thought,
 That he now hath so clerly sene?
 The lasse begiled he should have bene,
 And he had than percevid it,
 But Richesse n'olde not let him wit;
 Wel more avauntage doeth him than,
 Sithe that it maketh him a wise man,
 The great mischefe, that he perceveth,
 Than doeth Richesse, that him deceveth;
 Richesse riche ne ymakith nought
 Him, that on trefour sette his thought,
 For richesse stonte in suffisaunce,
 And nothing stonte in haboundaunce,
 For suffisaunce all onily.
 Makith menne to live richily.

FOR he that hath but mitchis tweine,
 Ne value in his whole demcine,
 T t t

Liveth

Liveth more at ese, and more is riche,
 Than doith he whiche that is chiche,
 And in his barne hath, soth to faine,
 An hundrid mavis of whete graine,
 Though he be chapman or marchaunt,
 And have of Golde many befaunt,
 For in the getting he' hath suche wo,
 And in the keping drede also,
 And sette ere more his besinesse
 For to encrese, and nat to lesse,
 For to augment and multiply,
 And though on hepes that lie him by,
 Yet nevir shall make his richesse
 Asseth unto his gredinesse,
 But the pore man that retchith nought,
 Save of his livelode, in his thought,
 Whiche that he getteth with his travaile,
 He dredith nought that it shall faile,
 Though he have little world's gode,
 Metè and drinke, and esie fode,
 Upon his travaile and living,
 And also suffisaunt clothing,
 Or if in sickenesse that he fall,
 And lothè mete and drinke withall,
 Though he have not his mete to buie,
 He shall bethinke him hastily
 To put him out of all daungere,
 That he of mete hath no mistere,
 Or that he maie with little eke
 Be foundin, while that he is seke,
 Or that men shall him berne in haste,
 To live till his sickenesse be paste,
 Unto some Maisondewe beside,
 He caste nought what shall him betide,
 He thinkith nought that evre' he shall
 Into any sickenesse yfall.

AND though it fall, as it maie be,
 That all betime sparin shall he
 As mokill as shall to' him suffice,
 While he is sicke in any wise,
 He doith for that he woll be,
 Contentid with his poverté,
 Withoutin nede of any man,
 So moche in little have he can,
 He is apaide with his fortune,
 And for he n'll be importune
 Unto no wight, ne onerous,
 Nor of ther godeffe covetous,
 Therefore he spareth, it maie well ben,
 His pore estate for to sustene.

OR if him luste not for to spare,
 But suffrith forthe, as nat yet ware,
 At laste it happeneth, as it maie,
 All right unto his laste daie,
 And take the worlde as it would be,
 For evir in herte thinkith he,
 The sonir that deth him yflo
 To Paradise the sonir go
 He shall, there for to live in blisse,
 Where that he shall no godis misse,
 Thi'sir he hopeth God shall him sende,
 Afir this wretchid liv'is ende.
 Pythagoras himself reherces
 In a boke that the goldin verses
 Is cleped, for the nobilite
 Of the honorable dite,
 Than whan thou goest thy body fro,
 Fre in the ayre thou shalt up go,
 And levin all humanite,
 And purely live in diete.
 He is a sole withoutin were
 That trowith have his countrey here,

In yerth is not our countere,
 That maie these clerkis seine and se 5660
 In Boece of consolacion,
 Where it is makid mencion
 Of our contre plaine at the eye
 By teching of Philosophie,
 Where leude men mightin lerin wit,
 Who so that would translatin it;
 If he be suche that can well live
 Afir his rentè maie him yeve,
 And not desirith more to have,
 Than maie fro poverté him save, 5670
 A wiseman saied, as we maie sene,
 Is no man wretched, but he it wene,
 Be he a king, knight, or ribaude;
 Many' a ribaude is merie' and baude,
 That swinketh, and berith daie and night.
 Many a burthin of grete might,
 The whiche doith him lasse offence,
 For that he suffrith in pacience;
 Thei laugh and daunce, thei trippe and sing, 5680
 And laie nought up for ther living,
 But in the Taverne' all dispendeth,
 The winning whiche that God 'hem sendeth,
 Than goeth he fardils for to bere
 With as gode chere as he did ere,
 To swinke and travaile' he not fainith,
 For to robbin he disdainith,
 But right anon, after his swinke,
 He goeth to Taverne for to drinke;
 All these are riche in haboundaunce,
 That can thus havin suffisaunce, 5690
 Well more than can an usere,
 As God well knowith, without were,
 For 'an usurer, so God me se,
 Shall nevir for richesse riche be,
 But er more pore and indigent,
 Scarce and gredy in his entent.

For sothe it is, whom it displese,
 There maie no marchaunt live at ese,
 His herte in soche a where is set,
 That it quicke brennith for to get, 5700
 Ne nevir shall, though he hath gotten,
 5630 Though he have golde in garnirs yeten,
 For to be nedy he dredeth fore,
 Wherefore to gettin more and more
 He set his herte and his desire,
 So hote he brennith in the fire
 Of covetise, that maketh him wode
 To purchase othir mennis gode;
 He undirfongith a grete pain,
 That undertaketh to drinke up Sain, 5710
 For the more that he drinkith aie,
 The more he levith, sothe to saie:
 5640 Thus is the thrust of false getting,
 That laste evir in coviting,
 And the anguishe and the distresse,
 With the fire of gredinesse,
 She fightith with him aie, and striveth,
 So that his herte a sondir riveth,
 Soche gredinesse him assailith,
 That whan' he moste hath, moste he failith. 5720
 Phisiciens, and Advocates
 Goin right by the same yates,
 5650 Thei sell ther science for winning,
 And haunte ther crafte for grete getting,
 Ther winning is of soche swetenesse,
 That if a man fall in sickenesse,
 Thei are full glad, for ther encrece,
 For by ther will, withoutin lese,
 Ev'iche man shouldin be seke,
 Though thei die, thei set not a Leke, 5730
 Affis

Aftir whan thei the golde have take,
Full little care for 'hem thei make,
Thei would fowertie were sicke at ones,
Ye two hundrid, in fleshe and bones,
And yet two thousande, as I gesse,
For to encrefin ther richesse.

Thei woll not worchin in no wise,
But for lucre and covetise,
For Phisicke ginnith first by (Phi)
The Phisicien also sothly,
And sithen it goeth fro sie to sie,
To trust on 'hem it is folie,
For thei n'ill in no manir gre
Doin right nought for charite.
Eke in the same secte are set,
All tho, that prechin for to get Worships, and honour, and richesse,
Ther hertis arne in grete distresse
That folke livin not holily,
But abovin all specially,
Soche as yprechin veinglorie,
And towarde God have no mem'orie;
But forthe as Ipocritis trace,
And to ther soulis deth purchase,
And outward shewing holinesse,
Though thei be full of curfidnesse;
Nat liche to the Apostlis twelve,
Thei deceve othir and 'hem selve,
Begilid is the gilir than,
For preching of a curfid man
Though it to othir maie profite,
Himself it availeth not a mite;
For oft gode predicacioun
Cometh of evill entencioun,
To him nat availith his preching,
All helpe he othir with his teching,
For where thei gode example take,
There is he with veinglorie shake.

But let us levin these prechours,
And speke of 'hem that in ther tours
Hepe up ther golde, and fast yshet;
And fore thereon ther hertis set,
Thei neithir lovin God ne drede,
Thei kepin more than it is nede,
And in ther baggis fore it binde,
Out of the Sunne, and of the winde,
Thei puttin up more than nede ware;
Whan thei sene povir folk forfare,
For hungre die, and for cold quake,
God can well vengeance thereof take,
The grete mischivis 'hem assaileth,
And thus in ga'dring aie travailleth,
With mochil pain thei winne richesse,
And drede 'hem holdith in distresse
To kepin that thei gathir fast,
With sorowe thei leve it at last,
With sorowe thei bothe die and live,
That unto richesse ther hertes yeve,
And in defeaute of love it is,
As it shewith full well iwis,
For if these gredy, sothe to faine;
Lovidin, and were loved againe,
And gode love reignid ovir all,
Soche wickidnesse ne should yfall,
But he should yeve, that moeste gode had,
To 'hem that weren in nede bestad,
And live withoutin false usure,
For charite, full clene and pure,
If thei 'hem yeve unto godenesse,
Defending 'hem from idilnesse,
In all this worlde than povir none
We shouldin finde I trowe not one;
But chaungid is this worlde unstable,
For love is ovir all vendable,

We se that no man lovith now;
But for his winning and for prowce,
And love is thrallid in servage,
Whan it is solde for avauntage,
Yet women woll ther bodies sell,
Soche soules goeth to the devill of hell. 5810

Whan Love had tolde 'hem his entent,
The baronage to counsaile went,
In many sentencis thei fill,
And diversly thei saied ther will,
But aftir discorde thei accorded,
And ther accorde to Love recorded;
Sir, saidin thei, we ben at one,
By even accorde of everichone,
Out take richesse all onily,
That swornè hath full hauteinly 5820
That she the castill n'ill assaile,
Ne smite a stroke in this bataile,
With darte ne mace, ne spere, ne knife,
For man that speket, or berith life,
And blamith your emprise iwis;
And from our hoste departid is,
At leste waie, as in this plite;
So hath she this man in dispite;
For she saieth he ne loved her never,
And therefore she woll hate him ever, 5830
For he woll gathir no trefore,
He hath her wrathe for evirmore,
He' agilte her nere in othir case;
Lo here all wholly his trespase!
She saieth well, that this othir daie
He asked her leve to gone the waie
That is clepid to moche yeving;
And spake full faire in his praying,
But whan he praied her, poore was he,
Therefore she warned him the entre, 5840
Ne yet is he not thrivin so
That he hath gotten a penie or two,
That quietly' is his owne in holde;
Thus hath Richesse us all ytolde,
And whan Richesse us this recorded;
Withoutin her we ben acorded.

And we finde in our accordaunce
That false Semblant and Abstinaunce;
With all the folke of ther bataile,
Shall at the hindir gate assaile; 5850
That wickid tong hath in keping;
With his Normans full of jangling;
And with 'hem Curtesie and Largesse,
That shullin shewe ther hardinesse
To the old wife that kept so hard
Faire welcoming within her ward;
Than shall Delite and Well-heling
Yfondin Shame adoun to bring
With all her hoste erly and late;
Thei shull assailin that ilke gatè; 5860
Ayenist Drede shall Hardinesse
Assaile, and also Sikirnesse,
With all the folke of ther leding,
That nevir wiste what was slaying;

5770
5780
5790
5800
F Raunchise shall fight and eke Pite
With Daungir full of cruilte.
This is your hoste ordainid wele;
Dounne shall the Castill every dele
If everiche doe his entent,
So that Venus ybe present, 5870
Your mothir full of vesselage;
That can inough of soche usage,
Withoutin her maie no wight spede
This werke, neithir for worde ne dede,

Therefore

Therefore is gode ye for her sende,
For through her maie this worke amende.

L Ordinges, my mothir the Goddes,
That is my Ladie, and maistres,
Ne is nat all at my willing,
Ne doeth nat all my desiring.
Yet can she sometime doen labour,
Whan that her luste in my socour
As my nede is for to atcheve,
But now I thinke her nat to greve;
My mothir is she, and of childhede
I both worship her, and eke drede,
For who that dredith sire ne dame
Shall it abie in bodie or name;
And nathelasse, yet conne we
Sende aftir her if nede ybe,
And were she nigh, she commin wold,
I trowe that nothing might her hold.

My mothir is of grete prowesse,
She hath tane many a fortresse,
That cost hath many a pound er this,
There I n'as not present iwis,
And yet men saied it was my dede,
But I come nevir in that stede,
Ne me ne liketh, so mote I The,
That soche tours ben ytake with me,
For why? Me thinketh that in no wise
It maie be cleped but marchaundise.

Go buie a courfir blacke or white,
And paie therefore, than art thou quite,
The Marchaunt owith The right nought,
Ne thou him whan thou hast it bought.
I woll not selling clepe yeving,
For selling asketh no guerdoning,
Here lithe no thanke, ne no merite,
That one goth from that othre all quite,
But this selling is not semblable;

For whan his horse is in the stable,
He maie it sell again, parde,
And winnen on it, soche happe maie be,
All maie the manne nat lese iwis,
For at the lest the skinne is his;

Or ellis, if it so betide
That he woll kepe his horse to ride,
Yet is he Lorde aie of his horse;
But thilke chafare is well worse,
There Venus entremetith ought,
For who so soche chaffare hath bought,
He shall not worchin so wisely,
That he ne shall lese uttirly
Bothe his money, and his chaffare;
But the sellir of thilke ware
The prife and profite havin shall,
Certaine the buier shall lese all,
For he ne can so dere it buie,
To have Lordship, and full maistrie,
Ne havin power to make letting,
Neither for yeste ne for preching,
That of his chaffare maugre his
An other shall have as moche iwis,
If he woll yeve as moche as he,
Of what cuntry so that he be,
Or for right nought, so happe ymaie,
If he can flattir her to her paie.

And ben than soche marchauntis wife?
No, but folis in every wise,
Whan thei buie soche thing wilfully,
There thei lese ther gode folily;
But nathelasse, this dare I saie,
My mothir is not wont to paie,
For she is neither so sole ne nice

To entremete her of soche vice,
But trustith well, he shall paie all,
That repente of his bargaine shall,
Whan poverté put him in distresse,
All were he scholir to Richesse,
That is for me in grete yerning
Whan she assenteth to my willing. 5950

BUT by my mothir saint Venus,
And by her fathir Saturnus,
That her engendrid by his life,
But nat upon his weddid wife,
Yet woll I more unto you swere,
To makin this thing the surere.
Now by that faithe, and that beaute,
That I owe to all my brethrin fre, 5960
Of whiche there n'is wight undir heven,
That can ther fa'ir's namis neven,
So divers and many there be
That with my mothre have be prive,
Yet woll I swere for sikirnesse
The Pole of helle to my witnesse,
Now drinke I not this yere clarre,
If that I lie, or forsworne be,
For of the Goddes the usage is,
That who so him forswereth amis, 5970
Shall that yere drinkin no clarre.

Now have I sworne inough parde,
If I forwere, than am I lorne;
But I woll nevir be forsworne,
Sithe Richesse hath me failid here,
She shall abie that trespass dere
At lest waie but I her harme
With swerde, or sparth, or with gisarme.

For certis sihe she loveth not me,
Fro thilke time that she maie se 5980
The castill and the toure to shake,
In forie time she shall awake,
If I maie gripe a riche man,
I shall so pulle him, if I can,
That he shall in a few stoundis
Lese all his markes, and his poundis.

I shall him make his pens out fling,
But that thei in his garnir spring,
Our maidins shall eke plucke him so,
That him shall nedin fethirs mo, 5990
And make him sell his londe to spende,
But he the bet conne him defende.

POre men han made ther Lorde of me,
Although thei nat so mightie be,
That thei maie fede me in delire,
I woll not have hem in dispite;
No gode man hateth hem, as I gesse,
For chinche and feloun is Richesse,
That so can chafe hem, and dispise,
And hem defoule in sondrie wise; 6000
Thei loven full bette, so God me spede,
Than doith the riche chinchy grede,
And ben (in gode faith) more stable,
And truir, and more serviable;
And therefore it suffisith me
Ther gode hertis, and ther beaute,
Thei han on me set all ther thought,
And therefore I foryete hem nought.
I woll hem bring in grete noblesse,
If that I were God of Richesse, 6010
As I am God of Love sothely,
Soche ruthe upon ther plaint have I,
Therefore I must his succour be,
That painith him to servin me,
For if he deied for love of this,
Than semeth in me no love there is.

Sir,

Sir, saied thei, sothe is every dele
That ye reherce, and we wote wele
Thilke othe to holde is resonable,
For it is gode and covenable,
That ye on riche men han ysworne;
For sir, this wote we well before,
If riche men doin you homage,
That is as folis doen outrage;
But ye shull not forsworne ybe,
Ne let therefore to drinke clarrie,
Or piment makid fr~~om~~ and newe,
Ladies shull hem soche pepir brewen,
If that thei fall into ther laas,
That thei for wo mowe saine alas!
Ladies shullen ere so curteis be
That thei shall quite your othe all fre;
Ne seketh nevir othir vicaire,
For thei shall speke with hem so faire
That ye shall holde you paied full wele,
Though ye you medle nere a dele;
Let Ladies worchin with ther thinges,
Thei shall hem tell so fele tidinges,
And move so many requestis,
By flatterie, that not honest is,
And thereto yeve hem soche thankinges,
What with kissing, and with talkinges,
That certis if thei trowid be
Shall nevir leve hem londe ne fe,
That it n'ill as the moeble fare,
Of whiche thei first delivered are.
Now maie you tell us all your will,
And we your hestis shall fulfill.

BUT false Semblant dare not for drede
Of you sir, medle' him of this dede,
For he saith that ye ben his so
He n'ot, if ye woll worche him wo;
Wherefore we praie you all, beau sire,
That ye foryeve him now your ire,
And that he maie dwell, as your man,
With Abstinence his dere lemman,
This our accorde and our will now.

Parfei saied Love, I graunt it you,
I woll well holde him for my man,
Now let him come; and he forthe ran.

False Semblant (q^d Love) in this wise
I take The here to my service,
That thou our frendis helpe alwaie,
And hindre' hem neithir night ne daie,
But doe thy might hem to releve,
And eke our en'emies that thou greve;
Thine be this might, I graunt it The,
My king of harlotes shalt thou be;
We woll that thou have soche honour,
Certain thou art a false traitour,
And eke a thief, sithe thou were borne,
A thousande times thou art forsworne,
But nathelless in our hering,
To put our folke out of doubting,
I bidde The teche hem, wost thou how?
By some generall signe now,
In what place thou shalt foundin be,
If that men had mistir of The,
And how men shall The best espie,
For The to knowe is grete maistrerie,
Tell in what place is thine haunting.

Sir, I have fully divers wonning,
That I kepe not reherfid be,
So that ye would respitin me,
For if that I tell you the sothe,
I maie have harme and shame bothe,
If that my felowes wistin it,
My talis shouldin me be quit,

For certaine thei would hate me,
If er I knewe ther cruelte,
For thei would ore all hold hem still
Of trothe, that is again ther will,
Soche talis kepyn thei not here,
I might eftsone buie it full dere,
If I saied of hem any thing,
That displeith to ther hering,
For what worde that hem pricketh or biteth,
In that worde none of hem deliteth,
All were it Gospell the' Evangile,
That would reprove hem of ther gile,
For thei are cruill and hautain,
And this thing wote I well certain,
If I speke ought to paire or loos,
Your courte shall not so well be cloos,
That thei ne shall wite it at last;
Of gode men am I nought agast,
For thei woll taken on hem nothing,
Whan that thei knowe all my mening,
But he that woll it on him take,
He woll himself suspicious make,
That he his life let covirtly
In gile and in Ypocrisie,
That me' engendrid and yave foltring.
Thei made a full gode engendring
(Q^d Love) for who so othly tell,
Thei engendrid the divell of hell.

But nedely, howsoere it be,
(Q^d Love) I will and charge The
To tell anon thy wonning placis,
Hering eche wight that in this place is,
And what life thou livist also,
Hide it no lengir now, whereto?
Thou must discovre' all thy worching,
How thou servist, and of what thing,
Though that thou shouldest for thy soth-saw
Ben all to-betin and to-drawe,
And yet art thou not wont, parde,
But nathelless, though thou betin be,
Thou shalt not be the first, that so
Hath for soth-sawe yfuffrid wo.

Sir, sithe that it maie likin you,
Though that I should be slain right now,
I shall doen your commaundement,
For thereto have I grete talent.

Withoutin wordis mo, right than False Semblant his sermon began,
And saied hem thus in audience.
Barons, take hede of my sentence,
That wight that list to have knowing
Of false Semblant, full of flatt'ring,
He must in worldly folke him seke,
And certis in the Cloistirs eke,
I won no where, but in hem twaie,
But not like evin, sothe to saie,
Shortly I woll herberowe me
There I hope best to hulstrid be
And certainly, sikereft hiding
Is undimeth humblist clothing.
Religious folke ben full covert,
Seculer folke ben more appert,
But nathelless, I woll not blame
Religious folke, ne hem diffame,
In what habite that er thei go,
Religion humble, and true also
Woll I not blamin, ne dispise,
But I n'ill love it in no wise,
I mene of false religious,
That stout ben, and malicions,

U u u That

That wollin in an habite go,
And settin not ther herte therto.

Religious folke ben all pitous,
Thou shalt not sene one dispitous,
Thei lovin no pride, ne no strife,
But humbly thei woll lede ther life,
With whiche folke woll I nevir be,
And if I dwell, I fainè me,
I maie well in ther habite go,
But me were lever my necke a two,
Than let a purpose that I take,
What covenant that er I make.

I dwell with 'hem that proude ybe,
And full of wiles and subtilte,
That worship of this worlde coveiten,
And gretè nede connin expleiten,
And gon and gaðrin grete pitaunces,
And purchase 'hem the acquaintaunces
Of men that mightie life maie leden,
And faine 'hem pore, and 'hem self feden
With gode morcils delicious,
And drinkin gode wine precious,
And preche us povert and distresse,
And fishin 'hem self grete richesse
With wily nettis, that thei cast,
It woll come foule out at the last.

Thei ben fro clene religion went,
Thei make the worlde an argument,
That hath a foule conclusion,
I have a robe of religion,
Than am I all religious,
This argument is all roignous,
It is not worth a crokid Brere,
Habite ne makith Monke, ne Frere,
But clene life, and devocion,
Makith gode men of religion.

Nathelesse, there can none answere,
How high that er his hedde he there,
With rasour whettid nere so kene,
That gile in braunchis cutte thurtene,
There can no wight distinct it so,
That he dare saie a worde thereto.

But what herb'row that ere I take,
Or what semblaunt that er I make,
I mene but gile, and folowe that,
For right no more than Gibbe our cat,
(That awaiteth Mice and Rattes to killen)
Ne entende I, but to begilen,
Ne no wight maie, by my clothing,
Wete with what folke is my dwelling,
Ne by my wordis yet parde,
So soft and so plefant thei be.

Beholde the dedis that I doe,
But thou be blinde thou oughtist so,
For varie ther wordes fro ther dede,
Thei thinke on gile withoutin drede,
What manir clothing that thei were,
Or what estate that er thei bere,
Lerid or leude, Lorde, or Ladie,
Knight, Squier, Burgeis, or Bailie,

Right thus while false Semblant sermoneth,
Eft sonis Love him aresoneth,
And brake his tale in his speking,
As though he had him tolde lesing,
And saied, what devill is that I here?
What folke hast thou us nempnid here?
Maie men findin religioun
In worldly habitacioun?
Ye sir, it foloweth nat that thei
Should lede a wickid life parfei,
Ne not therefore ther soulis lese,
That 'hem to worldly clothis chese,

6160 For certis it were grete pite,
Men maie in seculer clothes se
Florishin holy religioun,
Full many' a saint in felde and toun,
With many' a virgine glorious,
Devoute, and full religious,
Han died, that commin clothe aie beren,
Yet saintis nerthelesse thei weren,
I could reckin you many a ten,
Ye welnigh all these holy women,
6170 That men in churchis herry' and seke,
Bothe maidins, and these wivs eke,
That bare ful many' a faire childe here,
Wered alway clothis seculere,
And in the same clothes didin they,
That saintis weren, and ben alway.

The ix. thousande maidinis dere;
That beren in heven ther ciergis clere,
Of whiche men rede in church and sing,
Were take in seculer clothing,
Whan thei recevid martirdome,
And wonnin heven unto ther home;
6180 Gode hert ymakith the gode thought,
The clothing yeveth ne revith nought,
The gode thought and the gode worching,
That maketh the religion flouring,
There lieth the gode religioun,
Aftir the righte entencioun.

Who so ytoke a wethir's skinne,
And wrapped a gredy woulfe therinne,
6190 For he should go with lambis white,
Wenist thou not he would 'hem bite?
Yes: Nerthelesse, as he were wode,
He would 'hem wirry', and drinke the blode,
And wel the rathir 'hem disceve,
For sithin thei coude nat perceve
His tregette, and his cruilte,
Thei would him folow, tho he fle.

If there be wolvis of fuche hewe
Amongis these Apostlis newe,
6200 Thou, holy church, thou maiste be wailed,
Sith that thy cite is assailed
Through knightis of thine ownè table,
God wot thy lordship is doutable,
If thei enforcin it to win,
That should defend it fro within,
Who might defence ayenst 'hem make,
Withoutin stroke it mote be take
Of trepeget or mangonell,
6210 Without displaying of pensell,
And if God n'il done it focour,
But let rennin in this colour,
Thou must thy heftis lettin be,
Than is there nought, but yeldè The,
Or yeve 'hem tribute doutilefs,
And holde it of 'hem to have pees,
But gretir harme betidith The,
That thei all maistir of it be,
Wel con thei scornin The withall,
By day ystuffin thei the wall,
And al the night thei minin there, 6220 Nay, thou plantin must ellis where Thine impis, if thou wolt frute have,
Abide not there thy selfe to save.

BUT now pece, here I turne againe,
I wol no more of this thing saine,
Yf I may passin me hereby,
For I might makin you wery,
But I wol hetin you alway
To helpe your frendis what I may,

So thei wollin my company,
For thei be shent all uttirly,
But if so fallin, that I be,
Oftin with 'hem, and thei with me,
And eke my lemman mote thei serve,
Or thei shul not my love deserve,
Forsoth I am a false traitour,
God judged me for a thefe trechour,
Forsworne I am, but wel nigh none
Wote of my gile, til it be done.

6310

Through me hath many' one deth receved,
That my treget ner aperceved,
And yet receveth, and shal receive,
That my falsnesse shal nere perceive,
But who so doth, if he wise be,
Him is right gode beware of me,
But so flighe is the perceving,
That al to late comith knowing,
For Proteus that coude him chaunge
In every shappe, homely and straunge,
Coude nevir tuche gile ne trefoune
As I, for I come nere in toun
There as I might yknowin be,
Though men me both might here and see,
Ful wel I can my clothis chaunge,
Take one, and make an othir straunge,
Now am I Knight, now Chastelaine,
Now Prelate, and now Chapelaine,
Now Priest, now Clerke, and now Fostere,
Now am I Maistir, now Scholere,
Now Monke, now Chanon, now Bailly,
Whatever mistir manne am I.

6320

Now am I Prince, now am I Page,
And can by hert ev'ry langage,
Somtimis am I hore and olde,
Now am I yong, and stout, and bolde,
Now am I Robert, now Robin,
Now Frere Minor, now Jacobin,
And with me foloweth my loteby,
To done me solace and comp'any,
That hight dame Abstinence, and raigned
In many a queint arraie fained,
Right as it commeth to her liking,
I fulfill all her desiring.

6330

Somtime a woman's clothe take I,
Now am I a Maide, now Lady,
Sometime I am religious,
Now like an Ankir in an hous,
Somtime am I a Priorese,
And now a Nonne, and now Abbess,
And go thorough all regiounes,
Yfeking all religiounes.

But to what ordir that I am sworne,
I take the strawe and bete the corne,
To jolie folke I enhabite,
I aske no more but ther habite.

What wol ye more? in every wise
Right as me list I me disgise?

Wel can I bere me undir wede,
Unlike is my worde to my dede;
Thus make I into my trappes fall
The folke, through my priv'ilegis all.
That ben in cristendome a live.

6360

I may assoile, and I may thrive,
That no Prelate may lettin me,
All folke, where evir thei founde be;
I n'ot no Prelate maie done so,
But it the Pope be, and no mo,
That madin thilke establisshing;
Now is not this a propre thing?
But were my sleightis aperceved

6370

As I was wont, and wost thou why?

For I did 'hem a tregetry;
But therof yeve I' a litil tale,
I have the silvir and the male,
So have I prechid, and eke shriven,
So have I take, so have I yeven
Through ther foly, husbonde and wife,
That I lede right a joly life,
Through simplese of the Prelacie,
Thei know not all my tregettrie.

6380

BUT for as moche as man and wife
Shuld shew ther Parish Priest ther life
Onis a yere, as saith the Boke,
Er any wight his housil toke,
Than have I privilegis large,
That maie of mochil thing discharge,
For he may say right thus, parde;

6390

Sir priest, in shrifte I tel it The,
That he, to whom that I am shriven,
Hath me assoilid, and me yeven
Penance sothly for alle my sin,
Whiche that I founde me gilty in,
Ne I ne' have nevir entencion
To make double confession,
Ne reherce este my shrift to The,
O shrifte is right inough to me,
This ought The to suffisin wele,
Ne be not rebell nere a dele,
For certis, though thou haddest it sworne,
I wote no Priest ne Prelate borne,
That maie to shrift est me constraine,
And if thei done, I wol me plaine,
For I wote where to plaining wele,
Thou shalt not streinin me a dele,
Ne enforce me, ne not me trouble,
To makin my confession double,
Ne I have none affection

6400

To' have double absolucion,
The first is right inough to me,
This latre' assoiling quite I The,
I am unbounde, what maist thou finde
More of my sinnes me to unbinde?
For he that might hath in his honde
Of all my finnis me unbonde,
And if thou wolt me thus constraine,
That me mote nedis on The plaine,
There shall no juge imperiall,
Ne bishop, ne officiall,

6410

Done jugement on me, for I
Shal gone and plaine me opiny
Anon to my shriffathir newe,
Whiche that hight Frere wolfe untrewed,
And he shal chusin him for me,
For I trowe he can hampir The,
But lord! he would be wrothe withall,
Yf men would him Frere wolfe ycall,
For he would have no pacience,
But done all cruill vengience

6420

He would his might done at the lest,
Than nothing spare for Godd's hest,
And God so wise be my focour,
But thou yeve me my saviour
At Estir, whan it likith me,
Withoutin presing more on The
I wol forth, and to him ygone,
And he shal housil me anone,
For I am out of thy grutching,
I kepe not dele with The nothing.

Thus may he shrive him, that forsaketh
His parish priest, and to me taketh,
And if the priest wol him refuse,
I am full redy him to' accuse,
And him punish and hampir so,
That he his churchè shal forgo.

6440

But

But who so hath in his feling
The consequence of suche shrivin,
Shal sene, that priest maie nere have might
To know the conscience aright
Of him, that is undir his cure,
And this is ayenst holy' scripture,
That biddith every herde honest
Have very knowing of his best;
But povir folke that gon by strete,
That have no golde, ne summis grete,
Them would I let to ther Prelates,
Or let ther Priestis know ther states,
For to me right nought yevin thei,
And why it is, for thei ne may,

Thei ben so bare, I take no kepe,
But I woll havin the fat shepe,
Let Parish Priestis have the lene,
I yeve not of ther harme a bene,
And if that Prelatis grutche it,
That oughtin wroth be in ther wit
To lesin ther fat bestis so,
I shal yeve 'hem a stroke or two,
So that thei shal lesin with force,
Ye, both ther Mitre and ther Croce.

Thus jape I 'hem, and have do longe,
My privilegis ben so strong.

Falſe Semblant would have stintid here;
But Love ne made him no suche chere
That he was wery of his sawe,
But for to make him glad and fawe
He said, tell on more specially,
How that thou servist untruly;

Tel forth, and shame The nere a dele,
For as thine habit shewith wele
Thou servest an holy Heremite:

Sothe is, but I am but an ipocrite:
Thou goest and prechist poverté;

Ye sir, but richesse hath poste:
Thou prechist abstinence also:

Sir, I woll fillen, so mote I go,
My paunche, of gode mete and gode wine,
As should a maistr of divine,
For how that I me povir faine
Yet al povir folke I disdaine.

I Love bettir the acquaintaunce
Ten timis of the king of Fraunce,
Than of a pore man of milde mode,
Though that his soule be all so gode.
For whan I se beggirs quaking,
Nakid on mixins all stinking,
For hungre crie, and eke for care,
I entremet not of ther fare,
Thei ben so pore, and ful of pine,
Thei might not ones yeve me a dine,
For thei have nothing but ther life,
What should he yeve that licketh his knife?
It is but foly to' entremete
To seke in hound's nest fat mete,
Let bere him to the spittle' anone,
But for me comfort get thei none,
But a full riche sicke usurere
Would I visitin and drawe nere,
Him would I comforte and rehetre,
For I hope of his golde to gete,
And if that wickid deth him have,
I woll go with him in his grave;
And if there any reprove me,
Why that I let the povir be,
Wost thou how I know how to' ascape?
I say and fwerin him full rape,
That richè men han more tetchis

Of sinne, than han these pore wretchis,
And han of counsaile more mistere,
And therefore I would drawe 'nem nere;
But as gret hurt, it maie so be,
Hath soule in right grete poverté,
As soule in grete richesse forsothe,
Al be it that thei hurtin bothe,
For richesse and mendicitees
Bene clepid two extremitees,
The mene is clepid Suffisaunce,
There lieth of vertue the' aboundaunce.

For Salomon full wel I wote
In his wise Parablis us wrote,
As it is knowen of many' a wight,
In his thirtieth chapitir right,
God thou me kepe for thy poste,
Fro richesse and mendicite,
For if a riche man him dresse
To thinkin to moche on richesse,
His hert on that so ferre is sette,
That he' his creatour doth foryette,
And him that beggith woll aie greve,
How should I by his worde him leve,
Unneth that he n'is a micher
Forfworne, or els Godd'is lier,
Thus sayith Salomon'is sawes.

Ne we find writtin in no lawes,
And namely in our christin laie,
Who so saith ye, I dare say naie,
That Christ, ne his Apostils dere,
While that thei walkid in erth here,
Were nevir sene herbrid begging,
For they n'olde beggin for nothing.

And right thus were men wont to teche,
And in this wise wouldin it preche
The maistris of divinite
Somtime in Paris the cite.

AND if men would there gaine appose
The nakid texte, and let the glole,
It mightin sone assoilid be,

For men may wel the sorhe yse,
That pardie thei might aske a thing
Plainly forth withoutin begging,
For they weren Godd'is herdis dere,
And cure of soulis haddin here,
Thei ne wolde nothing begge ther fode,
For astir Christ was done on rode,
With ther propir hondis thei wrought,
And with traveile, and ellis nought,
Thei wonnin al ther sustinaunce,
And livedin forth in ther penaunce,
And the remenaunt yaf awaie
To othir pore folkis alwaie.

Thei neithir bildin toure ne hall,
But thei in housis smal with alle.

A mighty man, that can and maie,
Should with his honde and body' alwaie
Winne him his fode in labouring,
Yf he ne' have rent or suche a thing,
Although he be religious,
And God to servin curious,
Thus mote he done, or do trespas,
But if it be in certaine caas,
That I can telle, if mistir be,
Right wel, whan that the time I se.

Seke the boke of sainte Augustine,
Be it in papir or perchemene,
There as he writte of these worchinges,
Thou shalt sene that none excusinges

A perfite man ne should yseke
By wordis, ne by dedis eke,

Although

Although he be religious,
And God to servin curious,
That he ne shal, so mote I go,
With propir hondes, and body' also,
Yget his fode in laboring,
Yf he ne' have properte of thing,
Yet should he sel all his substaunce,
And with his swinke have sustinaunce,
If he be parfite in bounte;
Thus han the bokis tolde me.
For he that wol gone idilly,
And usith it aie besily
To hauntin othir menn's table,
He is a trechour full of fable,
Ne he ne maie by gode reson
Excuse him by his orison,
For men behovith in some gife
Ben somtime out of God's servise,
To gon and purchasin ther nede.

Men mote etin, that is no drede,
And slepe, and eke do othir thing,
And so long may thei leve praying.

So may they eke ther praier blinne,
While that thei werke ther mete to winne,
Seint Austyn wol therto accorde
In thilk boke that I recorde.

Justinian eke, that made lawes,
Hath thus forbodin by olde sawes,

No man, up paine for to be ded,
Mighty' of body, to begge his bred.
Yf he may swinke it for to gete,
Men should him rathir maim or bete,
Or done of him aperte justice,
Than suffrin him in suche malice.

Thei done not wel, so mote I go,
Whiche that takin suche almesse so,
But if thei have some privilege,
That of the paine 'hem woll alege.

But how that is, can I not se,
But if the prince discevid be,
Ne I ne wene not sikirly,
That thei maie have it rightfully.

But yet I wol not determine
Of princis powir, ne define,
Ne by my worde compre'hende iwis,
Yf it so ferre may stretche in this,
I wol not entremete a dele,
But I trowe that the boke saith wele,
Who that taketh almessis, that be
Dewe to folke that men may yse
Lame, and feble, wery, and bare,
Povir, or in suche manir care,
That con winnin hem nevir mo,
For thei havin no power therto,
He etith his owne dampning,
But if he lie, that made al thing;
And if ye suche a truaunt finde,
Chastise him wel, if ye be kinde,
But thei would hatin you parcaas,
If that ye fillin in ther laas.

Thei would estonis do you scathe,
If that thei mightin, late or rathe,
For thei be not ful pacient,
That han the worlde thus foule yblent,
And wetith wel, that God ybad
The gode man fell al that he had,
And folowe' him, and to pore it yeve;
He would not therfore that he live
To servin him in mendience,
For it was nevir his sentence,
But he bad werke, whan that nede is,
And folowe him in gode dedis.

Saint Poule, that loved al holy church,
He bade the' Apostils for to wurch,

6590

And winne ther livelode in that wife,
And 'hem defendid truandise,
And sayid, werkith with your honden,
Thus should the thing be understonden;
He n'olde iwis have bid 'hem begging;

Ne sellin gospels, ne preching,
Lest thei berafe, with ther asking
Folke of ther cattle' or of ther thing.

6600

For in this world is many' a man,
That yeveth his gode, for he ne can Werne it for shame, or ellis he Would of the' askir delivered be,
And for he him encombrith so
He yeveth him gode to let him go,
But it can him nothing profite,
Thei lese the yeste and the merite.

6610

The gode folke that St. Poule to preched,
Profrid him ofte, whan he 'hem teched,
Some of ther gode in charite,
But therof right nothing toke he,
But of his hondis would he gette
Clothis to wrine him, and his mete.

6670

6680

TEL me than how a man may liven,
That al his gode to pore hath yeven,
And wol but onely bidde his bedes,
And ner with hondes labour his nedes,
May he do so? Ye sir: And howe?

6690

6620

Sir: I woll gladly tellin you;
Saint Austyn saith, a man may be
In housis that han properte,
As templers, and hospitellers,
And as these Chanons regulers,
Or these white Monkis, or these blake,
I wol no mo ensamplis make,
And take thereof his susteining,
For therin lyith no begging,
But othirwayis not iwis;
Yet Austyn gabbith not of this,
And yet ful many' a Monke laboreth,
That God in holy Churche honoureth,
For whan ther swinking is agon,
Thei rede and sing in Church anone.

6700

6630

And for there hath ben grete discorde,
As many' a wight may bere recorde,
Upon the' estate of mendience,
I wol shortely in your presence
Tel how a man maie begge at nede,
That hath not wherwith him to fede,
Maugre his felowis janglinges,
For sothfastnes wol none hidinges,
And yet percase I may obey,
That I to you sothly thus sey.

6640

6710

LO here the case especial;
If a man be so bestiall,
That he of no craste hath science,
And nought desirith ignorence,
Than may he go a begging yerne,
Till he some othir cratte can lerne,
Through whiche withoutin truand
He may in trouthe have his living.

6720

6650

Or if he may done no labour
For elde, or sickenesse, or langour,
Or for his tendir age also,
Than may he yet a begging go.

6660

Or if he have peravinture
Through usage of his noriture
Livid ovir deliciously,
Than oughtin gode folke cominly,
Han of his mischefe some pite,
And suffrin him also, that he

May

May gon about and begge his bred,
That he be not for hongir ded ;
Or if he have of crafte conning,
And strength also, and desiring
For to worchin, as he had what,
But he finde neithir this ne that,
Than may he beggin till that he
Have gettin his necessite.

Or if his winning be so lite,
That his labour will not aquite
Sufficiantly al his living,
Yet may he go his brede begging,
Fro dore to dore he may go trace,
Till he the remnaunt may purchase.

Or if a man would undirtake
Any emprise for to ymake
In the rescous of our lay,
And it defendin as he may,
Be it with armis, or lettrure,
Or othir convenable cure,
If it be so that he pore be,
Than may he beggin, til that he
Maie findin in trouth for to swinke,
And get him clothis, mete, and drinke,
Swinke he with his hondes corporel,
And not with hondes espirituel.

IN all this case, and in semblables,
If that there ben mo resonables,
He maie begge, as I tell you here,
And ellis not, in no manere,
As William saint Amour would preche,
And oftin would dispute and teche
Of this matir all opinly,
At Paris fully' and solemply ;
And all so God my soule blesse,
As he had in this stedfastnesse
The' acorde of the' universite,
And of the peple', as semith me.

No gode man ought it to refuse,
Ne ought him thereof to excuse,
Be wrothe or blithe, who so thou be,
For I wol speke, and tell it The,
Al should I die, and be put down,
As was saint Poule, in derke prifoun,
Or be exilid in this caas,
With wrong, as maistir William was,
That my mothir Hypocrisie
Banishid for her gret envie.

My mothir flemed him saint Amour,
This noble man did suche labour
To susteine er the loialte,
That he to multe agilté me,
He made a boke, and let it write,
Wherin his life he did all dite,
And would that eche renied begging,
And livin by my travailing,
If I ne' had rent ne othir gode ;
What? wenith he that I were wode ?
For labour might me nevir plese,
I have more will to ben at ese,
And have well levir, sothe to saie,
Before the peple patre' and praie,
And wrie me in my foxerie
Undir a cope of papelardie.

(Q^x Love) what divel is this I here ?
What wordis tellist thou me here ?
What sir? Why Fallnesse that apert is.
Than dredist thou not God? No certis ;
For selde in grete thing shal he spede,
In this world, that God wol ydrede ;
For folke that 'hem to vertue yeven,

And truily on ther owne liven,
And 'hem in godnesse aie contente,
On 'hem is litil thriste isente,
Suche folke ydrinkin grete misele,
That life ne may me nevir plese.

But se what golde han uferers,
And silvir eke in ther garners,
6740 Tailagiers, and these moniours,
Bailiffes, Bedils, Provostes, Countours,
These livin well nigh by ravine,
The smale peple 'hem mote encline,
And thei as wolvis wol 'hem eten,
Upon the povir folke thei geten
Ful multe of that thei spende or kepe,
N'is none of 'hem that thei n'il strepe,
And wrine 'hem selvin well at full,
Withoutin scalding thei 'hem pull.

6750 The strong the feble ovirgothe,
But I that were my simple clothe
Robbe bothe the robbid and robbours,
And gile the gilid and gilours
By my treget, I gathre' and threste
The grete tresour into my cheste,
That lieth with me so faste ybounde,
Thus myn high paleis do I founde,
And my delitis I fulfill

With wine at festis, at my will,
And tablis ful of entremees,
6760 I wol no life, but ese and pees,
And winnin golde to spende also,
For whan the grete bagge is ago,
It comith full right with my japes,
Make I not wel tomble mine apes ?
To winnen is alwaie mine entent,
My purchace' is bettir than my rent;
For though that I should betin be,
Ovir al I entremet me,

6770 Withoutin me maie no wight dure,
I walkin soulis for to cure,
Of all the world the cure-have I,
In brede and eke in length boldly,
I wol bothe preche, and eke counsaillen,
With hondis wol I not travailen,
For of the Pope I have the bull,
I ne holde not my wittis dull,
I wol not stintin in my live
These Emperouris for to thrive
Of Kingis, Dukes, and Lordis grete,
6780 But povir folke al quite I lete,
I love no suche thriving, parde,
But it for othir cause ybe,
I recke not of these povir men,
Ther estate is not worthe an hen.

Wher findest thou 'a swinkir of labour
Have me to be his confessoure ?
But Empressis, and Duchessis,
6860 These Quenis, and eke Countessis,
These Abbessis, and eke Bigins,
And these grete Ladies palasins,
These joly Knightis, and Bailives,
6790 These Nonnis, and these Burgeis wives,
That riche yben, and eke plesing,
And these Maidinis welfaring,
Where so thei clad or nakid be,
Uncounsailed goeth there none fro me,
And for ther soulis savite
At Lorde and Lady', and ther meine
6870 I aske, whan thei 'hem to me thrive,
The properte of al ther live,
And make 'hem trowe, both moste and lest,
6800 Ther Parish Priest is but a best
Ayens me and my company,
That shrewis ben as gret as I,

Fro

Fro whiche I wol not hide in holde
No privity, that me is tolde,
That I by worde or signe iwis
Ne wol make 'hem know what it is,
And thei wollen also tellin me,
Thei hele fro me no privity;
And for to make you them perceiven,
That usin folke thus to deceiven,
I wol you saine withoutin drede
What men maie in the Gospell rede
Of saint Mathewe the Gospellere,
That saith, as I shall you saie here.

UPon the chaire of Moses,
Thus it is glosid doutlefs,
(That is the olde Testament,
For thereby is the chaire ment)
Sittin Scribis and Pharisen,
That is to saine, the cursid men,
Whiche that we Ipocritis call,
Doeth that thei preche I rede you all,
But doeth not as thei doen a dele,
That ben not werie to saie wele,
But to doe well no will have thei,
And thei would binde on folke alwaie,
That ben to be begilid able,
Burdonis, that ben importable,
On folkis shouldirs thinges thei couchen,
That thei nill with ther fingirs touchen,
And why woll thei not touch it? why?
For them ne liste nat sikirly,
For the sadde burdonis, that men taken,
Ymakin folkis shouldirs aken.

And if thei doe ought that gode be,
That is for folke it shouldin se,
Ther burdonis largir makin thei,
And makin ther hemmes wide alwaie,
And lovin setis at the table
The first, and the moste honourable,
And for to han the first chairis
In Sinagogges, to 'hem full dere is,
And willen that folke 'hem loude and grete,
Whan that thei passin through the strete,
And wollen be cleped maistris also,
But thei ne should not willin so,
The Gospell' is there ayenst I gesse,
That shewith well ther wickidnesse.

AN othir custome usin we,
Of 'hem that woll ayenst us be,
We hate him dedly everychone,
And we woll werrey him, as one,
Him that one hatith, hate we all,
And coniecte how to doen him fall,
And if we sene him winne honour,
Richesse or preise, through his valour,
Provende, or rent, or dignite,
Full faste iwis compassin we
By what laddre' he is clombin so,
And for to make him doune to go
With traizon we woll him defame,
And doen him lesin his gode name.

Thus from his laddir we him take,
And thus his frendis foes we make,
But worde ne wetin shall he none,
Till al his frendis ben his fone,
For if we did it opiny
We mightin have blame redily,
For had he wiste of our malice,
He had him kept, but he were nice.

An othir' is this, that if so fall
That there be one emong us all
That doeth a gode tourne, out of drede

6880 We saine it is our aldir dede,
Ye sikirly, though he it fained,
Or that him liste, or that him dained,
A man through him avauncid be,
Thereof all partineres be we,
And tellin folke, where so we go,
That man through us is sprongin so.

And for to have of men praising,
We purchace, through our flattering,
Of richè men of grete poste
Lettirs, to witnesse our bounte,
So that man weneth, that maie us se,
That alle vertue in us be.

6890 And alwaie povir we us sain,
But how so that we begge, or plain,
We ben the folke, without lesing,
That all thing have without having.

Thus be dradde of the peple' iwis,
And gladly my purpose is this.

I delin with no wight, but he
Have golde and trefour grete plente,
Ther acquaintaunce well lovin I
This moche is my desire shortly;

6900 I entremete me of brocages,
I makin pece, and mariages,
I am gladly executour,
And many times a procuratour,
I am sometime a messagere,
That fallith not to my mistere.

And many timis I make enquest,
For me that office is nat honest,
To dele with othir mennis thing
That is to me a grete liking,

6910 And if that ye have ought to doe
In place that I repairin to,
I shall it spedin through my witte
As sone as ye have tolde me it,
So that ye servin me to paie;
My service shall be yours alwaie.

6920 But who so woll chastise me,
Anone my love-yloste hath he,
For I love no man in no gise
That woll me reprove or chastise,
But I woll all folke undirtake,
And of no wight no teching take,
For I that othir folke chastie
Woll not be taught fro my folie.

6930 I Ne love none Hermitage more;
Al desertis, and holtis hore;
And grete wodis everichone
I let 'hem to the Baptist John;
I queth him quite and him relesse
Of Egypt all the wildirnesse,
To ferre were all my mansiouns
Fro alle citees and gode touns.

My paleis and mine house make I
There men maie renne in opiny,
And saie that I the worlde forsake,
But all amidde I builde, and make
My house, and swimme and plaie therein;
Bette than a fishe doth with his finne.

6940 OF Antichrist's men am I,
Of whiche that Christ saith opiny
Thei have habite of holinesse,
And livin in soche wickidnesse,
To' the copie, if him talent toke
Of the Evangelist's boke,
There might he se by grete traifoun
Full many' a false comparifoun.

As moche as thorough his grete might,
Be it of hete, be it of light,

The

The Sunne yfurmounth the Mone,
That troublir is, and chaungith sone,
And the nutte kerneill dothe the shell,
I skorne nat that I you it tell,

Right so withoutin any gile
Surmountith this noble' Evangile
The worde of any' Evangelist,
And to ther tite thei toke Christ,
And many soche comparisoun,
Of whiche I make no mencion,
Mightin men in that boke finde,
Who so could of 'hem havin minde.

The' uni'ersite, that was a slepe,
Gan for to braied, and takin kepe,
And at the noise the hedde up cast,
Ne nevir sithin slept it fast,
But up it stert, and armis toke,
Ayncst this false horrible boke
All redy battaile for to make,
And to the Judge the boke thei take.

But thei, that broughtin the boke there,
Hent it anone awaie for fere,
Thei n'old shewe it no more a dele,
But than it kept, and kepin wele
Till soche a time that thei maie se,
That thei so strong ywoxin be,
That no wight maie 'nem well withstonde,
For by that boke thei durst not stonde,
Awaie thei gonne it for to bere,
For thei ne durstin not answere
By expocicion ne glose,
To that that clerkis woll appose,
Ayncst the cursidnesse iwis,
That in that boke ywrittin is.

Now wotte I nat, ne can nat se
What manir ende that there shall be
Of all this whiche that thei yhide,
But yet algate thei shall abide,
Till that thei maie it bette defende,
This trowe I best woll be ther ende.

Thus Antichrist abidin we,
For we ben all of his meine,
And what man that woll not be so,
Right sone he shall his life forgo.

All outward Lambin semin we,
Full of godenesse and of pite,
And inwarde we withoutin fable
Ben gredy Wolvis ravifable.

We enviroun bothe londe and se,
With all the worlde werryin we,
We woll ordain of allè thing,
Of folkis gode, and ther living.

If there be castill or cite
Within that any bougerons be,
Although that thei of Millaine were,
For thereof ben thei blamid there,
Or of a wight out of mesure
Would lene there gold, and take usure,
For that he is so coveitous,
Or if he be to Lechirous,
Or these that hauntin Simonie,
Or Provost full of trechirie,
Or Prelate living jolilie,
Or Priest that halt his quein him by,
Or oldè whoris hostilers,
Or othir baudes or bordillers,
Or ellis blamed of any vice,
Of whiche men shouldin doen justice,
By all the saintis that we preie,
But thei defende them with lampreie,
With luce, with elis, with samons,

With tartis, or with cheffis fat,
With deinte flaunis, brode and flat,
With caleweis, or with pullaile,
With coninges, or with fine vitaile,
That we undir our clothis wide
Ymakin through our golet glide,
Or but he woll doe come in haste
Rae venison ybake in paste,
Whethir so that he toure or groine,
He shall have of a corde a loigne, 7100
With whiche men shall him binde and lede
To brenne him for his sinfull dede,
That men shall here him crié and rore,
A mil'is waie about and more;
Or els he shall in prison die,
But if he woll his frendship buie,
Or smertin that, that he hath doe,
More than his gilt amounnith to:

But and he couthe, thorough his sleight,
Doe makin up a toure of height, 7110
Nought rought I, wher of stone or tre,
Or yerth, or turvis though it be,
Though it were of no voundè stone
Ywrought with square and scantilone,
So that the toure were stuffid well
With allè richis temporell.

And than that he would him up dresse
Enginis, bothè more and lessé,
To caste at us by every side,
To berin his gode namè wide, 7120

Soche sleightis I shullin you yeven,
Barelles of wine, by sixe or seven,
Or golde in sackis grete plente,
He should tho sone delivered be;
And if he have no suche pitences,
Let him studie' in equipolences,
And lerin lies and fallaces,
If that he would deserve our graces,
Or we shall bere him soche witnesse. 7130
Of sinne, and of his wretchidnesse,
And doen his lose so wide renne,
That all quicke we shouldin him brenne,
Or ellis yeve him soche penaunce,
That is well worse than the pitaunce.

For thou shalt nevir for nothing
Con knowen aright by ther clothing
The traitours full of trechèrie,
But thou ther werkis can espie.

And ne had the gode keeping be
Whilom of the' uni'ersite, 7140
That kepeth the kei of christendome,
We' had ben tourmentid all and some.

Soche ben the flinking Prophetis,
Nis none of 'hem, that gode Prophete is,
For thei through wickid entencion
The yere of the' incarnacion
A thousande, and two hundrid yere,
Five and fiste, ferthir ne nere,
Broughtin a boke with sorie grace,
To yeven ensample in common place, 7150
That sayid thus, though it were fable,
This is the Gospell pardurable,
That fro the holie Ghost is sent,
Well were it worthe to be ybrent,
Entitlid was in soche manere
This boke, of whiche I tell here,
There n'as no wight in all Paris
Before our Ladie at parvis,
That thei ne might the boke by,
The sentence plesed 'hem well truely. 7160

But I woll stint of this matere,
For it is wondir long to here,

But

But had that ilke boke endured,
Of better' estate I were ensured,
And frendis have I yet parde,
That han me set in grete degre.

OF all this worlde is Emperour
Gile my fathir, the false trechour,
And Emperesse my mothir is,
Maugre the Holie Ghoste iwis;
Our mightie linage, and our rout
Reignith in every reigne about,
And well' is worthy we mini'sters be,
For all this worlde governe we,
And can the folke so well deceve
That none our gilis can perceive,
And though thei doen, thei dare not saie,
The sothe dare no wight bewraie.

But he in Christ'is wrathe him ledeth,
That more than Christ my brethrin dredeth,
He n'is no full gode champion,
That dredeth soche similacion,
Nor that for pain woll refusin
Us to correcte and accusin.

He woll not entremete by right;
Ne havin God in his eyen sit,
And therefore God shall him punice;
But me ne reckith of no vice,
Sithen men us loven communable;
And holdin us for so worthie,
That we maie folke repreve echone,
And we n'ill have represe of none;
Whom shouldin folke worshipin so
But us that stintin nevir mo
To patrin, while that folke maie' us se,
Though it not so behinde 'hem be?

AND where is there more wode folie
Than to enhauncin chivalrie,
And lovin noble men and gaie;
That jolie clothis weren alwaie?
If thei be soche folke as thei semen,
So clene, as men ther clothis demen,
And that ther wordes folowe ther dede,
It is grete pite out of drede,
For thei woll be none Hypocritis,
Of 'hem me thinkith gretè spite is,
I can not love 'hem on no side.

But beggirs with these hodie wide,
With sleigh and palè facis lene,
And with graie clothis nat full clene,
But frettid full of tatar waggis,
And high shewis knoppid with dagges,
That frouncin like a qualè pipe,
Or botis riving as a gipe,

To soche folke, as I you devise,
Should princis and these lordis wise
Take all ther landis and ther thinges,
Bothe warre and pece in govringes,
To soche folke should a prince him yeve,
That would his life in honour live.

And if thei be nat as thei seme,
That servin thus the worlde to queme,
There would I dwellin to deceve
The folke, for thei shall nat perceive.
But I ne speke in no soche wise
That men should humble' habite dispise,
So that no pride there undir be,
No man should hate, as thinkith me,
The povir man in soche clothing,
But God ne presith him nothing,
That saieth he hath the worlde forsake,
And hath to worldly glory' him take,
And woll of soche delicis use,

Who maie that beggir well excuse?
That papelarde, that him yeldith so,
And woll to worldly ese ygo,
And saieth that he the worlde hath left,
And greedily it gripith eft,
He is the hounde, shame is to fain,
That to his casting goeth again.

7170 BUT unto you dare I not lie,
But might I felin or espie,
That ye percevid it nothing,
Ye shouldin have a starke lesing
Right in your honde thus to beginne,
I ne wolde it let for no sinne.
The God lough at the wondir tho,
And every wight gan laugh also,
And sayid: lo here a man right
For to be trustie to' every wight!

7180 False Semblant (qð Love) saie to me,
Sith I thus have avauncid The,
That in my court is thy dwelling,
And of ribaudes shalt be my king,
Wolt thou well holdin my forwardes?
Ye sir, qð he, from hens forwardes,
We woll a peple' on him arise,
And through our gile doin him cease;
And him on sharpe speris rive,
7190 Or othir waies bring him fro live,
But if that he woll folowe' iwis
That in our boke ywrittin is.

THus mōche woll our boke signifie,
That while Peter had maistrie
Maie nevir John shewe well his might.
Now have I you declarid right
The mening of the barke and rinde,
That makith the entencions blinde.
But now at erst I woll begin 7200 To expounne you the pithe within,
And the seculers comprehende,
That Christ'is lawe wollin defende,
And should it kepin and maintainen,
Ayenist them that all sustenen,
And falsly to the peple techen,
That John betokeneth 'hem to prechen,
That there n'is lawe covenable,
But thilke Gospell pardurable,
7210 That fro the Holy Ghost was sent,
To tournin folke that ben miswent.

The strength of John thei undirstonde,
The grace, in whiche thei saie thei stonde,
That doeth the sinfull folke convert,
And 'hem to Jesu Christ revert,
Full many' an othre' horriblete
Mowin men in that bokè se,
That ben commaundid doutilefs
Ayenst the lawe of Rome expresse,
And all with Antichrist thei holden,
7220 As men maie in the boke beholden.

And than commaundin thei to sleen
All tho that with Peter yben,
But thei shall nevir have that might,
And God to forne, for strief to fight,
That thei ne shall ynough yfinde,
That Peter's lawe shall have in minde,
And evir holde, and so maintene,
That at the last it shall be sene
That thei shall all comin thereto,
7230 For aught that thei can speke or do.

And thilke lawe ne shall not stonde,

That is ayenist all nature.

Sir, put you in that avinture,
For though ye borowes take of me,
The sikerer shall ye nevir be
For hostagis, ne sikirnesse,
Or chartris, for to bere witnesse;
I take your self to recorde here,
That men ne maie, in no manere,

Till he be slain, bothe backe and side,
Though men him bete and all defile;
What wene ye that I woll begile?

For I am clothid mekily,
There undre' is all my trechiry,
Mine herte chaungith nevir the mo
For none habite, in which I go,
Though I have chere of simplenesse,
I am not werie of shreudnesse,

Thei will not awaie for no drede,
Till it so be that thei ben dede,
Or till thei have the castill take.
And four battellis gan thei make,
And partid 'hem in foure anone,
And toke ther waie, and forthe thei gone,
The foure gatis for to assaile,
Of whiche the kepirs woll not faile,
For thei ben neithir sicke ne dede,
But hardie folke, and strong in dede.

Now woll I faine the countenaunce
Of false Semblant, and Abstinaunce,
That ben to wickid tong ywent.
But first thei helde ther parlyment,
Whethir it to be doin were,
To makin 'hem be knowin there,
Or ellis walkin forthe disgised;
But at the laste thei devised
That thei would gone in tapinage,
As it were in a pilgrimage,
Like gode and holie folke unfeined;
And anon dame Abstinence streined
Toke on a robe of Cameline,
And gan her gratche as a bigine.

A large coverchief of threde
She wrappid all about her hede;
But she forgate not her Psaltere;

A paire of bedis eke she bere
Upon a lace all of white threde,
On whiche that she her bedis bede;

But she ne bought 'hem nevre' a dele,
For thei were given her, I wote wele,
God wote of a full holie Frere,
That saied he was her fathir dere,
To whom she had oftiner went
Than any Frere of his covent,

7380

And he visitid her also,
7310 And many' a sermone saied her to,
He n'olde let for no man on live
That he ne would her oftin thrive,
And with so grete devocion
Thei madin her confession,
That thei had oftin for the nones
Two heddis in one hode at ones.

Of faire shape I devised her The,
But pale of face sometime was she,
7320 That false traitouress untrew
Was like that salowe horse of hewe,
That in the' Apocalyps is shewed,
That signifieth tho folke beshrewed,
That ben all full of trecherie,
And pale, thorough hypocrisie;
For on that horse no colour is,
But onely dedde and pale iwis,
Of soche a colour enlangoured
Was Abstinence iwis coloured,
Of her estate she her repented,
7330 Right as her visage reprented.

7390

She had a burdoun all of theft,
That Gile had yeve her of his yeft,
And a skrippe of faint distresse,
That full was of elengenesse;
And forthe she walkid sobirlye.

7400

And false Semblant faint, je vous die,
And as it were for soche mistere,
Doin on the cope of a Frere,
7410 With chere simple, and full pitous,
His loking was not disdeinous,
Ne proude, but meke and ful pefible.

About his necke he bare a bible,
And Squyrlly forthe gan he gon;
And for to rest his limmes upon
He had of trefon a potent,
As he were feble', his waie he went.

But in his sleve he gan to thring
A rasour sharpe, and well biting,
7420 That was yforgid in a forge,
Whiche that men clepin Coupe gorge.

So long forth ther waie thei nomin,
Till thei to wickid Tong comin,
That at his gate ywas sitting,
And sawe folke in the waie passing.

The pilgrimis sawe he fast by,
That berin 'hem full mekily,
And humbly thei with him ymette;
7430 Dame Abstinence first him ygrette,
And siþe him False Semblant salved,
And he 'hem, but he not-remeved,

For he ne drede him not a dele,
For whan he sawe ther facis wele,
Alwaie in herte him thought so
He should knowin 'hem bothe two;

For well he knewe dame Abstinaunce;
But he ne knewe not Constreinaunce,
He knewe nat that she was constrained,
7440 Ne of her thev'is life yfained;

But wende she come of will all fre;
But she come in othir degre,
And if of gode will she began,
That will ywas failid her than.

7370

AND False Semblant had he faine alse,
But he knewe nat that he was false;

Yet

Yet false was he, but his falsnesse
 Ne could he nat espie, nor gesse;
 For Semblant was so flie ywrought,
 That Falsnesse he ne espied nought;
 But haddest thou knowin him beforne,
 Thou woldist on a boke have sworne,
 Whan thou him sawe in thilke araie,
 That he, that whilom was so gaie,
 And of the daunce Jolie Robin,
 Was tho become a Jacobin;
 But sothly what so men 'hem call,
 Frere Prechouris ben gode men all,
 Ther ordir wickidly thei beren,
 Soche minstrellis if that thei weren.

So ben Augustins, and Cordileres,
 And Carmis, and eke sackid Freres,
 And all the Freris shode and bare,
 Though some of 'hem ben grete and square,
 Full holy men, as I 'hem deme,
 Everiche of 'hem would gode man seme,
*But shalt thou nevir of apparence
 Sein conclude gode consequence
 In any argument iuris,*
 If existens all failid is;
 For men maie finde alwaie sopheme,
 The consequence to enveneme,
 Who so hath had the subtilte
 The double sentence for to se.

Whan the pilgrimis comin were
 To wickid Tong, that dwellid there,
 Ther harnes nigh 'hem was algate,
 By wickid Tong adoune thei fate,
 That badde 'hem nere him for to come,
 And of tidings tell him some,
 And saied 'hem, what case makith you
 To comin into this place now?

SIR, sayid Strainid Abstinunce,
 We for to dryin our penaunce
 With hertis pitous and devout
 Are commen, as pilgrimes gon about,
 Well nigh on fote alwaie we go,
 Full doughtie ben our helis two,
 And thus bothe we ben ysent
 Throughout the worlde, that is miswent,
 To yeve ensample, and preche also,
 To fithin sinfull men we go,
 For othir fithing ne fiske we;
 And leve sir, for that charite,
 As we be wont, erbo'rowe we crave,
 Your life to amenne Christ it save,
 And so it should you not displese,
 We wouldin, if it were your ese,
 A short sermon unto you sain.
 And wickid Tong answered again,
 The house (qð he) soche as ye se,
 Shall nat be warnid you for me,
 Saie what you list, and I woll here.
 Graunt mercie tho swete sir dere,

Qð aldirfirst dame Abstinence,
 And thus began she her sentence.

Sir, the first vertue for certaine,
 The gretist, and moste soveraine,
 That maie be founde in any man,
 For having, or for wit he can,
 That is his tong for to refrain;
 Therto ought every wight him pain;
 For it is bettir still to be,
 Than for to spekin harme parde,
 And he that harkeneth it gladly,
 He is no gode man sikirly.

And sir, aboven all othir sinne,

In that art thou most giltie inne,
 Thou spake a jape, not long a go;
 And sir, that was right evill doe,
 7450 Of a yong man, that here repaired,
 And nevir yet this place apaired,
 Thou saidest he awaitid nothing,
 But to disceve Faire Welcoming,
 Ye saidin nothing sothe of that,
 But sir, ye lie, I tel you plat,
 He cometh no more, ne goeth parde,
 I trowe ye shal him nevir se,
 Faire Welcoming in prison is,
 That ofte hath plaid with you er this 7460 The fairist gamis that He coude,
 Withoutin filth; or stil or loude
 Now dare he not himselfe solace;
 Ye han also the man do chace,
 That he dare neithir come ne go.
 What mevith you to hate him so,
 But propirly your wickid thought,
 That many' a false lesing hath thought,
 That mevith your foule eloquence,
 That janglith evre' in-audience,
 7470 And on the folke arisith blame,
 And doeth 'hem dishonour and shame,
 For thing that maie have no preving,
 But likeliness and contriving?

For I dare saine, that Reson demeth,
 It is not al soth thing that semeth,
 And it is sinne for to controve
 Any thing that is to reprove,
 This wote ye wele, and sir therfore
 Ye arne to blame mochil the more,
 7480 And nathelless, he reckith lite,
 He yeveth not now therof a mite,
 For if he thoughtin harme parfaie
 He would ycome and gone all daie,
 He ne coude not himselfe abstene,
 Now cometh he not, and that is sene,
 For he ne taketh of it no cure,
 But if it be through avinture,
 And lasse than othir folke algate,
 And thou here watchist at the gate,
 7490 With spere in thine arest alwaie,
 There muse mufarde all the longe daie,
 Thou wakist night and daie for thought,
 Iwis thy traveile is for nought,
 And Jelousie withoutin faile
 Shall nevir quite The thy traveile,
 And skathe is, that Faire Welcoming,
 Withoutin any trespassing,
 Shal wrongfully in prison be,
 There wepith and languishith he;
 7500 And though thou nevir yet iwis
 Agiltist man no more but this,
 Take not a grese, it were worthy
 To put The out of this Bailly,
 And astirwarde in Prison lie,
 And fettrid The till that thou die;
 For thou shalt for this sinne dwelle,
 Right in the Devil's arse of Helle,
 But if that thou repentè The.
 Maifaie, thou liest falsely (qð he)
 7510 What, welcome with mischaunce now,
 Have I therfore herberid you
 To laie me shame, and eke reprove,
 With forie happe to your behove?
 Am I to day your herbegere
 Go herbir you els where than here,
 That han a lier callid me?
 Two tregetours arte thou and he,
 That in mine hous do me this shame,
 And for my sothesawe ye me blame,

Is

Is this the sermon that ye make?
 To all the divils I me take,
 Or ellis God thou me confounde,
 But er men didden this castill founde,
 It passith not ten daies or twelve
 But it was tolde right to my selve,
 And as thei saide, right so tolde I,
 He kiste the Rosè privily,
 Thus saide I now, and have said yore;
 I n'ot where he did any more,
 Why should men saie me suche a thing,
 If that it had yben gabbing?
 Right so saide I, and woll saie yet,
 I trowe I lyid not of it,
 And with my bemis I woll blowe
 To allè neighbouris arowe,
 How he hath bothe comin and gone.

Tho spake false Semblant right anone,
 All is nat gossell out of doute,
 That men saine in the tounè aboute:
 Lay no defe ere to my speking,
 I swere you sir, it is gabbing,
 I trow ye wote well certainly,
 That no man loveth him tendirly,
 That saith him harme, if he wote it,
 All be he ner so pore of wit,
 And sothe is also sikirly,
 This know ye sir, as well as I,
 That lovirs gladly wol visiten
 The placis there ther loves habiten,
 This man you loveth, and eke honoureth,
 This man to servin you laboureth,
 And clepith you his frende so dere,
 And this man makith you gode chere,
 And every where that he you meteth,
 He you saleweth, and he you greteth,
 He presith nat so ofte, that ye
 Oughte of his coming encombrid be,
 There presin othir folke on you
 Ful oftir than he doith now,
 And if his hert him strainid so
 Unto the Rosè for to go,
 Ye should him sene so oftin nede,
 That ye should take him with the dede;
 He coude his comming not forbere,
 Though ye him thrillid with a spere;
 I n'ere not than, as it is now;
 But trustith well, I swere it you,
 That it is clene out of his thought.

Sir, certis he ne thinketh it nought,
 No more ne doth Faire Welcoming,
 That sore abyith all this thing,
 And if thei were of one assent,
 Full sone ywere the Rose ybent,
 Tho the malgre your's would ybe.

And sir, of o thing herkeneth me,
 Sithe ye this man, that lovith you,
 Han saide such harme, and shamè now,
 Wittith well, if he gefsid it,
 Ye maie well demin in your wit,
 He ne wolde nothing love you so,
 Ne callin you his frende also,
 But night and daie he wollin wake,
 The castill to distroie and take,
 Yf it were sothe, as ye devise,
 Or some man in some manir wise
 Might it warnin him every dele,
 Or by himselfe percevin wele,
 For sithe he might not come and gone,
 As he was whilom wonte to done,
 He might it sonè wite and se,
 But now all othirwise wote he.

Than have we, sir, all uttirly
 Deservid Hell, and jolily
 The deth of Hellè doutileffe,
 That thrallin folke so giltileffe.

Falfe Semblant so provith this thing,
 That he ne can none answering,
 And seeth alwaie soche apparaunce,
 That nigh he fel in repentaunce,
 And said him, sir: it maie well be,
 Semblant, a gode man femin ye,
 And Abstinence, ful wise ye seme,
 Of o talent you bothe I deme,
 What counsaile wol ye to me yeven?

Right here anon thou shalt be shriven;
 And say thy sinne, withoutia more,
 Of this shalt thou repent The sore,
 For I am Priest, and have poste
 To shrive folke of most dignite,
 That ben as wide as world maie dure,
 Of al this world I have the cure,
 And that had nevir yet persoun
 Ne vicarie of no manir toun.

And God it wot I have of The
 A thousande timis more pite
 Than hath thy Priest parochiall,
 Though he thy frende be speciall.

I have avantage in o wise,
 That your Prelates ben not so wise,
 Ne halfe so lettrid as am I,
 I am licensid boldily
 In divinite for to rede,
 And to confessin out of drede.

Yf that ye wol you now confesse,
 And leve your sinnis more and lesse,
 Without abode knele doune anon,
 And you shal have absolucion.

Here endeth the Romaunt of the Rose.

Here

Here foloweth the Boke of TROILUS and CRESEIDE.

In this excellent Boke is shewed the fervent Love of TROILUS to CRESEIDE, whom he enjoyed for a time, and her grete untruth to him againe in giving her self to DIOMEDES, who in the end did so cast her off, that she came to grete misery. In whiche discourse CHAUCER liberally treteth of the Divine Purveiaunce.

THE double sorow of Troilus to telle,
That was the king Priamus sonne of Troy,
In loving, how his aventuris felle
From wo to wele, and aftir out of joy,
My purpose is, er that I partè fro'y.
Thou Thesiphone, thou helpe me t'endite
This woful verse, that wepin as I write.

To The I clepe, thou goddesse of tourment
Thou cruil wight, sorowing ay in paine,
Helpe me, that am the wofull instrument,
That helpith lovirs, as I can, complaine;
For wel sit it, the sothè for to saine,
A woful wight to have a drery fere,
And to a so'rowfull tale a fory chere.

For I that God of Lov'is servauntes serve,
Ne dare to love, for mine unlikeliness,
Prayin for speede, al should I therfore sterve,
So ferre am I fro his helpe in derkenesse;
But nathèlesse, if this may done gladnesse
To any lovir, and his cause aveile,
Have he the thanke, and mine be the traveile.

But ye lovirs, that bathin in gladnesse,
Yf any drope of pite in you be,
Remembrith you of passid hevinesses,
That ye have felte, and on the' adversite
Of othir folke, and thinkith how that ye
Han felte, that love durst you to displese,
Or ye han won him with to gret an ese.

And prayith for 'hem that ben in the cace
Of Troilus, as ye may aftir here,
That love 'hem bring in hevin to solace.
And eke for me prayith to God so dere,
That I have might to shew in some manere
Suche paine and wo, as lov'is folke endure,
In Troilus unsefly avinture.

And biddith eke for them that ben dispeired
In love, that nevir will recovered be,
And eke for them that falsely ben apeired
Through wickid tongis, be it he or she;
And biddith God for his benigne
So graunt 'hem sone out of this world to pace,
That ben dispairid out of lov'is grace.

And biddith eke for them that ben at ese,
That God 'hem graunt in love perseveraunce,
And sende 'hem grace ther lov'is for to plese,
That it to love be worship and plesaunce;
For so hope I my selfe best to avaunce
To pray for them, that lov'is servauntes be,
And write ther wo, and live in charite.

And for to have of them compassioun,
As though I were ther owne brothir dere.
Now herkenith with a gode entencioun,

For now wol I go freight to my matere:
In whiche ye may the double sorowes here
Of Troilus, in loving of Creseide,
And how she forfoke him er that she deide.

IT is wel wist, how that the Grekis strong
In armis with a thousand shippis went
To Troie wardis, and the cite long
Besiegedir nigh ten yeres ere thei stent,
And how in divers wise, and one entent,
The ravishing to wreke of queine Heleine
By Paris don, thei wroughtin all their peine.

Now fell it so, that in the toun there was Dwelling a Lord of gret authorite,
A gret divine, that clepid was Calcas,
That in that science so' experte was, that he Knew wel, that Troie should distroyid be,
By anwere of his God, that hight was thus Dan Phebus, or Apollo Delphicus.

So whan this Calcas knew by calculating,
And eke by the' anwere of this God Apollo,
That Grekis shouldin suche a peple bring,
Thorow the whiche that Troy must be fordo,
He caste anone out of the toun to go,
For wel he wist by sorte, that Troie sholde
Distroyid be, ye would who so or n'olde.

Wherefore for to departin softly
Toke purpose ful this wight forknowing, wise,
And to the Grekis host ful privily
He stalle anone, and thei in curteis wise,
Didin to him both worship and service,
In trust that he hath conning 'hem to rede
In every peril, which that was to drede.

Grete rumour rose, whan it was first espied,
In al the toun, and opinly was spoken,
That Calcas traitour fled was, and alied
To them of Grece, and caste was to be wroken
On him, that falsly hath his faith to broken,
And said: that he and al his kinne atones
Were worthy to be brent both fell and bones.

Now had this Calcas leste in this mischaunce,
Unknowing of this false and wickid dede,
A doughtir, whiche that was in grete penaunce,
And of her life she was ful sore in drede,
And ne wist nevir what best was to rede,
And as a widowe was she, and alone,
And n'ist to whom she might ymake her mone.

Creseide ywas this ladies name aright,
As to my dome, in al Troy's cite
Most fairist lady, passing every wight,
So angelike shone her natife beaute,
That like a thing immortal semid she,
And therwith was she so parfite a cature,
As she had be made in scorning of nature.

Z z z

This

This lady, whiche that al day herde at ere
 Her fathir's shame, his falshed, and traifoun,
 Ful nigh out of her wit, for sorow' and fere,
 In widowe's habite large of samite broun,
 Before Hector on knees she fill adoun,
 His mercy bad, her selfin excusing,
 With pitous voice, and tendirly weping.

Now was this Hector pitous of nature,
 And saw, that she was sorowful begone,
 And that she was so faire a creature,
 Of his godenesse he gladdid her anone,
 And saide: let your fathir's traifon gone
 Forth with mischance, and ye your self in joye
 Dwellith with us, whilis you list in Troye.

And al the honour men may do you have,
 As ferforth as though your fathir dwelt here
 Ye shul have, and your body shul men save,
 As fer as I may ought enquire and here.
 And she him thankid with ful humble chere,
 And oftir wolde, and it had been his will,
 And toke her leve, went home, and helde her still.

And in her house she' abode with such meine,
 As til her honour nede was for to holde,
 And while she was dwelling in that cite
 She keppe her estate, and of yong and olde
 Ful wel beloved, and wel men of her tolde:
 But whethir that she childrin had or none
 I rede it nat, therefore I let it gone.

The thingis fellin as thei done of werre
 Betwixin hem of Troie and Grekis ofte,
 For some day boughtin thei of Troie it derre,
 And eft the Grekis foundin nothing soft
 The folke of Troie: and thus fortune aloft
 And undir este gan hem to whelmin bothe,
 Aftir her course, aie while that thei wer wrothe.

But how this toun came to distruction
 Ne fallith not to purpose me to tel,
 For why? it were a long digression
 Fro my matir, and you to long to dwel;
 But the Troyan jestis, all as thei fel,
 In Omer, or in Dares, or in Dite,
 Who so that can, may rede hem, as thei write.

But though the Grekis them of Troie in shetten,
 And ther cite besegid al aboute,
 Ther olde usagis n'oldin thei not letten,
 As to honouren ther Goddis ful devoute,
 But aldirmost in honour out of doute,
 Thei had a relicke hight Palladion,
 That was ther trust abovin everichon.

And so besel, whan comin was the time
 Of Aprilis, whan clothid is the mede
 With newe grene, of lusty Ver the prime,
 And with swete smelling flouris white and rede
 In sondrie wise shewid, as I you rede,
 The folke of Troie, ther observauncis olde,
 Palladion's fest, went for to holde.

Unto the temple in all ther best wise
 In general went every manir wight,
 To herkin of Palladion's service,
 And namily many a lusty knight,
 And many a lady fresh, and maidin bright,
 Full well beseyn the most meynè and lest,
 Both for the seson, and for the hie fest.

Among these othir folke was Creseida,

In widdowe's habite blake: but natheles
 Right as our first lettir is now an A,
 In beaute first so stode she makeles,
 Her godely loking gladdid all the pres,
 N'as nevir sene thing to be praised so derre,
 Nor under cloude blake so bright a sterre,

As was Creseide, thei saidin everichone,
 That her beheldin in her blake wede;
 And yet she stode ful lowe and stil alone,
 Behinde all othir folke, in litil brede,
 And nie the dore aye undir sham's drede,
 Simple' of atire, and debonaire of chere,
 With full assurid loking and manere.

Dan Troilus, as he was wont to gide
 His yonge knightis, ladde hem up and dounc
 In thilke large temple on every side,
 Beholding aie the ladies of the toun,
 Now here now there, for no devocioun
 Had he to none, to revin him his rest,
 But gan to praise and lackin whom he lest.

And in his walke ful faste he gan to waiten,
 If knight or squyr of his company
 Gan for to sike, or let his eyin baiten
 On any woman, that he coude espie,
 Then he would smile, and holde it a folie,
 And say him thus: O Lorde she slepith softe
 For love of The, whan thou turnist ful ofte.

I have herde tel pardieux of your living,
 Ye lovirs, and of your leude observaunce,
 And whiche a labour folke have in winning
 Of love, and in the keping whiche doutaunce,
 And whan your pray is lost, wo and penaunce.
 O very folis! blinde and nice be ye,
 There is not one can ware by othir be.

And with that worde he gan cast up his browe
 Ascaunce, lo! is this not wisely isproken?
 At whiche the God of Love gan lokin rowe
 Right for dispite, and shope him to be wroken,
 He kidde anon his bowe was not to broken,
 For sodainly he hitte him at the full,
 And yet as proude a peccocke can he pul.

O blindè worlde! o blinde entencioun!
 How oftin fallith al th' effeete contraire
 Of surquedrie aud foule presumpcioun?
 For caught is proude, and caught is debonaire;
 This Troilus is clombin on the staire,
 And litil wenith that he mote discende,
 But al day failith thing that folis wende.

As proude bayard beginnith for to skippe
 Out of the way (so prickith him his corne)
 Till he a lashe have of the longe whippe,
 Than thinkith he, though I prauce al beforne
 First in the traife, full fatte and newe ishome,
 Yet am I but an horse, and hors'is lawe
 I must endure, and with my feris drawe:

So fared it by this fiers and proude knight,
 Though he a worthy king's sonne were,
 And wenid that nothing had had such might,
 Ayenst his wil that should his herte stere,
 Yet with a loke his hert ywoxe on fire,
 That he, that now was most in pride above,
 Woxe sodainly moste subject unto love.

Forthy ensample takith of this man,
 Ye wise, proude, and worthy folkis all,
 To skorning love, whiche that so sone can

The

The fredome of your hertis to him thral,
For evir was, and evir shall befall,
That love is he that al thingis may binde,
For no man maie fordo the law of kinde.

That this be sothe, hath previd. and doth yet,
For this (trowe I) ye knowin al and some, 240
Men redin nat that folke han gretir wit
Than thei, that han ben most with love inome,
And strengist folke ben therwith ovircome,
The worthyist and gretist of degre,
This was, and is, and yet man shal it se.*

And truiliche it fitte well to be so,
For aldirwist han therwith ben plesed,
And thei that han ben aldirmoste in wo
With love, han ben comfortid most and esed,
And ofte it hath the cruill herte apesed, 250
And worthy folke made worthyir of name,
And causith most to dredin vice and shame.

Now sith it may nat godely be withstonde,
And is a thing so vertuouus in kinde,
Ne grudgith nought to love for to ben bonde,
Sithe as him selvin list he may you binde,
The yerde is bette that bowin wol and winde,
Than that that brek; and therefore I you rede,
Folowith him, that so well can you lede.

But for to tellin forth in speciall 260
As of this king's sonne, of whiche I tolde,
And levin othir thing collaterall,
Of him thinke I my tale forth to holde,
Bothe of his joye, and of his caris colde,
And all his werke, as touching this matere,
For I it gan, I wol therto refere.

Within the temple wente him forth playing
This Troilus, with every wight about,
On this lady, and now on that loking,
Wherefo she were of toune, or of without; 270
And upon case befel, that through a rout
His eye ypercid, and so depe it went,
Til on Creseide it smote, and there it stent;

And sodainly for wondir wext astoned,
And gan her bet beholde in thrifty wise;
O mercy God! thought he, where hast thou wonned,
That arte so faire, and godely to devise?
Therwith his hert began to sprede and rife,
And softe he sighid, lest men might him here,
And caught ayen his formir playing chere. 280

She n'as nat with the leste of her stature,
But al her limmis so wel answering
Werin to womanhode, that creature
Was never lasse mannish in fering,
And eke the pure wise of her mening
She shewid wel, that men might in her gesse
Honour, estate, and womanly noblesse.

Tho Troilus right wondir wel withall
Gan for to like her mening and her chere,
Whiche somdele deignous was, for she let fal 290
Her loke alite a side, in suche manere
Ascauncis, what may I nat stonidin here?
And afir that her loking gan she light,
That never thought him sene so gode a sight.

And of her loke in him there gan to quicken
So grete desire, and suche affectioun,
That in his hert's bottom gan to sticken
Of her his fixe, and depe impressioun,
And though he erst had porid up and down,

Than was he glad his hornis in to shrink, 300
Unnethis wist he how to loke or winke.

Lo! he that lete him selvin so conning,
And scornid 'hem that lov'is painis drienyng,
Was ful-unware that love had his dwelling
Within the subtil streamis of her eyen,
That sodainly him thought that he selte dienyng
Right with her loke the spirite in his herte!
Blessid be love, that thus can folke convert.

She thus in blake loking to Troilus
Ovir al thing he stode for to beholde, 310
But his desire, ne wherefore he stode thus,
He neithir chere made, ne worde thereof tolde,
But from aserre, his manir for to holde,
On othir thing somtime his loke he cast,
And este on her, while that the service last.

And afir this, not fully all awaked,
Out of the temple esliche he wente,
Repenting him that evir he had japed
Of lov'is folke, lest fully the discente 320
Of some fil on him self; but what he mented
Leste it were wiste on any manir side,
His wo he gan dissimulin and hided.

Whan he was fro this temple thus departed,
He streight anone unto his palais turneth,
Right with her loke thorough shottin and darted,
Al frainith he in luste that he sojourneith,
And all his chere and speche also he abnonmeth,
And aie of lov'is servauntes every while
Himselfe to wrie, at 'hem he gan to smile. 330

And sayd, ah Lord! so ye live all in lust,
Ye lovirs, for the conningist of you,
That servith most ententifliche and best,
Him tite as oft in harme therof as prowel,
Your hire is quite ayen, ye God were howd,
Not wel for wel, but skorne for gode service,
In faithe your ordir is ruled in gode wise.

In no certaine ben your observances,
But it in a few sely pointis be,
Ne nothing asketh so gret attendaunces 340
As doeth your laie, and that knowin al ye,
But that is not the worst, as mote I The,
But tolde I which were the worst point, I leve,
Al faide I sothe, ye woldin at me greve.

But take this; that ye lovirs ofte eschewe,
Or ellis done of gode entencion,
Ful ofte thy lady wol it misseconstrewe,
And deme it harme in her opinion,
And yet if she for othir encheson
Be wroth, then shalt thou have a groin anone, 350
Lorde! wel is him that may bene of you one.

But for al this, whan that he seeth his time,
He held his pees, non othir bote him gained,
For love began his fethirs so to lime,
That wel unneth unto his folke he fained
That othir besy nedis him distrained,
So, wo was him, that what to done he n'ist,
But bad his folke to gone where as 'hem list.

And whan that he in chambre was alone,
He doune upon his bedd'is fete him sette, 360
And first he gan to like, and este to grone,
And thought aie on her so withoutin lette,
That as he satte and woke, his spirite mette
That he her laugh, and temple, and all the wise
Right of her loke, and gan it newe avise.

Thus

Thus gan he make a mirroure of his minde,
 In whiche he saugh all wholly her figure,
 And that he wel coude in his hert yfinde.
 It was to him a right gode avinture
 To love suche one, and if he did his cure, 370
 To servin her, yet might he fal in grace,
 Or els for one of her servauntis pace :

Imagining, that he travaille nor grame
 Ne might for so godely an one be lorne,
 As she, ne him for his desire no shame,
 Al were it wile, but in prife and upborne
 Of allè lovirs, wel more than beforne,
 Thus argumentid he, in his ginning,
 Ful unavisid of his wo comming.

Thus toke he purpose lov'is crafte to sewe, 380
 And thought that he would workin privily,
 First for to hide all his desire in mewes,
 From every wight iborne, all uttirly,
 But he might ought recovered ben therby,
 Remembring him, that love to wide iblowe
 Telt bittir frute, although swete fede be sowe.

And ore al this, ful mokil more he thought
 What for to speke, and what to holdin inne,
 And what to artin her to love he fought, 390
 And on a songe anone right to beginne,
 And gan loude on his sorowe for to winne,
 For with gode hope he gan fully assente
 Creseida for to love, and nought repente.

And of his songe not onely his sentence,
 (As write mine auctour callid Lolius)
 But plainely save our tong'is difference,
 I dare wel say, in al that Troilus
 Saied in his songe, lo! every word right thus,
 As I shal saine, and who so list it here,
 Lo! next this verse, he may it findin here. 400

The songe of Troilus out of Petrarche.

If no love is, o God what fele I so?
 And if love is, what thing and whiche is he?
 If love be gode, from whence comith my wo?
 If it be wicke, a wondir thinkith me,
 Whan every turment and adversite
 That cometh of him, may to me savery thinke;
 For aye more thurst I, the more that I drinke.

And if that at mine ownè lust I brenne,
 From whence comith my wailing and my pleinte?
 If harme agre me, wherto plaine I thenne? 410
 I n'ot nere why unwery that I feinte;
 O quickè deth, o swete harme so queinte,
 How may I se in me soche quantite,
 But if that I consente that it so be?

And if that I consente, I wrongfully
 Complaine iwis, thus possid to and fro,
 As sterile's wight is in a bote, am I,
 Amide the se, atwixin windis two,
 That in contrarie stondin evirmo?
 Alas! what is this wondir maladie? 420
 For hete of colde, for colde of hete I die.

And to the God of love thus sayid he
 With pitous voice, O Lorde now your'is is My spirite, whiche that oughtin your'is be,
 You thonke I, Lord, that han me brought to this,
 But whethir goddesse or woman iwis
 She be, I n'ot whiche, that ye do me serve,
 But as her man I wol aie live and sterve.

Ye stondin in her eyin mightily,
 As in a place unto your vertue digne, 430
 Wherfore O Lord, if my service or I
 May likin you, so bethe me to benigne,
 For minè estate royal here I resignè
 Into her honde, and with ful humble chere
 Become her man, as to my lady dere.
Endeth the Songe.

In him ne deigned to sparin blode royall
 The fire of love, wherfro may God me blesse,
 Ne him forbare in no degre, for all
 His vertue, or his excellent prowesse;
 But helde him as his thrall lowel in distresse, 440
 And brende him so in sondrie wise aie newe,
 That sixty times a day he loste his hewe.

So muchill daie fro daie his ownè thought
 For luste to her gan quickin and encrese,
 That everiche othir charge he sette at nought;
 Forthy ful oftin, his horte fire to cese,
 To sene her godely loke he gan to prese,
 For therby to ben esid wel he wende,
 And aie the nere he was, the more he brende.

For aie the nere the fire the hottir is, 450
 This (trowe I) knowith al this company;
 But were he ferre or nere, I dare saie this,
 By night or daie, for wisedome or folie,
 His herte, whiche that is his brest'is eye,
 Was aie on her, that fairir was to sene
 Than evir was Helein, or Polyxene.

Eke of the daie there passid nat an houre,
 But to himself a thousande times he saide,
 God godely, to whom I serve and laboure
 As best I can, now would to God, Creseide, 460
 Ye wouldin on me rue, er that I deide,
 My dere herte alas! mine hele and my hewe
 And life is loste, but ye woll on me rewe.

All othir dredis werin from him fledde,
 Bothe of th' assiege, and his salvacion,
 Ne' in his desire none othir fancy bredde,
 But argumentes to this conclusion,
 That she on him would han compassion,
 And he to ben her man, while he maie dure,
 Lo here his life, and from his death his cure! 470

The sharpè shouris fell of armis preve
 That Hector or his othir brethrin didden,
 Ne made him onely therefore onis meve,
 And yet was he, wher so men went or ridden,
 Found one the best, and lengist time abiden.
 There peril was, and eke did suche travail
 In armis, that to thinke it was mervaile.

But for none hate he to the Grekis had,
 Ne also for the rescous of the toun,
 Ne made him thus in armis for to mad, 480
 But onely lo; for this conclusioun,
 To likin her the bet for his renoun,
 Fro daie to daie in armis so he spedde,
 That all the Grekis as the deth him dredde.

And fro this forthe tho rest him love his slepe,
 And made his mete his foe, and eke his sorow
 Gan multiplie, that who so tokè kepe,
 It shewid in his hewe both even and morow,
 Therefore a title he gan him to borowe
 Of othir sickenesse, lest men of him wende, 490
 That the hote fire of cruill love him brende;

And

And faied he by a fevir, fared amis;
But how it was certain I cannot fay,
If that his Ladie understode nat this,
Or fainid her she n'ist, one of the tweie;
But well rede I, that by no manir weie
Ne semid it as if she on him rought,
Or of his paine, what so evir he thought.

But than yfelt this Troilus soche wo,
That he was wel nigh wode; for aie his drede 500
Was this, that she some wight had lovid so,
That ner of him she would han takin hede,
For whiche him thought he felte his herte blede,
Ne of his wo ne durst he nought begin
To tellin her, for all this worlde to win.

But whan he had a space left from his care,
Thus to himself full oft he gan to plain,
He faied, o sole, now art thou in the snare,
That whilom japedist at lov's pain,
Now art thou hent, now gnaw thin ownè chain, 510
Thou wert aie woned eche lovir reprehende
Of thing, fro which thou canst nat The defende.

What woll now every lovir saine of The
If this be wist? But er in thine absence
Laughin in scorne, and fain lo! there goth he;
That is the man of so grete sapience,
That helde us lovirs leste in reverence;
Now thanked be God, he maie gon on the daunce
Of hem, that love list feblly to avaunce.

But o thou wofull Troilus, God would, 520
(Sithe thou must lovin, through thy destine)
That thou beset wer of soche one, that should Know all thy wo, all lackid her pite!
But all so colde in love towardis The Thy ladie is, as frost in wintir Mone,
And thou fardon, as Snowe in fire is sone.

God would I were arivid in the port
Of deth, to whiche my sorowe woll me lede!
Ah Lorde! to me it were a grete comfort,
Than were I quite of languishing in drede, 530
For by my hidde sorowe iblowe in brede
I shall bejapid ben a thousande time,
More than that sole, of whose foly men rime.

But now helpe God, and ye my swete; for whom
I plaine, icought ye nevir wight so fast;
O mercie my dere herte, and helpe me from
The deth, for I, while that my life maie last,
More than my life woll love you to my last,
And with some frendly loke gladith me, swete,
Though nevir nothing more ye me behete. 540

These wordis, and full many' an othir mo
He spake, and callid evir in his pleinte
Her name, to tellin unto her his wo,
Till nigh that he in salte teris was dreinte;
All was for nought, she herd nat his compleinte;
And whan that he bethought on that folie,
A thousand folde his wo gan multiplie.

Bewailing in his chambir thus alone,
A frend of his, that callid was Pandare,
Came onis in unware, and herd him grone, 550
And sawe his frend in soche distresse and care,
Alas (qð he) who causith all this fare?
O mercie God! what unhap maie this mene?
Han now thus sone the Grekis made you lene?

Or hast thou some remorse of conscience?

And art now fall in some devocioun,
And waitist for thy sinne and thine offence,
And hast for ferde yought contricioun?
God save hem, that besiegid han our toun,
That so can laie our jolite on presse. 560
And bring our lustie tolke to holinesse.

These wordis faied he for the nonis all,
That with soche thing he might him angry maken,
And with his angre doen his sorowe fall
As for a time, and his corage awaken,
But well wist he, as ferre as tongis speken,
There n'as a man of gretir hardinesse
Than he, ne more desirid worthinesse.

What cas (qð Troilus) or what avinture
Hath gidid The to sene me languishing, 570
That am refuse of every cature?
But for the love of God, at my praying,
Go hence awaie, for certis my dying
Woll The difese, and I mote nedis deie,
Therefore go waite, there n'is no more to seie.

But if thou wene I be thus sicke for drede,
It is nat so, and therefore scorne me nought,
There is an othir thing I take of hede,
Wel more than ought the Grekis han yet wrought,
Which cause is of my deth for sorow and thought,
But though that I now tell it The ne leste,
Be thou nat wrothe, I hide it for the beste.

This Pandare, that nigh malt for wo and routh,
Full oftin faied alas! what maie this be?
Now frende (qð he) if evir love or trowth
Hath ben er this betwixin The and me,
Ne doe thou nevir soche a cruilte,
To hidin fro thy frende so grete a care,
Wost thou not well that it am I Pandare?

I woll partake with The of all thy paine, 590
If it so be I doe The no comfort,
As it is frend's right, sothe for to saine,
To enterpartin wo, as glad disport,
I have and shall, for true or false report,
In wrong and right iloved The all my live,
Hide not thy wo from me, but tell it blive.

Than gan this sorowfull Troilus to sike,
And faied him thus, God leve it be my best
To tellin The, for sithe it maie The like,
Yet woll I tell it The, though my herte brest, 600
And well wote I, thou maiest do me no rest,
But lest thou deme that I trust nat to The,
Now herkin frende, for thus it stant with me.

Love, ayenst the whiche who so defendith
Him selvin moste, him aldirlest availeth,
With dispeire so sorely me offendith,
That streight unto the deth mine hert yfaileth,
Thereto desire, so brenningly me' assaileth,
That to ben slain it were a gretir joie
To me, than king of Grece to be and Troie. 610

Suffisith this, my fully frende Pandare,
That I have faied, for now wotest thou my wo,
And for the love of God my coldè care
So hide it well, I tolde it ner to mo,
For harmis mightin folowen mo than two,
If it were wist, but be thou in gladnesse,
And let me sterve unknowe of my distresse.

How hast thou thus unkindely and long
Hid this fro me, thou sole? (qð Pandarus)
Paraventure thou maiest for soche one long, 620
A a a a That

That mine avise anone maie helpin us.
 This were a wondir thing (qð Troilus)
 Thou couldist ner in love thy selfin wisse,
 How devill maiest thou bringin me to blisse?

Ye Troilus, now herkin (qð Pandare)
 Though I ben nice, it happith oftin so,
 That one, that of axis doeth full ill fare,
 By gode counsaile can kepe his frend therfro;
 I have my self yseine a blinde man go
 Thereas he fell, which that could lokin wide; 630
A sole maie eke a wise man oftin gide.

A whetstone is no kerving instrument,
 But yet it makith sharpe kerving tolis,
 And if thou wost that I have aught miswent, Eschue thou that, for soche thing to schole is;
 Thus oftin wise men ben warm by folis?
 If thou so do, thy wit is well bewared;
By his contrary is every thing declared.

For how might evir swetnesse have be know
 To him, that nevir tastid bittirnesse? 640
 No man ne wot what gladnesse is I trowe,
 That nevir was in sorowe, or some distresse;
 Eke white by black, by shame eke worthines,
 Eche set by othir, more for othir semeth,
 As men maie sene, and so the wise it demeth.

Sithe thus of two contraries is o lore,
 I, that in love so oftin have assayed
 Grevaucis, ought to connin well the more
 Counsailein The, of that thou art dismaied,
 And eke The ne ought not ben ill apaied, 650
 Though I desirin with The for to bere
 Thine hevie charge, it shall the lasse The dere.

I wote well that it farid thus by me,
 As to thy brothir Paris an hierdesse,
 Whiche that yclepid was Oenone,
 Wrote in a complaint of her hevinesse,
 Ye sawe the lettir that she wrote, I gesse.
 Naie nevir yet iwis (qð Troilus)
 Now (qð Pandare) herkinith, it was thus.

Phœbus, that first found art of medicine, 660
 (Qð she) and coud in every wight's care
 Remedy and rede, by herbis he knewe fine,
 Yet to himself his conning was full bare,
 For love had him so boundin in a snare,
 All for the daughter of the king Admete,
 That all his craft ne coud his sorowe bete.

Right so fare I, unhappily for me,
 I love one best, and that me smertith sore,
 And yet paravinture I can rede The,
 And nat my self, repreve thou me no more, 670
 I have no cause I wote well for to sore,
 As doeth an hauke, that listith for to plaie,
 But to thine helpe yet somewhat can I saie.

And of o thing right sikir maiest thou be,
 That certain, for to dyin in the pain,
 That I shall nevir mo discovir The,
 Ne, by my trowth, I kepe nat to restrain
 The fro thy love, although it were Helein,
 That is thy brothir's wife, if I it wist,
 Be what she be, and love her as The list. 680

Therefore, as frendfulliche, in me assure,
 And tell me platte, what is thine encheson,
 And finall cause of wo, that ye endure,
 For doubtrith nothing, mine entencion
 N'as nat to you of reprehension

To speke as now, for no wight maie bireve
 A man to love, till that him list to leve.

And therefore wetith wel, that both ben viciis,
 Mistrustin all, or ellis all beleve,
 But well I wote, the mene of it no vice is, 690
 As for to trustin some wight is a preve
 Of trowth, and forthy would I fain remeve
 Thy wrong conceit, and do The some wight trust
 Thy wo to tell; and tell me if The lust.

The wise saith, wo is him that is alone,
 For and he fall, he hath none helpe to rise,
 And sithe thou hast a felowe, tell thy mone,
 For this ne is nought certain the next wife
 To winnin love, as techin us the wise,
 To waile and wepe, as Niobe the quene, 700
 Whose teris yet in marblen ben isene.

Let be thy weping, and thy drecinesse,
 And let us lessin wo, with othir speche,
 So maie thy wofull time semin the lesse,
 Delitith nought in wo, thy wo to seche,
 As doen these folis, that ther sorowes eche
 With sorowe, whan thei han misavinture,
 And lustin nought to sechin othir care.

Men saie, to wretche is consolacion,
 To have an othir felowe in his paine, 710
 That ought well to ben our opinion,
 For we bothe thou and I of love do plain,
 So full of sorowe am I, sothe to saie,
 That certainly, as now no more hard grace
 Maie sit on me, for why? there is no space.

If God wol, thou art nought agast of me,
 Lest I would of thy lady The begile;
 Thou wost thy self, whom that I love parde
 As I best can, gon sithin longè while,
 And sithe thou wost, I do it for no wile, 720
 And sithe I am he, that thou trustith most,
 Tel me somewhat, sens al my wo thou woste.

Yet Troilus, for al this, no worde saide,
 But long he laie as still, as he ded were,
 And aftir this, with siking he abraide,
 And to Pandarus voice he lent his ere,
 And up his eien cast he; and than in fere
 Was Pandarus, lesthe that in a frenseye
 He should yfal, or ellis sonè deye;

And said awake, full wondirliche and sharpe, 730
 What sloumbrist thou, as in a lethargy?
 Or art thou like an Assè unto the harpe,
 That herith soun, whan men the stringis ply,
 But in his mind of that no melodie
 Maie sinkin him to gladin, for that he
 So dull is, in his bestialite?

And with this Pandare of his wordis stent;
 But Troilus to him no thing answerde;
 For why, to tellin was nought his entent
 Ner to no man, for whom that he so ferde; 740
 For it is said, men makin ofte a yerde,
With which the makir is himselfe ibeten,
 In sondrie manir, as these wise men tretten.

And nameliche in his counsaile telling
 That touchith love, that ought to ben secre,
 For of himselfe it woll inough out spring,
 But if that it the bet governid be;
 Eke somtime it is crafte to seme to fle
 Fro thing, which in effecte men huntin faste.

Al this gan Troilus in his herte caste. 750

But nathèlesse, whan he had herde him crie
Awake, he gan to fike wondir fore,
And sayd, my frende, although that still I lie,
I nam not defe, now pece, and crie no more,
For I have herde thy wordis, and thy lore,
But suffir me my fortune to bewailen,
For thy proverbis may nought me availen;

Nor othir cure ne canst thou none for me,
Eke I nill not ben curid, I woll die;
What knowin I of the quene Niobe? 760
Let bethine olde enfamplis, I The prey.
No, frende, (qð Pandarus) therfore I sey
Suche is delite of folis to bewepe
Ther wo, but to fekin bote thei ne kepe.

Now know I that there refon in The faileth,
But tellith me, if I wiste what she were,
For whome that The al misavinture aileth,
Durste thou truff that I tolde it in her ere Thy wo, sith thou darst not thy selfe for fere,
And her besought on The to han some routh? 770
Why nay (qð he) by God and by my trouthe.

What, not as befily (qð Pandarus)
As though mine owne life lay in this nede?
Why no, parde, sir (qð this Troilus)
And why? for that thou shouldist nevir spede:
Wost thou that wel? ye that is out of drede, (Qð Troilus) for al that er ye come,
She wol to no suche wretche as I be womme.

(Qð Pandarus) alas! what may this be,
That thou dispairid art thus causilese? 780
What, liveth nat thy lady, benedicite!
How wost thou so, that thou art gracilese?
Suche evil is not alwaie botelesse,
Why put not thus impossible thy cure,
Sith thing to come is ofte in avinture.

I grauntin well that thou endurist wo,
As sharpe as doth he Tityus in hell,
Whose stomake foulis tirin evir mo,
That hightin vukuris, as bokis tell,
But I may not endurin that thou dwell 790
In so unskilful an opinioh,
That of thy wo n'is no curacion,

But onis n'it thou, for thy cowerde herte,
And for thine ire, and folish wilfulnesse,
For wantruff tellin of thy sorowe's smerte,
Ne to thine owne helpe do besmelle,
As moche as speke a word, ye more or lesse,
But liest as he that of life nothing retche,
What woman living coude love suche a wretche?

What may she demin othir of thy dethe, 800
Yf thou thus die, and she n'ot why it is,
But that for fere is yoldin up thy brethe,
For Grekis han besiegid us iwis?
Lord! which a thanke shalt thou have than of this?
Thus wol she saine, and al the toun atones,
"The wretch is ded, the divel have his bones.

Thou maiste alone here wepe, and crie, and knele,
And love a woman that she wote it nought,
And she wol quite it that thou shalt not fele,
Unknow unkift, and lost that is unfought; 810
What? many a man hath love ful dere abought,
Twenty wintir, that his lady ne wiste,
That never yet his ladie's mouthe he kiste.

What? should her therfore fallin in dispaire?
Or be recreaunte for his owne tene?
Or slain himself, all be his ladie faire?
Naie naie: but er in one be fresh and grene,
To serve and love ay his dere hert's quene,
And thinke it is a guerdone her to serve,
A thousande folde more, than he can deserve. 820

And of that wordè toke hede Troilus,
And thought anone, what folie he was in,
And how that sothe him sayid Pandarus,
That for to slaen himself might he not win,
But bothe to doen unmanhode and a sinne,
And of his deth his ladie nought to wite,
For of his wo, God wor, she knewe full lite.

And with that thought he gan ful fore to fike,
And saied, alas! what is me best to do?
To whom Pandare answerid, if The like, 830
The best is, that thou tell me all thy wo,
And have my trouthe, but if thou find it so
I be thy bote, or that it ben full long
To pecis doe me drawe, and sithin hong.

Ye, so saiest thou (qð Troilus) alas?
But God wor it is naught the rathir so,
Full harde it were to helpin in this caas,
For well finde I, that fortune is my fo,
Ne all the men that ridin con or go,
Maie of her cruill whele the harme withstond,
For as her list, she plaieth with fre and bond.

(Qð Pandarus) than blamist thou Fortune?
For thou art wroth ye now at erst I se;
Wost thou not wel that fortune is commune
To every manir wight, in some degre?
And yet thou hast this comfort, lo! parde,
That as her joyis motin ovirgone,
So mote her sorowes passin everichone.

For if her whele stint any thing to tourne,
Than cessith she fortune anone to be; 850
Now sith her whele by no waie maie sojourn,
What wost thou of her mutabilite
Right as thy self lust she woll done by The,
Or that she be nought ferre fro thine helping?
Paravinture thou hast cause for to sing.

And therfore wost thou what I The besече?
Let be thy wo, and touning to the grounde;
For who so liste have heling of his leche,
To him bihovith first unwrie his wounde;
To Cerberus in hell aie be I bound, 860
Were it eke for my sustir all thy sorowe,
By my gode will she should be thine to morowe.

Loke up I saie, and tell me what she is Anone, that I maie gone about thy nede;
Know I her aught, for my love tell me this,
Than would I hope the rathir for to spede,
Tho gan the veine of Troilus to blede,
For he was hit, and woxe all redde for shame.
Aha (qð Pandare) here beginnith game.

And with that worde he gan him for to shake, 870
And saied him thus, thefe, thou shalt her name tell:
But tho gan sely Troilus for to quake,
As though men should han had him into hel,
And saied alas! of all my wo the well
Than is my swetè foe callid Creside;
And well nigh with that word for fere he deide.

And whan that Pandare herd her namè nevèn,
Lorde!

Lorde! he was glad, and sayid, frend so dere,
Now fare a right, for Jov's name in heven,
Love hath beset The well, be of gode chere, 880
For of gode name, and wisdom, and manere
She hath inough, and eke of gentillnesse;
If she be faire, thou wost thy self I gesse.

Ne nevir seie I a more bounteous
Of her estate, ne gladdir: ne of speche
A frendlier, ne none more gracious
For to doe well, ne lasse had nede to seche
What for to doen, and all this bet to eche
In honour, to as ferre as she may stretche,
A king's herte semith by her's a wretche. 890

And forthy loke of gode comforte thou be,
For certainly the firste pointe is this
Of noble corage, and wele ordaine The,
A man to have pece with himselfe iwis,
So oughtist thou, for nought but gode it is
To lovin wel, and in a worthy place,
The ought not to clepin it happe, but grace.

And also thinke, and therwith gladdin The,
That sith thy lady vertuous is all,
So foloweth it, that there is some pite 900
Amongis all these othir in generall,
And for thei se that thou in speciall,
Requirist nought, that is ayen her name;
For vertue stretchith not himselfe to shame.

But wel is me, that evir I was borne,
That thou beset art in so gode a place,
For by my trouth in love I durst have sworne
The should nevir have tidde so faire a grace;
And wost you why? for thou were wont to chace
At love in scorne, and for dispite him call 910
Saint Idiote, lorde of these folis all.

How oftin hast thou madin thy nice japes,
And saied, that lov's servauntes everichone
Of nicete ben very Godd's Apes,
And some of them would monche ther mete alone
Ligging a bedde, and make 'hem for to grone,
And some thou saidist had a blaunche fevere,
And praidist God, thei should nevir kevere.

And some of 'hem toke on 'hem for the cold,
More than inough, so saidist thou full oft, 920
And some han fainid oftin time and tolde,
How that thei wakin, whan thei slepin soft,
And thus thei would have set 'hem self aloft,
And nathelless were undir at the laste.
Thus saidist thou, and japidist full faste.

Yet saidist thou, that for the more part
These lovirs wouldin speke in generall,
And thoughtin that it was a sikir art
For failing, for to' assayin ovir all.
Now maie I jape of The, if that I shall, 930
But nathelless, although that I should deie,
Thou ne art none of tho, I dare well seie.

Now bete thy brest, and saie to God of love,
Thy grace, O Lord, for now I me repent
If I misspake, for now my self I love;
Thus saie with all thine hert in gode entent;
(Qð Troilus) ah Lorde! I me consent,
And prae to The, my japis thou foryeve,
And I no more will jape, while that I live.

Thou saiest well (Qð Pandare) and now I hope 940
That thou the Godd's wrath hast al apesed,
And sithin thou hast weptin many' a drope,

And said soch thing, wherwith thy God is plesed,
Now would God nevir, but that thou were esed,
And thinke well she, of whom rest all thy wo,
Hereaftir maie thy comfort ben also.

For thilke ground, that berith the wedis wicke,
Bereth eke these wholsome herbis, as full oft,
And nexte to the foule nettle, rough and thicke,
The Rose ywexith sore, and smothe, and soft, 950
And next the valsey is the hill aloft,
And next the derke night is the glad morowe,
And also joie is next the fine of sorowe.

Now loke that well attempre be thy bridell,
And for the best aie suffre to the tide,
Or ellis all our labour is on idell,
He hastith well, that wisely can abide;
Be diligent and true, and aie well hide,
Be lustie, fre, persever in servise,
And all is well, if thou werke in this wise. 960

But he that partid is in every place,
Is no where whole, as writin clerkis wise,
What wondir is, if soche one have no grace?
Eke wost thou how it fareth of some servise?
As plant a tre or herbe, in sondrie wise,
And on the morowe pull it up as blive,
No wondir is, though it maie nevir thrive.

And sith the God of love hath The bestowed
In place digne unto thy worthinesse,
Stonde fast, for to a gode port hast thou rowed, 970
And of thy self, for any hevinesse,
Hope alwaie well; for but if drerinesse,
Or ovirhast doe our bothe labour shende,
I hope of this to makin a gode ende.

And wost thou why? I am the lasse asered
Of this matter with my nece for to trete,
For this have I herd saie of wise and lered,
Was nevir man or woman yet beyete,
That was unapt to suffre lov's here
Celestiall, or ellis love of kinde; 980
Forthy some grace I hope in her to finde.

And for to speke of her in speciall,
Her beaute to bethinkin, and her youthe,
It fit her nought to ben Celestiall
As yet, though that her bothè list and kouthe,
And truely it fit her well right nouth
A worthie knight to lovin and cherice,
And but she doe, I holde it for a vice.

Wherefore I am, and woll be aie redy
To painin me to do you this servise, 990
For bothe of you to plesin, this hope I
Hereaftirwardis, for ye ben bothe wise,
And connin counsaile kepe in soche a wise,
That no man shall the wisir of it be,
And so we maie ben gladdid alle thre.

And by my trouth I have right now of The
A gode conceit, in my wit as I gesse,
And what it is, I woll now that thou se,
I think that sithin Love of his godenesse 1000
Hath The convertid out of wickidnesse,
That thou shalt ben the beste post I leve,
Of all his laie, and moste his foin greve.

Ensamble why, se now these gretè clerkes,
That errin aldirmoste ayen all lawe,
And ben convertid from ther wickid werkes
Through grace of God, that lest 'hem to him drawe,
Than arne thei folk that han most God in awe,
And

And strengist faithid ben I undirstonde,
And con an errour aldirbest withstonde.

Whan Troilus had herde Pandare assented 1010
To ben his helpe, in loving of Creseide,
He wext of wo, as who saith, unturmented,
But hottir wext his love, and than he saide
With sobre chere, as though his herte yplaide,
Now blisfull Venus helpe, er that I sterve,
Of The, Pandare, I now some thanke deserve.

But derè frende, how shal my wo be lesse
Till this be done? and gode now tell me this,
How wolt thou saine of me and my distresse,
Lest she be wroth? this drede I most iwis; 1020
Or wol not herin al, how that it is?
Al this drede I, and eke for the manere,
Of The her Eme she n'il no suche thing here.

(Qð Pandarus) thou hast a ful grete care
Lest that the chorde may fal out of the mone,
Why lord! I hate of The the nicè fare,
Why, entremete of that thou hast to done,
For Godd's love, I bidè The a bone,
So let me' alone, and it shal be thy best.
Why frende (qð he) than done right as The left:

But herke, Pandare, o worde, for I ne wolde
That thou in me wendist so grete folie,
That to my lady I desirin sholde
That touchith harme, or any vilanie,
For dredilese me were levir to die
Than she of me aught ellis understode
But that, that might yfownin into gode.

Tho lough this Pandare, and anon answerde,
And I thy borow', fie no wight doth but so,
I ne raught not although she stode and herde 1050
How that thou saiest, but farewell, I wol go,
Adieu, be glad, God spede us bothè two,
Yeve me this labour, and this businesse,
And of my spede be thine al the swetnes.

Tho Troilus on knees gan doune to fall,
(And Pandare in his armis hente him fast)
And saide, now fie upon the Grekis all,
Yet parde, God shal helpin at the last,
And dredilese, if that my life may last,
And God toforne, lo! some of 'hem shal smerte,
And yet me' athinketh that this avaunt m'afterte.

And now Pandare, I can no more say,
But thou wise, thou wost, thou maist, thou art al,
My life, my deth, hole in thine honde I lay,
Helpe me (qð he) yes by my trouth I shal;
God yelde The frende, and this in special,
(Qð Troilus) that thou me recommaunde
To her, that may me to the deth commaunde.

This Pandarus tho, desirous to serve
His ful frende, tho saide in this manere, 1060
Farwel, and thinke I wol thy thanke deserve,
Have here my trouth, and that thou shalt well here,
And went his way, thinking on this matere,
And how he best might her befeche of grace,
And find a lesure therto, and a place.

For every wight that hath a house to found,
He rennith nat the werke for to beginne
With rakel honde, but he wol bide a stound,
And sende his hert's line out fro within,
Thus aldirfirst his purpose for to winne, 1070
As this Pandarus in his hert's thought
Did cast his werke full wisely, er he wrought.

But Troilus lay tho no lengir down,
But up anon gat upon his stede baie,
And in the felde he playid the lioun,
Wo was that Greke, that with him met that daie,
And in the tounè his manir tho forthe aie
So godely was, and gat him so in grace,
That eche him loved, that lokid in his face.

For he becamin the most frendly wight, 1080
The gentilist, and eke the mostè fre,
The trustyist, and one the bestè knight,
That in his time was, or ellis might be,
Ded were his japis, and his cruilte,
Ded his high porte, and all his manir straunge,
And eche of 'hem gan for a vertue change.

Now let us stint of Troilus a stounde,
That farith like a man, that hurt is fore,
And is somdele of aking of his wounde
Ylessid wel, but helid no dele more,
And as an esy pacient the lore
Abite of him that goth about his cure,
And thus he drivith forth his avinture.

Explicit liber primus.

OUT of these blackè wawis let us saile,
O winde, O winde; the weðir ginnith clere;
For in the se the bote hath suche travaile,
Of my conning that unneth I it stere;
This se clepe I the tempestous matere
Of depe dispaire, that Troilus was in;
But now of hope the kalendis begim.

O lady mine that callid art Clio,
Thou be my spede fro this forthe, and my muse
To rimè wel this boke til I have do, 10
Me nedith here none othir art to use,
For why? to every lovir I me' excuse,
That of no sentiment I this endite,
But out of latin in my tonge it write.

Wherefore I n'il have neithir thanke ne blame
Of all this worke, but praie you mekily
Disblamith me if any worde be lame,
For as mine auctour sayid, so say I:
Eke though I speke of love unfeelingly
No wondir is, for it nothinge of newe is, 20
A blinde man can not judgin wel in hewis.

I know eke that in forme of speche is change,
Within a thousande yere, and wordis tho,
That haddin prife, now wondir nice and straunge
Us thinkith 'hem, and yet thei spake 'hem so,
And spedde as wel in love, as men now do;
Eke for to winnin love; in sondry ages,
In sondry londis, sondry ben usages.

And forthy, if it happe in any wise
That here be any lovir in this place, 30
That herkeneth, as the story wol devise
How Troilus came to his ladie's grace,
And thinkith, so n'olde I not love purchase,
Or wondrith on his speche or his doying,
I n'ot, but it is to me no wondring.

For every wight, whiche that to Rome ywent
Halt nat o pathe, ne alway o manere;
Eke in some londe were al the game yshent,
Yf that men farde in love, as men don here,
As thus, in opin doying, or in chere, 40
In visiting, in forme, or said our sawes,
For thus men saine, eche countrè hath his lawes.
B b b b Eke

Eke scarfely ben there in this place thre,
 That have in love said like, and done in al,
 For to this purpose this maie likin The,
 And The right nought, yet al is done or shal;
 Eke some men grave in tre, some in stone wal,
 As it betide, but sith I have begonne,
 Mine authour shall I folow, as I konne.

Explicit Proœmium.

IN May, that mothir is of monethis glade,
 That the freshe flouris all, blew, white, and rede,
 Ben quicke ayen, that wintir ded had made,
 And full of baume is fleting every mede,
 Whan that Phœbus doth his bright bemis spred
 Right in the white Bole, right so it betidde
 As I shal singe, on May's day the thriddle

That Pandarus, for all his wise speche,
 Felte eke his parte of lov's thottis kene,
 That coude he ner so well of loving preche,
 It made his hewe al daie ful oftin grene, 60
 So shope it that him fill that day a tene
 In love, for whiche in wo to bedde he went,
 And made er it were day full many' a went.

The swallow Progne with a so'rowfull lay,
 Whan morow come, gan make her waimenting,
 Why she forshapin was; and ever lay
 Pandare abed, halfe in a slombering,
 Til she so nigh him made her waimenting,
 How Tereus gan forth her sustir take,
 That with the noise of her he gan awake, 70

And to call, and dresin him up to rise,
 Remembring him his arande was to done
 From Troilus, and eke his grete emprise,
 And cast, and knew in gode plite was the mone
 To done voiage, and toke his way full sone
 Unto his nec's paleis, there beside;
 Now Janus, God of entre, thou him gide!

Whan he was come unto his nec's place,
 Where is my lady, to her folke (qð he)
 And thei him tolde, and he forthe in gan pace,
 And founde two othir ladies sit and she
 Within a pavid parlour, and thei thre
 Herdin a maidin 'hem redin the geste
 Of the siege of Thebis, whilis 'hem leste.

Madame, qð Pandare, God you save and se,
 With al your boke, and al the companie.
 Eighe uncle mine, welcome iwis (qð she)
 And up she rose, and by the honde in hie,
 She toke him fast, and sayid, this night thrye,
 To gode mote it yturne, of you I mette, 90
 And with that word she down on benche him set.

Ye nece, ye shullin farin wel the bet,
 If God wol, al this yere (qð Pandarus)
 But I am sory that I have you let
 To herkin of your boke ye praisin thus,
 For Godd's love what faith it? tel it us,
 Is it of love? some gode ye may me lere.
 Uncle (qð she) your maistresse is nat here.

With that thei gonnin laugh, and tho she seide
 This romaunce is of Thebis, that we rede, 100
 And we have herd how that king Laius deide,
 Through Oedipus his sonne, and all the dede;
 And here we stintin at these letters rede,
 How the bishop, as the boke can ytell,

Amphiorax fill through the grounde to hell.

(Qð Pandarus) all this know I my selve,
 And alth' assiege of Thebis, and the care,
 For herof ben there makid bokis twelve:
 But let be this, and tell me how ye fare,
 Do' way your barbe, and shew your face bare, 110
 Do' way your boke, rise up and let us daunce,
 And let us done to May some observaunce.

Eighe, God forbid (qð she) what be ye mad?
 Is that a Widowe's life, so God you save?
 Parde you makin me right sore adrad,
 Ye bene so wilde, it semith as ye rave;
 It fat me wel bettir aie in a cave
 To bide, and rede on holy saintis lives,
 Let maidins gon to daunce, and yonge wives.

As evir thrive I (qð this Pandarus) 120
 Yet coude I tel a thing, to don you play:
 Now uncle dere (qð she) tellith it us
 For Godd's love, is than th' assiege aweie?
 I am of Grekis ferde, so that I deie:
 Nay nay (qð he) as evir mote I thrive,
 It is a thing wel bettir than fuche five.

Ye holy God (qð she) what thing is that?
 What? bettir than fuche five? eighe, nay iwis,
 For al this world ne can I redin what
 It should yben, some jape I trowe it is, 130
 And but your selvin tel us what it is
 My wit is for to' arede it al to kene,
 As helpe me God, I n'ot what that ye mene.

And I your borow, ne ner shal (qð he)
 This thing be tolde to you, as mote I thrive:
 And why so? uncle mine, why so? (qð she)
 By God (qð he) that wol I tel as blive,
 For proudir woman is there none on live,
 And ye it wiste, in al the toune of Troie,
 I ne jape nat, so evir have I joie. 140

Tho gan she to wondrin more than before
 A thousande folde, and doune her eyin cast,
 For nevir sithe the time that she was bore
 To knowin thing desirid she so fast,
 And with a fike she said him at the last,
 Now uncle mine, I n'il you not displese,
 Nor askin that, that may do you disese.

So aftir this, with many wordis glade
 And frendly talis, and with mery chere,
 Of this and that thei speke, and gonnin wade 150
 In many an unkouth, glad, and depe matere,
 As frendis done, whan thei ben met ifere,
 Til she gan askin him how Hector ferde,
 That was the toun's wall, and Grekis yerde.

Ful wel I thanke it God, saide Pandarus,
 Save in his arme he hath a litle wounde,
 And eke his freshe brothir Troilus,
 To the wise worthy Hector the secounde,
 In whom that every vertue liste habounde,
 As allè trouthe, and allè gentilnesse 160
 Wifedome, honour, fredome, and worthinesse.

In gode faith eme (qð she) that likith me
 Thei farin wel, God save 'hem bothè two;
 For trewliche I holde it a grete deinte,
 A king's sonne in armis wel to do,
 And be of gode condicions therto,
 For grete powir and moral vertue here
 Is selde ifene in one persone ifere,

In gode faith that is sothe (qð Pandarus)
 But by my trouth the king hath sonnis twey, 170
 That is to mene, Hector and Troilus,
 That certainly though that I should ydey
 Thei ben as voide of vicis, dare I sey,
 As any men that livin undir sonne,
 Ther might is wide iknow, and what thei conne.

Of Hector nedith nothing for to tel,
 In all this worlde there n'is a bettir knight
 Than he, that is of worthinesse the wel,
 And he wel more of vertue hath than might,
 This knowith many a wise and worthy knight. 180
 And the same prife of Troilus I sey,
 God helpe me so, I know not fuche twey.

Parde (qð she) of Hector that is sothe,
 And of Troilus the same thing trowe I,
 For dredileffe, men tellith that he dothe
 In armis day by day so worthily,
 And berith him here at home so gently
 To every wight, that al prife hath he
 Of them that me were levist praisid be.

Ye say right sothe iwis (qð Pandarus) 190
 For yesterday who so had with him ben,
 Mightin have wondrid upon Troilus,
 For never yet so thicke a swarme of been
 Ne flewe, as Grekis from him gannin fleen,
 And through the felde in every wight's ere
 There was no crie, but Troilus is there.

Now here, now there, he huntid 'hem so fast,
 There n'as but Grekis blode, and Troilus,
 Nowe him he hurt, and him al down he cast,
 Aye where he went it was arrayid thus, 200
 He was ther deth, and shelde and life for us,
 That as that day ther durst him none withstonde,
 While that he helde his bloody swerde in honde:

Therto he is the frendlyist man
 Of gret estate, that er I sawe my live:
 And where him list the best felowship can
 To fuche as him thinkith able to thrive.
 And with that word tho Pandarus as blive
 He toke his leve, and said I wol gon hen.
 Nay, blame have I myne uncle (qð she) then 210

What cilith you to be thus wery sone,
 And namiliche of women, wol ye so?
 Naie sittith doune, parde I have to done
 With you, to speke of wifdome er ye go;
 And every wight that was about 'hem tho
 That herde that, gan ferre awaie to stonde,
 While thei two had al that 'hem list in honde.

Whan that her tale al brought was to an ende
 Of her estate, and of her governaunce,
 (Qð Pandarus) now time is that I wende, 220
 But yet I say, arisith, let us daunce,
 And caste your widowe's habite to mischaunce,
 What listeth you thus your selfe to disfigure,
 Sithe you is tidde so glad an avinture?

But wel bethought; for love of God (qð she)
 Shal I nat wetin what ye mene of this?
 No, this thing askith lefir tho (qð he)
 And eke it me would full muche greve iwis,
 If I it tolde, and yet it toke amis,
 Yet were it bette my tonge to holdin stil, 230
 Than say a sothe, that were ayenst your wil.

For nece myne, by the goddesse Minerve,

And Jupiter, that makith the thonde'ring,
 And by the blisful Venus, that I serve,
 Ye ben the woman in this world living
 Withoutin paramours, to my weting,
 That I best love, and lothist am to greve,
 And that ye wetin wel your selfe I leve.

Iwis mine uncle (qð she) graunt mercy,
 Your frendship have I foundin evir yet, 240
 I am to no man beholdin trewly
 So muche as you, and have so litil quit;
 And with the grace of God, emforth my wit,
 As in my gilte I shal you ner offende,
 And if I have er this, I wol amende.

But for the love of God, I you besече,
 As ye be he, that I love most and triste,
 Let be to me your fremid manir speche,
 And saie to me your nece, what so you list.
 And with that worde her uncle anon her kist, 250
 And sayid, gladly my leve nece so dere,
 Take it for gode, that I shal say you here.

With that she gan her eyin doune to caste,
 And Pandarus to coughe began alite,
 And sayid: Nece alway lo! to the laste,
 How so it be, that some men 'hem delite
 With subtil art ther talis for t'endite,
 Yet for al that in ther entencion
 Ther tale is all for some conclusion.

And sithe the end is every tal's strength, 260
 And this matir is so behovily,
 What should I paint or drawin it on length
 To you that ben my frende so faithfully?
 And with that worde he gan right inwardly
 Beholdin her, and lokin in her face,
 And saide, on fuche a mirrour muche gode grace:

Than thought he thus; if I my tale endite
 Ought harde, or make a processe any while,
 She shal no favour have therin but lite,
 And trowe I would her in my wil begile,
 For tendir wittis wenin al be wile
 Wher as thei con nat plainliche undirstond;
 Forthy her wit to sounin wol I fonde;

And lokid on her in a besy wise,
 And she was ware that he behelde her so,
 Ah lorde! (qð she) so faste ye me avise,
 Sawe ye me ner er now? what say ye, no?
 Yes yes (qð he) and bet wol er I go;
 But by my trouth I thoughtin nowe, if ye
 Be fortunate, for now men shal it se:

For every wight some godely avinture
 Somtime is shape, if he it can receive,
 But if that he n'il take of it no cure,
 When that it cometh, but wilfully it weive,
 Lo, neither case, nor fortune him deceive,
 But right his ownè slouth and wretchidnesse,
 And fuche a wight is for to blame I gesse.

Gode avinture, O bellè nece have ye
 Ful lightly foundin, and ye conne it take;
 And for the love of God, and eke of me, 290
 Catche it anone, lest avinture yflake;
 What should I lengir processe of it make?
 Yeve me your hond, for in this world is none,
 If that you list, a wight so wel begon.

And sithe I speke of gode entencion,
 As I to you have tolde wel here before,
 And love as wel your honour and renoun

As

As any cature in the worlde iborne,
By al the othis that I have you sworne,
And ye be wrothe therfore, or wene I lie, 300
Ne shal I never sene you este with eie,

Beth nat agaste, ne quakith nat, wherto?
Ne chaungith nat for fere so your hewe,
For hardily the worst of this is do;
And though my tale as now be to you newe,
Yet trust alwaie ye shal me findin trewe,
And were it thing that me thought unfitting,
To you ne would I no such talis bring.

Nowe my gode eme, for Godd's love I pray,
(Qð she) come of and tel me what it is, 310
For bothe I am agast what ye wol say,
And eke me longith it to wit iwis,
For whethir it be wel, or be amis,
Say on, let me not in this fere ydwel;
So wol I done, now herkenith, I shal tel.

Now nece mine, the king's owne dere sonne,
The gode, the wise, the worthy, fresh and fre,
Whiche alway for to done wel is his wonne,
The noble Troilus so lovith The,
That but ye helpe it wol his bane ybe. 320
Lo! here is al, what shouldin I more fey?
Doth what you list, to make him live or dey.

But if ye let him dye, I wol stervin,
Have here my trouthe, nece, I n'il not lien,
Al should I with this knife my throte kervin;
With that the teris burst out of his eyen,
And saide, if that ye done us both to dien
Thus giltlesse, than have ye fishid faire,
What mendeth it you, though that we both apaire?

Alas! he whiche that is my lorde so dere, 330
That trewe man, that noble, gentle knight,
That naught desirith, but your frendly chere,
I se him dyin, there he goth upright,
And hastith him, with al his fullè might
For to ben slaine, if his fortune assente,
Alas that God you suche a beaute sente!

If it be so that ye so cruil be,
That of his deth you listith nought to retch,
That is so trewe and worthy, as we se,
No more than of a japir or a wretch, 340
If ye be suche, your beaute may nat stretch
To make amendes of so cruill a dede,
Avis ment is gode before the nede.

Wo worthe the faire Gemme that is vertulesse,
Wo worthe that herbe also that doth no bote,
Wo worth the beaute that is routhèlesse,
Wo worth that wight that trede eche undir fote,
And ye that ben of beaute croppe and rote,
If therwithal in you ne be no route,
Than is it harme ye livin by my trouthe. 350

And also thinke wel, that this is no gaude,
For me were levir, thou, and I, and he
Were hongid, than that I should ben his baude,
As high as men might on us al ife;
I am thine Eme, the shame were unto me
As wel as The, if that I should assent
Through mine abet that he thine honour shent.

Now undirstonde, for I you nought require
To binde you to him thorough no behest, 360
Save one that ye makin him bettir chere
Than ye han don er this, and more feste,
So that his life be savid at the leste.

This al and some is plainly our entente,
God helpe me so, I nevir othir mente.

Lo! this request is nought but skil iwis,
Ne doute of reson parde is there none,
I set the worst that ye dredin this is,
Men would wondir to sene him come and gone;
Ther ayenist answere I thus anone,
That every wight, but he be sole of kinde, 370
Wol deme it love of frendship in his minde.

What? who wol demin, though he se a man
To temple gon, that he th' imagis eteth?
Thinke eke, howe wel and wisely that he can
Governe himselfe, that he nothing foryeteth,
That wher he cometh, he pris and thonk him geteth,
And eke therto he shal come here so selde,
What force were it, though all the roun behelde?

Suche love of frendes reignith in al this toun;
And wrie you in that mantil evirmo; 380
And God so wis be my salvacioun
As I have saide, your best is to do so;
But gode nece, alway for to stint his wo,
So let your daungir, fugrid ben alite,
That of his deth ye be not al to wite.

Creseide, which that herde him in this wise,
Thought, I shal fele what he menith iwis;
Now Eme (qð she) what wouldin ye devise?
What is your rede, that I should done of this?
That is wel said, qð he, certaine best is 390
That ye him love aien for his loving,
As love for love is skilful guerdoning.

Thinke eke how elde wastith evèry hour
In eche of you a part of your beaute,
And therfore, er that age doth The devour
Go love, for olde there woll no wight love The,
Let this proverbe a lore unto you be,
*To late iware, qð beaute, whan it paste,
And elde ydauntith daungir at the laste.*

The king's sole is wont to crie aloud, 400
Whan that he thinketh a woman bereth her hie,
So longè mote ye livin, and all proude,
Til Crow's fete growin undir your eie,
And sende you than a mirrour in to prie,
In which that ye may se your face a morrowe,
Nece, I bid him wishin you no more sorowe.

With this he stinte, and cast adoune the hed,
And she began to brest and wepe anone,
And saide, alas! for wo, why n'ere I ded?
For of this world, the faith is al agone; 410
Alas! what shuldin straunge unto me done,
When he, that for my beste frende I wende,
Redith me love, who shulde it me defende?

Alas! I would have trustid doutiles,
That if that I, through my disavinture,
Had lovid eithir him, or Achilles,
Hector, or any othir manir cature,
Ye n'old have had no mercy ne mesure
On me, but alwaie had me in repreve;
This false worde alas! who may it leve? 420

What? is this al the joy, and al the fest?
Is this your rede? is this my blisful caas?
Is this the very mede of your behest?
Is this al paintid procèsse said (alas!)
Right for this fine? O lady mine Pallas, 430
Thou in this dredful cale for me purvey,
For so astonied am I, that I dey;

With

With that she gan ful so'rowfully to fike,
 Ah! may it be no bet? (qð Pandarus)
 By God I shal no more come here this weke, 430
 And God to-forne that am mistrustid thus,
 I fe wel now, ye settin lite of us,
 Or of our deth alas! I woful wretche,
 Might he yet live, of me were nought to retche.

O cruil God of Deth dispitous Marte,
 O furies thre of hel, on you I crie,
 So let me ner out of this house departe,
 Yf that I ment or harme or vilanie,
 But sithe I fe my Lorde mote nedis die,
 And I with him, here I me shrive and sey, 440
 That wickidly ye done us bothe to dey.

But sithe it likith you, that I be ded,
 By Neptunus, that God is of the fe,
 Fro this forthe shal I never etin bred
 Til that I mine own hert'is blode maie fe,
 For certaine I wol die, as sone as he;
 And up he sterte, and on his way he raught,
 Til she againe him by the lappe ycaught.

Creseide, which that wel nigh starfe for fere,
 So as she was aye the most ferefull wight 450
 That mightin be, and herde eke with her ere,
 And sawe the so'rowful ernest of the knight,
 And in his prayir sawe eke non unright,
 And for the harme eke that might fallin more
 She gan to rewe, and dredde her wondir fore,

And thus she thought, unhappis fallin thicke
 Al day for Love, and in fuche manir caas
 As men ben cruill in 'hem selfe and wicke;
 And if this man fle here himselfe, alas!
 In my presence, it n'il be no solas; 460
 What men would of it deme, I can nat say,
 It nedith me full slightly for to play.

And with a sorowful sighe she saide thrie,
 Ah lorde! me is betidde a sory chaunce,
 For mine estate lieth in a jeopardie,
 And eke mine Em'is life lieth in balaunce,
 But nathelless, with Godd'is govirnaunce
 I shal so done, mine honour shal I kepe,
 And eke his life, and stintin for to wepe.

Of harmis two the lesse is for to chese, 470
 Yet had I levir makin him gode chere
 In honour, than mine Em'is life to lese,
 Ye faine, ye nothing ellis me requere.
 No wis (qð he) mine ownè nece so dere:
 Now wel (qð she) and I woldon my paine,
 I shal mine herte ayen my lust constrain.

But that I n'il nat holdin him in honde,
 Ne love a man that can I naught ne may
 Ayenst my wil, but ellis wol I fonde,
 Mine honour save, plese him fro day to day, 480
 Therto, n'olde I not onis have saide nay,
 But that I dredde, as in my fantasie;
 But cesse cause, and aie cessith maladie.

But here I make a protestacion,
 That in this processe, if ye depir go,
 That certainly, for no salvacion
 Of you, though that ye stervin bothè two,
 Though al the worlde on o day be my fo,
 Ne shal I ner on him have othir routhe.
 I graunt it wel (qð Pandare) by my trouthe. 490

But maie I trustin well to you (qð he)

That of this thing that ye han hight me here
 Ye woll it holdin truely unto me?
 Ye, doutilefs, qð she, myne uncle dere;
 Ne that I shal have cause in this matere
 (Qð he) to plain, or aftir you to preche?
 Why no parde, what nedith more speche?

Tho fellin thei in othir talis glade,
 Till at the last, o gode Eme (qð she tho)
 For love of God whiche that us bothe ymade, 500
 Telle me how first ye wistin of his wo,
 Wot non of it but ye? he sayid no:
 Can he well speke of love (qð she) I preie?
 Tell me, for I the bet shal me purveie.

Tho Pandarus a litil gan to smile,
 And sayid: By my trowth I shal now tell;
 This othir daie, nat gon full longè while,
 Within the paleis gardin by a well
 Gan he and I well halfe a daie to dwell,
 Right for to spekin of an ordinaunce, 510
 How we the Grekis mightin disavaunce:

Sone after that begone we for to lepe,
 And castin with our dartis to and fro,
 Till at the last, he sayid, he would slepe,
 And on the grasse adoune he laied him tho;
 And I aftir gan romin to and fro,
 Till that I herd, as I walkid alone,
 How he began full wofully to grone.

Tho gan I stalke him full softly behinde,
 And sikirly the sothè for to faine, 520
 As I can clepe ayen now to my minde,
 Right thus to love he gan him for to plain;
 He sayid: lorde, have routh upon my pain,
 All have I ben rebell in mine entent,
 Now, (Mea culpa) Lorde, I me repent.

O God, that at thy disposicion
 Ledist forth the fine, by just purveiaunce,
 Of every wight, my lowe confession
 Accept in gre, and sende me soche penaunce
 As likith The, put from me disperaunce, 530
 That maie my ghost departe alwaie fro The,
 Thou be my shilde, for thy benignite.

For certis, Lorde, so fore hath she me wounded,
 That stode in blacke, with loking of her eyen,
 That to mine hert'is botome it is founded,
 Through which I wot, that I must nedis dien;
 This is the worst, I dare me nought bewrien,
 And well the hotir ben the g'ledis rede,
 That men hem wrien with afflin pale and ded.

With that he smote his hedde adoune anone, 540
 And gan to muttre, I nat what truely,
 And I with that gan still awaie to gone,
 And lete thereof, as nothing wist had I,
 And come again anon, and stode him by,
 And saied awake, ye slepin all to long,
 It semith me nought that love doth you wrong,

That slepin so, that no man maie you wake;
 Who seie evir er this so dull a man?
 Ye frende (qð he) doe ye your hedd'is ake
 For love, and let me livin as I can; 550
 But though that he for wo was pale and wan,
 Yet made he tho as freshe a countenance,
 As though he should have led the newè daunce.

This passid forth till now this othir daie
 It fell that I come roming all alone
 Into his chambre, and founde how that he laie
 C c c c Upon

Upon his bedde: but man so fore grone
 Ne herd I nevir, and what was his mone
 Ne wist I nought, for as I was comming
 All sodainly he left his complaining. 560

Of whiche I toke somewhat suspection,
 And nere I come, and founde him wepe fore,
 And God so wise be my salvacion
 As I had nevir routhe of nothing more,
 For neithir with engine, ne with no lore
 Unnethis might I fro the deth him kepe,
 That yet fele I mine herte for him wepe.

And God wot nevir sith that I was borne
 Was I so busie no man for to preche,
 Ne nevir was to wight so depe ysworne, 570
 Er he me told who might yben his leche,
 But not to you reherfin al his speche,
 Or all his wofull wordis for to sowne,
 Ne bid me nought, but ye woll se me swone,

But for to save his life, and ellis nought,
 And to non harm of you, thus am I driven,
 And for the love of God that us hath wrought
 Soche chere him doth, that he and I maie liven.
 Now have I plat to you mine herte yshriven,
 And sith ye wote that mine entent is clene, 580
 Take hede thereof, for none evill I mene.

And right gode thrift I pray to God have ye,
 That han soche one icaught withoutin net,
 And be ye wise, as ye be faire to se,
 Well in the ring than is the Rubie set,
 There werin nevir two so well imet,
 Whan ye ben his all whole, as he is your;
 The mighty God us graunt to se that hour!

Naie thereof spake I nat: A ha (qð she)
 As helpe me God, ye shendin every dele. 590
 A mercie derè nece, anon (qð he)
 What so I spake, I ment it nought but wele,
 By Mars the God, that helmid is of stele,
 Now beth not wroth, my blode, my necè dere.
 Now well (qð she) foryevin be it here.

With this he toke his leve, and home he went,
 Ye Lorde how he was glad, and well bigon!
 Creseide arose, no lengir she ne stent,
 But streight into her closet went anon,
 And set her doune, as still as any stone, 600
 And every worde gan up and doune to winde,
 That he had saied, as it came her to minde.

And woxe somedeles astonied in her thought,
 Right for the newè case, but whan that she
 Was full avisid, tho found she right nought
 Of perill, why that she oughte aferde be,
 For man mai love of possibilite
 A woman so, that his herte maie to breft,
 And she nat love ayen, but if her left.

But as she sat alone, and thoughtè thus, 610
 In field arose a skirmish all without,
 And men cried in the strete, se Troilus
 Hath right now put to flight the Grekis rout,
 With that gonne all her meine for to shout,
 A, go we se, cast up the gatis wide,
 For through this strete he mote to paleis ride,

For othir waie is fro the yatis none
 Of Dardanus, there opin is the cheine,
 With that come he, and all his folke anone
 An esie pace riding, in routis tweine, 620
 Right as his happie daie was (sothe to seine)

For whiche men saith maie not distourbid be
 That shall betidin of necessite.

This Troilus sat on his baie stede
 All armid, save his hedde, full richily,
 And woundid was his horse, and gan to blede,
 On whiche he rode a pace full softly,
 But soche a knightly sight lo! truily
 As was on him, was nat withoutin faile
 To loke on Mars, that God is of battaille. 630

So like a man of armis, and a knight
 He was to sene, fulfilled of high prowesse,
 For bothe he had a bodie, and a might
 To doen that thing, as well as hardinesse,
 And eke to sene him in his gerè dresse,
 So freshe, so yong, so weldy femid he,
 It was an hevin on him for to se.

His helme to hewin was in twentie places,
 That by a tiffue hong, his backe behinde,
 His shelde to dased with swerdis and with maces, 640
 In whiche men might many an arowe finde,
 That thirid had both horne, and nerfe, and rinde;
 And aie the peple cried, here cometh our joie,
 And, next his brothir, holdir up of Troie.

For which he wext a little redde for shame,
 When he so herd the peple on him crien,
 That to beholde it was a noble game
 How sobirliche he cast adoune his eyen.
 Creseide anone gan all his chere espien,
 And let it in her herte so softly sinke, 650
 That to her self she sayed, ho! give me drinke.

For of her ownè thought she woxe al redde,
 Remembring her right thus, lo! this is he,
 Whiche that mine uncle swercth he mote be dedde
 But I on him have mercie and pite;
 And with that ilkè thought for pure shame she
 Gan in her hedde to pull, and that as fast,
 While he and all the peple forth by past:

And gan to cast, and rollin up and down
 Within her thought his excellent prowesse, 660
 And his estate, and also his renoun,
 His witte, his shape, and eke his gentillesse,
 But mooste her favour was, for his distresse
 Was all for her, and thought it were a routh
 To slaen soche one, if that he mentè trouth.

Now might some envious wight janglin thus,
 This was a sodain love, how might it be
 That she so lightly lovid Troilus?
 Right at the first sight of him: yea parde?
 Now whoso saied so, mote he nevir the, 670
 For every thing a ginning hath it nede
 Er all be wrought, withoutin any drede.

For I saie nat that she so sodainly
 Yafe him her love, but that she gan encline
 To liken' him tho, and I have told you why;
 And aftir that, his manhode and his pine
 Made love within her herte for to mine,
 For whiche by proceffe and by gode service
 He wanne her love, and in no sodain wife.

And also blisful Venus wele arayed 680
 Sate in her sevenith house of hevin tho
 Disposid wele, and with aspectis payed,
 To helpin sely Troilus of his wo;
 And sothe to sayne, she n'as nat all a foe
 To Troilus, in hys natyvyte,
 God wote, that wele the sonir sped in he.

Now

Now let us stinte of Troilus a throwe,
That ridith forth, and let us tournè fast
Unto Creseide, that heng her hedde full lowe,
There as she satte alone, and gan to cast 690
Wheron she would apoinct her at the last,
If it so were, her Eme ne would ycesse
For Troilus upon her for to presse.

And lorde! so she gan in her thought argue
In this matter, of whiche I have you told,
And what to doen best were, and what eschue,
That plitid she ful oft in many fold;
Now was her hertè warme, now was it cold;
And what she thought of, somewhat shal I write,
As mine aucthour listith to me t'endite. 700

She thought wele first, that Troilus person
She knewe by sight, and eke his gentilnesse,
And thus she said, all were it nought to doen
To graunt him love, yet for his worthinesse
It wer honor with plaie, and with gladnesse,
In honeste with suche a Lorde to dele,
For mine estate, and also for his hele.

Eke well wote I, my king's sonne is he,
And sith he hath to se me soche delite,
If I would uttirliche his sight yflie, 710
Par'aventure he might have me in dispite,
Thorough whiche I might stondin in worfe plite,
Now were I not wise, me hate to purchase
Withoutin nede, there I maie stand in grace.

In every thing, I wot, there lieth mesure;
For though a man forbiddith dronkinesse,
He nought forbiddith that every cature
Be drinkilesse, for alwaie, as I gesse:
Eke sith I wot for me is his distresse,
I ne ought not for that thing him dispise, 720
Sith it is so, he menith in gode wise.

And eke I knowe of longè time agone
His thewis gode, and that he n'is not nice,
No vantour saine men, certain he is none,
To wife is he to doen so grete a vice,
Ne als I n'ill him nevir so cherice
That he shall make avaunt by justè cause,
He shall me nevir binde in soche a clause.

Now set a case, the hardist is iwis
Men mightin demin that he lovith me, 730
What dishonour were it unto me this?
Maie I him let of that? why naie, parde;
I knowe also, and alwaie here and se,
Men lovin women al this toun about,
Be thei the wers? Why naie, withoutin doubt.

I thinke eke how he worthy is to have
Of all this noble toun the thriftyist
That woman is, if she her honour save,
For out and out he is the worthyist,
Save only Hector, whiche that is the best; 740
And yet his life lieth all now in my cure,
But soche is love, and eke mine avinture.

Ne me to love a wondir is it nought,
For well wote I my self, so God me spede,
All woll I that no man wist of this thought,
I am one of the fairist out of drede
And godelyist, who so that takith hede,
And so men saine, in all the toun of Troie,
What wondir is though he of me have joie?

I am mine ownè woman well at ese 750

I thanke it God, as aftir mine estate,
Right yong, and stond untied in lustie lese.
Withoutin jelousie, and soche debate
Shall no husbonde saine unto me checke mate,
For eithir thei ben full of jelousie,
Or maistirfull, or lovin novelrie.

What shall I doen? to what fine live I thus?
Shall I not love, in case if that me lest?
What? pardieux I am not religious;
And though that I mine hertè set at rest 760
Upon this knight, this is the worthiest,
And kepe alwaie mine honor, and my name,
By all right it maie doe to me no shame.

But right as whan the sunnè shinith bright
In March, that chaungith oftintime his face,
And that a cloud is put with winde to flight,
Whiche ovirsprat the Sunne, as for a space,
A cloudy thought gan through her soule pace,
That ovirspradde her brightè thoughtis all,
So that for fere almoste she gan to fall. 770

That thought was this: alas! sith I am fre,
Should I now love, and put in jeopardie
My sikirnesse, and thrallin liberte?
Alas: how durst I thinkin that folie?
Maie I not well in othir folke asprie
Ther dredfull joie, ther constreint, and ther pain,
Ther lovith non, that ne hath why to plain.

For love is yet the mostè stormie life
Right of himself, that evir was begonne;
For ever some mistrust, or some nice strife 780
There is in love, some cloud ovir the Sunne;
Thereto we wretchid women nothing conne,
Whan us is wo, but wepe, and sit, and thinke,
Our wretche is this, our ownè wo to drinke.

Also these wickid tonguis ben so prest
To speke us harme; eke men ben so untrue,
That right anon as cessid is ther lest,
So cessith love, and forth to love anewe;
But harme idoe is doen, who so it rue;
For though these men for love 'hem first torende;
Full sharp beginning brekith oft at ende.

How oft in time hath it yknowin ben,
The trefon, that to women hath be doe!
To what fine is soche love, I can not sene,
Or where becomith it, whan it is go,
There is no wight that wote, I trowè so,
Wher it becometh, lo, no wight on it sporneth;
That erst was nothing, into nothing turneth.

How busie (if I love) eke must I be
To plesin him, that jangle' of love, and deme, 800
And coyen 'hem, that thei saie no harm of me!
For though there be no cause, yet 'hem may seme
Al befor harme, that folke ther frendis queme;
And who maie stoppin every wickid tong?
Or sounne of bellis, while that thei ben rong?

And after that her thought gan for to clere,
And saied, he whiche that nothing undirtaketh,
Nothing achewith, be him loth or dere;
And with an othir thought her hert yquaketh,
Than slepith hope, and aftir drede awaketh, 810
Now hote now cold, but thus betwixin twey
She rist her up, and went her for to play.

Adoune the staire anon right tho she went Into her gardine, with her necis thre,
And up and down thei madin many' a went,
Flexippe'

Flexippe' and she, Tarbe', and Antigone,
To playin, that it joie was to se;
And othir of her women a grete rout
Her folowed in the gardine all about.

This yerde was large, and railed al the aleyes, 820
And shadowed wel with bloumy bowis grene,
And benchid newe, and sondid all the weyes,
In whiche she walkith arme in arme betwene,
Till at the last Antigone the shene
Gan on a Trojan song to singin clere,
That it an hevin was her voice to here.

She saied: O love, to whom I have, and shal
Ben humble subject, true in mine entent,
As I best can, to you, Lorde, yeve I all
For evirmore mine hert'is love to rent; 830
For nevir yet thy grace to no wight sent
So blisfull cause as me, my life to lede
In alle joie and suretie, out of drede.

The blisfull God hath me so well beset
In love iwis, that all that berith life
Imagin in ne could how to be bet;
For, Lorde, withoutin jelousie or strife
I love one, whiche that moste is ententife
To servin well, unwerily' or unfained
That evir was, and lest with harme distained, 840

As he that is the well of worthinesse,
Of trouth the ground, mirroure of godelihedde,
Of wit Apollo, stone of sikirnesse,
Of virtue rote, of luste findir and hedde,
Thorough whiche is all sorowe fro me dedde,
Iwis I love him best, so doeth he me,
Now gode thrift have he, where so er he be.

Whom shoud I thankin but you, God of love
Of all this blisse, in whiche to bathe I ginne?
And thankid be ye, Lorde, for that I love, 850
This is the righte life that I am inne,
To flemin all manir of vice and sinne,
This doeth me so to vertue for to' entende,
That daie by daie I in my will amende.

And who that saith that for to love is vice
Or thraldome, though he fele in it distresse,
He either is envious, or right nice,
Or is unmightie for his shreudenesse
To lovin; for soche manir folke I gessie
Diffamin love, as nothing of him knowe, 860
They speke of love, but nevir bent his bowe.

What is the Sunne worfe of his kinde right,
Though that a man, for feblese of his eyen,
Maie not endure on it to se for bright?
Or love the worfe, that wretchis on it crien?
No wele is worth, that maie no sorowe drien;
And forthy, who that hath an hedde of verre,
Fro cast of stonis ware him in the werre.

But I with al mine herte, and al my might,
As I have saied, woll love unto my last 870
My owne dere herte, and all mine owne knight,
In whiche mine herte ygrowin is so fast,
And his in me, that it shall evir last:
All did I dred at first to love begin,
Now wote I well there is no pain therein.

And of her song right with that worde she stent,
And therewithall, now nece (qð Creseide)
Who made this song now with so gode entent?
Antigone answerde anon, and saide,
Madame iwis it was the godelyist maide 880

Of grete estate in all the toun of Troie,
Who led her life in moste honour and joie.

Forsothe so it ysemith by her song,
Quoð tho Creseide, and gan therwith to like,
And sayid: Lorde! is there soche blisse emong
These lovirs, as thei can so faire endite?
Ye wisse, qð freshe Antigone the white,
For all the folke that have or ben on live
Ne couldin well the blisse of love discrive.

But wenin ye that evèry wretche wote 890
The parfite blisse of love? why naie iwis,
Thei wenin all be love, if one be hote;
Do' waie do' waie, thei wote nothing of this;
Men mote askin of sainctis, if it is Ought faire in heven; and why? for thei can tell;
And askin fendes, if it be foule in hell.

Creseide unto the purpose naught answerde,
But saied, iwis it woll be night as faste,
But every worde, whiche that she of her herde,
She gan to printin in her herte faste, 900
And aie gan love her lasse for to agaste
Than it did erst, and sinkin in her herte,
That she wax somwhat able to converte.

The day's honour, and the heven's eye
The night's foe, all this clepe I the Sonne,
Gan westrin fast, and downward for to wrie.
As he that had his day's course ironne,
And white thingis woxin all dimme and donne,
For lacke of light, and sterris for to' apere,
That she and all her folke in went isere. 910

So whan it likid her to gon to reste,
And voidid werin thei that voidin ought,
She sayid, that to slepin well her leste
Her women sone unto her bedde her brought,
Whan al was hush't, than laie she stil and thought,
Of all this thing the manir and the wise
Reherce it nedith not, for ye ben wise.

A Nightingale upon a Cedre grene
Undir the chambir wall, there as she laie,
Full loude ysong ayen the Monè shene, 920
Par'aventure in his bird's wife a laie
Of love, that made her herte freshe and gaie,
That herkenid she so long in gode entent,
Till at the last the dedde slepe her hent.

And as she slept, anon right tho her met,
How that an Egle, fethered white as bone,
Undir her brest his longè clawis set,
And out her herte he rent, and that anon,
And did his herte into her brest to gon,
Of which she nought agrose, ne nothing smert,
And forthe he flyith, with herte left for hert.

Now let her slepe, and we our talis holde
Of Troilus, that is to Paleis ridden,
Fro the scarmishe of the whiche I have tolde,
And in his chambir fate, and hath abidden,
Til two or thre of his messangirs yeden,
For Pandarus, and soughtin him full fast,
Til thei him found, and brought him at the last.

This Pandarus came leping in at ones,
And sayid thus, who hath ben well ibete 940
To daie with swardis, and with songè stones
But Troilus, that hath caught him an hete,
And gan to jape, and saied, Lorde, how ye swete!
But rise and let us soupe, and go to reste:
And he answerde him, doe we as The leste.

With

With all the hast godely as thei might
 Thei sped 'hem fro the soupir, and to bedde,
 And every wight out at the dore him dight,
 And wher' him list upon his waie he sped,
 But Troilus thought that his herte bledde 950
 For wo, til that he herde some tiding,
 And sayid frende, shall I now wepe or sing?

(Q^x Pandarus) be still and let me slepe,
 And doe' on thy hode, thine nedis spedde ybe,
 And chese if thou wolt sing, or daunce, or lepe,
 At short wordis thou shalt trowe all by me,
 For fir, my nece woll doin well by The,
 And love The best, by God and by my trothe,
 But lacke of pursute marre it in thy slothe.

For thus ferforth I have thy werke begon 960
 Fro daie to daie, till this daie by the morowe,
 Her love of frendship have I to The won,
 And therto hath she laid her faith to borow,
 Algate o fore is hameled of thy sorowe;
 What should I sengir sermon of it holde,
 As ye have herd before, all he him tolde.

But right as flouris through the cold of night
 Iclosid stoupin in ther stalkis lowe,
 Redressin 'hem ayen the Sunne bright
 And spredin in ther kindè course by rowe, 970
 Right so gan tho his eyin up to throwe
 This Troilus, and saied: O Venus dere,
 Thy might, thy grace, iheried be it here.

And to Pandare he held up both his hondes,
 And sayid, Lorde, all thine be that I have,
 For I am whole, and brostin ben my bondes,
 A thousande Troyis, who so that me yave
 Eche astir othir, God so wis me save,
 Ne might not me so gladin, lo! mine herte
 It spredith so for joie it woll to sterre. 980

But lorde! how shall I doen? how shall I liven?
 Whan shall I next my own dere herte yse?
 How shall this longe time awaie be driven,
 Till that thou be ayen at her fro me?
 Thou maiest answere, abide abide: but he
*That hangith by the necke, the sothe to saine,
 In grete disese abidith for the paine.*

All esily now, for the love of Marte,
 (Q^x Pandarus) for every thing hath time,
 So long abide, till that the night departe, 990
 For all so sikir as thou liest here by' me,
 And God toforne, I woll be there at prime,
 And for thy werke somwhat as I shall saie,
 Or on some othir wight this charge laie.

For parde God wot, I have evir yet
 Ben redy The to serve, and to this night
 Have I not fainid, but em'orthe my wit
 Doen all thy lust, and shal with al my might;
 Doe now as I shall saine, and fare aright;
 And if thou n'lte, write all thy selfe the care, 1000
 On me is nought along thine evill fare.

I wote well that thou wisir art than I
 A thousande folde; but if I were as thou,
 God helpe me so, as I would uttirly
 Right of mine owne honde write to her now
 A lettir, in whiche I would telle her how
 I farde amisse, and her beseche of routh;
 Now helpe thy self, and leve it for no slouth:

And I my self shall therewith to her gon,

And whan thou wolt that I am with her there, 1010
 Worthe thou up on a courfir right anon,
 Ye hardily, and that in thy best gere,
 And ride forth by the place, as naught ne were,
 And thou shalt finde us (if I maie) sitting
 At some windowe, into the strete looking.

And if The list, than maiest thou us salve,
 And upon me make thou thy countenance,
 But by thy life beware, and fast eschue
 To tarien ought, God shild us fro mischaunce,
 Ride forth thy waie, and hold thy govinaunce, 1020
 And we shall speke of The somwhat I trow,
 Whan thou art gon, to doe thine eris glow.

Touching thy lettir, thou are wise inough,
 I wot thou n'lte it deigneliche endite,
 As make it with these argumentis tough,
 Ne scriven-like, or craftily it write,
 Beblotte it with thy teris eke alite,
 And if thou write a godely worde all soft,
 Though it be gode, reherce it not to oft.

For though that the best Harpour upon live 1030
 Would on the beste sounid jolly Harpe,
 That evir was, with all his fingirs five
 Touche aie o string, or aie o warble Harpe,
 Were his nailis pointid nevir so sharpe
 It shulde makin every wight to dull,
 To here his gle, and of his strokis full.

Ne jombre no discordaunt thing ifere,
 As thus, to usin termis of Phisike,
 In lov'is termis holde of thy matere
 The forme alwaie, and doe that it be like; 1040
 For if a paintir would ypante a pike
 With Als'is fete, and heddid as an Ape,
 It cordith not, so were it but a jape.

This counsaile likid well to Troilus,
 But as a dredfull lovir, he saied this,
 Alas! my dere brothir Pandarus,
 I am ashamid for to write iwis,
 Lest of mine ignorance I saied amis,
 Or that the n'olde it for dispite receive,
 Than wer I ded, there might it nothing weve. 1050

To that Pandare answerid, if The left
 Doe that I saie, and let me therewith gon,
 For by that Lorde that formid Est and West,
 I hope of it to bring answere anon
 Right of her hond, and if that thou n'lte non,
 Let be, and sorie mote he ben his live,
 Ayenst thy lust that helpith The to thrive.

(Q^x Troilus) depardieux I assent,
 Sithe that The list, I woll arise and write,
 And blifull God praie I with gode entent 1060
 The viage and lettir I shall endite
 So spede it, and thou Minerva the white,
 Yeve thou me witte, my lettir to devise;
 And set him down, and wrote right in this wise.

First he gan her his right Ladie to call,
 His hert'is lie, his lust, his sorowe's leche,
 His blisse, and eche these othir termis all,
 That in soche case ye lovirs alle seche,
 And in full humble wise, as in his speche,
 He gan him recommaunde unto her grace, 1070
 To tell all how, it askith no kill space.

And astir this full lowly he her praied
 To be nought wrothe, though he of his folie
 So hardie was to her to write, and saied
 D d d d

That

That love it made, or ellis must he die,
And pitoufly gan mercie for to crie;
And aftir that he faied (and lied full loude)
Himself was litle worthe, and lasse he coud.

And that she would have his conning excused,
That lital was, and eke he dradde her so, 1080
And his unworthinesse aie he accused;
And aftir that than gan he tel his wo;
But that was endeleffe withoutin ho;
And faid, he would in trouth alway him holde,
And redde it ovre, and gan the lettir folde:

And with his faltè teris gan he bathe
The ruby in his signet, and it sette
Upon the wexe delivirliche and rathe,
Therwith a thousande timis, er he lette,
He kiste the lettir, whan he had it shette, 1090
And faide, lettir, a blisful destine
The shapin is, my lady shal The se.

This Pandare toke the lettir, and betime
A morowe to his nec'is paleis sterre,
And fast he swore, that it was passid prime,
And gan to jape, and faide iwis mine herte
So freshe it is (although it fore smerte)
I maie nat slepe nevir a May's morowe,
I have a joly wo, a lusty sorowe.

Creseide, whan that she her uncle herde, 1100
With dredeful herte, and desirous to here
The cause of his comming, right thus answerde,
Now by your faith mine uncle (qð she) dere,
What manir windis gidith you now here?
Tell us your joly wo, and your penaunce,
How ferforth be ye put in lov's daunce:

By God (qð he) I hop alwaie behinde,
And she to laugh as though her herte to breste,
(Qð Pandarus) loke alwaie that ye finde
Game in mine hode, but herkeneth if you lest, 1110
Ther is right now come to the toun a gelf,
A Greke espie, and tellith newe thinges,
For whiche I come to tell you newe tidinges:

Into the gardin go we', and ye shal here
Al privily of this a long sermoun.
With that thei wentin arme in arme ifere
Into the gardin fro the chambre down;
And whan that he so ferre was, that the soun
Of that which he spake no man herin might,
He faid her thus, and out the lettir plight: 1120

Lo! he that is al wholly your's is fre,
Him recommaundith lowly to your grace,
And sent to you this letter here by me,
Avifith you on it, whan ye han space,
And of some godely answe're you purchase,
Or helpe me God so, plainly for to faine,
He maie not longè livin for his paine.

Ful dredefully tho gan she stondin stil,
And toke it not, but all her humble chere
Gan for to chaungin, and faid scribe nor bil, 1130
For love of God, that touchith such matere,
Ne bring me none, and also, uncle dere,
To mine estate have more regarde I pray
Than to his lust, what shouldin I more say.

And lokith now if this be reso'nable,
And lettith not for favour ne for flouthe
To faine a sothe, now is it covenable
To mine estate, by God and by my tronthe,
To take it, or to havin of him routh

In harming of my selfe, or in repreve? 1140
Beare it ayen for him that ye on leve.

This Pandarus gan on her for to stare,
And sayid, now is this the gretist wonder,
That evir I sawe, let be this nice fare,
To dethè mote I smittin be with thonder,
Yf for the cite, whiche that stondith yonder,
Would I a lettir to you bring or take
To harme of you: what list you thus it make?

But thus ye farin well nigh all and some,
That he that most desirith you to serve, 1150
Of him ye retchin lest, where he become,
And whethir that he live, or ellis sterre,
But for al that, that er I maie deserve,
Refuse it not (qð he) and hente her fast,
And in her bosome doun the lettir thrust,

And faid her, now cast it awaie anon,
That folke maie sene, and gaurin on us twey:
(Qð she) I can abide till thei be gon,
And gan to smile, and faid him, Eme, I pray,
Suche answe're as you list your selfe purvey, 1160
For truily I wol no lettir write.
No, than wol I (qð he) so ye endite.

Therwith she lough, and sayid go we dine,
And he gan at himselfe to japin faste,
And sayid, Nece, I have so gret a pine
For love, that everiche othir daie I faste,
And gan his bestè japis forth to caste,
And made her so to laugh at his folie,
That she for laughtir wenid for to die.

And whan that she was comen' into the hall, 1170
Now Eme (qð she) we wol go dine anon,
And gan some of her women to her call,
And streight into her chambre gan she gone,
But of her befinessis this was one,
Amongis othir thingis, out of drede,
Ful privily this lettir for to rede.

Avifid word by word in every line,
And founde no lacke, she thought he coude his gode,
And put it up, and went her in to dine.
And Pandarus, that in a studie stode, 1180
Er he was ware, she toke him by the hode
And sayid, ye were caught er that ye wiste,
I vouchsafe (qð he) do whatere you list.

Tho within thei, and set 'hem doun and ete,
And aftir none ful slyghly Pandarus
Gan draw him to the windowe nie the strete,
And sayid, Nece, who hath arayid thus
The yondir house, that stante aforyene us?
Which house? (qð she) and gan for to beholde,
And knewe it wel, and whose it was him tolde;

And fellin forthe in speche of thingis smale,
And satin in the windowe bothè twey;
Whan Pandarus sawe time unto his tale,
And sawe well that her folke wer al away,
Now, Nece mine, tel on (qð he) I prey,
How likith you the lettir that ye wot,
Can he theron? for by my trouth I n'ot.

Therwith al rosy hewid tho woxe she,
And gan to hum, and sayid, so I trowe;
Aquite him wel for Godd's love (qð he) 1200
My selfe tomedis woll the lettir sowe,
And helde his hondis up, and fell on knowe,
Nowe gode Nece, be it nevir so lite,
Yeve me the labour it to sowe and plite.

Ye, for I can so writin (qð she) tho,
 And eke I n'or what I should to him say.
 Naie Nece, qð Pandarus, saie you not so,
 Yet at the lest ythonkith him, I pray,
 Of his gode will. O, doth him not to deye,
 Now for the love of me, my Nèce dere, 1210
 Refusith not at this time my praiere.

Depardieux (qð she) God leve al be wele,
 God helpe me so, this is the first lettre
 That er I wrote, ye al or any dele;
 And into' a closet for to' avise her better
 She went alone, and gan her herte unfettere
 Out of disdain's prison, but a lite,
 And set her down, and gan a lettre write.

Of whiche to tel in shorte is mine entent
 Th' effete, as ferre as I can undirstonde; 1220
 She thonkid him of al that he wel ment
 Towardis her, but holdin him in honde
 She n'olde not, ne makin her selvin bonde
 In love, but as his fustir him to plesse,
 She would aie faine to done his hert an ese.

She shette it, and to Pandare in gan gon
 There as he sat, and lokid into strete,
 And doune she set her by him on a stone
 Of jaspere, upon a quishen of golde ibete,
 And said, as wisely helpe me God the grete, 1230
 I nevir did a thing with more paine
 Than write this, to the which ye me constraine;

And toke it him; He thonkid her, and seide,
 God wot of thing ful oftin lothe begonne
 Comith ende gode: and Nèce mine Creseide,
 That ye to him of harde now ben iwonne
 Ought he be glad, by God and yondir sonne;
 For why, men faine Impressionis light
Full lightly ben aie redy to the flight.

But ye han plaid the tiraunt al to longe, 1240
 And harde was it your herte for to grave,
 Now stinte, that ye no lengir on it honge,
 Al woldin ye the forme of daungir save,
 But hastith you to done him joye to have,
 For trustith wel, to long idone hardnesse
Causith dispite ful oftin for distresse.

And right as thei declarid this matere
 Lo! Troilus right at the stret's ende
 Came riding with his tenthè somme ifere
 Al softly, and thiðirwarde gan bende 1250
 There as they fate, as was his waie to wende
 To paleis warde, and Pandare him aspidre,
 And said, nece ife who comith here ride,

O fie not in, he fethe us, I suppose,
 Lest he may thinkin that ye him eschue.
 Nay nay (qð she) and woxe as redde as rose;
 With that he gan her humbly to salue
 With dredful chere, and ofte his hewis mue,
 And up his loke debonairly he cast,
 And bekid on Pandare, and forth by past. 1260

God wot if he sat on his horse aright,
 Or godely was befene that ilkè day,
 God wot where he were like a manly knight,
 What should I dretche, or tel of his aray?
 Creseide, which that al these thingis fey,
 To tell in shorte, her likid al ifere,
 His person, his aray, his loke, his chere,

His godely manir, and his gentilnesse,

So well, that never sithe that she was borne
 Ne haddin she suche routhe of his distresse; 1270
 And howe so she hath hard ben here before,
 To God hope I, she hath now caught a thorne,
 She shal nat pul it out this nextè wike,
 God sende her mo such thornis on to pike!

Pandarus, whiche that stode her faste by,
 Felte iron hotte, and he began to smite,
 And seide, nece, I praye you hertilie,
 Tel me that I shal askin you alite,
 A woman that were of his deth to wite
 Withouten' his gilt, but for her lacke of routh,
 Were it wel done? (qð she) naie, by my trouth.

God helpe me so (qð he) ye say me sothe;
 Ye felin wel your selfe that I nought lie.
 Lo, yonde he rideth (qð she) ye so he dothe;
 Wel, qð Pandare, as I have tolde you thrie,
 Let be your nicete, and your folie,
 And speke with him, in cling of his herte,
 Let nicete nat do you bothe smerte.

But theron was to hevin and to done,
 Considiring al thing it maie nat be, 1290
 And why? for shame; and it were eke to sone
 To grauntin him so gret a liberte;
 For plainly her entent, as (said she)
 Was for to love him unwist, if she might,
 And guerdon him with nothing but with sight.

But Pandarus thought, it shal nat be so,
 If that I maie, this nice opinion
 Shal nat ben holdin fully yeris two;
 What should I make of this a longe sermon?
 He must assent on that conclusion 1300
 As for the time, and whan that it was eve,
 And al was wel, he rose and toke his leve.

And on his way full fast homewarde he spedde,
 And right for joy he felte his hert to daunce,
 And Troilus he founde alone abedde,
 That laie, as done these lovirs in a traunce,
 Betwixin hope and derke disesperaunce,
 But Pandarus, right at his in comming,
 He song, as who saith, lo! somwhat I bring;

And saide, who is in his bedde so sone 1310
 Yburied thus? it am I frende (qð he)
 Who Troilus? naie, helpe me so the mone,
 (Qð Pandarus) thou shalt up rise and fe
 A charme, that was ysent right now to The,
 The whiche can helin The of thine axesse,
 If thou do forthwith all thy besinesse.

Ye through the might of God (qð Troilus)
 And Pandarus gan him the lettir take,
 And saide, parde God hath yholpin us,
 Have here a light, and loke on all these blake, 1320
 But oftin gan the hert to glad and quake
 Of Troilus, while he it gan to rede,
 So as the wordis yave him hope or drede.

But finally he toke al for the beste
 That the him wrote, for somwhat he behelde,
 On which he thought he might his herte rest,
 Al covired the the wordis undir shelde;
 Thus to the more worthy part he him helde,
 That what for hope, and Pandarus beheste,
 His gretè wo foryede he at the leste. 1330

But as we maie al daie our selvin fe
 Through more wode or cole kindlith the more fire,
 Right so encrese of hope, of what it be,
 Therwith

Therwith ful oft encrefith eke desire;
Or as an oke cometh of a litil spire,
So through this lettir, which that she him sent,
Encrefin gan desire, of whiche he brent.

Wherefore I say alway, that day and night
This Troilus gan to desirin more
Then he did erst through hope, and did his might 1340
To presin on, as by Pandarus lore,
And writin to her of his sorowes fore
Fro day to day, he let it nought refreide,
That by Pandare he somwhat wrot or seide :

And did also his othir observaunces,
That till a lovir longith in this caas,
And aftir that his dice turnid on chaunces
So was he eithir glad, or saide alas!
And held aftir his gestis aie his paas,
And aftir suche answeris, as he hadde, 1350
So werin his daies sory othir gladd.

But to Pandare alway was his recours,
And pitously gan aie to him to plaine,
And him besought of rede, and some focours,
And Pandarus, that sawe his wode paine,
Wext wel nigh ded for routh, sothe for to faine,
And besely with al his hert gan caste
Some of his wo to fleen, and that as faste:

And saide, Lorde, and frende, and brothir dere,
God wot that thy disce ydothe me wo, 1360
But wolt thou stintin al this woful chere,
And by my trowth, er it be dayis two
And God toforme, yet shal I shape it so,
That thou shalt come into a certaine place,
There as thou maist thy selfe praien her of grace.

And certainly I n'ot if thou it wofte,
But thei that ben experte in love, it say,
It is one of these thingis fortherith most,
A man to have a leisir for to praie,
And siker place, his wo for to bewraie, 1370
For in gode hert it mote some routh impresle,
To here and se the gilleffe in distresse.

Par'aventure thinkist thou, though it be so,
That kinde would her ydone for to beginne
To have a manir routh upon my wo,
Saith daungir nay, thou shalt me never win
So rulith she her hert's goste within,
That though she bendin, yet she stonte on rote,
What in effect is this unto my bote?

Thinke here ayen, whan that the sturdy oke, 1380
On whiche men hackith oftin for the nones,
Recevid hath the happy falling stroke,
The grete sweight makith it fall all at ones,
As done these grete rockis, or these milnestones,
For swiftir course cometh thing that is of wight,
Whan it discendith, than done thingis light.

But rede, that bowith doune for every blast,
Ful lightly cessith winde, it wol arise;
But so n'il not an oke, whan it is cast,
It nedith me nought longe The for to' vife, 1390
Men shal rejoyfin of a grete emprise,
Atchevid wel, and stont withoutin dout,
Al have men ben the lengir there about.

But Troilus, now tel me if The lest
A thing, whiche that I shal askin of The,
Whiche is thy brothir, that thou lovist best,
As in thy very hert's privite?
Iwis my brothir Deiphobus (qð he)

Now (qð Pandare) er hour's twice twelve,
He shal The ese, unwist of it himselve. 1400

Now let me' alone, and workin as I may,
(Qð he) and to Deiphobus went he tho,
Which had his lord, and gretè frend ben aie,
Save Troilus no man he lovid so,
To tel in shorte withoutin wordis mo
(Qð Pandarus) I pray you that ye be Frende to a cause, whiche that ytouchith me.

Yes parde (qð Deiphobus) wel thou wolt
Al that evir I may, and God tofore,
Al n'ere it but for the man I love most 1410
My brothir Troilus; but say wherefore
It is, for sithe the day that I was bore
I n'as, ne never more to ben I thinke
Ayenst a thing that mightin The forthinke.

Pandarus gan him thanke, and to him seide,
Lo! sir, I have a lady in this toun,
That is my Nece, and callid is Creseide,
To whiche some men would done oppressioun,
And wrongfully have her possessioun,
Wherefore I of your lordship you besече 1420
To ben our frende, withoutin more speche.

Deiphobus him answerde: O, is nat this,
That thou spekest of to me thus straungely,
Creseide my frende? Pandarus said him yes.
Than nedith (qð Deiphobus) hardily
No more of this, for trustith wel that I
Wol be her Champion with spere and yerde,
I ne rought nat, though all her foes it herde.

But telle me thou that wolt all this matere,
How might I best availin now, let se; 1430
(Qð Pandarus) if ye my lorde so dere
Woldin as now do this honour to me,
To prayin her to morowe, lo: that she Came unto you, her plaintis to devise,
Her adversaries would of it agrife.

And if I more durst prayin you as now,
And chargin you to have so grete travaille,
To have some of your brethrin here with you,
That mightin to her cause bettir availle,
Than wote I wel she mightin never faile 1440
For to ben holpin, what at your instaunce,
What with her othir frendis govirnaunce.

Deiphobus, whiche that comin was of kinde
To al honour and bounte to consente,
Answerde, it shal be done: and I can finde,
Yet greater helpe to this in mine entente,
What woldest thou faine, if for Helen I sent,
To speke of this, I trowe it be the best,
For she may ledin Paris as her lest.

Of Hector, which that is my Lord my brother, 1450
It nedith nat to praien him frende to be,
For I have herde him, o time and eke other,
Spekin of Creseide suche honour, that he Maie faine no bet, such hap to him hath she,
It nedith nat his helpis more to crave,
He shal be suche, right as we wol him have.

Speke thou thy selfe also to Troilus
On my behalfe, and praie him with us dine.
Sir, al this shal be done (qð Pandarus)
And toke his leve, and never gan to fine, 1460
But to his Nec's house as freight as line
He came, and founde her fro the mete arise,
And set him doun, and spake right in this wise:
He

He saide, O very God, so have I ronne
 Lo! necè mine, se ye nat how I swete?
 I n'ot whethir ye the more thanke me conne,
 Be ye not ware how that false Poliphete
 Is now about estsonis for to plete,
 And bringin on you advocacies newe?
 I? no (qð she) and chaungid al her hewe?

What is he more about me for to dretche,
 And done me wrong? what shal I don, alas!
 Yet of him selfin nothing would I retche,
 N'ere it for Antenor and Æneas,
 That ben his frendis in suche manir caas;
 But for the love of God, mine uncle dere,
 No force of that, let him have al ifere,

Withoutin that, I have inough for us.
 Nay (qð Pandare) it shal nothing be so,
 For I have ben right now at Deiphobus, 1480
 At Hector, and mine othir lordis mo,
 And shortly makid eche of 'hem his fo,
 That by my thrifte he shal it nevir winne
 For aught he can, whan so that he beginne.

And as thei castin what was best to done,
 Deiphobus, of his owne curtisie,
 Came her to praye, in his propir persone,
 To holde him on the morowe companie
 At dinir, whiche she ne wolde not denie,
 But godely gan to his prayere obeye, 1490
 He thonkid her, and went upon his wey.

Whan this was don, this Pandarus anone,
 (To tellin in shorte) forth he gan to wende
 To Troilus, as stil as any stone,
 And al this thing he tolde him orde and ende,
 And how that he Deiphobus gan to blende,
 And saide him, now is time of that ye conne
 To bere the belle to morow', and all is wonne.

Now speke, now pray, now pitously complaine,
 Let nat for nicè shame, for drede or slouth, 1500
 Somtime a man mote tel his ownè paine,
 Beleve it, and she wol have on The routh,
 Thou shalt ben favid by thy faith and trouth,
 But wel wot I thou now art in a drede,
 And what it is, I lay I can arede:

Thou thinkist now, how should I don al this,
 For by my cheris mostin folke espie,
 That for her love is, that I fare amis,
 Yet had I levre' unwist for sorow die;
 Nowe thinke nat so, for thou dost gret folie, 1510
 For I right now have foundin a manere
 Of sleight, for to coverin al thy chere.

Thou shalt gon ovirnight, and that as blive
 Unto Deiphobus house, as The to plaie,
 Thy malady awaie the bette to drive,
 For why? thou semist sike, the sothe to saie,
 Sone after that, doune in thy bedde The laie,
 And saie thou maist no lengir up endure,
 And lie right there, and bide thine avinture.

Say that the fevir is wont The to take, 1520
 The samè time, and lastin til a morowe,
 And let se now how well thou canst it make,
 For parde sike is he that is in sorowe;
 Go now farwel, and Venus here to borowe,
 I hope and thou this purpose holdè ferme.
 Thy grace she shal The fully there conferme.

(Qð Troilus) iwis thou alle nedeleffe

Counsaillist me, that sikeliche I me faine,
 For I am sike in earnest doutelesse,
 So that wel nigh I stervin for the paine. 1530
 (Qð Pandarus) thou shalt the bettir plaine,
 And hast the lesse nede for to counterfete,
 For him men demin hote, that men se swete.

Lo! holde The at thy tristè clofe, and I
 Shal wel the dcere unto thy bowe ydrive:
 Therwith he toke his leve all softly,
 And Troilus to his paleis went blive,
 So glad ne was he ner in al his live,
 And to Pandarus rede gan al assent,
 And to Deiphobus house at night he went. 1540

What nedith it to tellin al the chere,
 That Deiphobus unto his brothir made,
 Or his axis, or his sikeliche manere,
 How men gon him with clothis for to lade
 When he was laid, and how men would him glade?
 But all for nought, he helde forth aie the wife,
 That ye han herde Pandare er this devise.

But certaine is, er Troilus him leide,
 Deiphobus had praied him ovirnight
 To ben a frende, and helping to Creseide, 1550
 God wot that he that grauntid anon right,
 To ben her fullè frend with al his might,
 But such a nede was it to praien him thenne,
 As for to biddin a wode man to renne.

The morow came, and nighin gan the time
 Of mealtide, whan that the faire quene Helen Shope her to ben an hour aftir the prime
 With Deiphobus, to whom she n'oldè faine,
 But as his sustir homely, sothe to faine,
 She came to dinir, in her plaine entent, 1560
 But God and Pandare wist al what this ment.

Came eke Creseide all innocent of this,
 Antigone her nece, and Tarbe' also;
 But flie we now prolixite best is,
 For love of God, and let us fast ygo
 Right to the' effectè, withoutin talis mo,
 Why al this folke assemblid in this place,
 And let us of ther saluingis pace.

Gret honour did 'hem Deiphobus certaine,
 And fedde 'hem wel, with al that might 'hem like,
 But evirno alas! was his refraine,
 My godè brothir Troilus, the sike
 Lithe yet, and therwithal he gan to sike,
 And aftir that he painid him to glade
 'Hem as he might, and chere gode he made.

Complainid eke Helen of his sikenesse
 So faithfully, that pity was to here,
 And every wight gan wexin for axes
 A leche anon, and saide, in this manere 1580
 Men curin folke, this charme I wol Thelere,
 But there sate one, al list her nat to teche,
 That thought, yet best couldin I ben his leche.

Aftir complaint him gonnin thei to preise,
 As folke don yet whan some wight hath begon
 To preise a man, and up with preise him reise
 A thousande folde yet highir than the son,
 He is, he can, that fewe othir Lordes kon,
 And Pandarus of that thei would afferme
 He nought forgate ther praising to conferme.

Herde al this thing feire Creseide wel inough, 1590
 And every worde gan for to notifie,
 For whiche with sobre chere her hertè lough

E e e e

For

For who is that ne would her glorifie
To mowin suche a knight done live or die?
But al passe I, lest ye to longe ydwell,
But for o fine is al that er I tell.

The time came fro dinir for to rise,
And as 'hem ought arisin everichone,
And gone a while of this and that devise,
But Pandarus brake al this speche anon, 1600
And said to Deiphobus, wol ye gon,
If it your will be, as I erst you prayde,
To spekin of the nedis of Creseide?

Helen, which that by the hondè her helde,
Toke first the tale, and saide, go we blive,
And godely on Creseidè she behelde,
And sayid, Jovis let him nevir thrive,
That doth you harm, and reve him sone of live,
And yeve me sorowe, but he shal it rue
If that I may, and allè folke be true. 1610

Tel thou thy nec'is case (qð Deiphobus
To Pandarus) for thou canst best it tell.
My Lordis and my Ladies, it stant thus,
What should I lengir (qð he) do you dwell?
He ronge 'hem out a proces like a bell
Upon her foe, that hight was Polyphete,
So heinous, that men mightin on it spete.

Answerde of this eche worse of 'hem than other,
And Poliphete thei gonnin thus to warien,
An hongid be suche one, were he my brother, 1620
And so he shal, for it ne maie nought varien;
What should I lengir in this talè tarien?
Plainliche al at onis thei her highten
To ben her frende, in all that er thei mighten.

Spake than Helen, and said to Pandarus,
Wot aught my lord my brothir of this matere,
I mene Hector, or wote it Troilus?
He said her ye, but wol ye me now here?
Me thinketh thus, sith that Troilus is here,
It were gode, if that ye wouldin assent 1630
She tolde him her selfe al this er she went.

For he wol have the more her grefe at herte.
Bicause lo, she a worthie Lady is,
And by your wil, I wol but in right sterre,
And do you wete, and that anon iwis,
If that he slepe, or wol aught here of this,
And in he lept, and said him in his ere,
God have thy soule, for brought have I thy bere.

To smilin of this gan tho Troilus,
And Pandarus withoutin rekinning 1640
Out went to Helen and Deiphobus,
And said 'hem, so there be no tarying,
Ne more prese, he wol well that ye bring
Creseidè my Lady, that is now here,
And as he maie enduren, he wol her here.

But wel ye wote, the chambre is but lite,
And fewè folke may lightly make it warme,
Now lokith ye, for I wol have no wite
To bring in prese, that might ydon him harme,
Or him disefin, for my bettir arme, 1650
Wher' it be bet she abide till estfónis,
Now lokith ye, that knowin what to don is.

I say for me best is, as I can knowe,
That no wight in ne wendè, but ye twey,
But it were I, for I can in a throwe
Reherse her case, unlike that she can sey,
And aftir this she may onis him prey

To ben gode Lorde in short, and take her leve,
This may not mokill of his cse him reve.

And eke for she is straunge, he woll forbere 1660
His cse, whiche that him darin nat for you,
Eke othir thing, that touchith nat to her,
He wol it tel, I wote it wel right now,
That secrete is, and for the town's prow;
And thei that knew nothing of his entente,
Without more to Troilus in thei wente.

Heleine in all her godely softly wise
Gan him salve, and womanly to plaie,
And saied iwis ye more algate arise,
Now faire brothir be all whole I praie, 1670
And gan her arme right ovre' his shuldir laie,
And with him all her wit to recomfort,
As she best could, she gan him to disport.

So after this (qð she) we you beseke,
My dere brothir, Deiphobus and I,
For love of God, and so doeth Pandare eke,
To ben gode Lorde and frende right hertily
Unto Creseidè, whiche that certainly
Recevid wrong, as wot well here Pandare,
That can her case well bet than I declare. 1680

This Pandarus gan newe his tong affile,
And all her case reherce, and that anone,
Whan it was saied, sone aftir in a while (Qð Troilus) as sone as I maie gone,
I woll right fain with all my might ben one,
Have God my trouth, her cause for to susteine;
Now good thrift have ye (qð Helen the quene).

(Qð Pandarus) and it your will ybe
That she maie take her leve, er that she go,
O, ellis God forbid it (tho qð he) 1690
If that she vouchsafin for to doe so;
And with that worde (qð Troilus) ye two,
Deiphobus, and my sustir lefe and dere,
To you have I to speke of a matere,

To ben avisid by your rede the better;
And found (as hap was) at his bedd'is hedde
The copie of a tretise, and a letter,
That Hector had him sent, to askin redde,
If soche a man was worthy to ben dedde,
Wote I naught who, but in a grisly wise 1700
He prayid 'hem anone, on it avise.

Deiphobus gan this letter for to' unfolde
In ernest grete, so did Helen the Quene,
And roming outwarde fast it gonne beholde,
Dounward a steire, into an herber grene;
This ilkè thing thei reddin 'hem betwene,
And largily the mountenance of an houre
Thei gonne on it to redin and to poure.

Now let 'hem rede, and tournè we anone
To Pandarus, that gan full fastè prie 1710
That all was well, and out he gan to gone,
Into the grete chambir, and that in hie,
And sayid, God save all this companie,
Come necè mine, my ladie Quene Helen,
Abidith you, and eke my Lordis twene.

Rise, take with you your nece Antigone,
Or whom you list, or no force hardily,
The lasse presse the bettir, come forth with me,
And lokith that ye thonkin humbily 1720
Them all thre, and whan ye maie godily
Your time isee, takith of 'hem your leve,
Lest we to long his restis him bireve.

All

All innocent of Pandarus entent

Qð tho Creseide go we uncle dere,
And arme in arme inward with him she went,
Avising well her wordis and her chere
And Pandarus in earnestfull manere
Sayid, all folke for Godd's love I praie
Stintith right here, and softly you plaie.

Avisith you what folke ben here within, 1730
And in what plite one is, God him amende,
And inward thus full softly begin;
Nece, I conjure, and highly you defende
On his behalfe, whiche that soule us all fende,
And in the vertue of coronis twaine,
Slea nat this man, that hath for you this paine:

Fie on the devill, thinke whiche one he is,
And in what plite he lieth, come of anone,
Thinke all soche taried tide but lost it n'is,
That woll ye bothe saine, whan ye ben one, 1740
And secondly, there yet devinith none
Upon you two, come of now if ye conne,
While folke is blent, lo! all the time is worne. 1750

In titiring and pursute, and delaies
The folke devine, at wegging of a stre,
And though ye would han aftir merie daies,
Than dare ye nat, and why? For she and she Spake soche a worde, thus lokid he and he:
Lest time be losse, I dare nat with you dele,
Come of therfore, and bringith him to hele. 1750

But now to you, ye lovirs that ben here,
Was Troilus nat in a cankedort,
That laie, and might the whispring of 'hem here
And thought, o lorde, right now remnith my fort
Fully to die, or have anone comfort,
And was the first time that he should her praie
Of love, O mightie God, what shall he saie!

Explicit liber secundus.

Proœmium libri tertii.

O Blisfull light, of whiche the bemis clere
Adornith allè the third hevin faire,
O sonn's life, o Jov's doughtir dere,
Plesauce of love, O godely debonaire,
In gentle hertes aie redy to repaire,
O very cause of hele and of gladnesse,
Iheried be thy might and thy godenesse.

In heven and hell, in yerth, and the salt se
Is felt thy might, if that I well discerne,
As man, brid, beste, fishe, herbe, and grenè tre, 10
Thei fele in timis with vapour eterne,
God lovith, and to love he woll naught werne,
And in this worldè no liv'is cature
Withoutin love is wroucht, or maie endure.

Ye Jovis first to thilke affectis glade,
Through whiche that thingis livin all, and be,
Commendidin, and amorous him made
On mortall thing, and as ye list aie ye
Yeve him in love, ese, or adversite,
And in a thoufande formis doune him sent 20
For love in yerth, and whom you list he hent.

Ye fiers Mars apesin of his ire,

And as you list, ye makin hertis digne,
Algatis them that ye woll set a fire
Thei dredin shame, and vicis thei resigne,
Ye doen 'hem curteis be, freshe, and benigne,
And hie or lowe, aftir a wight entendeth
The joyis that he hath, your might it sendeth.

Ye holdin reigne and house in unite, 30
Ye sothfast cause of frendship ben also,
Ye knowin all thilke covered qualite
Of thingis, whiche that folke on wondrin so,
Whan thei can nat construe how it maie go,
She lovith him, or why he lovith here
As why this fishe, nat that, comith to were.

Ye folke a lawe have set in universe,
And this knowe I by them that lovirs be,
That who so strivith with you hath the werse.
Now Ladie bright, for thy benignite, 40
At reverence of them that servin The,
Whose clerke I am, so techith me devise
Some joie of that is felt in thy service.

Ye, in my nakid hert's sentiment
Inhilde, and doe me shewe of thy swetenesse,
Caliope, thy voice be now present,
For now is nede, seest thou nat my distresse,
How I mote tell anon right the gladnesse
Of Troilus, to Venus heryng?
To whiche gladnesse who nede hath, God him bring.

Explicit Proœmium.

Incipit liber tertius.

L Aie all this mene while this sad Troilus
Recording his lesson in this manere,
Mafeie thought he, thus woll I saie and thus,
Thus woll I plain unto my Ladie dere,
That worde is gode, and this shall be my chere,
This n'll I nat foryetin in no wise,
God leve him werkin as he can devise.

And lorde so that his herte began to quappe
Hering her come, and short gan for to like,
And Pandarus, that ledde her by the lappe, 60
Came nere, and gan in at the curtain pike,
And saied, God doe bote on all that are like,
Se, who is here you comin to visite.
Lo! here is she that is your deth to wite.

Therwith it semid as he wept almoste,
A, a qð Troilus so routhfully,
Where me be wo, O mightie God, thou woste,
Who is all there I se nat truily:
Sir (qð Creseide) it is Pandare and I.
Ye swetè herte alas! I maie nat rise
To knele, and doe you honour in some wise. 70

And dressid him upward, and she right tho
Gan both her hondis soft upon him leie,
O for the love of God doe ye not so
To me (qð she) ey what is this to sei!
Sir, comen' am I to you for causis tweie,
First you to thonke, and of your Lordshipe eke Continuaunce I wouldè you beseke.

This Troilus that herd his Ladie praie
Of lordship, him woxe neithir quick ne dedde, 80
Ne

Ne might o worde for shame unto it faie,
 Although men shouldin smitin of his hedde,
 But Lorde! so he woxe sodainliche alle redde;
 And sir, his lesson that he wende conne
 To prayin her, is through his wit ironne.

Creseide all this espyid well inough,
 For she was wife, and loved him ner the lasse,
 All n'ere he' in all aperte, or made it tough,
 Or was to bolde to sing a fol's Masse,
 But whan his shame began somewhat to passe,
 His refons, as I maie my rimis holde,
 I woll you tell, as techin bokis olde.

In chaungid voice, right for his very drede,
 Whiche voice eke quoke, and therto his manere
 Godelie abash't, and now his hewis rede,
 Now pale, unto Creseide his ladie dere,
 With loke doune cast, and humble yoldin chere,
 Lo, the aldirfirst worde that him afterte,
 Was twyis, mercie, mercie, my dere herte!

And stint a while, and whan he might out bring
 The nexte word was, God wote for I have
 As faithfully as I have had konning
 Ben your's all, God so my soule save,
 And shall, till that I wofull wight be grave,
 And though I dare ne can unto you plain,
 Iwis I suffir not the lase pain.

Thus moche as now, ah womanliche wife,
 I maie out bring, and if this you displese,
 That shall I wreke upon mine owne life.
 Right sone I trowe, and doe your herte an ese,
 If with my deth your hert I maie apese,
 But fens that ye han herd me somewhat sey,
 Now retche I nevir how sone that I deie.

Therwith his manly sorowe to beholde
 It might have made an herte of stone to rew,
 And Pandare wept as he to watir would,
 And pokid evir his nece newe and newe,
 And sayid, wo begon ben hertistruer,
 For love of God make of this thing an ende,
 Or slea us both at ones, er that ye wende.

I, what? (qð she) by God and by my trouth
 I n'ot nevir what ye wilne that I seie;
 Eie, what? (qð he) that ye have on him routh
 For Godd's love, and doeth him nat to deie.
 Now than thus (qð she) I wollin him preie
 To tellin me the fine of his entente,
 Yet wist I nevir well what that he mente.

What that I mene, O my swete herte dere
 (Qð Troilus) O godely freshe and fre,
 That with the stremis of your eyin clere
 Ye wouldin somtime frendly on me se,
 And than agrein that I maie ben he
 Withoutin braunche of vice, on any wise,
 In trouthe alwaie to do you my servise,

As to my ladie right, and chefe resort,
 With all my witte and all my diligence,
 And I to have right as you list comfort,
 Under your yerde egall to mine offence,
 As deth, if that I brekin your defence,
 And that ye digne me so mochil honour
 Me to commaundin aught in any hour,

And I to ben your very humble, true,
 Secrete, and in my painis pacient,
 And evir to desirin freshly newe
 To servin, and ben aie like diligent,

And with gode herte all wholly your talent
 Recevin in gre, how fore that me smerte;
 Lo! this mene I, O mine owne swete herte.

(Qð Pandarus) lo! here an hard request,
 And reso'nable a Ladie for to werne;
 Now necè mine, by Natall Jov's fest,
 Were I a God, ye shouldin sterve as yerne,
 That herin well this man wol nothing yerne
 But your honor, and sene him almoste sterve,
 And ben so lothe to suffre' him you to serve.

With that she gan her eyin on him cast
 Full esily, and full debonairly,
 Avising her, and hied her not to fast
 With ner a worde, but saied him softly,
 Mine honour safe, I woll well truily
 And in soche forme, as ye can now devise,
 Recevin him fully to my servise;

Beseching him for Godd's love, that he Would in honour of trouth and gentillnesse,
 As I well mene, eke menin well to me,
 And mine honour with wit and businesse
 Aie kepe, and if I maie doen him gladnesse
 From hennisforthe iwis I n'll not faine.
 Now bethe all whole, no lengir ye ne plain.

But nathèlesse, this warne I you (qð she)
 A king's sonne although ye be iwis,
 Yet ye shall no more have soverainte
 Of me in love, than right in that case is,
 Ne n'll I forbere if ye doen amis
 To wrathin you, and while that ye me serve,
 Cherishe you, right aftir that ye deserve.

And shortly dere herte, and all my knight,
 Beth glad, and drawith you to lustinesse,
 And I shall truely, with all my full might,
 Your bittir tourmin all to swetinesse,
 If I be she, that maie do you gladnesse,
 For every wo ye shall recovir blisse,
 And him in armis toke, and gan him kisse.

Fill Pandarus on knees, and up his eyen
 To hevin threwe, and helde his hondis hie;
 Immortall God (qð he) that maieft not dien,
 Cupide, of this thou maist The glorifie
 And Venus, thou maist makin melodie,
 Withoutin honde me semith that in toun
 For this miracle I here eche bell soun.

But ho, no more now of this ilke matere,
 For why? This folke woll comin up anone,
 That have the lettir redde, lo I hem here!
 But I conjure The, Creseide, anone,
 And thou to, Troilus, whan thou maist gone,
 That at mine house ye ben at my warning,
 For I full well shall shapin your comming.

And esith there your hertis right inough,
 And let se whiche of you shall bere the bell
 To speke of love, and right therwith he lough,
 For there have ye a leisir for to tell:
 (Qð Troilus) how long shall I here dwell
 Er this be doen? qð he, whan thou maieft rise,
 This thing shall be right as you list devise.

With that Helen, and also Deiphobus
 Tho comin upward, right at the staire's ende,
 And Lorde! so tho gan gronin Troilus,
 His brothir and his sustir for to blende.
 (Qð Pandarus) it time is that we wende,

Take

Take necè minè your leve at them all thre, 210
And let 'hem speke, and comith forth with me.

She toke her leve at 'hem full thriftily
As she well could, and thei her reverence
Unto the full ydiddin hertily
And wondir well spekin in her absence
Of her, in praifing of her excellence,
Her govinaunce, her wit, and her manere
Commendidin; that it joie was to here.

Now let her wende unto her ownè place,
And tournin we to Troilus againe, 220
That gan full lightly of the lettir pace,
That Deiphobus had in the gardine faine,
And of Helen and of him he would seine
Delivirid ben, and saied that him lest
To slepe, and astir talis have a rest.

Helen him kist, and toke her leve as blive,
Deiphobus eke, and home went every wight,
And Pandarus as faste as he maie drive
To Troilus tho came, as linè right, 230
And on a paillet all that gladè night
By Troilus he laie, with merie chere,
And well was them that thei werin yfere.

Whan every wight was voidid; but thei two;
And all the doris werin fast ishet,
To tell in short withoutin wordis mo;
This Pandarus, withoutin any let
Up rose, and on his bedd'is side him set;
And gan to spekin in a sobir wise
To Troilus, as I shall you devise.

Mine aldirlevist Lorde, and brothir dere, 240
God wot and thou, that it fate me so fore,
Whan I The sawe so languishing to yere
For love, of whiche thy wo woxe alwaie more,
That I with all my might, and all my lore
Have ever sithin doen my businesse
To bringin The to joie out of distresse;

And have it brought to soche plite as thou wost,
So that through me thou stondist now in waie
To farin well, I saie it for no boist,
And wost thou why? but shame it is to saie, 250
For The have I begon a game to plaie,
Whiche that I never doen shall est for other;
Altho he were a thousande fold my brother;

That is to saie, for The am I become Betwixin game and ernest soche a mene,
As makin women unto men to come
All saie I nat, thou wost well what I mene,
For The have I my nece, of vicis clene,
So fully made thy gentillnesse to trift,
That all shall ben right as thy selfin list. 260

But God, that all wotteth take I to witnesse,
That never this for covetise I wrought,
But onely for to abredge that distresse,
For whiche well nie thou deydyst, as me thought,
But gode brothir, doith now as The ought,
For Godd'is love, and kepe her out of blame,
Sins thou art wise, and save alwaie her name.

For wel thou woste, the name as yet of her
Emonges the peple, as (who saith) halowed is,
For that man is unbore, I dare well swere, 270
That evir wist that she yet did amis,
But wo is me, that I that cause all this
Maie thinkin that she is my necè dere,
And I her Eme, and traitour eke isere.

And wer it wist, that I through mine engine
Had in my nece iput this fantasie,
To doen thy lust, and wholly to be thine,
Why? all the worlde wouldin upon it crie,
And sayin, that I the worst trecherie
Did in this case, that evir was begon, 280
And she fardon, and thou right nought iwon.

Wherefore er I woll ferthir gone or paas,
Yet'este I The beseche, and fully saie,
That privite go with us in this caas,
That is to faine, that thou us never wraie,
And be not wrothe, though I The oftin praie
To holdin secre soche an high matter,
For skilfull is (thou woste-well) my praier.

And thinke, what wo there hath betid er this
For making of avauntis, as men rede, 290
And what mischaunce in this worlde yet there is Fro daie to daie, right for that wickid dede,
For whiche these wise clerkis that ben dede
Have evir this proverb to us young,
That the first vertue is to kepe the young.

And n'ere it that I wilne as now abredge
Diffusion of speche, I could almoſte
A thousande oldè stories The alledge
Of women losse through false and fol'is boſte, 300
Proverbis canst thy self inow, and woste
Ayenist that vice for to ben a blabbe
All saied men sothe; as oftin as thei gabbe.

O tongue alas! so oftin here before
Hast thou made many' a ladie bright of hewe
Saied, Welawaie the daie that I was bore!
And many' a maidins sorowe for to newe,
And for the more parte all is but untrue
That men of yelp, and it wer brought to preve,
Of kindè none avauntour is to leve.

Avauntour and a lier all is one, 310
As thus. I suppose a woman graunt me
Her love, and saith that othir woll she none,
And I am sworne to holdin it secre,
And astir I goe tell it two or thre,
Iwis I am a vauntour at the lest,
And lier eke; for I breke my behest.

Now lokith than, if thei be not to blame
Soche manir folk, what shal I clepe 'hem, what?
That 'hem avaunt of women, and by name,
That yet behight 'hem never this ne that; 320
Ne knowin 'hem no more than mine olde hat,
No wondir is, so God me fendin hele,
Though women dredin with us men to dele.

I saie nat this for no mistrust of you,
Ne for no wise men, but for folis nice,
And for the harme that in the worlde is now,
As well for folie oft, as for malice,
For well wote I, that in wise folke that vice
No woman drat, if she be well avised,
For wise men ben by folis harme chastised. 330

But now to purpose, levè brothir dere,
Have all this thing, that I have saied, in minde,
And kepe The close, and be now of gode chere,
For all thy daies thou shalt me true yfinde,
I shall thy processe set in soche a kinde,
And God toforne, that it shall The suffice,
For it shall be right as thou wolt devise.

For well I wote thou menist well parde,
F f f f Therefore

Therefore I dare this fully undirtake,
 Thou wost eke what thy ladie grauntid The, 340
 And daie is set the charteris to make,
 Have now gode night, I maie no lengir wake,
 And bid for me, sith thou art now in blisse,
 That God me sende deth, or sonè lisse.

Who might ytellin halfe the joie or feste,
 Whiche that the soule of Troilus tho felte !
 Hering the' effect of Pandarus behestes
 His oldè wo, that made his herte to swelt,
 Gan tho for joie to wastin, and to melt,
 And all the reheting of his sikes sore 350
 At onis fled, he felt of 'hem no more.

But right so as these holtes, and these hayis,
 That han in Wintir dedde yben and drie,
 Revestin 'hem in grene, whan that Maie is,
 Whan every lustie beste listith to pleie,
 Right in that selfin wise, sothe for to seie
 Woxe sodainly his hertè full of joie,
 That gladdir was there nevir man in Troie:

And gan his loke on Pandarus up cast
 Full sobirly, and frendly on to se, 360
 And sayid, frende, in Aprilis the last,
 As well thou wost, if it remembir The,
 How nigh the deth for wo thou founde me,
 And how thou diddist all thy businesse
 To knowe of me the cause of my distresse:

Thou wost how long I it forbare to saie
 To The, that art the man that I best trift,
 And perill none was to The to bewraie,
 That wist I well: but tell me if The list,
 Sith I so lothe was, that thy self it wist, 370
 How durst I mo tellin of this matere,
 That quake now, tho no wight maie us here?

But nathèlesse, by that God I The swere,
 That as him list maie all this world governe,
 And if I lie, Achilles with his spere
 Mine hertè cleve, all were my life eterne,
 As I am mortall, if I late or yerne
 Would it bewraie, or durst, or should, or conne,
 For all the gode that God made undir sonne:

That rathir die I would, and determine, 380
 As thinkith me now, stockid in prifoun,
 In wretchidnesse, in filthe, and in vermine,
 Captive to cruill king Agamemnoun,
 And this in all the templis of this toun,
 Upon the Goddis all, I woll The swere
 To morowe daie, if that The likith here.

And that thou hast so moche idoen for me,
 That I ne maie it nevirmore deserve,
 This knowe I well, all might I now for The
 A thousande timis on a morowe serve, 390
 I can no more, but that I woll The serve
 Right as thine own slave, whithir so thou wende,
 For evirmore, unto my liv'is ende.

But here with al mine herte I The besече,
 That nevir in me thou deme soche folie,
 As I shall saine, me thought by thy speche,
 That this whiche thou me doest for companie,
 I should wenin it were a bauderie;
 I am not wode, all if I leude ybe,
 It is nat so, that wote I well parde. 400

But he that goeth for gold, or for richeffe
 On soche messagis, call him what ye list,
 And this that thou doest, call it gentilnesse,

Compassion, and felowship, and trift,
 Departin it so, for widewhere is wist,
 How that there is diversite requered
 Betwixin thingis like, as I have lered.

And that thou knowe I ne thinke not ne went
 That this service a shame be or a jape,
 I have my faire sustir Polyxene 410
 Cassandra', Helen, or any of the frape,
 Be she nevir so faire, or well ishape,
 Tell me whiche thou wilt of everichone
 To have for thine, and let me than alone.

But sith that thou hast doen me this service
 My life to save, and for non hope of mede,
 So for the love of God this grete emprise
 Performe it out, for now is the moste nede;
 For high and lowe withoutin any drede
 I woll alwaie thine hestis allè kepe, 420
 Have now gode night, and let us bothè slepe.

Thus helde 'hem eche of othir well apaied,
 That all the worlde ne might it bet amende,
 And on the morowe, whan thei were araied,
 Eche to his owne nedis gan entende,
 But Troilus, though as the fire he brende
 For sharpe desire of hope, and of plesaunce,
 He not forgate his gode wise govirnaunce:

But in himself with manhode gan restrain
 Eche rakill dede, and eche unbridlid chere, 430
 That all tho that livin sothe for to saine
 Ne should have wiste by worde or by manere
 What that he ment, as touching this matere,
 From every wight, as ferre as is the cloud,
 He was so wise, and wel dissimu'len coud.

And all the while whiche that I now devise
 This was his life, with all his fullè might,
 By daie he was in Mart's high service,
 That is to sain in armis as a knight,
 And fore the more part all the longè night 440
 He lay and thought how that he might yserve
 His ladie beste, her thanke for to deserve.

N'ill I not swerin, although he laie soft,
 That in his thought he n'as somwhat difesed,
 Ne that he tournid on his pillowes oft,
 And would of that him misfid have ben esed,
 But in soche case men be nat alwaie plesed
 For aught I wotè, no more than was he,
 That can I deme of possibilite.

But certain is, to purpose for to go, 450
 That in this while, as writtin is in geste,
 He sawe his ladie somtime, and also
 She with him spake, whan that she durst and leste,
 And by ther both avise, as was the beste,
 Appointidin full warely in this nede,
 So as thei durst, how thei wouldin procede.

But it was spokin in so short a wise,
 In soche awaite alwaie, and in soche fere
 Lest any wight devinin or devise
 Would of 'hem two, or to it laie an ere, 460
 That all this worlde so lefe to 'hem ne were
 As that Cupido would 'hem his grace sende
 To makin of ther purpose right an ende.

But thilkè little that thei spake or wrought
 His wise ghošte toke aie of all soche hede,
 It semid her he wiste what she thought
 Withoutin worde, so that it was no nede
 To bid him aught to doen, or aught forbede,

For

For which she thought that love, al come it late,
Of alle joie, had openid her the yate. 470

And shortly to this proceffe for to pace,
So well his werke and wordis he beset,
That he so full stode in his ladie's grace,
That twentie thousande timis er she let
She thonkid God she evir with him met,
So could he him governe in soche service,
That all the worlde ne might it bet devise.

For why? she founde him so discrete in all,
So secrete, and eke of soche obeisaunce,
That well she felt he was to her a wall
Of steele, and shelde from every displeaunce,
That to yben in his gode govimaunce,
So wise he was, she was no more afered,
I mene as ferre as it ought ben requered.

And Pandarus to quicke alwaie the fire
Was evir ilike prest and diligent,
To ese his frende was set al his desire,
He shove aie on, he to and fro was sent,
He lettirs bare whan Troilus was absent,
That nevir man as in his frend's nede 490
Ne bare him bet than he withoutin drede.

But now para'venture some man waitin wold,
That every worde or sonde, or loke or chere
Of Troilus that I rehercin shold,
In al this while, unto his lady dere,
I trowe it were a long thing for to here,
Or of what wight that stonte in suche distointe,
His wordis al, or every loke to pointe.

Forsothe I have not herde it done er this
In storie none, ne no man here, I wene, 500
And though I would, yet I could not iwis,
For there was some epikel 'hem betwene,
That would (as faith min auctor) wel contene
Nie halfe this boke, of which him list not write,
How should I than a line of it endite?

But to the gret effecte than saie I thus,
That stondin in concorde and in quiete
This ilke two, Creseide and Troilus,
As I have tolde, and in this timè swete,
Save onely oftin mightin thei not mete, 510
Ne leisir have ther spechis to fulfell,
That it befil, right as I shal you tell:

That Pandarus, that evir did his might
Right for the fine that I shal speke of here,
As for to bringin to his house some night
His faire nece, and Troilus ifere,
Where as at leisir al this high matere
Touching her love were at the ful up bounde,
Had out of doute a time to it yfounde.

For he with grete deliberacion 520
Had every thing that therto might availe
Forne cast, and put in execution,
And neithir leste for coste ne for travaile,
Come if 'hem liste, 'hem shoulde nothing faile,
And for to ben in aught espyid there,
That wiste he wel an impossible were.

And dredèlesse it clere was in the winde
Of every pie, and every letgame,
Now al is wel, for al the world is blinde
In this matir, bothè fremid and tame, 530
This timbir is al redy up to frame,
Us lackith naught, but that we wetin wold
A certaine houre, in whiche she comin shold.

And Troilus, that al this purveiaunce
Knew at the ful, and waitid on it aie,
And hereupon eke made gret ordinaunce,
And founde his cause, and therwith his aray,
Yf that he were ymissid, night or day,
There while he was aboutin this service,
That he was gon to don his sacrifice, 540

And muste at suche a temple alone wake,
Answerid of Apollo for to be,
And first to sene the holy laurir quake,
Er that Apollo spake out of the tre,
To tellin him whan Grekis next should fle,
And forthy let him no man, God forbede!
But prairie Apollo helpin in this nede.

Now is there litill more for to be done,
But Pandare up, and shortly for to saine,
Right sone upon the chaunging of the Mone, 550
Whan lightlesse is the world a night or twaine,
And that the welkin shope him for to raine,
He streight amorowe unto his nece went,
Ye have wel herde the fine of his entente.

Whan he was comen', he gan anon to plaie,
As he was wont, and of himselfe to jape,
And finally he swore, and gan her saie
By this and that, she should him not escape,
No lengir done him aftir her to cape,
But certainly that she must by her leve 560
Come soupin in his house with him at eve.

At which she lough, and gan her first excuse,
And said: it rainith: lo! how should I gone!
Let be (qð he) ne stonde not thus to muse,
This mote be don, ye shal come there anone.
So at the last herof thei fel at one
Or ellis soft he swore her in her ere
He n'oldè nevir comin there she were.

Sone aftir this, she unto him gan rowne,
And askid him if Troilus were there; 570
He swore her nay, for he was out of towne,
And said what? nece: I pose that he were there,
You durst nevir thereof have the more fere,
For rathir than men might him there asprie
Me levir were a thousande folde to die,

Naught list mine Auctor fully to declare
What that she thought, whan that he said her so,
That Troilus was out of toune ifare,
And if he saidè therof soth or no,
But that without awaite with him to go 580
She grauntid him, sithe he her that besought,
And as his nece obeyid, as her ought.

But nathèlesse, yet gan she him beseche,
Although with him to gone it was no fere,
For to beware of gosishe peplis speche,
That dremin thingis, which that nevir were,
And well avisin him whom he brought there,
And said him Eme, sens I must on you trist,
Loke al be wel, I do now as you list.

He swore her this, by stockis and by stones, 590
And by the Goddis that in hevin dwell,
Or ellis were him levir soule and bones
With Pluto King as depè ben in Hell
As Tantalus; what shoulidin I more tell?
Whan al was wel, he rose and toke his leve,
And she to soupir came whan it was eve,

With a certaine numbere of her owne men,
And

And with her fayir nece Antigone,
And othir of her women nine or ten;
But who was glad nowe, who as trowyin ye? 600
But Troilus, that stode and might it se
Throughout a litil window in a stewe,
Ther he beset till midnight was in mewe;

Unwist of every wight, but of Pandare.
But to the point; now whan that she was come
With al joie, and al her frendis in fare,
Her Eme anone in armis hath her nome,
And aftir to the soupir al and some,
Whan as time was, ful softe thei 'hem yfet,
God wot there was no deinte ferre to fet. 610

And aftir soupir gonnin thei to rise,
At ese wel, with hertis full fresh and glade,
And wel was him that coude best devise
To likin her, or that her laughin made,
He songe, she plaide, he tolde a tale of Wade,
But at the last, as every thing hath ende,
She toke her leve, and nedis would thens wende.

But o fortune, executrice of wierdes,
O influencis of these hevins hie,
Soth is, that undir God ye ben our hierdes, 620
Though to us bestis ben the causis wrie;
This mene I now, for she gan homward hie,
But execute was al beside her leve
The Goddis wil, for whiche she must bileve.

The bentè Mone with her hornis all pale,
Saturn and Jove, in Cancro joynid were,
That fuche a raine from hevin gan availe,
That every manir woman that was there
Had of that smoky raine a very fere:
At the which Pandare tho lough, and said thenne,
Now were it time a Lady to gone henne,

But gode nece, if that I might evir plese
You any thing, than pray I you (qð he)
To don mine hert as now so gret an ese
As for to dwell here al this night with me,
For why? this is your owne house parde,
For by my trouthe, I say it nat in game,
To wende as nowe, it were to me a shame.

Creseide, which that could as mokil gode
As halfe a world, toke hede of his prayere, 640
And sens it rained, and al was in a fode,
She thought, as gode chepe may I dwellin here,
And graunt it gladly with a frend's chere,
And have a thonke, as grutche, and than abide,
For home to gon it may nat well betide.

I wol (qð she) mine uncle lese and dere,
Sens that you list, it skil is to be so,
I am right glad with you to dwellin here,
I seide but in game, that I wolde goe;
Iwis graunt mercy nece (qð he) tho 650
Were it agame or no the sothe to tell,
Now am I glad, sens that you list to dwell.

Thus al is wel, but tho began aright
The newè joy, and al the fest againe,
But Pandarus, if godely had he might,
He would have hyid her to bedde full faine,
And said, O lorde this is an huge raine,
This were a wethir for to slepin in,
And that I rede us sonè to begin,

And nece, wote ye where I wol you laie? 660
For that we shul nat liggin ferre asonder,
And for ye neithir shullin, dare I saie,

Herin the noise of rainis, ne of thonder;
By God right in my litil clofet yonder,
And I wol in that uttir house alone
Ben wardain of your women everichone;

And in this middle chambre that ye se,
Shal all your women slepin, wel and softe,
And there I sayid, shal your selvin be, 670
And if ye liggin wel to night, come ofte,
And carith not what wethir is alofte.
Goth in anone, and whan so that ye left,
Go we to slepe, I trowe it be the best.

There n'is no more, but here aftir sone
Thei drank, voidid, and curtins drew anone,
Gan every wight that hadde nought to done
More in the place, out of the chambre gone,
And evir more so sterneliche it rone,
And blewe therwith so wonderliche loude,
That wel nigh no man herin othir coude. 680

Tho Pandarus her Eme, right as him ought,
With women, fuche as were her most aboute,
Ful glad unto her bedd'is side her brought,
And toke his leve, and gan ful lowe to loute,
And said, here at this clofet dore withoute
Right ovirthwart your women liggin all,
That whom ye list of 'hem ye maie sone call.

So whan that she was in the clofet laide,
And al her women forth by ordinaunce 690
A bedde werin, there as I have ysaide,
There n'as no more to skippin nor to prounce
But bodin go to bedde with mischaunce,
If any wight stering were any where,
And let 'hem slepin that abedde ywere.

But Pandarus, that wel couthe eche adele
The olde daunce, and every point therin,
Whan that he wiste that all thing was wele,
He thought he wolde upon his werke begin,
And gan the stewè dore all soft unpin
As stil as stone, withoutin lengir lette, 700
By Troilus adoun right he him sette.

And shortly to the pointe right for to gone,
Of al this werke he told him orde and ende,
And sayid, make The redy right anone,
For thou shalt into hevin blisse ywende.
Now blisful Venus, thou me grace ysende,
(Qð Troilus) for nevir yet no nede
Had I er now, ne halfindele the drede.

(Qð Pandarus) ne drede The ner a dele,
For it shal be right as thou wolt desire, 710
So thrive I, this night shal I make it wele,
Or castin all the gruil in the fire,
Yet blisful Venus this night thou me' enspire, (Qð Troilus), as wis as I The serve,
And evir bet and bet shal til I sterre,

And if I had, O Venus ful of mirthe,
Aspectis badde of Mars, or of Saturne,
Or thou combuste, or let were in my birth,
Thy father pray I al thilke harme disturne 720
Of grace, and that I glad aien maie turne,
For love of him thou lovidest in the shawe,
I mene Adon, that with the bore was slawe;

O Jove eke, for the love of faire Europe.
The which in form of bulle awaie thou fet;
Now helpe, o Mars, that with thy bloody cope,
For love of Cypria, thou me naught ne let;
O Phœbus, think when Daphne her selve stert

Undir

Undir the barke, and Laurit woxe for drede,
Yet for her love, o helpe me at this nede:

O Mercurie, for the love of her eke, 730
For which Pallas was with Aglauros wrothe,
Now helpe; and eke Diane I The beseke,
That this viage ne be nat to The lothe;
O fatall fustrin, whiche or any clothe
Me shapin was my destine me sponne,
So helpith to this werke that is begonne.

(Qð Pandarus) thou wretchid mowc'is hert,
Art thou agast so that she wol The bite,
Why, do on this furred cloke upon thy sherte;
And folowe me, for I wol have the wite, 740
But bide, and let me gon before alite;
And with that worde he gan undone a trappe,
And Troilus he brought in by the lappe.

The sternè winde so loude began to route,
That no wight other'is noise might yhere,
And thei that layin at the dore without
Full sikirly thei sleptin all ifere;
And Pandarus, with a ful sobre chere
Goth to the dore anon withoutin lette
There as thei lay, and softily it shette: 750

And as he came ayenwarde privily
His nece awoke, and askith, who goeth there?
Mine ownè dere nece (qð he) it am I,
Ne wondrith not, ne have of it no fere,
And nere he came, and said her in her ere,
No worde for love of God I you besече,
Let no wight rise, and herin of our speche.

What, whiche waie be ye comen? benedicite,
(Qð she) and how thus unwiste of hem all?
Here at this secret trappè dore (qð he) 760
(Qð tho Cresèide) let me some wight call,
Eigh, God forbid that it should so befall (Qð Pandarus) that ye suche foly wrought!
Thei might demin thing that thei nevir thought,

It is nat gode a sleping hounde to wake,
Ne yeve a wight a cause for to devine,
Your women slepin al, I undirtake
So that for them the house men mightin mine,
And slepin wollin till the sunnè shine,
And when my tale ybrought is to an ende, 770
Unwist right as I came, so wol I wende.

Now necè mine, ye shul well undirstonde
(Qð he) so as ye women demin all,
That for to holde in love a man in honde,
And him her lefe and her dere hert to call,
And makin him an how above a call;
I mene, as love an othir in mene while,
She doth her selfe a shame, and him a gile.

Now wherby that I tellin you al this,
Ye wote your selfe, as wel as any wight, 780
How that your love al fully grauntid is
To Troilus, that is the worthiest wight
One of the world, and therto trouth iplight,
That, but it were on him alonge, ye n'olde
Him nevir fallin, while ye livin sholde.

Now stonte it thus, that sith I fro you went,
This Troilus, right platly for to feine,
Is through a guttir by a privy went Into my chambre come in al this reine,
Unwist of every manir wight certaine, 790
Save of my selfe, as wisely have I joie,
And by the faith I owe Priam of Troie,

And he is come in suche paine and distresse,
That but he be all fully wode by this,
He sodainly mote fall into wodenesse,
But if God helpe: and the cause why is this,
He saith him told is of a frende of his,
How that he should love one, that hight Horast,
For sorow of which this night shal be his last.

Cresèide, whiche that al this wondir herde 800
Gan sodainly aboute her hert to colde,
And with a sigh she sorowfully answerd,
Alas! I wende whofoere talis tolde,
My dere hert certis, Eme, would me nat holde
So lightly faulse, alas! conceitis wrong
What harme thei done, for now live I to long;

Horaste alas! and falsin Troilus!
I knowe him not, God helpe me so (qð she)
Alas, what wickid spirite tolde him thus! 810
Now certis Eme, to morow' and I him se,
I shal therof as full excusin me
As evir did woman, if that him like,
And with that worde she gan full fore to fike.

O God (qð she) so worldly selinesse,
Whiche clerkis callin false Felicite,
Ymedlid is with many' a bittirnesse
Ful anguishous, than is God wote (qð she)
Condicion of veine prosperite, 820
For eithir joyis comin nat ifere,
Or ellis no wight hath hem alwaie here.

O brotil wele of mann'is joie unstable,
With what wight so thou be, or how thou playe,
Eithir he wote, that thou joie art mutable,
Or wote it nate, it mote ben one of twaie,
Now if he wote it nat, how maie he saie
That he hath very joie and filinesse,
That is of ignoraunce aie in derkenesse?

Now if he wote that joy is transitory,
(As every joie of worldly thing mote fle) 830
Than every time he that hath in memory,
The drede of lesing makith him, that he
May in no parfite sikirnesse ybe,
And if to lese his joie he set a mite,
Than semith it, that joy is worth ful lite.

Wherefore I wol define in this matere,
That truily for augh I can espie
There is no very wele in this world here;
But o thou wickid serpent Jelousie, 840
Thou misbeleid, envious folie,
Why hast thou Troilus made me to untrist,
That nevir yet agilte him, that I wiste.

(Qð Pandarus) thus fallin is this caas.
Why uncle mine (qð she) who tolde him this?
And why doth my dere hertè thus, alas!
Ye wote, ye nece min (qð he) what it is,
I hope al shal be wel, that is amis,
For ye maie quenche al this, if that you lest,
And doeth right so, I holde it for the best.

So shal I do to morow', iwis (qð she) 850
And God toforne, so that it shal suffice.
To morow alas! that were faire (qð he)
Nay nay, it maie nat stondin in this wise,
For necè mine, thus writin clerkis wise
That peril is with wretching in ydrawe,
Nay, suche abodis ben nat worthe an hawe:

Nece, allè thing hath time I dare avowe,
For whan a chambre' a fire is, or an hall,
G g g g Wel

Wel more nede is it sodainly rescowe,
 Than to dispute and aske amongis all
 How is this candil in the strawe yfall?
 Ah bened cite! for al among that fare
 The harne is done, and farwel feldfare.

And necè mine, ne take it nat agrese,
 If that ye suffre' him al night in this wo,
 God helpe me so, ye had him nevir lese,
 What dare I sain, now there is but we two,
 But wel I wote that ye wol nat so do,
 Ye ben to wise to don so gret folie,
 To put his life al night in jeopardie.

Had I him nevir lese? By God I wene
 Ye ne had nevir thing so lese, (qð she)
 Now by my thrifte (qð he) that shall be sene,
 For sithe ye make this ensample of me,
 If I al night would in him sorowe se
 For al the tresour in the toun of Troie,
 I bidde God that I nevir mote have joie.

Now lokè than, if ye that ben his love
 Should put his life all night in jeopardy
 For thing of nought, now by that God above,
 Nat onely this delaie cometh of folie,
 But of malice, if that I should nat lie,
 What? platly and ye suffre' him in distresse,
 Ye neithir bounte done ne gentilnesse.

(Qð tho Creseide) wol ye done o thing,
 And ye therwith shal stinte al his disese
 Have here and berith him this blewè ring,
 For there is nothing might him bettir plesse,
 Save I my selfe, ne more his hert apese,
 And saie my derè herte, that his sorowe
 Is causelesse, that shal he sene to morowe.

A ringe (qð he) ye hafilwodis shaken!
 Ye necè mine, that ring must have a stone,
 A stone which that might ded men alive maken,
 And suche a ring trowe I that ye have none,
 Discrecion out of your hed is gone,
 That fele I now (qð he) and that is routhe,
 O time ilost, wel maist thou cursin slouthe!

Wote ye not wel that noble' and hie corage
 Ne soroweth nat, ne stintith eke for lite,
 But if a sole were in a jelous rage,
 I n'olde settin at his sorowe a mite,
 But feste him with a fewè wordis white
 An othir daie, whan that I might him finde,
 But this thing stant al in anothir kinde,

This is so gentle' and so tendir of herte,
 That with his deth he wol his sorowes wreke,
 For trust it wel, how fore so that him smerte,
 He wol to you no jelous wordis speke,
 And forthy nece, er that his hert to breke,
 So speke your selfe to him of this matere,
 For with a worde ye maie his hertè stere.

Now have I tolde what peril he is in,
 And his coming unwist to every wight,
 Ne parde harne maie there be none, ne sin,
 I wol my self be with you al this night,
 Ye know eke how it is your ownè knight,
 And by that right ye must upon him triste,
 And I al prest to fetch him when you list.

This accident so pitous was to here,
 And eke so like a sothe, at primè face,
 And Troilus her knight, to her so-dere,
 His prive comming, and the sikir place,

That though, she thought, she did him than a grace,
 Confidrid al thingis as thei stode,
 No wondir is, sens he did al for gode.

Creseide answerde, as wisely God at rest
 My soulè bring, as me is for him wo,
 And Eme iwis, faine would I don the best,
 If that I a grace had for to do so,
 But whethir that ye dwel, or for him go,
 I am, til God me bettir mindè sende,
 At Dulcarnon, right at my witt's ende.

(Qð Pandarus) ye necè wol ye here,
 Dulcarnon clepid is fleming of wretches,
 It semith hard, for wretchis wol nought lere
 For very slouthe, or othir wilfull tetches,
 This said is by them that ben't worth two fetches,
 But ye ben wise, and that ye han on honde
 N'is neithir harde, ne skilful to withstonde.

Than Eme (qð she) doeth hereof as you list,
 But er he come, I wol up first arise,
 And for the love of God, sens al my trift
 Is on you two, and ye beth bothè wise,
 So werkith now, in so discrete a wise,
 That I honour maie have, and he plessaunce,
 For I am here al in your govinaunce.

That is wel said (qð he) my necè dere
 There gode thrifte on that wise gentill herte,
 But liggith still, and takith him right here,
 It nedith nat no ferthir for him sterre,
 And eche of you ese othir sorowes smert,
 For love of God, and Venus I The herie,
 For sone hope I, that we shullin ben merie.

This Troilus full sone on knees him sette
 Ful sobrelly, right by her bedd'is hed,
 And in his bestè wife his Lady grette,
 But lord! so she woxe sodainliche all red,
 And thought anone how that she shulde be dedde,
 She couldè nat o worde aright out bringe,
 So sodainly for his sodaine cominge.

But Pandarus, that so wel couldè fele
 In every thing, to plaie anon began,
 And sayid, Nece, se how this Lord gan knele,
 Now for your trouthe se this gentil man;
 And with that worde, he for a quishin ran,
 And said knelith now whilis that thou leste,
 There God your hertis bring sonè to reste.

Can I naught sain, for she bad him nat rise,
 If sorowe' it put out of her remembraunce,
 Or ellis that she toke it in the wise
 Of duetie, as for his observaunce,
 But well finde I, she did him this plessaunce,
 That she him kist, although she sikid sore,
 And bad him sit adoun withoutin more.

(Qð Pandarus) now wol ye well begin,
 Now doth him sittin doune gode necè dere
 Upon your bedd'is side, al there within,
 That eche of you the bet maie othir here,
 And with that worde he drew him to the fere,
 And toke a light, and found his countinaunce,
 As for to loke upon an old romaunce.

Creseide, that was Troilus lady right,
 And clere stode in a grounde of sikirnesse,
 All thought she that her servaunt and her knight
 Ne shulde of trouthe none unright of her gesse,
 Yet nathèlesse, confidrid his distresse,

And

And that love is in cause of suche folie,
Thus to him spake she of his jelousie.

Lo hertè mine, as would the excellence 990
Of love, aienst the whiche that no man maie,
Ne ought eke godely makin resistence,
And eke bicause I felte wel and saie
Your grete trouth, and service every daie,
And that your hert al mine was, soth to saine,
This drove me for to rewe upon your paine;

And your godenes have I founden' alway yet,
Of whiche my derè hert, and al my knight,
I thanke it you, as ferre as I have wit,
Al can I nat as much as it were right, 1000
And I emforth my conning and my might
Have, and aie shal, how fore so that me smert,
Ben to you trewe and whole with all mine hert;

And dredileffe that shal be founde at preve;
But hertè mine, what al this is to saine,
Shal well be told, so that ye nought you greve,
Though I to you right on your self complaine,
For therewith mene I finally the paine,
That halt your hert and mine in hevinessse,
Fully to saine, and every wrong redressse. 1010

My gode hert mine, n'ot I, for why, ne how,
That jelously alas! that wicked wivere,
Thus causèlesse is cropin into you,
The harme of whiche I would fain deliverè,
Alas! that he all whole or of him slivere
Should have his refute in so digne a place!
Than Jove him sone out of your herte erace.

But o thou Jove, o Auctour of nature,
Is this an honour to thy dignite,
That folke ungilty suffrin here injure, 1020
And who that gilty is, al quite goeth he?
O were it lefull for to plaine of The,
That undeservid suffrist jelousie,
Of that I would upon The plaine and crie.

Eke al my wo is this, that folke now usen
To saine right thus: ye, jelousie is love,
And would a bushil of venim excusen,
For that a grane of love is on it shove,
But that wote high Jove that sittin above,
If it be likir love, or hate, or grame, 1030
And astir that it ought to bere his name.

But certaine is, some manir jelousie
Is excusable, more than some iwis,
As whan cause is, and some suche fantasie,
With pite that so wel expressid is,
That it unnethis doeth or saith amis,
But godely drinkith up al his distresse,
And that excuse I for the gentilnesse.

And some so ful of fury'is, and dispite,
That it surmountith his represson, 1040
But hertè mine, ye be nat in that plite,
That thonke I God, for whiche your passion
I wol nat cal it but illusion
Of haboundaunce of love, and besy cure,
That doth your hertè this disese endure:

Of which I am right sory, but nat wrothe,
But for my devoir and your hert'is restè,
Where so you list, by ordal or by othe,
By sorte, or in what wise so that you lestè,
For love of God, let preve it for the beste, 1050
And if that I be gilty, do me die;
Alas, what might I more or done or seie!

And tho with that a fewe bright teris newe
Out of her eyin fel, and thus she seide,
Now God thou wost, in thought ne dede untrewè
To Troilus was nevir yet Creseide;
With that her hed down in the bed she leide,
And with the shete it wrie, and sighid fore,
And held her pece, nat a word spake she more.

But now helpe God, to quench al this sorow; 1060
So hope I that he shal, for he beste may,
For I have sene of a ful misty morow
Folowen ful oft a mery somir's day,
And astir wintir foloweth grene May,
Men sene all day, and redin eke in stories,
That astir sharpe flouris ben victories.

This Troilus, when he her wordis herde,
Have ye no care, him listè nat to slepe,
For it thought him no strokis of a yerde
To here or se Creseide his lady wepe, 1070
But wel he felte about his hertè crepe,
For every tere whiche that Creseide afterte,
The crampe of deth, to straine him by the herte.

And in his minde he gan the time accurse
That he came there, and that he was yborne,
For now is wicke ytournid into worse, 1080
And all that labour he hath doen beforne,
He wende it lost, he thought it n'as but lorne;
O Pandarus thought he, alas thy wile
Servith of nought, so welawaie the while!

And therewithall he hing adoune his hedde,
And fell on knees, and sorowfully fight,
What might he saine? he felt he n'as but dedde,
For wroth was she that should his sorowes light;
But nathèlesse, whan that he spekin might,
Than said he thus, God wote that of this game
Whan all is wist, than am I nat to blame.

Therewith the sorowe in his hert so shet,
That from his eyin fell there nat a tere,
And every spirite his vigour in knet
So thei astonied and oppressid were,
The feling of his sorowe, or his fere,
Or of aught ellis, fledde were out of tounè,
Adoune he fell all sodainly in swoone.

This was no little sorowe for to se,
But all was hush't, and Pandare up as fast, 1100
O Necè pece, or we be lost (qð he)
Bethe nat agast, but certain at the last
For this or that, he into bedde him cast,
And saied, O thefe, is this a mann'is herte?
And of he rent all to his bare sherte,

And sayid nece, but and ye helpe us now,
Alas! your owne Troilus is lorne;
Iwis so would I, and I wistè how
Full fain (qð she) alas that I was borne! 1110
Ye Necè, woll ye pullin out the thorne,
That stickith in his hertè (qð Pandare)
Saie all foryeve, and stint is all this fare.

Ye that to me (qð she) full levir were
Than all the gode the Sunne about ygoeth,
And therewithall she swore him in his ere,
Iwis my derè herte I am not wrothe,
Have here my trouth, and many' an othir othe,
Now speke to me, for it am I Creseide;
But all for naught, yet might he not abreide.

Therewith his poulce, and paumis of his hondes, 1120
Thei gan to frote, and wete his templis twain,
And

And to delivir him fro bittir bondes
 She oft him kist, and shortly for to fain
 Him to rewakin she did all her pain;
 And at the last he gan his breth to drawe,
 And of his swough sone aftir that adawe,

And gan bet minde, and refon to him take,
 But wondir fore he was abashed iwis,
 And with a sigh whan he gan bet awake
 Hesaied, O mercie God, what thing is this? 1130
 Why doe ye with your selvin thus amis?
 (Qð tho Creseide) is this a mann's game?
 What Troilus, woll ye doe thus for shame?

And therewithall her arme ovre' him she laied,
 And all foryave, and oftin time him keft.
 He thonkid her, and to her spake and saied
 As fill to purpose, for his hert'is rest;
 And she to that answerde him as her left,
 And with her godelic wordis him disport
 She gan, and oft his sorowes to comfort. 1140

(Qð Pandarus) for aught I can asprien
 This light nor I ne servin here of naught,
 Light is nat gode for sikè folkis eyen,
 But for the love of God, sens ye ben brought
 In this gode plite, let now non hevy thought
 Ben hangid in the hertis of you twey;
 And bare the candle towards the chimney.

Sone after this, though it no nede ywere,
 Whan she soche othis as her list devise
 Had of him takin, her thought tho no fere 1150
 Ne cause eke none, to bid him thennis rise,
 Yet lessè thing than othis maie suffice
 In many' a case, for every wight I gesse,
 That lovith well, menith but gentilnesse.

But in effect she would ywete anon
 Of what man, and eke where, and also why
 He jelous was, sens there was causè non,
 And eke the signe whiche that he toke it by,
 She bade him that to tell her busily,
 Or ellis certain she bare him on honde 1160
 That this was doen of malice her to fonde.

Withoutin more, shortly for to fain,
 He must obeie unto his ladie's heft
 And for the lassè harme he must somewhat fain,
 He saied her, whan she was at soche a fest
 She might on him have lokid at the left,
 N'or I nat what (all dere inough a rishe)
 As he that nedis must a cause out fishe.

And she answerde, swete hert, all were it so,
 What harme was that, since I non evill mene? 1170
 For by that God that wrought us bothè two,
 In all manir thing is mine entent clene,
 Soche argumentes ne be nat worthe a bene,
 Woll ye the childish jelous counterfete?
 Now were it worthy that ye were ibete.

Tho Troilus gan sorowfully sike,
 Left she be wrothe, him thought his hertè deide,
 And saied, alas! upon my sorowe's sike
 Have mercie o swete hertè mine Creseide,
 And if that in tho wordis that I seide, 1180
 Be any wrong, I woll no more trespæce,
 Doeth what you list, I am all in your grace.

And she answerde, of gilt misericorde,
 That is to saine, that I foryeve all this,
 And evirmore on this night you recorde,
 And bethe well ware ye doe no more amis;

Naie dere hert mine no more (qð he) iwis.
 And now (qð she) that I have you doe smerte
 Foryeve it to me, mine owne swetè herte.

This Troilus with blisse of that supprised 1190
 Put all in Godd'is hande, as he that ment
 Nothing but well, and sodainly avised
 He her in his armis fast to him hent,
 And Pandarus, with a full gode entent
 Laied him to slepe, and saied, if ye be wise,
 Sownith not now, lest more folke arise.

What might or maie the fely Larkè saie
 Whan that the sparhauke hath him in his fote?
 I can no more, but of these ilkè twaie, 1200
 (To whom this talè sugre be or fote)
 Though I tary a yere, somtime I mote
 After mine Auðhour tellin ther gladnesse,
 As well as I have tolde ther hevinesse.

Creseidè, whiche that felt her thus itake,
 (As writin clerkis in ther bokis old)
 Right as an aspin lese she gan to quake,
 Whan she him felt her in his armis fold,
 But Troilus all whole of caris cold
 Gan thankin tho the blisfull Goddis seven;
 Thus sondry painis bringin folk to heven. 1210

This Troilus in armis gan her straine,
 And sayid swete, as evir mote I gone,
 Now be ye caught, now here is but we twaine,
 Now yeldith you, for othir bote is none.
 To that Creseide answerid thus anone,
 Ne had I er now, my swete hertè dere
 Ben yoldin iwis, I were now not here.

O soth is saied, that helid for to be
 Of a fevir, or othir grete siknesse,
 Men must drinkin, as we may oftin se, 1220
 Full bittir drinke; and for to have gladnesse
 Men drinkin oft in pain, and in distresse:
 I mene it here, as for this avinture,
 That through a pain hath foundin al his cure.

And now swetnesse ysemith ferre more swete,
 That bittirnesse aslayid was biforne,
 For out of wo in blisse now thei flete,
 Non soche thei feltin fithins thei were borne,
 Now is this bettir than bothe two be lorne;
 For love of God, take every woman hede 1230
 To werkin thus, if it come to the nede.

Creseide all quite from every drede and tene,
 As she that justè cause had him to trist,
 Made him soche fest, it joie was for to fene,
 Whan she his trouth and clene entent ywist;
 And as about a tre with many' a twist
 Bitrent and writhin is the swete Wodbinde,
 Gan eche of 'hem in armis othir winde.

And as the newe abashid Nightingale,
 That stintith first, whan she beginnith sing, 1240
 Whan that she herith any herd'is tale,
 Or in the hedgis any wight stering,
 And aftir sikir doeth her voice out ring,
 Right so Creseidè, whan that her drede stent,
 Opened her hert, and told him her entent.

And right as he that seeth his deth ishapen,
 And dyin mote, in aught that he maie gesse,
 And sodainly rescous doeth him escapen,
 And from his deth is brought in sikirnesse,
 For al this worlde in soche present gladnesse 1250
 Was

Was Troilus, and hath his lady swete.
With no worse hap God let us nevir mete!

Her armis small, her back both streight and soft,
Her sidis long, and fleshy, smothe, and white,
He gan to stroke, and gode thrift bad full oft,
Her snow-white throte, her brestis round and lite;
Thus in this heven' he gan him to delite,
And therewithall a thousande times her kist,
That what to doen for joie unneth he wist.

Than saied he thus, O Love, O Charite, 1260
Thy mothir eke, Citherea the swete,
Aftir thy self, next heryid be she,
Venus I mene, the wellwilly planete;
And next that Hymenaus I The grete,
For nevir man was to you Goddis hold
As I, whiche ye have brought fro caris cold.

Benigne Love, thou holy bond of thinges,
Who so woll grace, and list The not honoure,
Lo! his desire woll fle withoutin winges,
For n'oldist thou of bounte 'hem socoure 1270
That servin best, and moſte alwaie laboure,
Yet were all lost, that dare I well fain certes,
But if thy grace ypassid our desertes.

And for thou me, that lest thonke coud deserve
Of them that nombrid ben unto thy grace,
Hast holpin, there I likely was to sterve,
And me bestowid in so high a place,
That thilke boundis maie no blisse surpace,
I can no more, but laude and reverence
Be to thy bounte and thine excellence. 1280

And therewithall Creseide anon he kist,
Of whiche certain she ne felt no disese,
And thus saied he, now would to God I wist,
Mine hertè swete, how I you best might plesse,
What man (qð he) was evir thus at ese
As I, on whiche the fairist, and the best
That er I seie, deinith her hert to rest!

Here maie ye fene that mercie passith right,
The' experience of that is felt in me,
That am unworthy to so swete a wight, 1290
But harte mine, of your benignite
So thinkith, that though I unworthy be,
Yet mote I nede amendin in some wise,
Right through the vertue of your hie service;

And for the love of God, my lady dere,
Sith he hath wrought me for I shal you serve,
As thus I mene: that ye woll be my fere
To doe me live, if that you list, or sterve,
So techith me, how that I maie deserve
Your thonke, so that I through min ignoraunce
Ne doe nothing that you be displeaunce.

For certis, freshe and womanliche wife,
This dare I saie, that trowth and diligence,
That shall ye findin in me all my life,
Ne I woll not certain breke your defence,
And if I doe, present, or in absence,
For love of God, let slea me with the dede,
If that it like unto your womanhede.

Iwis (qð she) mine ownè hert'is lust,
My ground of ese, and al mine hertè dere, 1310
Graunt mercie, for on that is all my trust;
But let us fall awaie fro this mattere,
For it suffisith, this that saied is here,
And at o worde, withoutin repentaunce,
Welcome my knight, my pece, my suffisaunce.

Of ther delite or joies one of the lest
Were impossible to my wit to saie,
But judgith ye, that have ben at the fest
Of soche gladnesse, if that him list to plaie;
I can no more, but thus these ilke twaie 1320
That night, betwixin drede and sikirnesse,
Feltin in love the gretist worthinesse.

O blisfull night, of them so long isought,
How blithe unto 'hem bothe two thou were!
Why ne' had I soche fest with my soule ibought,
Ye, or but the lest joie which that was there?
Awaie thou soule daungir and thou fere,
And let 'hem in this hevin blisse ydwell,
That is so high, that all ne can I tell.

But sothe is, though I can not tellin all, 1330
As can mine Authour of his excellence,
Yet have I saied, and God tofornè shall
In every thing all wholly his sentence,
And if that I, at lov'is reverence,
Have any worde in echid for the best,
Doeth therewithall right as your selvin lest.

For all my wordis here, and every part,
I speke 'hem all undir correction
Of you that feling have in lov'is art
And put it all in your discrecion, 1340
To encrese or make diminicion
Of my langage, and that I you beseeche;
But now to purpose of my rathir speche.

These ilke two, that ben in armis last,
So lothe to 'hem asondir gon it were,
That eche from othir wendin ben biraft,
Or ellis lo! this was ther moſte fere,
That all this thing but nice dremis were,
For whiche full oft eche of 'hem saied, o swete,
Clippe I you thus, or els doe I it mete! 1350

And Lorde! so he gan godelie on her se,
That nevir his loke ne blent from her face,
And saied, O my dese hertè maie it be
That it be sothe, that ye ben in this place?
Ye hertè mine, God thanke I of his grace,
(Qð tho Creseide) and therewithall him kist,
That where here spirite was, for joie she n'ist.

This Troilus full oft her eyin two
Gan for to kisse, and saied: O eyin clere,
It werin ye that wrought me soche wo, 1360
Ye humble nettis of my lady dere,
Though there be mercie writtin in your chere,
God wote the text full harde is for to finde,
How couldin ye withoutin bonde me binde?

Therwith he gan her fast in armis take,
And well an hundrid timis gan he fike,
Not soche sorowfull sighis as men make
For wo, or ellis whan that folke be fike,
But ese sighis, soche as ben to like, 1370
That shewid his affection within,
Of soche manir sighis could he not blin.

Sone aftir this thei spake of fondrie thinges,
As fill to purpose of this avinture,
And playing enterchaungidin ther ringes,
Of whiche I can not tellin no scripture,
But well wot, a broche of gold and azure,
In whiche a Rubie set was like an hert,
Creseide him yave, and stacke it on his sherte.

Lorde! trowè ye that a coveitous wretche,
That blamith love, and halte of it dispite, 1380
H h h h That

That of tho pens that he can muckre' and ketch
Was evir yet yeve to him soche delite,
As is in love in o point in some plite?
Naie doubtilese, for all so God me save,
So parfite joie ne maie no nigard have.

Thei woll saie yes, but Lorde that so thei lie!
Tho busie wretchis full of wo and drede,
That callin love a wodenesse or folie;
But it shall fall 'hem, as I shall you rede,
Thei shall forgon the white and eke the rede, 1390
And live in wo, there God yeve 'hem mischaunce,
And every lovir in his trouthe avaunce!

As would to God tho wretchis, that dispise
Service of love, had eris all so long
As had Midas, all full of covetise,
And therto dronkin had as hotte and strong
As Cyrus did, for his affectis wrong,
To techin 'hem that thei ben in the vice,
And lovirs not, although thei hold 'hem nice.

These ilke two, of whom that I you saie 1400
Whan that ther hertis well assurid were,
Tho gonnin thei to spekin and to plaie,
And eke rehercin how, and whan, and where Thei knewin first, and every wo or fere,
That passid was, but all soche hevinessse,
Ithonkid God, was tournid to gladnessse.

And evirmore, whan that 'hem fell to speke
Of any thing of soche a time agone,
With kissing all that talè should ybreke,
And fallin into a newe joie anone, 1410
And biddin all ther might, sens thei were one,
For to recoveren blisse, and ben at ese,
And' passid wo with joyis counterpaife.

Reson woll not that I spekin of slepe,
For it accordith not to my mattere,
God wote thei toke of it full little kepe,
But lest this night, that was to 'hem so dere,
Ne should in vaine escape in no manere,
It was bifet in joie and businesse
Of all that sounith into gentilnessse. 1420

But whan the cocke, commune Astrologer,
Gan on his brest to bete, and astir crowe,
And Lucifer, the day's messanger,
Gan for to rise, and out his bemis throwe,
And Estward rose, to him that could it know;
Fortuna major, that anone Creseide,
With herte fore, to Troilus thus seide.

Mine hert's life, my trust, al my plefaunce,
That I was borne alas! that me is wo,
That daie of us mote make disceveraunce, 1430
For time it is to rise, and hennis go,
Or ellis I am lost for evirmo,
O night alas! why n'ilt thou ore us hove,
As long as whan Alcmena laie by Jove?

O blackè night; as folke in bokis rede,
That shapin art by God this worlde to hide,
At certain timis, with thy derkè wede,
That undir that men might in rest abide,
Wel oughtin bestes to plain, and folke to chide,
That thereas daie with labor would us brest, 1440
That thou thus fliest, and deinist us not rest.

Thou doest alas! so shortly thine office,
Thou racle night, that God makir of kinde
The for thine hast, and thine unkindè vice
So fast aie to our Hemisphere binde,

That nevirmore undir the ground thou winde,
For through thy racle hying out of Troie!
Have I forgone thus hastily my joie.

This Troilus, that with tho wordis felt,
As thought him tho, for piteous distresse, 1450
The blodie teris from his herte melt,
As he that yet nevir soche hevinessse
Assayid had, out of so grete gladnessse,
Gan therewithall Creseide his lady dere
In armis strain, and said in this manere.

O cruill daie, accuser of the joie,
That night and love hath stole, and fast iwrie,
Accursid be thy comming into Troie,
For every bowre hath one of thy bright eyen,
Envious daie, what list The so to spien, 1460
What hast thou lost, why sekist thou this place?
There God thy light so quenche for his graee.

Alas! what have these lovirs The agilt?
Dispitous daie! thine be the paine of hell,
For many' a lovir hast thou slain, and wilt,
Thy poring in woll no where let 'hem dwell,
What proffist thou thy light here for to sel?
Go sell it them that smale felis grave,
We woll The not, us nedith no daie have.

And eke the sonnè Titan gan he chide, 1470
And said, O sole, well maie men The dispise,
That hast all night the Dauning by thy side,
And suffrist her so sone up fro The rise,
For to disese us lovirs in this wise,
What? hold your bed, there thou and thy morow;
I bidde God so yeve you both forowe.

Therwith full fore he sighed, and thus he seide,
My lady bright, and of my wele or wo
The well and rote, O godely mine Creseide,
And shall I rise alas! and shall I goe? 1480
Now fele I that mine herte mote a two,
And how should I my life an houre save,
Sens that with you is all the life I have?

What shall I doen? For certis I n'ot how Ne whan alas! I shall the timè se,
That in this plite I maie ben eft with you,
And of my life God wote how shall that be,
Sens that desire right now so birith me,
That I am dede anon, but I retourne,
How should I long alas! fro you sojourne? 1490

But nathèlessse, mine ownè ladie bright,
Yet were it so that I wist uttirly,
That I your humble servaunt, and your knight
Were in your herte iset so fermily
As ye in mine, the whiche thing truely
Me levir were than have these worldis twain,
Yet should I bet endurin all my pain.

To that Creseide answerid right anon,
And with a sigh she saied, O herte dere, 1500
The game iwis so ferforth now is gon,
That first shall Phœbus fallin from the sphere,
And everiche Egle ben the Dov's fere,
And every rocke out of his place asterte,
Er Troilus go out of Creseide's herte.

Ye ben so depe within mine herte ygrave,
That tho I would it turne out of my thought,
As wisely very God my soulè save,
To dyin in the pain, I couldè nought;
And for the love of God, that us hath wrought
Let

Let in your brain none othir fantasie
So crepin, that it cause me to die.

And that ye me would have as fast in minde,
As I have you, that would I you beseche,
And if I wist forthily that to finde,
God might not o point of my joyis eche;
But hertè mine, withoutin more speche,
Bethe to me true, or ellis were it routhe,
For I am thine, by God and by my trouthe.

Bethe glad forthy, and live in sikirnesse,,
Thus saied I ner er this, ne shall to mo, 1520
And if to you it were a grete gladnesse
To tourne ayen sone aftir that ye go,
As faine would I as ye that it were so,
As wisely God mine hertè bring to reſte,
And him in armis toke, and oftè keſte.

Ayenſt his will, ſithe it mote nedis be,
This Troilus up roſe, and faſt him cled,
And in his armis toke his lady fre
An hundrid times, and on his waie him ſped,
And with ſoche wordis as his herte ybled 1530
He ſeidè, ſarith wel, my dere herte ſwete,
That God us grauntè ſound and ſone to mete.

To whiche no worde for ſorowe ſhe anſwerd,
So ſore gan his parting her to diſtrain,
And Troilus unto his Paleis ſerd,
As wo bigon as ſhe was, ſothe to ſaine,
So harde him wrong of ſharpe deſire the pain,
For to ben eſte there he was in pleaſaunce,
That it may nere out of his remembraunce.

Retournid to his roiall paleis ſone 1540
He ſoft unto his bedde gan for to ſhrinke,
To ſlepe long, as he was wont to doen,
But all for naught, he maie wel ligge and winke,
But ſlepe maie there none in his hertè ſinke,
Thinking how ſhe, for whom deſire him brende,
A M. folde was worth more than he wende.

And in his thought gan up and doune to wende
Her wordis all, and every countinaunce,
And fermly impreſſin in his minde
The leſte poincte, that to him was pleaſaunce, 1550
And verily of thilke remembraunce
Deſire al newe him brende, and luſt to brede
Gan more than erſt, and yet toke he non hede.

Creſeide alſo right in the ſamè wiſe
Of Troilus gan in her hertè ſhet
His worthineſſe, his luſt, his dedis wiſe,
His gentilneſſe, and how ſhe with him met,
Thonking love, that he ſo well her beſet,
Deſiring oft to have her hertè dere
In ſoche a place as ſhe durſt make him chere. 1560

Pandare, a morowe which that commin was Unto his Nece, gan her faire to grete,
And ſaied, all this night ſo rained it alas!
That all my drede is, that ye, Nece ſwete,
Have little leiſir had to ſlepe and mete,
All night (qð he) hath rain ſo do me wake,
That ſome of us I trowe ther heddis ake.

And nere he came and ſaied, how ſtant it now,
This merie morowe, nece how can ye fare?
Creſeide anſwerde, nevir the bet for you, 1570
Foxe that ye ben, God yeve your hertè care,
God helpe me ſo, ye cauſid all this fare,
Trowe I (qð ſhe) for all your wordis white,
O who ſo ſeeth you, knowith you full lite!

1510 With that ſhe began her face for to wrie
With the ſhetè, and woxe for ſhame all redde,
And Pandarus gan undir for to prie,
And ſayid nece, if that I ſhall ben dedde,
Have here a ſwerde, and ſmitith of my hedde;
With that his arme all ſodainly he thruſte 1580
Undir her necke, and at the laſt her kiſte.

I paſſe al that, which chargith naught to ſay,
What? God foryave his deth, and ſhe alſo
Foryave: and with her uncle gan to plaie,
For othir cauſe ne was there none than ſo;
But of this thing right to th' effect to go,
Whan time ywas, home to her houle ſhe went,
And Pandarus hath fully his entent.

Now tournè we ayen to Troi'us,
That reſtèleſſe full long a bedde ylaie, 1590
And privily ſent aftir Pandarus,
To him to come in all the haſt he maie;
He come anon, not onis ſaied he naie,
And Troilus full ſobirly he grete,
And doune upon the bedd'is ſide him ſete.

This Troilus with all th' affection
Of frendly love, that hertè maie deviſe,
To Pandarus on kneis fill adoune,
And er that he would of the place ariſe
He gan him thankin on his beſtè wiſe, 1600
An hundrid time he gan the timè bleſſe
That he was borne, to bring him fro diſtreſſe.

He ſaied, O frend of frendes, the aldirbeſt
That evir was, the ſothe for to tell,
Thou haſt in heven ibrought my ſoule at reſt,
Fro Phlegethon the ſirie flode of hell,
That though I might a thouſande timis ſel
Upon a daie my life in thy ſervice,
It ne might not a mote in that ſuffice.

The ſonnè, whiche that al the worlde maie ſe, 1610
Sawe nevir yet (my life that dare I leiſe)
So joily, faire, and godely, as is ſhe,
Whoſe I am all, and ſhall till that I deie,
And that I thus am her's, dare I wel ſeie,
That thankid be the highe worthineſſe
Of love, and eke thy kindè buſineſſe.

Thus haſt thou me no little thing iyeve,
For why? to The obligid be for aie
My life, and why? for through thine helpe I live,
Or els dedde had I ben many a daie, 1620
And with that worde doune in his bed he laie,
And Pandarus full ſobirly him herde
Till all was ſaied, and than he him anſwerde.

My derè frende, if I have doen for The
In any caſe, God wote it is me leſe,
And am as glad as man maie of it be,
God helpe me ſo, but take now not agreſe
That I ſhall ſaine, beware of this miſcheſe,
That there as now thou brought art to thy bliſſe,
That thou thy ſelf ne cauſe it not to miſſe. 1630

For of fortun'is ſharpe adverſite
The worſtè kinde of infortune is this,
A man to have ben in prosperite,
And it remembir, whan it paſſid is;
Thou' art wiſe inough, forthy doe nat amis,
Be not to rakill, though thou ſittè warme,
For if thou be, certain it woll The harme.

Thou art at eſe, and hold The well therin,
For all ſo ſure as redde is every fire,

As

*As grete a crafte is to kepe well as winne,
Bridle alwaie thy spech and thy desire,
For worldly joie holdeth not but by a wive,
That previth well, it brest aldaie so ofte,
Forthy nede is to werkin with it softe.*

(Q^x Troilus) I hope, and God toforne,
My derè frende, that I shal so me bere,
That in my gilt ther shal nothing ben lome,
Ne In'ill racle, for to grevin her,
It nedith not this mattir ofte to tere,
For wistift thou mine hertè wel, Pandare, 1650
God wote of this thou wouldist litil care.

Tho gan he tell him of his gladè night,
And whereof first his hert ydradde, and how,
And sayid frende, as I am a true knight,
And by that faithe I owe to God and you,
I had it nevir halfe so hote as now,
And evir the more that desire me biteth,
To love her best, the more it me deliteth.

I n'ot my self not wisely what it is
But now I felin a newe qualite, 1660
Ye all anothir than I did er this.
Pandare answerid and saied thus, that he,
That onis maie in hevin blisse ybe,
He felith othir wayis dare I laie,
Than thilke time he first herd of it saie.

This is a worde for al, that Troilus
Was nevir ful to speke of this matere,
And for to praisin unto Pandarus
The bounte of his bright lady so dere,
And Pandarus to thanke, and makin chere, 1670
This tale was aie span newe to beginne,
Til that the night departid 'hem atwinne.

Sone after this, for that fortune it would,
Icomin was the blisful timè swete,
That Troilus was warnid, that he should,
There he was erst, Creseide his lady mete,
For whiche he felte his herte in joie flete,
And faithfully gan all the Goddis hery,
And let se now, if that he can be mery.

And holdin was the forme, and al the gife 1680
Of her comming, and eke of his also,
As it was erst, whiche nedith nought devise,
But plainly to th' effecte right for to go,
In joie and surete Pandarus 'hem two
A bedde ybrought, whan that 'hem bothè lest,
And thus thei ben in quiete and in rest.

Naught nedith it to you, si thei ben met,
To aske at me, if that thei blithe ywere,
For if it erst was well, tho was it bet,
A thousande folde, this nedith not enquere, 1690
Ago was every sorow' and every fere,
And bothe iwis thei had, and so thei wende,
As mochil joie as herte maie comprehende.

This n'is no litil thing of for to sey,
This passith every wit for to devise,
For eche of 'hem gan othir's lust obey,
Felicite, whiche that these clerkis wife
Commendin so, ne may not here suffise,
This joye ne maie not writtin be with inke,
This passith al that any hert maie thinke. 1700

But cruil day, so welaway the stounde,
Gan for to aproche, as thei by signis knewe,
For whiche 'hem thought thei felin deth's wounde,
So wo was 'hem, that chaungin gan ther hewe,

1640 And day thei gonin to dispise al newe,
Calling it traitour, envious, and worfe,
And bittirly the day's light thei corfe.

(Q^x Troilus) alas! now am I ware
That Pyrois, and tho swifte stedis thre, 1710
Whiche that ydrawin forth the funn'is chare,
Han gon some bypathe in dispite of me,
And makith it so sonè day to be,
And for the sunne him hastith thus to rise,
Ne shal I nevir don him sacrificse.

But nedis daie departin 'hem must sone,
And whan ther spechè don was, and ther chere,
Thei twin anon, as thei were wont to done,
And settin time of meting este ifere,
And many' a night thei wrought in this manere,
And thus fortune a time yladde in joie 1720
Creseide, and eke this king's son of Troie.

In suffisaunce, in blisse, and in singinges
This Troilus gan al his life to lede,
He spendith, justith, and makith festinges,
He gevith frely ofte, and chaungith wede,
He helde about him alwaie out of drede
A world of folke, as come him well of kinde,
The freshest, and the best that he could finde.

That suche a voice was of him, and a steven
Throughout the world, of honour and largesse, 1730
That it up ronge unto the yate of Heven,
And as in love he was in suche gladnesse,
That in his hert he demid, as I gesse,
That there n'is lovir in this world at ese
So wel as he, and thus gan love him plesse.

The godelihede or beaute, whiche that kinde
In any othir lady had isette,
Can not the mountenaunce of a gnat unbinde
About his hert of al Creseid's nette, 1740
He was so narowe' imaskid, and iknette,
That is undon in any manir fide,
That n'il nat ben, for aught that maie betide.

And by the honde ful oftin he would take
This Pandarus, and into gardin lede,
And suche a fest, and suche a processe make Him of Creseide, and of her womanhede,
And of her beaute, that withoutin drede
It was an heven his wordis for to here,
And than he wouldè sing in this manere;

Love, that of Erthe and Se hath govirnaunce, 1750
Love, that his hestis hath in hevin hie,
Love, that with a right wholfome aliaunce
Halte peple joynid, as him liste 'hem gie;
Love, that yknittith lawe and companie,
And couplis doth in vertue for to dwel,
Binde this accorde, that I have tolde and tel.

That, that the world with faith, whiche that is stable,
Diversith so his stoundis according,
That elementis, that bethe discordable,
Holdin a bonde perpetually during, 1760
That Phoebus mote his rosy day forth bring,
And that the mone hath lordship ore the nightes,
Al this doeth love, aie heried be his mightes.

That, that the Se, that gredy is to flowen,
Constrainith to a certaine ende so
His flodis, that so fierfly thei ne growen
To drenchin erthe and al for evirmo,
And if that love aught let his bridil go,

Al that now lovith afondir shoud lepe,
And lost were al, that love halt nowe to hepe. 1770

So would to God, that anthur is of kinde,
That with his bonde love of his vertue list
To ferchin hertis al, and fast to binde,
That from his bonde no wight the wey out wist,
And hertis colde them wold I that he twist
To make 'hem love, and that list him aie rewe
On hertis fore, and kepe 'hem that ben trewe.

In allè nedis for the toun'is werre
He was, and aie the first in armis dight,
And certainly, but if that bokis erre, 1780
Save Hector, most idradde of any wight,
And this encrese of hardinesse and might Come him of love, his ladies thanke to win,
That altirid his spirite so within.

In time of truce on hauking would he ride,
Or ellis hunt the Bore, Beare, or Lioun,
The smale bestis let he gon beside,
And whan that he come riding into' the toun,
Ful oft his lady from her window down,
As fresh as faucon, comin out of mae, 1790
Ful redy was him godely to salue.

And most of love and vertue was his speche,
And in dispire had he al wretchidnesse,
And doutlesse no nede was him to beseche
To honourin them, that had worthinesse,
And esin 'hem, that werin in distresse,
And glad was he, if any wight wel ferde,
That lovir was, whan he it wist or herde.

For sothe to saine, he lost helde every wight,
But if he were in lov'is high service, 1800
I menè folke that aught it ben of right,
And ore al this, so wel coude he devise
Of sentiment, and in so uncouthen wise
Al his array, that every lovir thought,
That al was well, what so he said or wtought.

And though that he be come of blode royal,
Him list of pride at no wight for to chace,
Benigne he was to eche in general,
For which he gate him thanke in every place,
Thus woude love, iheried be his grace, 1810
That Pride and Ire, Envie, and Avarice
He gan to flie, and every othir vice.

Thou lady bright, the doughtir of Dione,
Thy blinde and wingid sonne eke Dan Cupide,
Ye fustrin nine eke, that by Helicone
In hil Parnasso listin for to' abide,
That ye thus ferre han deivid me to gide
I can no more, but fens that ye wol wende,
Ye heried ben for aie withoutin ende:

Through you have I said fully in my song 1820
Th' effeete and joie of Troilus service,
Al be that there was some difese among,
As mine auctor to listith to devise,
My thirde boke now ende I in this wise,
And Troilus in luste and in quiete
Is with Creseide, his owne ladie swete.

Explicit liber tertius.

Proœmium libri quarti.

BUT all to litill, welaway the while!
Lastith suche joie, ithonkid be fortune,
That semith trewist, whan she wol begile,
And can to folis so her songe entune
That she 'hem hent, and blent, traitour commune,
And whan a wight is from her whele ithrowe
Than laughith she, and makith him the mowe.

From Troilus she gan her brighte face
Away to writhe, and toke of him non hede,
And caste him clene out of his ladie's grace, 10
And on her whele she set up Diomede,
For which min hert right now ginnith to blede.
And now my pen alas! with which I write,
Quakith for drede, of that I must endite.

For how Creseide Troilus forsoke
Or at the lest, how that she was unkinde,
Mote hennisforthe ben matir of my boke,
As writin folke, through which it is in minde,
Alas! that thei shoud evir cause finde 20
To speke her harme, and if thei on her lie
Iwis them selfe shoud have the vilanie.

O ye Erinnyes, night'is doughtirs thre,
That endeleffe complaine evir in paine,
Megara, Aleto, and Tysiphone,
Thou cruil Mars eke, fathir of Quirine,
This ilke fourth boke helpith me for to fine,
So that the loos of love, and life ifere
Of Troilus be fully shewid here.

Incipit liber quartus.

LYgging in host, as I have saide er this,
The Grekis strong, aboutin Troie toun, 30
Bitell, that whan that Phœbus shining is Upon the breste of Hercules Lioun,
That Hector, with many a bold Baroun
Cast on a daie with Grekis for to fight,
As he was wont, to greve 'hem what he might.

Not I how long or short it was bitwene
This purpose, and that day thei fightin mente,
But on a daie wel armid bright and shene
Hector and many' a worthy knight out wente
With spere in honde, and with bigge bowis bente,
And in the berde withoutin lengir lette
Ther fomen in the felde anon 'hem mette.

The longè day with speris sharpe igrounde,
With arowes, dartis, swerdes, and macis fel
Thei fight, and bringin horse, and man to grounde,
And with ther axis out the brainis quel,
But in the last shoure, the sothe for to tel,
The folke of Troie 'hem selvin so misleden,
That with the worse at night homeward thei fleden.

At whichè day was takin Antenor, 50
Polydamas, and also Menestes,
Xantippe, Sarpedon, Polystenor,
Polite, or the Trojan, Dan Ruphes,
I i i And

And othir lesse folk, as Phebus,
So that for harme that daie the folke of Troie
Dredin to lese a grete parte of their joie.

Of Priamus was yeve, at Grekes request,
A time of truce, and tho thei gonnin trete
Ther prisioners to chaungin most and lest,
And for the surplus yevin sommis grete, 60
This thing anon was couthe in every strete,
Bothe in th' assege, in toun, and every where,
And with the first it came to Calchas ere.

When Calchas knew this tretise should yholde,
In consistorie' amonge the Grekis sone
He gan in thringe forth with the lordis olde,
And set him there as he was wont to done,
And with a chaungid face, 'hem bade a bone,
For love of God, to done that reverence
To stintin noise, and yeve him audience. 70

Than said he thus, lo! lordis, mine I was Troyan, as it is knowin out of drede,
And if that you remembre', I am Calchas,
That aldirfirst yave comfort to your nede,
And tolde wel howe that you shouldin spede,
For dredelasse through you shal in a ffounde
Ben Troie ibrent, and betin down to grounde.

And in what forme, or in what manir wise
This toun to shende, and al your lust atcheve,
Ye have er this wel herde me you devise, 80
This knowin ye my lordis, as I leve,
And for the Grekis werin me so leve,
I came my selfe in my propir persone
To teche in this how you was best to done.

Having unto my tresour, ne my rent
Right no regarde in respecte of your ese,
Thus al my gode I lefte, and to you went,
Wening in this you, lordis, for to plesse,
But al that losse ne doth me no disese,
I vouchsafe do, as wisely have I joie, 90
For you to lese, al that I have in Troie;

Save of a doughtir that I lefte, alas!
Sleping at home, when out of Troie I stert;
O sterne! O cruil fathir that I was!
Howe might I have in that so hard an hert!
Alas that I ne' had brought her in my shert!
For sorow' of which I wol nat live to morow,
But if ye, lordis, rewe upon my sorow.

For bicause that I sawe no time er now
Her to delivre', I holdin have my pees, 100
But now or nevir, if that it like you,
I may her have right sone nowe doutlees,
O helpe and grace, amongis al this prees,
Rewe on this oldè carise in distresse,
Sith I through you have all this heviness.

Ye have now caught, and fettrid in prison
Troyans inowe, and if your willis be,
My childe with one may have redemption,
Now for the love of God, and of bounte,
One of so fele alas! so yefe him me, 110
What nede were it this prayir for to weme,
Sith ye shul have both folke and toun as yern?

On peril of my life I shal nat lie,
Apollo hath me tolde ful faithfully,
I have eke foundin by astronomy.
By sort, and eke by augury trewely,
And dare wel saie the time is faste by,
That fire and flambe on all the toun shal sprede,

And thus shal Troie yturne to ashin dede.

For certaine Phœbus and Neptunus bothe, 120
That makidin the wallis of the toun,
Ben with the folke of Troie alwaie so wroth,
That thei wol bring it to confusioun,
Right in dispite of king Laomedoun,
Bicause he n'oldè payin 'hem ther hire,
The toun of Troie shal ben set on fire.

Telling his tale alway this oldè grey
Humble in speche and in his loking eke,
The saltè teris from his eyin twey
Ful fast yronnin down by eithir cheke, 130
So long he gan of socour 'hem beseke,
That for to hele him of his sorowes fore
Thei gave him Antenor, withoutin more.

But who was glad inough but Calchas tho,
And of this thing ful sone his nedis leide
On them that shouldin for the tretise go,
And them for Antenor ful oftè preide
To bringin home king Thoas, and Creseide,
And whan Priam his safe conduct sent,
Th' embassadours to Troie streight thei went. 140

The cause i-tolde of ther comming, the olde
Priam the king, ful sone in generall
Gan hereupon his Parliment to holde,
Of whiche th' effecte rehercin you I shal;
Th' embassadours ben answerde for finall,
The eschaunge of prisioners, and al this nede
'Hem likith wel, and forth in thei procede.

This Troilus was present in the place,
Whan askid was for Antenor Creseide, 150
For whiche ful sone to chaungin gan his face,
As he that with tho wordis wel nigh deide,
But nathelasse he no worde to it seide,
Lest men should his affection espie,
With mann'is hert he gan his sorowes drie.

And ful of anguish and of gresly drede,
Abode, what othir lordes would to it sey,
And if that thei would graunt, as God forbede!
Th' eschaunge of her, then thought he thingis twey,
First, how to save her honor, and what wey
He mightè best th' eschaunge of her withstonde,
Ful fast he cast how allè this might stonde.

Love him made allè prest to done her bide,
And rathir dyin, than that she should go,
But Reason said him on that othir side,
Withoutin assent of her, do nat so,
Lest for thy werkè she would be thy foe,
And sain, that through thy medling is iblowe
Your bothè love, ther it was erst not knowe.

For whiche he gan deliberen for the beste,
And though the lordis wouldin that she went, 170
He wouldè suffir them graunt what 'hem lest,
And tel his lady first what that thei ment,
And when that she had said him her entent,
Theraftir would he werkin all so blive,
Tho al the world ayen it would ystrive.

Hector with that full wel the Grekis herde,
For Antenor, how thei would have Creseide,
Gan it withstonde, and sobirly answerde.
Sirs, she ne is no prisoner (he seide)
I n'ot on you who that this chargè leide,
But on my parte, ye maie estsones 'hem tell
We usin here no women for to sell.

The

The noise of peple upstert then atones,
As brimme as blafe of strawe islet on fire,
For infortune it woulde for the nones
Thei shoudin ther confusion desire;
Hector (qð thei) what gost may you enspire
This woman thus to shilde, and done us lese
Dan Antenor? a wrong waie now ye chese;

That is so wise, and eke so bolde baroun, 190
And we have nede of folke, as men may se,
He is one of the gretist of this toun;
O Hector lette suche thy fantasies be,
O king Priam (qð thei) thus segge we,
That all our voice is to forgone Creseide,
And to delivir Antenor thei preide.

O Juvenal, lorde! trewe is thy sentence,
That litil wenin folke what is to yerne,
That thei ne findin' in ther desire offence,
For cloude of errour ne lette 'hem discerne 200
What best is, and lo, here ensample' as yerne!
These folke desirin now deliviraunce
Of Antenor, that brought 'hem to mischaunce.

For he was aftir traitour to the toun
Of Troy, alas! thei quitte him out to rathe;
O nice world, lo thy discrecion!
Creseide, which that nevir did 'hem scathe,
Shal nowe no lengir in her blisse bathe,
But Antenor, he shal come home to toun,
And she shal out, thus said both heere and houn.

For which delibered was by parliment,
For Antenor to yeldin out Creseide,
And it pronouncid by the President,
Although that Hector nay ful oftè praide,
And finally, what wight that it withsaide,
It was for naught, it must yben, and should,
For substaunce of the Parliment it would.

Departid out o'th' Parliment echone,
This Troilus, withoutin wordis mo, 220
Unto his chambre spedde him fast alone,
But if it were a man of his or two,
The whiche he bad out faste for to go,
Bicause that he would slepin, as he saide,
And hastily upon his bedde him laide.

And as in wintir levis ben birafte
Eche aftir othir til the trees be bare,
So that there n'is but barke and braunche ilafte,
Lithe Troilus, biraft of eche welfare,
Iboundin in the blacke barke of care,
Disposid wode out of his witte to breide, 230
So fore him fate the chaunging of Creseide.

He rist him up, and every dore he fette,
And window eke, and tho this wofull man
Upon his bedd'is side adoune him sette,
Ful like a ded image, both pale and wan,
And in his brest the hepid wo began
Out brust, and he to workin in this wise,
In his wodeness, as I shal you devise.

Right as the wildè Bulle beginnith spring
Now here now there, idartid to the herte, 240
And of his deth rorith, in complaining,
Right so gan he about the chambre sterte,
Smiting his brest, aie with his fistis smerte
His hed to the wall, his body to the grounde
Ful oftè he swapte, him selvin to confounde.

His eyin two for pite of his herte
Out stremidin as swifte as wellis twey,

The highè fobbis of his sorowes smerte
His speche him reft, unnethis might he sey
O deth alas! why n'ilt thou do me dey? 250
Acurfid be that day which that nature
Yshope me to beti a liv'is cature.

But aftir whan the fury, and al the rage,
Whiche that his herte twist, and faste threst,
By length of time somewhat gan aswage,
Upon his bedde he laide him down to rest,
But tho begon his teres more out to brest,
That wondir is the body maie suffise
To halfe this wo, whiche that I you devise.

Than saide he thus: Fortune, alas the while! 260
What have I done? what have I The agilt?
How mightist thou for routhe thus me begile?
Is there no grace? and shal I thus be spilt?
Shal thus Creseide away for that thou wilt?
Alas! how mightist thou in thine hert finde
To ben to me thus cruil and unkinde?

Have I The nat honourid al my live,
As thou well wotest, above the Goddis all?
Why wilt thou then of this joie me deprive?
O Troilus, what may men now The call, 270
But wretche of wretchis, out of honour fal
Into mise'ry, in whiche I wol bewaile
Creseide alas! til that the brethe me faile.

Alas! Fortune, if that my life in joie
Displefid had unto thy foule Envie,
Why ne' haddist thou my fathir king of Troy
Biraft the life? or done my brethrin die?
Or slaine my selfe, that thus complaine and crie?
I combre world, that maie of nothing serve,
But evir die, and nevir fully sterve. 280

If that Creseide alone werin me laste,
Naught raught I whiðir thou woldist me stere,
And her alas! than hast thou me biraft;
But evirmore lo! this is thy manere,
To reve a wight that moſte is to him dere,
To preve in that thy gierfull violence,
Thus am I lost, there helpith no defence.

O very Lorde, O Love, O God, alas!
That knowist best min hert, and al my thought,
What shal my so'roufull life done in this caas 290
If I forgo that I so dere have bought?
Sens ye Creseide and me have fully brought Into your grace, and both our hertis seled,
How maie ye suffre' alas it be repeled!

What I may done I shal, while I may dure
On live, in turment and in cruill paine,
This infortune, and this disavinture,
Alone as I was borne I wol complaine,
Ne nevir wol I fene it shine or raine,
But ende I wol as Edippe in derknesse 300
My wofull life, and dyin in distresse.

O very gost, that errist to and fro,
Why n'ilt thou fien out of the wofullest
Body, that evir might on grounde ygo,
O soule, lurking in this woful neste,
Flee forth anon, and do mine herte to breste,
And folowe Creseide thy lady dere,
Thy right place is no lengir to ben here.

O woful eyin two, sens your disporte
Was al to sene Creseid'is eyin bright, 310
What shal ye done, but for my discomfort
Stondin for naught, and wepin out your sight,
Sens

Sens she is queint, that wont was you to light?
In veine from this forth have I eyin tway
Iformid, sens your vertue is away.

O my Creseide, O lady soveraine
Of this sorowfull soule that thus crieth,
Who shal now yevin comfort to thy paine?
Alas! no wight, but whan mine hert ydieth,
My spirite, whiche that so unto you hieth, 320
Receve in gre, for that shall aie you serve,
Forthy no force is, though the body sterve.

O ye lovirs, that high upon the whele
Ben sette of Fortune, in gode avinture
God lene that ye aie findin love of stele,
And longe mote your life in joy endure,
But when ye comin by my sepulture
Remembrith that your felowe restith there,
For I loved eke, though I unworthy were.

O olde unwholsome and mislivid man, 330
Calchas I mene, alas! what eilid The
To ben a Greke, sent thou art borne Trojan?
O Calchas, whiche that wolt my banè be,
In cursid time was thou borne for me,
As woulde blisfull Jove for his joye
That I The had where that I would in Troie!

A thousande sighis hottir than the glede
Out of his brest eche astir othir wente,
Medlid with plaintis newe, his wo to fede,
For whiche his woful teris nevir stente, 340
And shortly so his sorowes him to rente,
He woxe so mate, that ne joy nor penaunce
He felith none, but lyith in a traunce.

Pandarus, whiche that in the Parliment
Had herde what every lord and burgeis seid,
And how ful grauntid was by one assent
For Antenor to yeldin out Creseide,
Gan wel nigh wode out of his wit to breide,
So that for wo he ne wist what he mente,
But in a rage to Troilus he wente. 350

A certaine knight, that for the time kepte
The chambre dore, undid it him anone,
And Pandarus that ful tendirly wepte,
Into the derke chambre as stil as stone
Towarde the bedde gan softly for to gone,
So confuse, that he ne wist what to say,
For very wo his witte was nigh away.

And with his chere and loking al to torne
For wo of this, and with his armis folden,
He stode this woful Troilus before, 360
And on his pitous face he gan beholden,
But Lord! so oft gan his hert to colden,
Seyng his frende in wo, whose hevynesse
His herte slough, as thought him for distresse.

This woful wight, this Troilus, that felte
His frende Pandare icomin him to se,
Gan as the snow ayenst the sunne to melte,
For whiche this woful Pandare, of pite
Gan for to wepe, as tendirly as he,
And spechelesse thus ben these ilke tway, 370
That neithir might for sorow o worde sey.

But at the last, this wofull Troilus,
Nigh ded for smert, gan brestin out to rore,
And with a sorowful noise he said thus
Amonges his sobbis, and his sighis fore,
Lo! Pandare, I am ded, withoutin more,
Hast thou nat herde at parliment, he seide,

For Antenor how losse is my Creseide?

This Pandarus ful ded and pale of hewe,
Ful pitously answerid, and saide yes, 380
As wisely were it false, as it is trewe,
That I have herde, and wote al how it is!
O mercy God! who would have trowid this?
Who would have wende that in so lite a throw
Fortune our joye would havin ovirthrow?

For O! in this world there is no cature,
As to my dome, that evir sawe ruine
Straungir then this, through case or avinture;
But who may al eschue or al devine?
Suche is this world. Forthy I thus define, 390
Ne trustith no wight to finde in Fortune
Aie propertie, her yeftis ben commune.

But tel me this, why thou art now so mad,
To sorowen thus why listest thou in this wise,
Sens thy desire al wholly hast thou had,
So that by right it ought inough suffice,
But I that nevir felte in my service
A frendly chere, or loking of an eye,
Let me thus wepe and wailin til I dye.

And ore al this, as thou wel wost thy selve, 400
This tounne is ful of ladies al aboute,
And to my dome, fairir than suchè twelve
As er she was, shall I finde in a route,
Ye one or tway, withoutin any doute,
Forthy be glade, mine owne derè brother,
If she be lost, we shal recovre' an other.

What? God forbid, alway that eche plesaunce
In o thing were, and in non othir wight;
If one can singe, anothir can wel daunce,
If this be godely, she is glad and light, 410
And this is faire, and that can gode aright,
Eche for his vertue holdin is full dere,
Bothe heroner and faucon for rivere.

And eke as writ Zanis, that was full wise,
The newè love out chafith oft the old
And upon newe case lyith newe avise,
Thinke eke thy self to savin thou art hold,
Soche fire by processe shall of kindè cold,
For sens it is but casuell plesaunce,
Some case shal put it out of remembraunce. 420

For all so sure as daie cometh astir night,
The newè love, labour, or othir wo,
Or ellis feldè seing of a wight,
Doen old affections all ovir go;
And for thy part, thou shalt have one of tho,
To abredge with thy bittir painis smerte,
Absence of her shall drive her out of herte.

These wordis saied he for the nonis all
To helpe his frende, lest he for sorowe deide,
For doubtlesse to doen his wo to fall 430
He ne raught nat what unthrift that he seide;
But Troilus, that nigh for sorowe deide,
Toke little hede, of all that ere he ment,
One ere it herd, at the' othir out it went.

But at the last he answerde, and saide frend,
This lechcraft, or yhelid thus to be,
Were well sitting, if that I were a fend,
To traifin her, that true is unto me,
I prae God let this counsaile nevir the,
But doe me rathir sterve anon right here, 440
Er I thus doen, as thou me wouldest lere.

She

She that I serve iwis, what so thou seie,
To whom mine herte enhabite is by right,
Shall have me wholly her's till that I deie,
For, Pandarus, sens I have trowth her hight,
I woll nat ben untrue for any wight,
But as her man I woll aie live and sterue,
And nevir wolle non othir cature serve.

And there thou saiest thou shalt as faire yfind
As she, let be, make no comparison 450
To a cetureriformid here by kinde,
O leve Pandarus, thy concluson,
I woll nat ben of thine opinion;
Touching all this, for whiche I The besече
So holde thy pece, thou slaest me with thy speche.

Thou biddist me that I should love another
All freshly newe, and let Creseide go,
It lithe nat in my powir leve brother,
And though I might, yet would I nat doe so;
But canst thou playin raket to and fro, 460
Nettle' in docke out, now this, now that, Pandare,
Now foulè fall her for thy wo that care.

Thou farist eke by me thou Pandarus,
As he, that whan a wight is wo bigon,
He cometh to him apace, and saith right thus,
Thinke nor on smert, and thou shalt fèlè none,
Thou maiest me first transmewin in a stone
And reve me of my passionis all,
Or thou so lightly do my wo to fall.

The deth maie well out of my brest depart 470
The life, so long maie last this sorowe mine,
But fro my soule shall Creseid's dart
Out nevirmore, but doune with Proserpine,
Whan I am dedde, I woll go won in pine,
And there I woll eternally complain
My wo, and how that twinnid be we twain.

Thou hast here made an argument full fine,
How that it shouldin lasse pain ybe
Creseide to forgon, for she was mine,
And lived in ese and in felicite; 480
Why gabbiest thou, that saidist erst to me
That him is wors that is fro wele ithrowe,
Than he had erst none of that wele iknowe?

But tel me now, sens that The thinketh so light
To chaungin so in love aie to and fro,
Why hast thou nat doen busily thy might,
To chaungin her, that doeth The al thy wo?
Why n'ilt thou let her fro thine hertè go?
Why n'ilt thou, love anothir lady swete,
That maie thine hertè settin in quiete? 490

If thou hast had in love aie yet mischaunce,
And canst it not out of thine hertè drive,
I that have lived in lust and in plesauce
With her, as moche as any wight on live,
How should I that foryet, and that so blive?
O where hast thou ben hid so long in mewe,
That canst so well and formèliche argewe.

Naie Pandarus, naught worth is all thy rede,
But douteless for ought that may befall,
Withoutin wordis mo, I woll ben dede: 500
O deth, that endir art of sorowes all,
Come now, sens I so oft aftir The call,
For sely is that deth, soth for to sain,
That oft iclepid cometh and endith pain.

Well wote I, while my life was in quiete,
Er thou me slue, I would have yevin hire,

But now thy comming is to me so swete,
That in this worlde I nothing so desire;
O deth, sens with this sorowe I am afire,
Thou eithir doe me anon in teris drenche, 510
Or with thy coldè stroke mine hertè quenche.

Sens that thou slaest so fele in fondry wife
Ayenst ther will, unprayed, daie and night,
Doe me at my requeste this service,
Deliver now the worlde, so doest thou right,
Of me, that am the sorowfullist wight,
That evir was, for time is that I sterue,
Sens in this world of right naught do I serve.

This Troilus in teris gan distill,
As licour out of a limbeck full fast, 520
And Pandarus gan hold his tonge still,
And to the ground his eyin doune he cast,
But nathèlesse thus thought he at the last,
What parde, rathir than my felowe deie,
Yet shall I somewhat more unto him seie.

And sayid frend, sens thou hast soche distresse,
And sens The list mine argumentis blame,
Why n'ilt thou thy selvin helpe doen redresse,
And with thy manhode lettin all this game,
Go ravishe her, ne canst thou not for shame? 530
And eithir let her out of tounè fare,
Or hold her still, and leve thy nice fare.

Art thou in Troie, and hast non hardiment
To take a woman, whiche that lovith The,
And would her selvin ben of thine assent?
Now is nat this a nice vanite?
Rise up anon, and let this weping be,
And kith thou art a man, for in this hour
I woll ben dedde, or she shall bein our.

To this answerde him Troilus full soft, 540
And saied, iwis, my leve brothir dere,
All this have I my self yet thought full oft,
And more thingis than thou devisist here,
But why this thing is last, thou shalt well here,
And whan thou hast me yevin audience,
Theraftir maiest thou tell all thy sentence.

First sin thou wost this toun hath al this werre
For ravishing of women so by might,
It should not ben yuffrid me to erre, 550
As it stont now, ne doen so grete unright,
I should have also blame of every wight,
My fathir's graunt if that I so withstode,
Sens she is chaungid for the toun is gode.

I have eke thought, so it were her assent,
To aske her of my fathir of his grace,
Than thinke I, this were her accusement,
Sens well I wot I maie her not purchase,
For sens my fathir in so high a place
As Parliment hath her eschaunge enseled,
He n'ill for me his lettir be repeled. 560

Yet drede I moste her hertè to perturbe
With violence, if I doe soche a game,
For if I would it opynly disturbe,
It must be disclaundre unto her name,
And me were levir die than her diffame,
As n'oldè God, but if that I should have
Her honour, levir than my life to save.

Thus am I lost, for aught that I can se,
For certain is that sith I am her knight,
I must her honour levir have than me. 570
In every case, as lovir ought of right,
K k k k

Thus

Thus am I with desire and reson twight,
Desire for to distourbin her me redeth,
And reson n'll not, so mine hertè dredeth.

Thus weping; that he ne could nevir cese,
He saied alas, how shall I wretchè fare!
For well fele I alwaie my love encrese,
And hope is lasse and lasse alway Pandare,
Encrefin eke the causis of my care,
So welawaie, why n'll mine hertè brest? 580
For why? in love there is but little rest.

Pandare answerid, frend, thou maiest for me
Doen as The list, but had I it so hote,
And thine estate, she should ygo with me,
Tho all this toun cried on this thing by Note,
I n'oldè set all that noise at a grote
For whan men have well cried than wolt thei roun,
Eke wondir last but ix. daies nere in toun.

Devinith not in reson aie so depe,
Ne curtisly, but helpe thy self anon, 590
Bet is that othir than thy selvin wepe,
And namily sens ye two ben all one,
Rise up, for by mine hedde she shall not gone,
And rathir ben in blame a little found,
Than sterve here as a gnat withoutin wound.

It is no shame unto you ne no vice
Her to withholdin, that The lovith moste,
Paravinture she might holde The for nice
To lette her go thus to the Grekis hoste,
Thinke eke Fortune, as well thy selvin wofte, 600
Helpith the hardie man to his emprise,
And weivith wretchis, for ther cowardise.

And though thy lady would alite her greve,
Thou shalt thy self thy pece hereaftir make,
But as to me certain I can not leve
That she would it as now for evill take,
Why shouldè than for fere thine hertè quake?
Thinke how that Paris hath, that is thy brother,
A love, and why shal thou not have another?

And Troilus, o thing I dare The swere, 610
That if Creseide, whiche that is thy lese,
Now lovith The, as well as thou doest here,
God helpe me so, she n'll not take agrese,
Though thou do bote anon in this mischese,
And if she winnith fro The for to passe,
Than is she false, so love her well the lasse.

Forthy take hert, and thinke right as a knight,
Through love is brokin aldaie every lawe,
Kith now somewhat thy corage and thy might,
Have mercie on thy self, for any awe 620
Let not this wretchid wo thine hert ygnawe,
But manly set the worlde on fixe and seven,
And if thou die a martyr, go to heven.

I woll my self ben with The at this dede,
Though I and all my kin upon a stound
Should in a strete, as doggis liggin dede,
Through-girt with many a wide blodie wound,
In every case I woll a frend be found,
And if The liste here stervin as a wretche,
Adien, the devill spedè him that retche. 630

This Troilus gan with tho wordis quicke,
And sayid, frend, graunt mercie, I assent,
But certainly thou maiest nat so me pricke,
Ne paine none ne maie me so tourment,
That for no case, it is not mine entent,
At short wordis, though that I dyin should,

To ravish her, but if her self it would.

Why, so mene I (qð Pandare) al this day,
But tell me than, hast thou her well assaied,
That sorowest thus? and he answerde him naie; 640
Whereof art thou (qð Pandare) than dismaied,
That n'oste not that she wol ben il apaied
To ravish her, sens thou hast not ben there,
But if that Jove The tolde it in thine ere?

Forthy rise up, as naught ne were, anon,
And washe thy face, and to the king thou wend,
Or he maie wondrin whiðir thou art gon,
Thou must with wisedome him and othir blend,
Or upon case he maie asfir The fend,
Or thou beware, and shortly, brothir dere, 650
Be glad, and let me werke in this mattete.

For I shall shape it so, that sikirly
Thou shalt this night somtime in some manere
Come spekin with thy Ladie privily,
And by her wordis eke, as by her chere,
Thou shalt full sone aperceve and well here
Of her entent, and in this case the best,
And fare now well, for in this point I rest.

The swiftè fame, whiche that fals thingis
Equall reportith like the thingis true, 660
Was throughout Troie ifsed, with prest wingis,
Fro man to man, and made his tale all newe,
How Calchas doughtir with her brightè hewe
At Parliment withoutin wordis more
Igrauntid was, in chaunge of Antenore.

The whichè tale anon right as Creseide
Had herd, she whiche that of her fathir rought
(As in this case) right naught, ne whan he deide,
Full busily to Jupiter besought
Yeve him mischauncè, that this tretis brought; 670
But shortly lest these talis sothè were
She durst at no wight askin it for fere.

As she that had her hert and all her minde
On Troilus ifet so wondir fast,
That all this world ne might her love unbind,
Ne Troilus out of her hertè cast,
She would ben his, while that her life maie last,
And she thus brennith bothe in love and drede,
So that she ne wist what was best to rede.

But as men sene in toun, and all about, 680
That women use ther frendis to visite,
So to Creseide of women came a rout
For pitous joie, and wendin her delite,
And with ther talis, dere inough a mite,
These women, whiche that in the cite dwell,
Thei set 'hem doune, and saied as I shall tell.

(Qð first that one) I am glad truely
Bicause of you, that shall your fathir se;
Anothir saied, iwis so am not I,
For all to little hath she with us be; 690
(Qð tho the thirde) I hope iwis that she Shall bringin us the pece on every side,
That whan she goth, almightie God her gide.

Tho wordis and tho womannishe thingis
She herd 'hem right as though she thennis were,
For God it wote, her herte on othir thing is,
Although the botly sat emong 'hem there,
Her advertence is alwaie ellis where,
For Troilus full fast her soulè sought,
Withoutin worde on him alwaie she thought. 700

These

These women that thus wendin her to plesse,
 Aboutin naught gon all ther talis spende,
 Soche vanire ne can doen her none ese,
 As she that all this menè while brende
 Of othir passion than thei ywende,
 So that she felte almoste her herte die
 For wo, and werie of that companie.

For whichè might she no lengir restrain
 Her teris, thei ganin so up to well,
 That gavin signis of her bittir pain, 710
 In whiche her spirite was, and must ydwell,
 Remembring her from heven unto which hal
 She fallin was, sens she forgo the sight
 Of Troilus, and so'rowfully she fight.

And thilke folis sitting her about
 Wendin that she had wept and sighid fore
 Bicause that she shouldin out of the rouz
 Departin, and nevir plaie with 'hem more,
 And thei that haddin knowin her of yore
 Se her so wepe, and thought it was kindnesse, 720
 And eche of 'hem wept eke for her distresse.

And busilie thei gonin her comforte
 On thing God wor, on which she little thought,
 And with ther talis wendin her disporte,
 And to be glad thei oftin her belought,
 But soche an ese therwith thei in her wrought,
 Right as a man is esid for to sele
 For ache of hedde to clawen' him on his hele.

But after all this nice vanie
 Thei toke ther leve, and home thei wentin all, 730
 Creseide full of sorowfull pite
 Into her chambre' up went out of the hall,
 And on her bedde she gan for dedde to fall,
 In purpose nevir thennis for to rise,
 And thus she wrought, as I shall you devise.

Her owndid heer, that sonnyshe was of hewe,
 She rent, and eke her fingirs long and smale
 She wrong ful oft, and bade God on her rue,
 And with the death to doe bote on her bale;
 Her hewe whilom bright, that tho was pale, 740
 Bare witnesse of her wo, and her constreint,
 And thus she spake, sobbing in her compleint.

Alas (quoth she) out of this region
 I wofull wretche and infortunid wight,
 And borne in cursid constellacioun,
 Mote gon, and thus departin fro my knight!
 Wo worthe alas, that ilke day's light,
 On which I sawe him first with eyin twain,
 That causith me, and I him, all this pain!

Therwith the teris from her eyin two 750
 Doune fell, as shouris full in Aprill swithe,
 Her white brest she bet, and for the wo
 Aftir the deth she cried a thousande sith,
 Sens he that wont her wo was for to lish
 She mote forgon, for whiche disayinture
 She helde her selfin a forlost creature.

She saied, how shall he doen and I also!
 How should I live, if that I from him twin!
 O derè herte eke that I lovè so,
 Who shall that sorowe slaen, that ye ben in! 760
 O Calchas fathir, thine be all this sin;
 O mothir mine, that clepid wer Argive,
 Wo worth that daie, that thou me bare on live!

To what fine should I live and sorowen thus?
 How should a sith withoutin watir dure?

What is Creseide worth from Troilus?
 How should a plant or any othir creature
 Livin withoute his kindly nouriture,
 For whiche full oft, a byword here I seie,
 That ertheles mote grene medis sone deye. 779

I shall doen thus, sens neither swerd ne dart
 Dare I none handle, for the cruile,
 That ilke daie that I fro you depart,
 If sorowe of that n'll nat my bane be,
 Than shall no mote ne drinke ycome in me,
 Till I my soule out of my brest unsheth,
 And thus my selvin woll I doen to deth.

And Troilus, my clothis everichone
 Shull blackè ben, in tokning, herte swete,
 That I am as out of this worlde agone, 780
 That wont ywas you to set in quite,
 And of mine ordir aie, till deth me mete,
 The observaunce evir in your absence
 Shall sorowe ben, complaint, and abstinence.

Mine herte, and eke the wofull ghost therein,
 Biqueth I with your spirite to complain
 Eternally, for thei shall nevir twin,
 For though in yerth ytwinnid be we twain,
 Yet in the felde of pite, out of pain,
 That hight Elysium, we shall ben yfere 790
 As Orpheus and Eurydice his fere.

Thus herte mine, for Antenor, alas!
 I sone shall be ychaungid, as I wene,
 But how shall ye doen in this wofull caas?
 How shall your tendir herte thus sustein?
 But herte mine, foryet this sorowe' and tene,
 And me also, for sothly for to seie,
 So ye well fare, I retche not for to deie.

How might it evir redde ben or isong
 The plaintis that she made in her distresse, 800
 In nat, but as for me, my little tong,
 If I discrivin would her heviness,
 It should ymake her sorowe semè lesse
 Than that it was, and childishly deface
 Her hic complaint, and therefore I it pace.

Pandarus, whiche that sent from Troilus
 Was to Creseide, as ye have herd devise,
 That for the best it was accordid thus,
 And he full glad to doen him that service,
 Unto Creseide in a full secrete wise, 810
 There as she laie, in tourment and in rage,
 Came her to tell all wholly his message.

And fonde that she her selvin gan to trete
 Full pitously, for with her saltè teres
 Her brest and face ibathid was full wete,
 Her mightie tressis of her sonnyshe heres
 Unbroidin hangin all about her eres,
 Whiche yavin him very signall mattire
 Of deth, whiche that her herte gan desire.

Whan she him sawe, she gan for sorowe' anon 820
 Her tery face atwixt her armis hide,
 For whiche this Pandare is so wo bigon,
 That in the hous he might unneth abide,
 As he that felt sorowe on every side,
 For if Creseide had erst complainid fore,
 Tho gan she plain a thousande timis more.

And in her aspre plaintè thus she seide,
 Pandare my Eme of joyis mo than two
 Was causè, causing first to me Creseide,
 That now transmutid bin in cruil wo, 830
 Wher'

Wher' shall I saie to you welcome or no,
That aldirfirst me brought unto servise,
Of love alas! that endith in soche wise?

Endith than love in wo? Ye or men lieth,
And every worldly blisse, as thinkith me,
The ende of blisse aie sorowe occupieth,
And who so trowith not that it so be,
Let him upon me wofull wretchè se,
That my self hate, and aie my birthe curse,
Feling alwaie fro wicke I go to worfe. 840

Whoso me seeth, seeth sorowe all atonis,
Paine, turment, wo, and plaint, and eke distres,
Out of my wofull bodie harme there none is,
As langour, anguise, cruill bittirnesse,
Annoie, smarte, drede, furie, and eke siknesse,
I trowe iwis from hevin teris rain
For pite of my aspre' and cruill pain.

O thou my sustir, full of discomfourt,
(Qð Pandarus) what thinkist thou to doe?
Why ne' hast thou to thy selvin some resport? 850
Why wilt thou thus thy self alas! fordo?
Leve all this werke, and take now hedè to
That I shall sain, and herken' of gode entent
This, that by me thy Troilus The sent.

Tournid her tho Creseide, a wo making
So grete, that it a deth was for to se,
Alas! (qð she) what wordis maie ye bring,
What woll my dere herte sendin unto me,
Whiche that I dredè nevir more to se?
Woll he have plaint or teris er I wende? 860
I have inough, if he theraftir sende.

She was right soche to sene in her visage,
As is that wight that men on bere ybinde,
Her face like of Paradis the Image
Was all ichaungid in anothir kinde,
The plaie, the laughtir, men wer wont to find
In her, and eke her joyis everichone
Ben fledde, and thus lieth Creseide alone.

About her eyin two a purple ring
Bittrent, in sothfast tokening of her pain, 870
That to behold it was a dedly thing,
For whiche Pandarus ne might nat restrain
The teris from his eyin for to rain,
But nathelless, as he best might, he seide
From Troilus these wordis to Creseide.

Lo nece, I trowe well ye han herd all how
The king with othir Lordis for the best
Hath made eschaunge of Antenor and you,
That cause is of this sorowe and unrest,
But how this case doth Troilus molest 880
This maie none yerthly mann'is tong ysaie,
For very wo his wit is all awaie.

For whiche we have so sorowed, he and I,
That into little it had bothe us slawe,
But through my counsaile this daie finally
He somewhat hath fro weping him withdrawe,
And semith me that he desirith fawe
With you to ben all night of to devise
Remedie' of this, if there were any wise.

This short and plain, th' effect of my message, 890
As ferforthe as my wit can comprehende,
For ye that ben of tourment in soche rage
Maie to no long prologue as now entende,
And hereupon ye maie answere him sende,
And for the love of God, my nece dere,

So leve this wo or Troilus be here.

Grete is my wo (qð she) and sighid fore,
As she that felith dedly sharpe distresse,
But yet to me his sorowe' is mokill more,
That love him bet than he himself I gesse, 900
Alas! for me hath he soche hevinesse?
Can he for me so pitously complain?
Iwis this sorowe doublith all my pain.

Grevous to me God wot it is to twin,
(Qð she) but yet it hardir is to me
To sene that sorowe which that he is in,
For well wot I, it woll my banè be,
And die I woll in certain tho (qð she)
But bid him come, er deth that thus me threteth
Drive out that ghost, which in min hert ybeteth.

These wordis saied, she on her armis two
Fill gruffe, and gan to wepin pitously;
(Qð Pandarus) alas! why doe ye so
Sens ye well wote the time is faste by
That he shall come? arise up hastily,
That he you nat biwopin thus yfinde,
But ye wol have him wode out of his minde.

For wist he, that ye farde in this manere,
He would himselfin flea: and if I wende
To have this fare, he should not comin here 920
For all the gode that Priam maie dispende,
For to what fine he would anon pretende,
That know I well, and forthy yet I seie
So leve this sorowe', or plainly he woll deie;

And shapith you his sorowe for to' abredge,
And nat encrefin, lese nece swete,
Bethe rathir to him cause of plat than edge,
And with some wisdom ye his sorowes bete;
What helpith it to wepin full a strete,
Or though ye bothe in saltè teris dreint? 930
But is a time of cure aie than of pleint.

I menè thus, whan I am hithir bring,
Sens ye be wise, and bothe of one assent,
So shapith how to distourbe your going,
Or come ayen sone aftir ye be went;
Women ben wise in short avisement;
And let sene how your wit shall now availe,
And what that I maie help, it shall nat faile.

Go (qð Creseide) and, uncle, truly
I shall doen all my might me to restrain 940
From weping in his sight, and busily
Him for to glad I shall doen all my pain,
And in my hertè sekin every vain,
If to this fore there maie ben foundin salve,
It shall not lacke certain on mine behalve.

Goth Pandarus, and Troilus he sought,
Till in a temple' he found him all alone,
As he that of his life no lengir rought,
But to the pitous Goddis everichone
Full tendirly he praied, and made his mone, 950
To doen him sone out of this worlde to pace,
For wel he thought there was non othir grace.

And shortly all the sothè for to seie,
He was so fallin in dispaire that daie,
That uttirly he shope him for to deie;
For right thus was his argument alwaie,
He saied he n'as but lornè welawaie!
For all that cometh, cometh by necessite,
Thus to ben lornè it is my destine.

For

For certainly this wote I well, he saide,
That foresight of the divine purveiaunce
Had sene alwaie me to forgon Creseide,
Sens God seeth every thing out of doutaunce,
And them disposith through his ordinaunce
In his meritis sothly for to be,
As thei shull comin by predestine.

But nathèlesse alas! whom shall I leve!
For there ben gretè clerkis many one,
That destine through argumentis preve,
And some ysain that nedely there is none,
But that fre choice is yeven' us everichone.
O welawaie! so slich arne clerkis old,
That I n'ot whole opinion I maie hold.

For some men sain, that God seeth al biforne,
Ne God maie nat decevid ben parde,
Than mote it fallin, though men had it sworne,
That purveiaunce hath sene before to be;
Wherefore I saie, that from eterne if he Hath wist befor our thought eke as our dede,
We have no fre choice, as these clerkis rede. 980

For othir thought, nor othir dede also
Might nevir ben, but soche as purveiaunce,
Whiche maie not ben discevid nevir mo,
Hath feled biforne, withoutin ignoraunce;
For if there might yben a variaunce
To writhin out fro Godd's purveying,
There n'ere no prescience of thing comming;

But it were rathir an opinion
Uncertain, and no stedfast foreseing;
And certis that were an abusion, 990
That God should have no perfect clere wetting
More than we men, that have doutous wening,
But soche an errour upon God to gesse
Were false and foule, and wickid cursidnesse.

Eke this is an opinion of some,
That have ther top ful high and smoth isore,
Thei sain right thus, that thing is nat to come,
For that the prescience hath sene before
That it shal come; but thei sain that therfore
That it shal come, therfore the purveiaunce 1000
Wote it before withoutin ignoraunce.

And in this manir this necessite
Retournith in his place contrary' againe
For nedefully behovith it nat be
That thilkè thingis fallin in certaine
That ben purveyed, but nedefully' as thei saine
Behovith it that thingis, which that fall,
That thei in certaine ben purveyid all.

I mene as though I laboured me in this,
To enquire which thing cause of which thing be,
As whethir that the prescience of God is
The certaine cause of the necessite
Of thingis that to comin be parde;
Or if necessite of thing coming
Be the cause certaine of the purveying.

But nowe ne' enforce I me not in shewing
How the' ordir of the causis stant, but wot I
That it behovith, that the befalling
Of thingis wiste before certainly
Be necessarie, al seme it not therby 1020
That prescience put falling necessarye
To thing to come, al fal it foule or faire.

For if there sit a man yonde on a fe,
Than by necessite behovith it

960 That certis thine opinion sothe be,
That wenist or conjectist that he sit;
And furthirovir now ayenwarde hit,
Lo! right so is it on the part contrarie,
As thus, now herkin, for I wol nat tarie;

I say that if the opinion of The
Be sothe for that he sit, than say I this,
That he mote sittin by necessite;
And thus necessite in eithir is;
For in him nede of sitting is iwis,
And in The nede of sothe, and thus forsothe
There mote necessite ben in you bothe.

But thou maist saine, the man sit nat therfore,
That thine opinion of his sitting soth is,
But rathir for the man sate there before,
Therfore is thine opinion sothe iwis; 1040
And I say, though the cause of sothe is this Cometh of his sitting, yet necessite
Is enterchaungid, bothe in him and The.

Thus in the samè wise out of doutaunce
I maie wel makin, as it semith me,
My resoning of Godd's purveyaunce,
And of the thingis that to comin be,
By whichè reson men maie wel ise
That thilkè thingis, that in erthe befall,
That by necessite thei comin all. 1050

For although that this thing shal come iwis,
Therfore is it purveyid certainly,
Nat that it cometh for it purveyid is,
Yet nathèlesse behoveth it nedefully
That thing to come be purveyid trewely,
Or ellis thingis that purveyid be
That thei betidin by necessite.

And thus suffisith right inough certaine
For to distroie our fre choise everydell,
But now is this abusion to saine 1060
That falling of the thingis temporell
Is cause of Godd's prescience eternell.
Now trewily that is a false sentence,
That thing to come should cause his prescience.

What might I wene and I had suche a thought?
But that God purveieth thing that is to come
For that it is to come, and ellis nought?
So might I wene that thingis all and some,
That whilom ben bifall and ovircome,
Ben cause of thilkè soveraine purveiaunce,
That forwote al, withoutin ignoraunce.

And ore al this yet say I more therto,
That right as whan I wote there is a thing,
Iwis that thing mote nedefully be so,
Eke right so, whan I wote a thing coming,
So mote it come, and thus the befalling
Of thingis, that ben wiste before the tide,
Thei mote not ben eschewid on no side.

Than said he thus, almighty Jove in trone
That wottest of all this thing the sothfastnesse, 1080
Rewe on my sorowe, and do me dien sone,
Or bring Creseide and me fro this distresse.
And while he was in all this hevinesse,
Disputing with himselfe in this matere,
Came Pandare in, and saide as ye maie here.

O mighty God (qð Pandarus) in trone,
Eigh, who saw er a wife man farin so?
Why, Troilus, what thinkist thou to done?
Hast thou such lust to ben thine owne foe?

L I I I

What?

What? parde, yet is not Creseide agō; 1090
 Why list The so thy selfe fardon for drede,
 That in thine hed thine eyin femin dede.

Hast thou nat livid many' a yere beforne
 Withoutin her, and farde ful wel at ese?
 Art thou for her, and for none othir borne?
 Hath kinde The wrought al only her to plesse?
 Let be, and thinke right thus in thy disese,
 That in the dice right as there fallin chaunces,
 Right so in love there come and gon plesaunces.

And yet this is a wondir most of al, 1100
 Why thou thus sorowest, feth thou wost nat yit
 Touching her goyng how that it shal fal,
 Ne if she can her selfe distourbin it,
 Thou hast nat yet assayid al her wit,
 A man maie al bet me his necke bede
 Whan it shal of, and forowen at the nede.

Forthy take hede of al that I shal say;
 I have with her ispoke and longe ibe,
 So as accordid was betwixe us twey,
 And evirmore me thinkith thus, that she 1110
 Hath somwhat in her hert's privite,
 Wherwith she can, if I shal aright rede,
 Disturbe al this, of whiche thou art in drede.

For which my counfel is, whan it is night
 Thou to her go, and make of this an ende;
 And blisful Juno, through her gretè might
 Shal (as I hope) her grace unto us fende;
 Mine hert seith certaine that she shal nat wende,
 And forthy put thine hert a while in rest,
 And holde thy purpose, for it is the best. 1120

This Troilus answerde, and sighid sore,
 Thou faist right wel, and I wil do right so;
 And what him list, he said unto him more,
 And whan that it was timè for to go
 Ful privily himselfe withoutin mo
 Unto her came, as he was wont to done,
 And how thei wrought, I shal you tellin sone.

Soth is, that when thei gonnin first to mete,
 So gan the paine ther hertis for to twiste,
 That neithir of 'hem othir mightè grete, 1130
 But 'hem in armis toke, and aftir kiste;
 The lasse wofull of 'hem bothe ne wiste
 Wher that he was, ne might o word out bring,
 As I said erst, for wo and for sobbing.

The woful teris, that thei letin fal,
 As bittir werin out of teris kinde
 For paine, as is ligne aloes, or gal;
 So bittir teris wept nat, as I finde,
 The wofull Myrrha, through the barke and rinde,
 That in this world ther n'is so hard an hert 1140
 That n'old have rewid on her painis smert.

But whan ther wofull wery gostis twaine
 Returnid ben, there as 'hem ought to dwell,
 And that somewhat to wekin gan the paine
 By length of plainte, and ebbin gan the wel
 Of ther salt teris, and the hert unswel,
 With brokin voice, all horse for shright, Creseide
 To Troilus these ilke wordis seide.

O Jove, I die, and mercy The besече,
 Helpe, Troilus: and therwithal her face 1150
 Upon his brest she laid, and lost her speche,
 Her wofull spirite from his propir place
 Right with the worde away in point to pace,
 And thus she lith, with hewis pale and grene,

That whilom fresh and fairist was to sene.

This Troilus that on her gan beholde,
 Cleping her name, and she lay as for ded,
 Withoutin answe, and felte her limmes colde,
 Her eyin throwin upwarde to her hed;
 This so'rouful man can now non othir rede, 1160
 But oftin time her colde mouthe he kiste,
 Where him was wo, God and himself it wiste.

He risith up, and long straite he her leide;
 For signe of life, for aught he can or may,
 Can he none finde, in nothing of Creseide,
 For whiche his songe ful oft is welaway!
 But whan he sawe that spechelesse she lay,
 With so'rouful voice, and hert of blisse al bare
 He said, how she was fro this world ifare.

So aftir that he long had her complained, 1170
 His hondis wronge, and said that was to sey,
 And with his teris salt her brest berained,
 He gan tho teris wipin of full drey,
 And pitoufly gan for the soule prey,
 And said, O Lord, that set art in thy trone,
 Rewe eke on me, for I shal folow' her sone.

She colde was, and withoutin sentement,
 For aught he wote, for brethe yet felte he none,
 And this was him a preignant argument
 That she was forth out of this worlde agone; 1180
 And when he saw there was non othir wonne,
 He gan her limmis dresse in suche manere,
 As men don them that shall ben laide on bere.

And aftir this, with sterne and cruill herte,
 His swerd anon out of his sheth he twight,
 Himselfe to sleen, how fore so that him smerte,
 So that his soule her soule folowin might,
 There as the dome of Minos would it dight,
 Sith love and cruil fortune it ne would
 That in this world he lengir livin should. 1190

Than said he thus, fulfild of high disdaine,
 O cruil Jove, and thou fortune adverse,
 This al and some is, falsely have ye slaine
 Creseide, and sith ye may do me no werse,
 Fie on your might and werkis so diverse,
 Thus cowardely ye shul me nevir winne,
 There shal no deth me fro my lady twinne.

For I this world, sith ye have slain her thus,
 Wol let, and folow' her spirit lowe or hie,
 Shal nevir lovir saine that Troilus 1200
 Dare nat for fere with his lady die,
 For certaine I wol bere her companie;
 But sithe ye wol nat suffre' us livin here,
 Yet suffrith that our soulis ben ifere.

And thou, Cite, in whiche I live in wo,
 And thou Priam, and brethrin al ifere,
 And thou my mothir, farwel, for I go,
 And Atropos make redy thou my bere,
 And thou Creseide, o swete herte dere,
 Receve thou now my spirite, would he sey 1210
 With swerde at hert, al redy for to dey.

But as God would of swough she tho abraide,
 And gan to fighe, and Troilus she cride;
 And he answerid, lady mine Creseide,
 Livin ye yet? and let his swerde doune glide;
 Ye herte mine, that thankid be Cupide,
 (Qd she) and therwithal she fore sight;
 And he began to glade her as he might:

Toke

Toke her in armis two, and kiste her ofte;
And her to glad he did al his entent, 1220
For whiche her gost, that flickered aie alofte,
Into her wofull hert aieh it went;
But at the laste, as that her eyin glent
Aside, anon she gan his swerde asprie,
As it lay bare, and gan for fere to crie;

And askid him, why he had it out drawe?
And Troilus anon the cause her tolde,
And how himself therwith he would have slawe:
For whiche Creseide upon him gan beholde,
And gan him in her armis fast to folde, 1230
And saide, o mercy God, lo whiche a dede!
Alas, how nighe we werin bothè dede!

Than if I ne hadde spokin, as grace was,
Ye would have slaine your selfe anon qð she;
Ye doutlesse: and she answerde alas!
For by that ilke Lorde that made me
I n'olde a forlong waie on live have be Aftir your deth, to have ben crounid Quene
Of al the londe the sunne on shinith shene.

But with this selvè swerde, which that here is, 1240
My selfin I would have slaine (qð she) tho.
But ho, for we have right inough of this,
And let us rise and straite to bedde go
And there let us yspekin of our wo,
For by that morter, whiche that I se brenne,
Know I ful well, that day is nat far henne.

Whan thei wer in ther bedde in armis folde,
Naught was it like tho nightis here before,
For petously eche othir gan beholde,
As thei that haddin al ther blisse ilorne, 1250
Bewailing al the daie that thei were borne,
Till at the last this wofull wight Creseide
To Troilus these ilke wordis seide.

Lo hertè mine, wel wote ye this (qð she)
That if a wight alwaie his wo complaine,
And sekith nat how holpin for to be,
It n'is but folie, and encrece of paine;
And sens that here assemblid be we twaine
To findin bote of wo that we ben in,
It were all time right sone for to begin. 1260

I am a woman, as ful wel ye wotte,
And as I am avisid sodainly,
So wol I tel it you, while it is hotte;
Me thinkith thus, that neithir ye nor I
Ought halfe this wo to makin skilfully,
For there is art inough for to redresse
That yet is misse, and sleen this heviness.

Soth is, the wo the whiche that we ben inne,
For aught I wote, for nothing ellis is,
But for the causè that we should ytwinne, 1270
Confidrid al, there n'is no more amis;
And what is than a remedy' unto this,
But that we shape us sone for to mete?
This al and some is, my dere hertè swete.

Now that I shal wel bringin it aboute
To comen' ayen, sone aftir that I go,
Therof am I no manir thing in doute;
For dredelasse within a weke or two
I shal ben here, and that it may be so,
By allè right, and that in wordis few, 1280
I shal you wel an hepe of wayis shewe.

For whiche I woll nat makin longe sermon,
For time iloste may not recovered be,

But I wol go to my conclufion,
And to the beste, in aught that I can se,
And for the love of God forgeve it me
If I speke aught aienst your hert's reste,
For trewily I speke it for the beste.

Making alway a protestacion,
That in effect this thing that I shall say, 1290
N'is but to shewin you my mocion
To find unto our helpe the beste way,
And takith it none othirwise I pray,
For finally, what so ye me commaunde,
That wol I done, for that is no demaunde.

Now herkenith this, ye have well understond
My goyng grautitid is by parlyment,
So ferforth that it may not ben withstond
For al this world, as by my jugement, 1300
And sithe there helpith none avisement
To lettin it, lette it passe out of mind,
And let us shape a bettir waie to finde.

The sothe is this, the twinning of us twaine
Wol us disese, and cruilly anoie,
But him behovith somtime havin paine
That servith love, if that he wol have joie,
And sith I shal no farthir out of Troie
Than I maie ride aien on halfe a morowe,
It ought the lasse causin us for to sorowe;

So as I shal nat now ben hid in mewes, 1310
That day by day, min ownè hertè dere,
Sens wel ye wote that it is now a trewe,
Ye shal ful wel al mine estate yhere;
And er that truce is done, I shal ben here;
And thus have ye both Antenor iwonne,
And me also, bethe glad now, if ye conne;

And thinke right thus, Creseide is now agon;
But what? she shal come hastily ayen;
And whan alas! by God, lo right anon,
Er dayis ten, this dare I safely saine, 1320
And than as erste shall we be bothè saine,
So as we shall togethers evir dwell,
That al this worlde ne might our blisse tell.

I se that oft time, there as we ben now,
That for the beste, our counsaile for to hide,
Ye speke nat with me, nor I with you,
In fourtenight; ne se you go ne ride;
And may ye nat ten dayis than abide
For mine honour, in suche an avinture?
Iwis ye mowe, or ellis lite endure. 1330

Ye knowe eke howe that all my kin is here,
But if that onely it my fathir be,
And eke mine othir thingis al ifere,
And namily my derè hertè ye,
Whom that I n'oldè levin for to se
For al this worlde, as wide as it hath space,
Or ellis se I nevir jov's face.

Why trowin ye my fathir in this wise
Covetith so to se me, but for drede,
Leste in this toun that folkis me dispise, 1340
Bicause of him, for his unhappy dede?
What wote my fathir what life that I lede?
For if he wist in Troie how wel I fare,
Us nedid for my wending nat to care.

Ye sene that every day eke more and more
Men trete of pece, and it supposid is
That men the Quene Helena shal restore,
And Grekis us restore that is amis;

So

So though there ne were comfort none but this,
That men purposin pece on every side. 1350
Ye may the bett at ese of herte abide.

For if that it be pece, mine hertè dere,
The nature of the pece mote nedis drive,
That men must entrecommunin ifere,
And to and fro eke ride and gone as blive,
Al day as thicke as Been flien from an hive,
And every wight have liberty to bleve
Where as him list the bet withoutin leve.

And though so be that pece ther maie be none,
Yet hither, though ther nevir pece ne were, 1360
I must ycome, for whiſir should I gone?
Or how mischaunce should I dwellin there
Among tho men of armis evre' in fere?
For whiche, as wisely God my soule rede,
I can nat sene wherof ye shouldin drede.

Have here anothir way, if it so be
That al this thing ne maie you not suffice;
My fathir, as ye knowin wel parde,
Is holdin olde, and ful of covitise,
And I right nowe have foundin al the gife, 1370
Withoutin nette wherwith I shal him hent,
And herkenith now, if that ye wol assent;

Lo! Troilus, men faine full harde it is The wolfe ful, and the weſir whole to have;
This is to faine, that men full oft iwis
Mote spendin parte the remnant for to save;
For aie with Golde men maie the hert ygrave
Of him, that is set upon covitise,
And how I mene, I shal it you devise:

The movable, whiche I have in this toun, 1380
Unto my fathir shal I take, and saie,
That right for trust, and for salvacioun,
It sent is, from a frende of his or twaie,
The which frendis do fervently him praie
To sendin astir more, and that in hie,
While that this toun stant thus in jeopardie;

And that shal be of golde huge quantite;
Thus shal I sain, but lest folke it aspide,
This maie be sent by no wight but by me;
I shal eke shewin him, if pece betide, 1390
What frendis that I have on every side
To doe the wrathe of Priamus to pace
Towardis him, and don him stand in grace.

So what for o thing and for othir, swete,
I shal him so enchauntin with my sawes,
That right in hevin his soule shal he mete,
For al Apollo, or his clerkis lawes,
Or calculing, availith nat thre hawes;
Desire of Golde shal so his soule blende,
That as me liste I shal wel make an ende. 1400

And if he would aught by his fort it preve
If that I lie, in certaine I shal fonde
Disturbin him, and plucke him by the sleve,
Makin his sorte, and berin him on honde,
He hath nat wel the Goddis undirfonde;
For Goddis speke in amphibologies,
And for o sothe thei tellin twenty lies;

Eke dredè fond first Goddis, I suppose;
Thus shal I faine, and that his cowarde herte
Made him amis the Goddis text to glofe, 1410
Whan he for ferdè out of Troiè sterte;
And but I makin him sone to converte,
And done my rede, within a day or twey,

I wol to you obligè me to dey.

And trewily, as writtin wel I finde,
That al this thing was said of gode entent,
And that her hertè trewe was and kinde
Towardis him, and spake right as she ment,
And that she starfe for wo nigh when she went,
And was in purpose evir to be trewe, 1420
Thus writin thei, that of her werkis knewe.

This Troilus, with hert and eris sprad,
Herde al this thing devisid to and fro,
And verily it semid that he had
The selvin witte, but yet to let her go,
His hertè misforyave him evirmo;
But finally he gan his hertè wrest
To trustin her, and toke it for the best.

For whiche the grete fury of his penaunce
Was queint with hope, and therwith 'hem bitwene
Began for joyè the amorous daunce,
And as the birdis, when the sunnè shene
Delitin in ther songe, in levis grene,
Right so the wordis, that thei spake ifere,
Delitin them, and made ther hertis chere.

But nathèlesse, the wending of Creseide
For al this world may nat out of his minde,
For whiche ful oft he petously her preide,
That of her heste he might her trewe yfinde,
And saide her, certis if ye be unkinde, 1440
And but ye come at daie set into Troie,
Ne shal I nere have hele, honor, ne joie.

For all so sothe as sunne uprist to morow,
And God, so wisely thou me wofull wretche
To rest ybring, out of this cruil sorow,
I wol my selvin sle, if that ye dretche,
But of my deth though litil be to retche
Yet er that ye me causin so to smerte,
Dwel rathir here mine ownè dere swete herte.

For trewily mine ownè lady dere, 1450
The sleightis yet, that I have herd you stere,
Ful shapely ben to fallin al ifere,
For thus men saith, that one thinkith the bere,
But al anothir thinkith the ledere;
Your fire is wise, and said is out of drede,
Men may the wise outrenne, and nat ourrede.

It is full harde to haltin unespied
Before a crepil, for he can the crafte;
Your fathir is in sleight as Argus eied,
For al be' it that his movble' is him birafte, 1460
His oldè sleight is yet so with him laste;
Ye shal not blende him for your womanhede,
Ne faine aright, and that is al my drede.

I n'ot, if pece shall evirmo betide,
But pece or no, for earnest ne for game,
I wote sith Calchas on the Grekis side
Hath onis ben, and lost so foule his name,
He dare no more come here ayen for shame,
For whiche that we, for ought I can espy,
To trustin on, n'is but a fantasie. 1470

Ye shal eke sene your fathir shall you glofe
To ben a wife, and, as he can wel preche,
He shal some Greke so prese and wel alofe,
That ravishin he shal you with his speche,
Or do you done by force, as he shal teche,
And Troilus, on whom you n'il have routh,
Shal causelesse so stervin in his trowth.

And

And ore al this your fathir shal dispise
 Us al, and faine this cite is but lorne,
 And that th' assigè nevir shal arise, 1480
 For why the Grekis have it allè sworne,
 Til we ben slaine, and doun our wallis torne;
 And thus he shal you with his wordis fere,
 That aie drede I, that ye wol blevin there.

Ye shall eke sene so many' a lusty knight
 Among the Grekis, ful of worthinesse,
 And eche of 'hem, with hertè, wit, and might,
 To plesin you, done al his businesse,
 That ye shull dullin of the rudinesse 1490
 Of us the sely Trojans, but if routhè
 Remordin you, or vertue of your trouthe.

And this to me so grevoufe is to thinke,
 That fro my brest it wol my soule rende,
 Ne dredelesse in me there may nat sinke
 Of gode opinion, if that ye wende,
 For why? your fathir's sleightis wol us shende,
 And if ye gone, as I have tolde you yore;
 So thinke I n'am but ded, withoutin more:

For which with humble, true and pitous hert
 A thousande timis mercie I you praie, 1500
 So rewit on mine aspre painis smert,
 And doth somewhat, as that I shal you saie,
 And let us stele away betwixt us twaie,
 And thinke that foly' is, whan a man maie chese;
 For accident his substaunce for to lese:

I menè thus, that fens we mowe or daie
 Well stele awaie, and ben together so,
 What wit were it to puttin in assaie,
 (In case ye shouldin to your fathir go)
 If that ye mightin come aien or no? 1510
 Thus mene I, that it were a grete folie
 To put that sikirnesse in jeopardie.

And vulgarly to spekin of substaunce,
 Of trefour may we bothè with us lede
 Ynough to live in honour and plesaunce,
 Untill the timè, that we shall ben dede;
 And thus we may eschewin all this drede,
 For every othir waie ye can recorde,
 Mine hert iwis maie therwith nat acorde.

And hardily ne dredith no povertè, 1520
 For I have kin and frendis ellis where,
 That though we comin in our bare sherte
 Us shoulde nevir lacke ne Golde ne gere,
 But ben honourid while we dweltin there;
 And go we' anone, for as in mine entent
 This is the best, if that ye wol assent.

Creseide with a sighe, right in this wise
 Answerid him, iwis my dere hert trewe,
 We maie well stele away, as ye devise, 1530
 And findin suche unthrifty wayis newe,
 But aftirwarde ful sore it wol us rewe,
 And helpe me God so at my mostè nede,
 As causelesse ye suffrin al this drede.

For thilkè day that I for cherishing
 Or drede of fathir, or for othir wight,
 Or for estate, delite, or for weding,
 Be false to you, my Troilus, my knight,
 Saturnus doughtir Juno, through her might
 As wode as Atalanta do me dwell
 Eternally in Styx the pit of Hell. 1540

And this, on every God celestiaall
 I swere it you, and eke on eche Goddesse,

On every Nymph, and deite infernall,
 On Satyrys and Faunys more and lesse;
 That halvè Goddis ben of wildirnesse,
 And Atropos my thred of life to brest,
 If I be false; now trowe me if you lest.

And thou Simois, that as an arowe clere
 Through Troie rennist aie downward to the Se,
 Be witnesse of this worde, that said is here, 1550
 That thilkè day that I untrewè be
 To Troilus, mine ownè hertè fre,
 That thou returne backwarde unto thy well,
 And I with body and soule sinke to hell.

But that ye speke awaie thus for to go,
 And lettin al your frendis, God forbede
 For any woman that ye shouldin so!
 And namily sens Troy hath now such nede
 Of helpe; and eke of o thing takith hede,
 If this were wiste, my life laie in balaunce, 1560
 And your honor, God shilde us fro mischaunce.

And if so be that pece hereaftir take,
 As al daie happith aftir angre game,
 Why, lorde, the sorow' and wo ye woldin make,
 That ye ne durst comin ayen for shame!
 And er that ye jeopardin so your name
 Beth nat to hasty in this hottè fare,
 For hasty man ne wantith nevir care.

What trowe ye the peple eke al aboute
 Would of it say? it is ful light to' arede; 1570
 Thei woldin say, and swere it out of doute,
 That love ne drave you nat to don this dede,
 But luste voluptuous, and cowarde drede;
 Thus were al losse iwis, mine hertè dere,
 Your honour, whiche that now so shinith clere.

And also thinkith on mine honeste,
 That flourith yet, how foule I should it shende,
 And with what filth it spottid shoulde be,
 If in this forme I shoulde with you wende,
 Ne though I lived unto the world's ende 1580
 My name should I nevir ayenward winne;
 Thus were I lost, and that were routh and sinne.

And forthy, she with reson al this hete;
 Men faine, the suffraunt overcometh parde,
 Eke who so wol have lese, he lese mote lete;
 Thus makith vertue of necessite
 By pacience, and thinke that lorde is he
 Of fortune aie, that naught woll of her retch,
 And she ne dauntith no wight but a wretch.

And trustith this, that certis, hertè swete, 1590
 Or Phæbus sustir Lucina the shene
 The Lion passith, out of this Arite,
 I woll ben here, withoutin any wene,
 I mene, as helpe me Juno hevin's Quene,
 The tenth daie, but if that deth me assaile,
 I woll you sene, withoutin any faile.

And now so this be sothe (qð Troilus)
 I shall well suffre unto the tenth daie,
 Sens that I se that nede it mote ben thus;
 But for the love of God, if it be maie, 1600
 So let us stelin privily awaie,
 For evre' in one as for to live in rest
 Mine hertè saith that it woll be the best.

O mercie God, what life is this (qð she)
 Alas! ye flea me thus for very tene,
 I se well now that ye mistrustin me,
 For by your wordis it is well ifene;

M n m m

Now

Now for the love of Cynthia the shene
Mistrust me nat thus causelesse for routh,
Sens to be true I have you plight my trowth. 1610

And thinkith wel, that somtime it is wit
To spendin a time, a time for to win,
Ne parde lorne am I nat fro you yet,
Though that we ben a daie or two atwin,
Drive out tho fantasies you have within,
And trustith me, and levith eke your sorow,
Or here my trowth, I wol nat live til morow.

For if ye wist, how fore it doeth me smerte,
Ye woulde cesse of this, for, God, thou wost
The pure spirite ywepith in mine herte 1620
To sene you wepin, whiche that I love most,
And that I mote gon to the Grekis holste;
Ye, n'ere it that I wist a remedie
To come ayen, right here I woulde die.

But certis I am not so nice a wight,
That I ne can imaginin awaie
To come ayen that daie that I have hight;
For who maie holden' a thing that wol awaie?
My fathir naught, for all his queintè plaie;
And by my thrift, my wending out of Troie 1630
Anothir daie shall tourne us all to joie.

Forthy with all mine hertè I you beseke,
If that you list doen aught for my praier,
And for the love, whiche that I love you eke,
That er that I departin fro you here,
That of so gode a comfort and a chere
I maie you sene, that ye maie bring at rest
Mine hertè, whiche is at the point to brest.

And ore al this I praie you qð she tho,
Mine ownè hert'is sothfast suffisaunce, 1640
Sith I am thine all whole withoutin mo,
That while that I am absent no plesaunce
Of othir doe me fro your remembraunce,
For I am er agast, for why? men rede,
That love is thing aie full of busie drede.

For in this worlde there livith ladie none,
If that ye were untrue, as God defende!
That so betrayid were, or wo begon
As I, that allè trouthe in you entende, 1650
And douteless, if that I othir wende,
I n'ere but dedde, and er ye cause yfinde,
For Godd'is love, so beth me naught unkinde.

To this answerid Troilus, and seide,
Now God, to whom there n'is no cause iwrie,
Ne glad, as wis I nevir to Creseide,
Sithe thilkè daie I sawe her first with eye,
Was false, ne nevir shall till that I die,
At short wordis well ye maie me bileve,
I can no more, it shall be founde at preve.

Graunt mercy gode hert mine iwis (qð she) 1660
And, blisful Venus, let me nevir sterve,
Er I maie stonde of plesaunce in degre
To quite him well, that so well can deserve,
And while that God my wit will me conserve,
I shall so doen, so true I have you found,
That aie honour to me ward shall rebounde.

For trustith well, that your estate roiall,
Ne veine delite, nor onely worthinesse
Of you in werre, or turnaie marciall,
Ne pompe, arraie, nobley, or eke richesse, 1670
Ne madin me to rue on your distresse,
But morall vertue, groundid upon trowth,

That was the cause I first had on you routh.

Eke gentle hert, and manhode that ye had,
And that ye had (as me thought) in dispite
Every thing that sownid into bad,
As rudenesse, and peplishe appetite,
And that your refon bridlid your delite,
This made abovin every cature
That I was yours, and shall while I maie dure.

And this may length of yeris nat fordoo,
Ne remuable fortunè deface,
But Jupiter, that of his might maie doe
The sorowfull be glade, so yeve us grace,
Er nightis tenne, to metin in this place,
So that it maie your herte and mine suffise,
And fare now well, for time is that ye rise.

And afir that thei long iplainid had,
And oft ikest, and straite in armis folde, 1690
The daie gan rise, and Troilus him clad,
And rufully his Ladie gan behold
As he that felt of deth'is caris cold,
And to her grace he gan him recommaunde,
Where he was wo, this hold I no demaunde:

For mann'is hedde imaginin ne can,
Ne' entendement confidir, ne tongue tell,
The cruill painis of this wofull man,
That passin every tourment doune in hell;
For whan he sawe that she ne might ydwell,
Whiche that his soule out of his body rent, 1700
Withoutin more out of the chambre' he went.

Explicit liber quartus.

Incipit liber quintus.

A Prochin gan the fatall destine,
That Jovis hath in disposicioun,
And to you angrie Parca sustrin thre,
Committith to doen execucioun,
For whiche Creseide must out of the toun,
And Troilus shall dwellin forth in pine,
Till Lachesis his threde no lengir twine.

The goldin tressid Phœbus high on loft
Thryis had allè with his bemis clere 10
The Snowis molte, and Zephirus as oft
Ibrought ayen the tendir levis grene,
Sens that the sonne of Hecuba the Quene
Began to love her first, for whom his sorowe
Was all, that she departin should amorowe.

Full redy was at primè Diomede
Creseide unto the Grekis holste to lede,
For sorowe' of whiche she felt her hertè blede,
As she that ne wist what was best to rede:
And truily, as men in bokis rede, 20
Men wistè nevir woman have the care,
Ne was so lothe out of a toun to fare.

This Troilus withoutin rede or lore,
As man that hath his joyis eke forlore,
Was waiting on his ladie evirmore,
As she that was the sothfast crophe and more
Of all his lust or joyis heretofore,
But Troilus, now farwell all thy joie,
For shalt thou nevir sene her eft in Troie:

Soth

Soth is, that while he bode in this manere
He gan his wo full manly for to hide,
That well unneth it sene, was in his chere,
But at the yate there she should out ride
With certain folke he hovid her to' abide,
So wo bigon, all would he not him plain,
That on his hors unneth he fate for pain.

For ire he quoke, so gan his hertè gnawe
Whan Diomedè on hors gan him to dight,
And saied unto himself this ilke sawe,
Alas (qð he) thus foule a wretchidnesse
Why suffre' I it? Why n'ill I it redresse?
Were it nat bet at onis for to die
Than evirmore in langour thus to drie?

Why n'ill I make at onis riche and pore
To have enough to doen er that she go?
Why n'ill I bring all Troie upon a rore?
Why n'ill I slaen this Diomedè also?
Why n'ill I rathir with a man or two Stele her awaie? Why woll I this endure?
Why n'ill I helpin to mine ownè cure?

But why he n'oldè doen so fell a dede,
That shall I sain, and why him list it spare,
He had in herte alwaie a manir drede
Left that Creseide, in rumour of this fare,
Should have ben slain, lo! this was al his care,
And ellis certain, as I sayid yore,
He had it doen, withoutin wordis more.

Creseidè, whan she redy was to ride,
Full sorowfully sighed, and saied alas!
But forthe she mote, for aught that maie betide,
And forthe she ritte a full sobirly pafe,
There is none othir remedy' in this case,
What wondir is, though that her fore smert,
Whan she forgoith her owne swetè herte.

This Troilus in gife of curtisie
With hauke on hond, and with an hugè rout
Of knightis, rode and did her companie,
Ypassing all the valey, ferre without,
And ferthir would have riddin out of doubt
Full faine, and wo was him to gone so sone,
But tourne he must, and it was eke so doen.

And right with that was Antenor icome
Out of the Grekis hoste, and every wight
Was of him glad, and saied he was welcome,
And Troilus, all n'ere his hertè light,
He painid him with all his fullè might
Him to withholde of weping at the left,
And Antenor he kist, and made grete fest.

And therwithall he must his leve ytake,
And cast his eye upon her pitously,
And nere he rode, his causè for to make,
To take her by the honde all sobirlic,
And Lorde! so she gan wepin tendirlic,
And he full soft and slygly gan her seie,
Now holde your daie, and doe me not to deie.

With that his courfir tournid he about
With face full pale, and unto Diomedè
No worde he spake, ne none of all his rout,
Of whiche the sonne of Tydeus toke hede,
As he that kouthè morè than the crede
In soche a craft, and by the rain her hent,
And Troilus to Troie homwardis went.

This Diomedè, that lad her by the bridell,
Whan that he sawe the folke of Troie awaie,

Thought, all my labor shall not ben on idell,
If that I maie, for somewhat shall I saie,
For at the worst, it shortin maie our waie,
I have herd saie eke timis twisè twelve,
He is a fole that woll foryete him selve.

But nathèlesse, this thought he well inough,
That certainly I am aboutin naught
If that I speke of love, or make it tought,
For doutilefs if she have in her thought
Him that I gesse, he maie not ben ibrought
So sone awaie, but I shall finde a mene
That she nat yet wete shall what that I mene.

This Diomedè, as he that could his gode,
Whan this was doen, gan fallin forth in speche
Of this and that, and askin why she stode
In soche difese, and gan her eke beseche,
That if that he encrefin might or eche
With any thing heresè, that she should Commaunde it him, and saied he doen it would.

For truely he swore her as a knight
That ther n'as thing, with which he might her plesè,
That he n'olde doen his pain, and al his might,
To doen it, for to doen her herte an ese,
And prayid her she would her sorowe' apese,
And saied, iwis we Grekis can have joie
To honoure you, as well as folke of Troie.

He saied eke thus, I wot you thinkith straunge,
No wondir is, for it is to you newe,
Th' acquaintance of these Trojans for to chaunge
For folke of Grece, which that ye nevir knewe,
But woulde nevir God, but if as true
A Greke ye should emong us all yfinde
As any Trojan is, and eke as kinde.

And by the cause I swore you lo! right now,
To ben your frende, and help you to my might,
And for that more acquaintance eke of you
Have I had, than anothir straungir wight,
So fro this forth I praie you daie and night
Commaundith me, how fore so that me smerte
To doen all that maie like unto your herte.

And that ye me wold, as your brothir trete,
And takith not my frendship in dispite,
And though your sorowes ben for thingis grete,
N'ot I nat why, but out of more respite
Mine hert hath for to' amende it grete delite,
And if I maie your harmis nat redresse
I am right sorie for your hevinesse.

For though ye Trojans with us Grekis wroth
Have many' a daie ben; alwaie yet parde,
O God of love, in sothe we servin bothe;
And for the love of God, my Ladie fre,
Whom so ye hate, as beth not wroth with me,
For truely there can no wight you serve,
That halfe so loth your wrathè would deserve.

And n'ere it that we ben so nere the tent
Of Calchas, whiche that sene us bothè maie,
I would of this you tell all mine entent;
But this enfeld till anothir daie,
Yeve me your honde, I am and shall be aie,
God help me so, while that my life maie dure,
Your owne, abovin evèry cature.

Thus saied I nere er now to woman borne,
For God mine herte as wisely glade so,
I lovid nevir woman here beforne
As paramours, ne nevir shall no mo,

And

And for the love of God be not my fo,
All can I not to you, my Ladie dere,
Complain aright, for I am yet to lere.

And wondrith nought mine ownè lady bright,
Though that I speke of love to you thus blive,
For I have herd or this of many' a wight,
That lovid thing he nere saw in his live;
Eke I am not of powir for to strive
Ayenst the God of Love, but him obaie
I woll alwaie, and mercie I you praie.

There beth so worthy knightis in this place,
And ye so faire, that everiche of 'hem all
Woll painin him to stondin in your grace,
But might to me so faire a grace befall
That ye me for your servaunt wouldè call,
So lowly, ne so truily you serve
N'll none of 'hem, as I shall till I sterve.

Creseide unto that purpose lite answerde,
As she that was with sorowe' oppressid so,
That in effect she naught his talis herde,
But here and there, now here a worde or two;
Her thought her sorowfull herte braist atwo, 180
For whan she gan her fathir ferre espie,
Well nigh doune of her hors she gan to sie.

But nathèlesse she thonkith Diomede
Of all his travaile and his gode chere,
And that him list his frendship to her bede,
And she acceptith it in gode manere,
And woll do fain that is him lefe and dere,
And trustin him she would, and well she might,
As sayid she, and from her hors she' alight.

Her fathir hath her in his armis nome, 190
And twentie times he kist his doughtir swete,
And saied: o dere doughtir mine welcome;
She saied eke, she was fain with him to mete,
And stode forth still, mild, muet, and manfucte;
But here I leve her with her fathir dwell,
And forthe I woll of Troilus you tell.

To Troie is come this wofull Troilus,
In sorowe abovin all sorowes smert,
With felon loke, and with face dispitous,
Tho sodainly doune from his hors he stert, 200
And through his paleyse with a swollin hert,
To chambir went, of nothing toke he hede,
Ne none to him dare speke o worde for drede.

And there his sorowes that he sparid had
He yave an issue large, and deth he cride,
And in his throwis, frenetike and mad,
He cursith Jove, Apollo, and Cupide,
He cursith Bachus, Ceres, and Cypride,
His birthe, himself, his fate, and eke nature,
And save his Ladie, evèry cature. 210

To bed he goth, and weilith there and turneth
In furie, as doeth Ixion in hell,
And in this wise he nigh till daie sojourneth,
But tho began his herte alite unswell
Through teris, which that gonnin up to wel,
And pitously he cried upon Creseide,
And to himself right thus he spake and seide;

Where is mine ownè ladie lefe and dere?
Where is her whitè brest? where is it? where?
Where ben her armis, and her eyin clere 220
That yesterdaie this timè with me were?
Now maie I wepe alone many a tere,
And graspe about I maie, but in this place,

Save a pilowe, I find naught to embrace.

How shall I doen? whan shall she come again?
I n'ot alas! why let I her so go?
As wouldè God I had as tho be slain!
O herte mine Creseide! O swetè fo!
O Ladie mine, that I love and no mo,
To whom for evirmore mine herte I vowe, 230
Se how I die, ye n'll me not rescowe!

Who seith you now, my right lodèsterre?
Who sittith now or stant in your presence?
Who can comfortin now your hert'is werre?
Now I am gon, whom ye yeve audience?
Who spekith for me now in my absence?
Alas! no wight, and that is all my care,
For well wote I, as ill as I ye fare.

How should I thus ten dayis full endure,
Whan I the first night havin all this tene? 240
And how shall she eke sorowfull cature
For tendirnesse, how shall she this sustene!
Soche wo for me! o pitous, pale, and grene
Shall woxin ben her freshe womanly face,
For langour, er she tourne unto this place.

And whan he fill in any slombringis,
Anon begin he shouldè for to grone,
And dremin of the dredfullist thingis
That might yben, as mete he were alone 250
In place horrible, making aie his mone,
Or metin that he was emongis all
His enemies, and in their hondis fall.

And therewithall his bodie shouldè sterte,
And with the starte all sodainly awake,
And soche a tremour fele about his herte,
That of the fere his bodie shouldè quake,
And therewithall he should a noise ymake,
And semin as though he should fallin depe,
From high aloft, and than he wouldè wepe,

And rewin on himself so pitously 260
That wondir was to here his fantasie;
Anothir time he shouldè mightily
Comfort himself, and fain it was folie,
So causelesse soche drede and wo to drie;
And eft begin his aspre sorowes newe,
That every man might on his painis rewe.

Who could tell all aright, or full discrive
His wo, his plaint, his langour, and his pine?
Nat all the men that han or ben on live;
Thou, redir, maieft thy self full well devine 270
That soche a wo my wit can not define;
On idell for to write it should I swinke,
Whan that my wit is werie it to thinke.

On hevin yet the steris werin sene,
Although full pale iwoxin was the Mone,
And whitin began the Horizon shene
All Estwardis, as it is wont to doen,
And Phœbus with his rosie cartè sone
Gan afir that to dresse him up to fare,
Whan Troilus hath sent afir Pandare. 280

This Pandare, that of all the daie beforne
Ne might have comin Troilus to se,
Although that he on his hedde it had sworne,
For with the King Priam al daie was he,
So that it laie nat in his liberte
No where to gon, but on the morowe' he went
To Troilus, whan that he for him sent.

For

For in his herte he couldè well devine
That Troilus all night for sorowe woke,
And that he wouldè tell him of his pine, 290
This knewe he well inough withoutin boke;
For which to chambir streight the way he toke,
And Troilus tho sobirly he grette,
And on the bedde full sone he gan him sette.

My Pandarus (qð Troilus) the sorowe,
Whiche that I drie, I maie not long endure,
I trowe I shall not livin till to morowe,
For whiche I would alwaies on avinture
To The devisin of my sepulture
The forme, and of my movble thou dispone, 300
Right as The semith best is for to doon.

But of the fire and flambè funèrall,
In whiche my body brennin shall to glide,
And of the fest and playis palestrall
At my vigile, I praie The take gode hede
That that be well, and offir Mars my stede,
My swerde, mine helme; and levè brothir dere,
My shelde to Pallas yeve, that shinith clere.

The poudre, in which min hert ibrend shal turn,
That praie I The thou take, and it conserve 310
In a vessell that men clepith an urne,
Of golde, and to my lady that I serve,
For love of whom thus pitouly I sterve,
So yeve it her, and doe me this plesaunce
To praie her kepe it for a remembraunce.

For well I felin by my maladie,
And by my dremis, now, and yore ago,
All certainly, that I mote nedis die;
The oule eke, whiche that hight Ascalapho,
Hath astir me shright all these nightis two; 320
And, God Merc'urie, now of me woful wretch
The soulè guide, and whan The list it fetche.

Pandare answerid, and saied, Troilus,
My derè frende, as I have told The yore,
That it is folie for to sorowen thus,
And causelesse, for whiche I can no more,
But who so woll not trowin rede ne lore,
I can not sene in him no remedie,
But let him worchin with his fantasie.

But Troilus, I praie The tell me now, 330
If that thou trowe er this that any wight
Hath lovid paramours as well as thou;
Ye God wot, and fro many' a worthie knight
Hath his Ladie forgon a fourtènight,
And he nat yet made halvindele the fare;
What nede is The to makin all this care?

Sens daie by daie thou maieest thy selvin se,
That from his love, or ellis from his wife
A man mote twinnin of necessite,
Ye, though he love her as his ownè life; 340
Yet n'ill he with himself thus makin strife;
For well thou wost, my levè brothir dere,
That alwaie frendis maie not ben ifere.

How doen this folke, that sene ther lovis wedded
By frendis might, as it betidith oft,
And sene 'hem in ther spousis bedde ibedded?
God wote thei take it wisely faire and soft;
For why? gode hope halt up ther herte aloft
And for thei can a time of sorowe' endure,
As time 'hem hurtith, a time doeth 'hem cure. 350

So shouldist thou endure, and lettin slide
The time, and fondè to ben glad and light,

Tenne dayis n'is not so long to abide,
And sens she to comin The hath beight
She n'ill her heft brekin for any wight;
For drede The nat, that she n'ill finde a waie
To come ayen, my life that durst I laie.

Thy swevines eke, and all soche fantasie
Drive out, and let 'hem farin to mischaunce,
For thei procede of thy melancolie, 360
That doeth The fele in slepe all this penaunce;
A strawe for all swevenis signifaunce,
God helpe me so, I coumpt 'hem not a Bene,
There wot no man aright what dremis mene.

For prestis of the temple tellin this
That dremis ben the revelacions
Of Goddis, and als well thei tell iwis
That thei ben infernalle illusions,
And Lechis saine, that of complections
Procedin thei, of fast, or glotonie, 370
Who wot in sothe thus what thei signifie?

Eke othir sain, that through impressions,
As if a wight hath tast a thing in minde,
That thereof comith soche avisions;
And othir sain, as thei in bokis finde,
That astir timis of the yere by kinde
Men dreme, and that th' effect goth by the mone;
But leve no dreme, for it is nat to doon,

Well worth of dremis aie these oldè wives,
And truly eke augurie of these foulis, 380
For fere of which men wenin lese ther lives,
As ravin's qualm, or schriching of these oulis,
To trowin on it, bothe false and foule is;
Alas! alas! that so noble' a cature
As is a man, should dredin soche ordure.

For whiche with all mine hert I The besече
Unto thy self that all this thou foryeve,
And rise now up, withoutin more speche,
And let us cast how forth maie best be drive,
The time, and eke how freshly we maie live, 390
Whan she comith, the which shall be right sone,
God helpe me so, the best is thus to doon.

Rise, let us speke of lustie life in Troie
That we have lad, and forth the timè drive,
And eke of timè coming us rejoie,
That bringin shail our blisse, now so blive,
And langour of these twise dayis five
We shall therwith so foryet or oppresse,
That well unneeth it doon shail us duresse.

This tounè is full of lordis all about, 400
And truis lastith all this menè while,
Go we playn us in some lustie rout,
To Sarpedon, not hennis but a mile,
And thus thou shalt the time well begile,
And drive it forth unto that blisfull morowe,
That thou her se, that cause is of thy sorowe.

Now rise my derè brothir Troilus,
For certis it non honour is to The
To wepe, and in thy bedde to roukin thus;
For truly of o thing trust to me 410
If thou thus ligge, a daie, or two or thre,
The folke wol wene, that thou for cowardise
The fainist sick, and that thou darst not rise.

This Troilus answerde: o brothir dere,
This knowin folke that have isuffrid pain,
That though he wepe, and make sorowfull chere,
That felith harme and smerte in every vain,
N n n n No

No wondir is, and though I evir plain,
Or alwaie wepe, I am nothing to blame,
Sens I have lost the cause of al my game. 420

But sithins of fine force I mote arise,
I shall arise, as sone as er I maie,
And God, to whom mine herte I sacrifice,
So sende us hastily the tennith daie,
For was there nevir foule so faine of Maie,
As I shall ben, whan she comith in Troie,
That cause is of my tourment and my joie.

But whiðir is thy rede (qð Troilus)
That we maie plaie us best in all this toun?
By God, my counsaile is (qð Pandarus) 430
To ride and plaie us with King Sarpedoun.
So long of this thei spekin up and down,
Till Troilus gan at the last assent
To rise, and forth to Sarpedon thei went.

This Sarpedon, as he that honourable
Was all his live, and full of hie prowesse,
With all that might iservid ben on table,
That deinte was, all coste it grete richesse,
He fedde 'hem daie by daie, that soche noblesse,
As saidin bothe the moste and eke the lest, 440
Was nere er that daie wiste at any fest.

Nor in this worlde there is none instrument
Delicious, through winde, or touch on corde,
As ferre as any wight hath er iwent,
That tonge tell, or herte maie recorde,
But at that fest, it was well herd acorde,
Ne' of Ladies eke so faire a companie
On daunce, er tho was never sene with eye.

But what availith this to Troilus
That for his sorowe nothing of it rought, 450
But evir in one his herte pitous
Full busily Creseide his Ladie sought,
On her was evir all that his herte thought,
Now this, now that so fast imagining,
That gladin iwis can him no festing.

These Ladies eke, that at this festè bene,
Sens that he sawe his Ladie was awaie,
It was his sorowe on 'hem for to sene,
Or for to here on instrumentis plaie;
For she that of his hert berith the kaie 460
Was absent, lo! this was his fantasie,
That no wight shouldè makin melodie.

Nor there n'as hour in all the daie or night,
Whan he was there as no man might him here,
That he ne saied, o lovesome Ladie bright,
How have ye farin sins that ye were there?
Welcome iwis, mine ownè ladie dere;
But welawaie: all this n'as but a mase,
Fortune his love entendid but to glase.

The lettirs eke, that she of oldè time
Had him isent, he would alone irede 470
An hundrid sithe atwixtin none and prime,
Refiguring her shape, and womanhede
Within his hert, and every worde and dede,
That passid was, and thus he drove to' an ende
The ferthè day, and thennis wolde he wende.

And saidè levè brothir Pandarus,
Intendist thou that we shall here byleve
Til Sarpedon wol forth conveyin us?
Yet were it fairir that we toke our leve; 480
For Godd's love, let us now sone at eve
Our levè take, and homwarde let us tourne;

For trewely I n'il nat thus sojourne.

Pandare answerid, be we comin hither
To fetchin fire, and rennin home again?
God helpe me so, I can nat tellin whither
We mightin gone, if I shal sothly faine,
There any wight is of us morè faine
Than Sarpedon, and if we hennis hie
Thus sodainly, I holde it vilanie: 490

Sith that we seydin we wouldin byleve
With him a weke, and now thus sodainly
The ferthè day to take of him our leve,
He wouldè wondrin on it trewely;
Let us holde forth our purpose fermely,
And sens that ye behightin him to' abide,
Holde forwarder now, and aftir let us ride.

This Pandarus with mochil pine and wo
Made him to dwel, and at the wek's ende
Of Sarpedon thei toke ther leve to go, 500
And on ther way they spedin 'hem to wende:
(Qð Troilus) now lorde me grace sende
That I maie findin at mine home-comming
Creseide comin, and therwith gan he sing.

Ye halif wodè thought ywis Pandare,
And to him selfe ful softly he seide,
God wote refroidin may this hottè fare
Er Calcas sendè Troilus Creseide;
But nathelesse he japid thus, and seide,
And swore iwis, his hert him wel behight 510
She wouldin come, as sone as er she might.

Whan thei unto the paleis were icomen
Of Trolus, thei doun of horse alight,
And to the chambre ther waie have thei nommen,
And unto timè that it gan to night
Thei spekin of Creseide the lady bright,
And aftir this, whan that 'hem bothe leste,
Thei spede 'hem fro the suppir unto rest.

On morow' as sone as day began to clere
This Troilus gan of his slepe to' abreide, 520
And to Pandarus his owne brothir dere,
For love of God sat pitoussly he seide,
As go we sene the paleis of Creseide,
For sens we yet maie have none othir fest,
So let us sene her paleis at the lest!

And therwithall his meinè for to blende
A cause he fonde into the toun to go,
And to Creseid's paleis thei gon wende,
But lorde! this sely Troilus was wo,
Him thought his sorouful hert braist atwo, 530
For when he saw her doris sperrid all,
Wel nigh for sorow' adoun he gan to fall.

Therwith when he was ware, and gan behold
How shet was every window of the place,
As frost him thought his hert began to cold,
For whiche with chaungid dedly palè face
Withoutin worde he forth by gan to pace,
And as God would, he gan so fast to ride,
That no wight of his countinaunce aspide.

Than saide he thus: O paleis desolate, 540
O house of housis whilom best ydight,
O paleis empty and disconsolate,
O thou lanterne, of which queint is the light,
O paleis whilom day, that now art night,
Wel oughtist thou to fal, and I to die,
Sens she is went, that wont was us to gie.

O paleis

O paleis whilom crone of housis al,
 Enluminid with sunne of allè blisse,
 O ring, of whiche the rubie is out fall,
 O cause of wo, that cause hast ben of blisse, 550
 Yet sens I may no bet, faine would I kilse
 Thy coldè doris, durst I for this route,
 And farwel shrine, of whiche the faint is out.

Therwith he cast on Pandarus his eie
 With chaungid face, and pitous to beholde,
 And whan he might his time aright aspie,
 Aie as he rode, to Pandarus he tolde
 His newe sorow, and eke his joyis olde,
 So petously, and with so ded an hewe
 That every wight might on his sorow rewe. 560

Fro thennis forth he ridith up and doune,
 And every thing came him to remembraunce,
 As he rode forth by placis of the tounne
 In whiche he whilom had all his plesaunce;
 Lo! yondir saw I mine owne lady daunce,
 And in that temple with her eyin clere
 Me captive caught first my right lady dere.

And yondir have I herde ful lustily
 My dere hert Creseide laugh, and yondir plaie
 Sawe I her onis eke ful blisfully, 570
 And yondir onis to me gan she saie
 Now gode swete, lovith me wel I you praye,
 And yonde so godely gan she me beholde
 That to the deth mine hert is to her holde:

And at the cornir in the yondir houe
 Herde I mine aldirlevist lady dere
 So womanly with voice melodious
 Singin so wel, so godely and so clere,
 That in my soule yet me thinkith I here
 The blisful sowne, and in that yondir place 580
 My lady first me toke unto her grace.

Than thought he thus, o blisfull lorde Cupide,
 Whan I the processe have in memorie
 How thou me hast weried on every side,
 Men might a boke make of it like a storie;
 What nede is The to seke on me victorie,
 Sens I am thine, and wholly at thy will,
 What joy hast thou thine ownè folke to spill?

Wel hast thou, lorde, iwroke on me thine ire,
 Thou mighty God, and dredful for to greve, 590
 Now mercy, lorde, thou wost wel I desire
 Thy grace moſte, of allè lustis leve,
 And live and die I wol in thy beleve,
 For whiche I ne' aske in guerdon but a bone,
 That thou Creseide aien me fendè sone.

Distrainin her hert as fast to returne,
 As thou doest mine to longin her to se,
 Than wote I wel that she n'il nat sojourne;
 Now blisful lorde, so cruil thou ne be Unto the blode of Troie, I praie The, 600
 As Juno was unto the blode Thebane,
 For whiche the folke of Thebis caught ther bane.

And aftir this he to the yatis wente,
 Ther as Creseide out rode, a full gode paas,
 And up and down there made he many' a wente,
 And to him selfe ful oft he said alas!
 Fro hennis rode my blisse and my solas,
 As wouldè blisful God now for his joie
 I might her sene ayen comin to Troie.

And to the yondir hil I gan her gide; 610
 Alas! and there I toke of her my leve,

And yonde I sawe her to her fathir ride,
 For sorow of whiche mine hert shal to cleve,
 And hithir home I came whan it was eve,
 And here I dwel, out cast from allè joie,
 And shal, til I maie sene her este in Troie.

And of him selfe imaginid he ofte
 To ben defait.d, pale, and woxin lesse
 Than he was wonte, and that men saidin softe
 What may it be? who can the sothè gesse 620
 Why Troilus hath al this heviness?
 And al this n'as but his melancolie,
 That he had of him selfe suche fantasie.

Anothir time imaginin he would
 That every wight that went by the wey
 Had of him routhe, and that thei fainè should
 I am right sory, Troilus wol dey:
 And thus he drove a daie yet forth or twey,
 As ye have herde, suche life gan he to lede
 As he that stode betwixin hope and drede. 630

For which him likid in his songis shewe
 Th' encheson of his wo, as he best might,
 And made a songe, of wordis but a fewe,
 Somwhat his wofull hertè for to light,
 And whan he was from every mann's sight,
 With softe voice he of his lady dere,
 That absent was; gan sing, as ye maie here.

O sterre, of whiche I lost have all the light,
 With hertè fore wel ought I to bewaile
 That evir derke in turment, night by night, 640
 Towarde my deth with winde I stere and faile,
 For whiche the tennith night, if that I faile
 The giding of thy bemis bright an houre,
 My ship and me Carybdis woll devour.

This songè when he thus songin had, sone
 He fil aien into his sighis olde,
 And every night, as was his wont to done,
 He stode the bright monè to beholde,
 And al his sorowe he to the mone tolde,
 And said, iwis whan thou art hornid newe 650
 I shal be glad, if al the world be trewe.

I saw thine hornis olde eke by that morow
 Whan hennis rode my bright lady dere,
 That cause is of my turment and my sorow,
 For whiche, o bright Lucina the clere,
 For love of God ren fast about thy sphere,
 For whan thine hornis newe ginnin to spring
 Than shal she come that maie my blisse ybring.

The daie is more, and lengir every night
 Than thei ben wont to be, him thoughtè tho, 660
 And that the sunnè went his course unright
 By lengir waie than it was wont to go,
 And said, iwis I drede me evirmo
 The sunn'is sonne Phaeton be on live,
 And that his fathir's carre amisse he drive.

Upon the wallis fast eke would he walke,
 And on the Grekis host he would yse,
 And to him selfe right thus he would ytalke:
 Lo! yondir is mine ownè lady fre,
 Or ellis yondir, there the tentis be, 670
 And thence comith this ayre that is so sote,
 That in my soule I fele it doth me bote.

And hardily this winde, that more and more
 Thus stoundemele encrefith in my face,
 Is of my ladies depè sighis fore;
 I preve it thus, for in none othir space

Of

Of al this toun, save onely in this place
Fele I no winde, that sounith so like paine,
It saith, alas! why twinid be we twaine?

This longè time he drivith forth right thus, 680
Til fully passid was the ninthè night,
And aie beside him was this Pandarus,
That besily did allè his full might
Him to comfort, and make his hertè light,
Yeving him hope alway the tenthè morow
That she shal comen, and stintin al his sorow.

Upon that othir side eke was Creseide
With women fewe, among the Grekis strong,
For whiche ful oft a day, alas! she seide,
That I was borne, wel maie mine hertè long 690
Aftir my deth, for now live I to long,
Alas! and I ne may it not amende,
For now is worfe than evir yet I wende.

My father n'il for nothing do me grace
To gone ayen, for aught I can him queme,
And it so be, that I my termè pace,
My Troilus alas! shal in his hert deme
That I am false, and so it maie wel seme,
Thus shal I have unthonke on every side,
That I was borne so welaway the tide! 700

And if that I me put in jeopardie
To stele awaie by night, and it besal
That I be caught, I shal be holde a spie,
Or ellis so! this drede I most of al,
If in the hondis of some wretche I fal
I n'am but lost, al be mine hertè trewe,
Now mighty God, thou on my sorow rewe.

Ful pale iwoxin was her brightè face,
Her limmis kne, as she that al the daie
Stode whan she durst, and lokid on the place 710
There she was borne, and she had dwellid aye,
And al the night weping alas! she laie,
And thus dispeirid out of allè cure
She lad her life, this soroufull cature.

Ful oft a daie she sighed eke for distresse,
And in her selfe she went aie purtraying
Of Troilus the grete worthinesse,
And al his godely wordis recording,
Sens first that daie her love began to spring,
And thus she sette her wofull hert afire 720
Through remembraunce of that she gan desire.

In all this world there n'is so cruil hert
That her had herd complainin in her sorow,
That n'old have wepin for her painis smert,
So tendirly she wept, both eve and morow,
Her nedid not no teris for to borow,
And this was yet the worst of all her paine,
Ther was no wight, to whom she durst complaine.

Ful rewfully she lokid upon Troie,
Behelde the Touris high, and eke the Hallis, 730
Alas! (qð she) the plefaunce and the joie,
The whiche that now al turnid into gal is,
Have I had oftin within yondir wallis;
O Troilus, what doest thou now she seide?
Lord whethir thou yet think upon Creseide!

Alas! that I ne' had trowid on your lore,
And went with you, as ye me redde er this,
Than had I now not sighid halfe so sore,
Who might have said, that I had don amis
To stele awaie with suche one as he is? 740
But al to late comith the lectuarie,

Whan men the corse unto the grave carie!

To late is now to speke of that matere,
Prudence, alas! one of thine eyin thre
Me lackid alway, er that I came here;
For on time passid wel remembrid me,
And present time eke coude I wel yse,
But future time, er I was in the snare,
Could I not sene, that caulith now my care.

But nathèlesse, betide what may betide, 750
I shal to morow' at night, by est or west,
Out of this hoste stele, on some manir side,
And gon with Troilus, where as him left,
This purpose wol I holde, and this is best,
No force of wickid tongis jonglerie,
For er on love have wretchis had Envie:

For who so wol of every worde take hede,
Or rulin him by every wight's wit,
Ne shal he nevir thrivin out of drede,
For that that some men blamin ever yet 760
Lo! othir manir folke commendin it;
And as for me, for al suche variaunce,
Felicite clepe I my suffisaunce.

For whiche, withoutin any wordis mo,
To Troie I wol, as for conclusioun,
But God it wote, er fully monthis two
She was ful ferre fro that entencioun,
For bothè Troilus and Troie toun
Shall knotèlesse thorought her hertè slide,
For she wol take a purpose for to' abide. 770

This Diomede, of whom I you tel gan,
Goth now within himselfe aie arguing,
With al the sleight and al that er he can,
How he maie best with shortist taryng
Into his nette Creseid's herte bring,
To this entent he couthe nevir fine,
To fishin her, he laide out hoke and line.

But nathèlesse, wel in his hert he thought
That she n'as nat without a love in Troie,
For nevir sithin he her thennis brought 780
Ne couthe he sene her laugh, or makin joie,
He n'ist how best her hert for to acoie,
But for t' assey, he said nought it ne greveth,
For he that naught assayith, naught atcheveh.

Yet said he to him selfe upon a night,
Now am I nat a sole, that wote wel howe
Her wo is, for love of anothir wight,
And herupon to gon assaie her now?
I maie well wete it n'il nat ben my prowè;
For wise folke in bokis it expresse, 790
Men shal nat wowe a wight in hevinesse.

But who so might ywinnin suche a floure
Fro him, for whom she mournith night and daie,
He might wel saine he were a conqueroure;
And right anone, as he that bold was aie,
Thought in his hert, happin what happin may,
Al should I die, I wol her herte seche,
I shal no more lesin but my speche.

This Diomede, as bokis us declare,
Was in his nedis prest and corageous, 800
With sternè voice; and mighty limmis square,
Hardy and testife, strong, and chevalrous,
Of dedis like his fathir Tydeus,
And some men saine, he was of tongè large,
And heire he was of Calydon and Arge.

Creseide

Creseide mene ywas of her stature,
Therto of shape, of face, and eke of chere
There ne mightin ben no fairir cature,
And oftin timis this was her manere
To gone itressid with her heris clere 810
Doun by her colere, at her backe behinde,
Which with a threde of gold she woulde binde.

And save her browis joynedin ifere,
There n'as no lacke, in aught I can espie;
But for to spekin of her eyin clere,
Lo! truely thei writtin that her seien,
That paradis stode formid in her eien,
And with her richè beaute evirmore
Strove love in her, aie which of 'hem was more.

She sobre was, simple, and wise withall, 820
The best inorishid eke that might be,
And godely of her speche in generall,
Charitable, estatly, lusty, and fre,
Ne nevirmore ne lackid her pite
Tendrehertid, and sliding of corage,
But truely I can nat tel her age.

And Troilus wel woxin was in hight,
And complete, formid by proporcioun
So wel, that kinde it naught amending might,
Yong, fresh, and strong, and hardy as Lioun, 830
And trewe as stele, in eche condicioun,
One of the best entetchid creature
That is or shal, while that the world maie dure.

And certainly in story it is fonde
That Troilus was nevir to no wight,
As in his time, in no degre seconde,
In daring do, that longith to a knight,
Al might a Giaunt passin him of might,
His hert aie with the first and with the best
Stode peregall to dare done what him left. 840

But for to tellin forthe of Diomede,
It fil, that aftir on the tennith daie
Sens that Creseide out of the cite yede,
This Diomede, as fresh as braunche in Maie,
Came to the tentè there as Calchas laie,
And fainid him with Calchas have to done,
But what he mente, I shal you tellin sone.

Creseide, at shorte wordis for to tel,
Welcomid him, and doun him by her sette, 850
And he was ethe inough to makin dwel,
And aftir this, withoutin longè lette,
The spicis and the wine men forth 'hem sette,
And forthe thei speke of this and that ifere,
As frendis done, of whiche some shal ye here.

He gan first fallin of the warre in speche
Betwixin them and the folke of Troie toun,
And of th' assiege he gan eke her besече
To tellin him what was her opinioun,
Fro that demaunde he so discendith doun
To askin her, if that her straunge thought 860
The Grekis gise, and werkis that thei wrought:

And why her fathir taryith so long
To weddin her unto some worthy wight.
Creseide, that was in her painis strong
For love of Troilus her ownè knight,
So ferforth as she conning had or might Answerde him tho, but as of his entente
It semid, that she ne wist what he mente.

But nathèlesse this ilkè Diomede
Gan on him selfe assure, and thus he seide: 870

If I aright have takin on you hede,
Me thinkith thus, o lady mine Creseide,
That sens I first hond on your bridil leide,
When I out came of Troie by the morow,
Ne might I nevir sene you but in sorow.

I can nat saine what maie the causè be,
But if for love of some Trojan it were,
The whiche right fore woulidin athinkin me,
That ye for any wight that dwellith there 880
Shuldin yspil a quartir of a tere,
Or pitoussly your selvin so begile,
For dredelesse it is nat worthe the while.

The folke of Troie, as who faith al and some,
In prison ben, as ye your selvin se,
Fro thennis shal nat one on livè come
For al the Golde atwixin sunne and se,
Trustith wel this, and understondith me,
There shal nat one to mercy gone on live,
Al were he Lord of worldis twise five.

Such wrech on them for fetching of Heleine 890
There shal be take, er that we hennis wende,
That Manes, whiche that Goddis ben of peine,
Shal ben agast that Grekis wol 'hem shende,
And men shal drede unto the world's ende
From hennis forthe to ravishe any Quene,
So cruil shal our wreche on them be sene.

And but if Calchas led us with ambages,
That is to saine, with double wordis flie,
Suche as men clepen a word with two visages, 900
Ye shal wel knowin that I do nat lie,
And al this thing right sene it with your eie,
And that anon ye n'il nat trowe how sone,
Now takith hede, for it is for to done.

What wenin ye that your wife fathir woulde
Have yevin Antenor for you anon,
If he ne wistè that the cite shoulde
Distroyid ben? why nay? so mote I gone,
He knew ful wel there shal nat scapin one,
That Trojan is, and for the gretè fere
He durst nat that ye dwellid lengir there. 910

What wol ye more, o lovesome lady dere?
Let Troie and Trojans fro your hertè passe,
Drive out the bittir hope, and make gode chere,
And clepe ayen the beaute of your face,
That ye with saltè teris so deface,
For Troie is brought in suche a jeopardie
That it to save is now no remedie.

And thinkith wel, ye shal in Grekis finde
A love more parfite, er that it be night, 920
Than any Trojan is, and more kinde,
And bet to servin you wol don his might,
And if that ye vouchsafe my lady bright,
I wol ben he, to servin you my selve,
Ye levir than be lorde of Grecis twelve.

And with that word he gan to waxin red,
And in his speche a litil while he quoke,
And cast aside a litil with his hed,
And stente a while, and aftirwarde he woke,
And sobrelly on her he threwe his loke,
And said, I am, al be' it to you no joie, 930
As gentle' a man, as any wight in Troie.

For if my fathir Tydeus, he seide,
Iliv'd had, tho I had ben er this
Of Calidony' and Arge a king, Creseide,
And so hope I that I shal yet iwis,

O o o o

But

But he was slaine alas! the more harm is,
Unhappily at Thebis al to rathe,
Polynces, and many' a man to scathe.

But hertemine, fith that I am your man,
And ye ben the first, of whom I seche grace, 940
To servin you as hertely as I can,
And evir shal while I to live have space,
So that, er I depart out of this place,
Ye wol me grauntin that I maie to morow
At bettir laisir tel you of my sorow.

What should I tell his wordis that he seide?
He spake inough for o daie at the mest,
It previth wel he spake so, that Creseide
Grauntid on the morow at his request
Forthy to spekin with him at the leste, 950
So that he n'olde spekin of fuche matere,
And thus she to him said, as ye mowe here.

As she that had her hert on Troilus
So fast yset, that none might it arace,
And straungely she spake, and seide thus.
O Diomede, I love that ilkè place
There I was borne, and Jovis of thy grace
Delivre' it sone of al that doth it care,
God for thy might so leve it wel to fare;

That Grekis wold ther wrath on Troyè wreke, 960
If that thei might, I know it wel iwis,
But it shal naught befallin as ye speke,
And God toforne, and farthir ovir this,
I wote my fathir wife and redy is,
And that he me hath bought, as ye me tolde,
So dere I am to him the more yholde.

That Grekis ben of high condicioun
I wote eke well, but certaine men shall finde
As worthy folkè within Troiè toun,
As conning, as parfite, and eke as kinde, 970
As ben betwixtin Orcades and Inde,
And that ye couldin wel your lady serve
I trowe eke wel, her thonke for to deserve.

But as to speke of love, iwis she seide,
I had a lorde, to whom I weddid was,
The whose mine hert was al til that he deide,
And othir love, as helpe me now Pallas,
There in mine hert ne is, ne nevir was;
And that ye ben of noble' and high kinrede
I have wel herde it tellin out of drede. 980

And that doth me to have so gret a wonder
That ye wol scornin any woman so;
Eke God wote, love and I ben fer asonder,
I am disposid bet, so mote I go,
Unto my deth to plaine and makin wo;
What I shal astir done, I can nat saie,
But truily as yet me list nat plaie.

Mine hert is now in tribulacioun,
And ye in armis besy daie by daie;
Hereastir when ye wonnin have the toun, 990
Paravintur than so it happin maie
That whan I se that I nevir ere saie,
Than wol I werke that I nevir ere wrought;
This word to you inough suffisin ought.

To morow eke wol I speke with you faine,
So that ye touchin nought of this matere,
And whan you list, ye maie come here againe;
And er ye gon thus muche I saie you here,
As helpe me Pallas with her heris clere,
Yf that I should of any Greke have routhe, 1000

It should ybe your selvin by my trouthe.

I saie nat therfore that I wol you love,
Ne saie nat naie, but in conclusioun,
I menè wel by God that sit above;
And therwithal she cast her eyin doun,
And gan to sigh, and saide O Troyè toun,
Yet bidde I God, in quiet and in rest
I maie The sene or do mine hertè brest.

But in effecte, and shortely for to saie,
This Diomede al freshly newe againe 1010
Gan preasin on, and fast her mercy praie,
And astir this the sothe for to saie
Her glove he toke, of which he was ful faine,
And finally, whan it was woxin eve,
And al was wel, he rose and toke his leve.

The bright Venus folowid and aie taught
The waie there brode Phœbus doune alight,
And Cytherea her chare-horse o'r raught
To whirle into the Lioun, if she might, 1020
And Signifer his candils shewith bright,
Whan that Creseide unto her bed wente,
Within her fathir's faire brighte tente,

Retourning in her soule aie up and doun
The wordis of this sodaine Diomede,
His gret estate, and peril of the toun,
And that she was alone, and hadde nede
Of frendis helpe, and thus began to drede
The causis why, the sothe for to tell,
That she toke fully purpose for to dwell.

The morow came, and gostly for to speke 1030
This Diomede is come unto Creseide,
And shortly, lest that ye my tale breke,
So wel he for himselfin spake and seide,
That al her sighis fore adoun he leide,
And finally, the sothe for to saie,
He rest her of the grete of alle her pain.

And astir this, the story tellith us
That she unto him yave the faire baie stede,
The whiche she onis wan of Troilus,
And eke a broche (and that was litil nede) 1040
That Troilus was, she yave this Diomede,
And eke the bet from sorowe' him to releve
She made him were a pencell of her sleve.

I finde eke in the story ellis where,
Whan through the body hurt was Diomede
Of Troilus, tho wepte she many' a tere,
Whan that she saw his wide woundis blede,
And that she toke to kepin him gode hede,
And for to helin him of his woundes smerte,
Men saie, I n'ot, that she yave him her herte.

But truily the story tellith us,
There madin nevir woman more wo
Than she, whan that she falsid Troilus,
She saide alas! for now is clene ago
My name in trouthe of love for evir mo,
For I have falsid one the gentillest
That ever was, and one the worthiest.

Alas! of me unto the world's ende
Shall neithir ben iwrittin or isong 1060
No gode worde, for these bokis woll me shende,
Irollid shall I ben on many' a tong,
Throughout the world my bell shall be yrong,
And women mozte woll hatin me of all,
Alas, that soche a caas me should befall!

Thei

Thei well sain, in as moche as in me is
 I have 'hem doen dishonour, welawaie!
 All be I not the first that did amis,
 What helpith that, to doen my blame awaie?
 But sens I se there is no bettir waie,
 And that to late is now for me to rue, 1070
 To Diomedes I woll algate be true.

But, Troilus, sens I no bettir maie,
 And sens that thus departin ye and I,
 Yet praie I God so yeve you right gode daie,
 As for the gentillist knight, truily
 That er I sawe, to fervin faithfully,
 And best can aie his ladie's honour kepe,
 (And with that worde she braft anon to wepe)

And certis you ne hatin shall I never,
 And frend's love that shall ye have of me, 1080
 And my gode worde, all shoud I livin ever,
 And truily I would right sorie be
 For to sein you in adversite,
 And giltrisse I wot well I you leve;
 And all shall passe, and thus take I my leve.

But truily how long it was bitwene
 That she forsoke him for this Diomedes,
 There is none aucthour tellith it, I wene,
 Take every man now to his bokis hede,
 He shall no termè findin, out of drede, 1090
 For though that he began to wowe her sone,
 Er he her wan yet was there more to done.

Ne me ne list this felie woman chide,
 Ferthir than that the storie woll devise,
 Her name alas is publishid so wide,
 That for her gilt it ought inough suffice,
 And if I might excuse her in some wise,
 For she so sorie was for her untrouthe,
 Iwis I would excuse her yet for routhe.

This Troilus, as I before have told, 1100
 Thus drivith forth, as wel as he hath might,
 But oftin was his herte hote and cold,
 And namily that ilkè ninthe night,
 Whiche on the morowe she had him behight,
 To come ayen, God wote full little rest
 Had he that night, nothing to slepe him left.

The laurir-crounid Phœbus with his hete
 Gan in his course aie upward as he went
 To warme of the Est se the wavis wete,
 And Circe's doughtir song, with freshe entent, 1110
 Whan Troilus his Pandare aftir sent,
 And on the wallis of the toun thei pleide,
 To loke if thei can sene aught of Creseide,

Till it was none thei stodin for to se
 Who that there came, and every manir wight,
 That came fro ferre, thei saidin it was she,
 Till that thei couldin knowin him aright,
 Now was his herte dull, now was it light,
 And thus bejapid stodin for to stare
 About naught this Troilus and Pandare. 1120

To Pandarus this Troilus tho seide,
 For aught I wot, before none sikirly
 Into this toun ne comith not Creseide,
 She hath inough to doin hardily
 To twinnin from her fathir, so trowe I,
 Her oldè fathir woll yet make her dine
 Er that she go, God yeve his herte pine.

Pandare answerd, it maie well ben certain,
 And forthy let us dine, I The besече,

And aftir none than maist thou come again, 1130
 And home thei go, withoutin more speche,
 And comin ayen, but long maie thei seche
 Er that thei findin that thei aftir gape,
 Fortune 'hem bothe ythinkith for to jape.

(Q^x Troilus) I se well now that she
 Is taryid with her old fathir so,
 That er she come it woll nigh evin be,
 Come forthe, I woll unto the yate go,
 These portirs ben unkonning evirno,
 And I woll doen 'hem holdin up the yate, 1140
 As naught ne were, although she comin late.

The daie goth fast, and aftir that came eve,
 And yet came nat to Troilus Creseide,
 He lokith forth by hedge, by tre, by greve,
 And ferre his hedde ovir the wall he leide,
 And at the last he tournid him, and seide,
 By God I wote her mening now, Pandare,
 Almoste iwis all newe was all my care.

Now doutilefs this Ladie can her gode,
 I wote she comith riding privily, 1150
 I commendin her wifedome by mine hode,
 She woll nat makin peple nicily
 Gaure on her whan she cometh, but softly
 By night into the toun she thinkith ride,
 And dere brothir, thinke nat long to abide.

We have naught ellis for to doen iwis,
 And Pandarus, now wilt thou trowin me,
 Have here my trouthe, I se her, yond she is,
 Heve up thine eyin, man, maist thou nat se?
 Pandare answerid, naie so mote I The, 1160
 All wrong by God, what saist thou man? wher art?
 That I se yonde afarre n'is but a carte.

Alas! thou saiest right sothe (q^x Troilus)
 But hardily it is not all for nought
 That in mine herte I now rejoice thus,
 It is ayenst some gode, I have a thought,
 N'ot I nat how, but sens that I was wrought
 Ne felt I soche a comfort dare I saie,
 She cometh to night, my life that durst I lay.

Pandare answerde, it maie be well inough, 1170
 And helde with him of all that er he saied,
 But in his herte he thought, and soft he lough,
 And to himself full sobirly he saied,
 From hasilwodde, there joly Robin plaied,
 Shall come all that that thou abidist here,
 Ye, farwell all the snowe of ferne yere.

The Wardein of the yatis gan to call
 The folke, which that without the yatis were,
 And badde 'hem drivin in ther bestis all,
 Or all the night thei must bylevin there,
 And ferre within the night, with many' a tere, 1180
 This Troilus gan homward for to ride,
 For well he seeth it helpith nat to' abide.

But nathèlessè he gladdid him in this,
 He thought he misaccomptid had his daie,
 And saied, I understande have all amis,
 For thilkè night I last Creseide saie,
 She saied I shall ben here, if that I maie,
 Er that the Mone, O my dere herte swete,
 The Lion passe out of this Ariete.

For whiche she maie yet hold all her behest, 1190
 And on the morowe to the yate he went,
 And up and doune, by West and eke by Est,
 Upon the wallis made he many' a went,

But

But al for naught, his hope alway him blent,
For which at night in sorow and sighes fore
He went him home, withoutin any more.

This hope all clene out of his hertè fledde,
He ne' hath wheron now lengir for to hong,
But for the pain him thought his hertè bledd,
So wer his throwis sharpe, and wondir strong, 1200
For whan he sawe that she abode so long,
He ne wist what he judgin of it might,
Sens she hath brokin that she him behight.

The thirde, the fourth, the fifte, and the sixt daie
Aftir-tho dayis tenne, of whiche I told,
Betwixin hope and drede his herte laie,
Yet somwhat trusting on her hertis old
But whan he sawe she n'olde her termis hold,
He can now sene none othir remedie
But for to shapin him sone for to die. 1210

Therwith the wickid spirit, God us bleffe!
Whiche that men clepin The wode Jalousie,
Gan in him crepe, in all this hevinesse,
For whiche, bicause he wouldin sone die,
He ne' ete ne dronke for his melancolie;
And eke from every companie he fledde,
This was the life that all this time he ledde.

He so defaite was, that no manir man
Unnethis him might knowin there he went,
So was he lene, and therto pale and wan, 1220
And feble, that he walkith by potent,
And with his ire he thus himselfin shent,
But whoso askid him wherof him smerte,
He saied, his harme was all about his herte.

Priam full oft, and eke his mothir dere,
His bretherne, and his susterin gan him frain,
Why he so wofull was in all his chere,
And what thing was the cause of al his pain;
But all for naught, he n'olde his causè plain,
But saied, he felt a grevous maladie 1230
About his herte, and fain he wouldè die.

So on a daie he laie him doune to slepe;
And so bifell it that in slepe him thought
That in a forest fast he walked to wepe
For love of her, that him these painis wrought,
And up and doune as he that forest fought
He met he sawe a Bore, with tuskis grete,
That slept ayenist the bright Sunn's hete:

And by this Bore, fast in her armis fold,
Laie kissing aie his ladie bright Creseide, 1240
For sorowe of whiche, whan he it gan behold,
And for dispite, out of his slepe he breide,
And loude he cried on Pandarus, and seide,
O Pandarus, now knowe I crop and rote,
I n'am but dedde, there n'is none othir bote;

My lady bright Creseide hath me betraide,
In whom I trustid moste of any wight,
She ellifwhere hath now her hert apaied,
The blisfull Goddis, thorough ther grete might
Have in my dreame is Hewid it full right, 1250
Thus in my dreame Creseide have I beholde
And all this thing to Pandarus he tolde.

O my Creseide, alas! what subtilte,
What newè lust, what beaute, what science?
What wrathe of juste cause have ye unto me?
What gilt of me, what fell experience
Hath fro me rafte alas! thine advertence?
O trust! O faithe! qð he' O depe assurance!

Who hath me rafte Creseide, all my plesaunce?

Alas! why let I her from hennis go? 1260
For whiche well nigh out of my wit I breide;
Who shall now trowe on any othis mo?
God wote, I wende, O Ladie bright Creseide,
That every worde was Gospell that ye seide;
But who maie bet begile, if that him list,
Than he on whom men wenin best to trift?

What shall I doen, my Pandarus? alas!
I felin now so sharpe a newè pain,
Sens that there is no remedy' in this caas,
That bet were it I with mine hondis twain 1270
My selvin slowe, than alwaie thus to plain,
For through the deth my wo shuld have an ende,
There every daie with life my self I shende.

Pandare answerde and saied, alas the while
That I was borne! have I nat faied er this
That dremis many' a manir man begile?
And why? For folke expoundin 'hem amis;
How darst thou fain that false thy ladie is,
For any dreame, right for thine ownè drede?
Let be this thought, thou canst no dremis rede.

Paravinture there thou dremest of this bore,
It maie so be that it maie signifie
Her fathir, whiche that old is and eke hore,
Ayen the sunne lyith on point to die,
And she for sorowe ginnith wepe and crie,
And kissith him, there he lieth on the ground;
Thus shuldith thou thy dreame aright expound.

How might I than doin (qð Troilus)
To knowe of this, yea were nevir so lite?
Now saiest thou wisely (qð this Pandarus) 1290
My rede is this, sens thou canst well endite,
That hastily a lettir thou her write,
Thorough which thou shalt wel bringin about
To knowe a soth of that thou art in dout.

And se now why: for this I dare well fain,
That if so is, that she untrue ybe,
I can not trowe that she woll write again,
And if she write, thou shalt full sone ise,
As whethir she hath any liberte
To come ayin, or ellis in some clause, 1300
If she be let, she wol assigne a cause.

Thou hast not writtin to her sens she went,
Nor she to The, and this I durst wele laie,
There maie soche causè ben in her entent,
That hardily thou wolt thy selvin saie
That her abode the best is for you twaie;
Now write her than, and thou sha't fele sone
A soth of all, there is no more to done.

Acordid ben to this conclusioun,
And that anon, these ilke lordis two, 1310
And hastily sat Troilus adoun,
And rollith in his hertè to and fro,
How he maie best discrivin her his wo,
And to Creseide his owne ladie dere
He wrote right thus, and saied as ye maie here.

The Copie of the Letter.

Right fresh flour, whose I have aye ben and shall,
Withoutin part of ellifwhere servise,
With herte, and bodie, life, lust, thought, and all,
I wofull wight, in every humble wise
That tong can tell, or hertè maie devise, 1320
As

As oft as mattir occupyth place,
Me recommaunde unto your noble grace.

Likith it you to wetin, swete herte,
As ye well knowin, how long time agon
That ye me left in aspre painis smerte,
Whan that ye wentin, of whiche yet bote non
Have I now had, but evir worse bigon
Fro daie to daie am I, and so mote dwell,
While it you list, of wele and wo my well.

For whiche to you, with dredefull hertè true 1330
I write, as he that sorowe driveth to write,
My wo, that every houre encrefith newe,
Complaining as I dare, or can endite,
And that defacid is, that maie ye wite
The teris, which that from mine eyin rain,
That wuldin speke, if that thei durst, and plain.

You first beseche I, that your eyin clere
To loke on this defoulid ye nat hold,
And ore all this, that ye my ladie dere,
Woll vouchsafin this lettir to behold, 1340
And by the cause eke of my caris cold,
That slaeth my wit, if aught amis me sterre,
Foryevith it me, mine owne swete herte.

If any servaunt durst or ought of right
Upon his ladie pitously complain,
Than wene I that I ought to be that wight,
Confidrid this, that ye these monthis twain
Have taried, there ye saidin sothe to fain
But tenne dayis ye n'olde in hosfe sojourne,
But in two monethis yet ye not retourne. 1350

But for as moche, as me mote nedis like
All that you list, I dare nat plainin more,
But humbly with sorowfull fighis sike,
You write I mine unrestie sorowes fore,
Fro daie to daie desiring evirmore
To knowin fully, if your will it were,
How ye have fared and don, while ye be there.

The whose welfare and hele eke God encrese
In honour soche, that upward in degre
It growe alwaie, so that it nevir cese, 1360
Right as your herte aie can, my ladie fre,
Devise, I praie to God so mote it be,
And graunt it, that ye sone upon me rewe,
As wisely as in all I' am to you true.

And if you likith knowin of the fare
Of me, whose wo there maie no wight discrive,
I can no more, but cheft of every care,
At writing of this lettir I' am on live,
All redy out my wofull ghost to drive,
Whiche I delaie, and holde him yet in honde 1370
Upon the sight of mattir of your sonde.

Mine eyin two, in vain with whiche I se,
Of sorowfull teres salt arn woxin wellis,
My song in plaint of mine adversite,
My gode in harme, mine ese eke woxin hel is,
My joie in wo, I can sey now nought ellis,
But tournid is, for whiche my life I warie,
Every joie or ese in his contrarie.

Which with your coming home ayen to Troy
Ye maie redresse, and more a thousande sithe, 1380
Than er I had, encreffin in me joie,
For was there nevir hertè yet so blithe
To have his life, as I shall ben as swithe
As I you se, and though no manir routh
Can mevin you, yet thinkith on your trouthe.

And if so be my gilt hath deth deserved,
Or if you list no more upon me se,
In guerdon yet of that I have you served
Beseche I you, mine ownè ladie fre,
That hereupon ye woldin write to me 1390
For love of Jovis, my right lodè sterre
That deth maie make an ende of al my wèrre.

If othir cause aught doeth you for to dwel,
That with your lettir ye me recomfort,
For though to me your absence is an hell,
With pacience I woll my wo comfort,
And with your lettre' of hope I woll disport;
Now writith swete, and let me thus nat plain,
With hope or deth deliverith me fro pain.

Iwis mine ownè derè hertè true 1400
I wote that whan ye next upon me se,
So lost have I mine hele, and eke mine hewe,
Creseide shall not conne tho knowin me,
Iwis, mine hert'is daie, my ladie fre,
So thurstith aie mine hertè to behold
Your beaute, that unneth my life I hold.

I saie no more, all have I for to sey
To you well more than that I tellin maie,
But whethir that ye doe me live or dey,
Yet praie I God, so yeve you right gode daie, 1410
And farith well, thou godely faire freshe Maie,
As ye that life or deth me maie commaunde,
And to your trouthe aie I me recommaunde,

With helè soche, that but ye yevin me
The famin hele, I shall non hele yhave,
In you lieth, whan you list that it so be,
The daie, in whiche me clothin shall my grave;
And in you my life, in you might to save
Me fro disese of all my painis smerte;
And farith now wele, myne own derè swete herte.
Le vostre T.

This lettir forthe was sent unto Creseide,
Of whiche her answere in effect was this;
Full pitously she wrote ayen, and seide,
That all so sone as she might iwis
She would come, and amende that was amis,
And finally she wrote and sayid then
She would ycome, ye, but she n'ist not when.

But in her lettir madin she soche festes,
That wondir was, and swore she loved him best,
Of whiche he found but botomles bilhestes; 1430
But, Troilus, thou maiest now Est and West
Pipe in an Ivie lese, if that The lest;
Thus goth the world, God shild us fro mischaunce
And every wight that menith trouthe avaunce.

Encreffin gan the wo fro daie to night
Of Troilus, for tarying of Creseide,
And lessin gan his hope and eke his might,
For whiche al down he in his bedde him leide,
He ne ete, dronke, ne slept, ne worde seide,
Imagining aie that she was unkinde, 1440
For which well nigh he wext out of his mind.

This dreame, of which I told have eke beforen,
Maie nevir come out of his remembraunce,
He thought aie well he had his ladie lorn,
And that Jovis, of his hie purveiaunce,
Him shewed had in slepe the signifaunce
Of her untrouth, and his disavinture,
And that the bore was shewed him in figure.

For whiche he for Sibylle his sustir sent

That

That callid was Cassandre' eke all about, 1450
 And all his dreame he told her er he stent,
 And her besought affoilin him the doubt
 Of the strong Bore, with all his tuskis stout,
 And finally, within a litil stounde,
 Cassandra him gan thus his dreame expound.

She gan first smile, and said, O brothir dere,
 If thou a sothe of this desirest to knowe,
 Thou must a fewe of olde stories here,
 To purpose how that fortune ovrithrowe
 Hath lordis old, through which within a throw
 Thou shalt this Bore well know, and of what kinde
 He comin is, as men in bokis finde.

Diana, whiche that wrothe was and in ire,
 For Grekis n'olde doin her Sacrifice,
 Ne encens on her Altar set on fire,
 She for that Grekis gon her so dispise
 Ywrake her in a wondir cruill wife,
 For with a Bore as grete as oxe in stall
 She made up frete ther corne and vinis all.

To slea the Bore was all the countrie reised, 1470
 Emongis whiche there came this Bore to
 A maid, one of this worlde the best ipraised,
 And Meleager, lorde of that countre,
 He lovid so this freshe maidin fre,
 That with his manhode, er he woulde stent
 This Bore he slough, and her the hed he sent.

Of whiche, as oldè bokis tellin us,
 There rose a conteke and a grete envie,
 And of this Lorde disendid Tydeus
 By ligne, or ellis oldè bokis lie, 1480
 But how this Melcager gan to die
 Thorough his mothir, woll I you not tell,
 For all to long it werin for to dwell.

She tolde eke how Tydeus, er she stent,
 Unto the stronge cite of Thebes
 (To claimin kingdome of the cite) went,
 For his felawe dan Polynices,
 Of whiche the brothir dan Eteocles
 Full wrongfully of Thebis held the strength,
 This tolde she by processe all by length. 1490

She tolde eke how Hemonides asterte,
 Whan Tydeus slough fiftie knightis stoute,
 She tolde eke all the Prophecies by herte,
 And how that sevin kingis with ther rout
 Besiegedin the cite all aboute,
 And of the holie Serpent, and the well,
 And of the furies all she gan him tell.

*Associat profugus Tydeus primo Polynicem,
 Tydea legatum docet, infidiasque secundus,
 Tertius Hemoniden canit, & vatem latitantem,
 Quartus habet Reges ineuntes pralia septem,
 Lemniadum Furia quinto narrantur, & angues,
 Archemori bustum sexto, ludique leguntur,
 Dat Thebis vatem Graiorum septimus umbris,
 Octavo cecidit Tydeus, spes, vita Pelasgum,
 Hippomedon nono moritur cum Parthenopao,
 Fulmine percussus decimo Capaneus superatur,
 Undecimo sese perimunt per vulnera fratres,
 Argivum fletum narrat duodenus, & ignem.*

Of Archinorie's burying, and the plaies,
 And how Amphiarus fill through the grounde,
 How Tydeus was slain, lorde of Argeies, 1500
 And how Hipome'don in a litil stounde
 Was dreint, and dedde Parthenope of wound,
 And also how Capaneus the proude

With thonder dint was slain, that cryid loude.

She gan eke tell him, how that eithir brother,
 Eteocles and Polynice also,
 At a scarmishe eche of 'hem slough the other,
 And of Argivis weping and ther mo,
 And how the toun was brent, she told eke tho;
 And tho discendid doune from jestis old 1510
 To Diomed, and thus she spake and told.

This ilkè Bore betokenith Diomed
 Tydeus sonne, that doune discendid is Fro Mele'ager, that made the Bore to blede,
 And thy Ladie, where so she be iwis,
 This Diomed her herte hath, and she his,
 Wepe if thou wolt, or leve, for out of dout
 This Diomed is in, and thou art out.

Thou saiest nat sothe (qð he) thou forcereffe,
 With all thy false ghost of Prophecie, 1520
 Thou wenist ben a grete devinereffe,
 Now seest thou nat this sole of fantasie
 Painin her upon ladies for to lie,
 Awaie (qð he) there Jovis yeve The sorowe,
 Thou shalt be fals para'venture er to morow.

As well thou mightist lien on gode Alceste,
 That was of all creturis (but men lie)
 That evir werin, kindist and the beste,
 For whan her husbonde was in jeopardie
 To die himself, but if she wouldè die, 1530
 She chese for him to die, and gon to hell,
 And starfe anon, as us the bokis tell.

Cassandre goeth, and he with cruill herte
 Foryate his wo, for angre of her speche,
 And fro his bedde all sodainly he sterre,
 As though all whole him had imade a leche,
 And daie by daie he gan enquire and seche
 A sothe of this, with all his besy cure,
 And thus he drivith forthe his avinture.

Fortune, whiche that the permutacion 1540
 Of all thinges hath, as it is her committed
 Through purveiaunce and disposicion
 Of high Jove, as reignis shall ben yfitted
 Fro folk to folk, or whan thei shal ben smitted,
 Can pull awaie the fethirs bright of Troie
 Fro daie to daie, till thei ben bare of joie.

Emong all this, the fine of the' jeopardie
 Of Hector gan approchin wondir blive,
 The fatis would his soule should unbodie,
 And shapin had a mene it out to drive, 1550
 Ayenst whiche fate him helpith not to strive,
 But on a daie to fightin gan he wende,
 At whiche alas! he caught his liv'is ende.

For whiche me thinkith every manir wight,
 That hauntith armis, oughtin to bewaile
 The deth of him that was so noble' a knight,
 For as he drough a king by th' aventaille
 Unware of this, Achilles through the maile
 And through the bodie gan him for to rive,
 And thus the worthy knight was reft of live. 1560

For whom, as oldè bokis tellin us,
 Was made soch wo, that tong it maie nat tel,
 And namily the sorowe' of Troilus,
 That next him was of worthinesse the well,
 And in this wo gan Troilus to dwell,
 That what for sorowe, love, and for unrest,
 Full oft a daie he had his hertè breft.

But

But nathèlesse, though he gon him dispaire,
And drede aie that his ladie was untrue,
Yet aie on her his hertè gan repaire, 1570
And as these lovirs doen, he sought aie newe
To get ayen Creseide bright of hewe,
And in his herte he went her excusing,
That Calchas causid all her taryng.

And oftin time he was in purpose grete
Him selvin like a pilgrim to disgise,
To sene her, but he maie not counterfete,
To ben unknowen of folke that werin wise,
Ne finde excuse aright that maie suffice, 1580
If he among the Grekis knowin were,
For whiche he wept full oft many a tere.

To her he wrote yet oftin time all newe
Full pitously, he left it nat for slouth,
Beseeching her, sithins that he was true
That she would come ayen and hold her trowth:
For whiche Creseide upon a daie for routh,
I take it so, touching all this mattere
Wrote him ayen, and saied as ye maie here.

Cupid's sonne, ensample of godelihede,
O swerde of knighthode, sours of gentilnesse, 1590
How might a wight in turment and in drede
And helelesse you sendin, as yet gladnesse,
I hertilese, I sicke, I in distresse,
Sens ye with me, nor I with you maie dele,
You neithir sende I maie ne herte ne hele.

Your lettirs full the papir all iplained
Commevid havin myne hert's pite,
I have eke sene with teris all depainted
Your lettir, and how ye requirin me
To come ayen, whiche yet ne maie not be: 1600
But why, lest that this lettir foundin were,
No mencion ne make I now for fere.

Grevous to me (God wote) is your unrest,
Your hast, and that the Goddis ordinaunce
It semith nat ye take it for the best,
Nor othir thing n'is in your remembraunce,
As thinkith me, but onely your plesaunce,
But beth nat wroth, and that I you beseeche,
For that I tarie' is all for wickid speche.

For I have herd well more than I wend 1610
Touching us two, how thingis have istond,
Whiche I shall with dissimuling amende,
And beth not wroth, I have eke undirstond
How ye ne doe but holdin me in honde,
But now no force, I can nat in you gesse
But allè trouthe and allè gentilnesse.

Comin I woll, but yet in soche disjoints
I stond as now, that what yere, or what daie
That this shall be, that can I nat apointe,
But in effect I praie you as I maie 1620
Of your gode worde, and of your frendship aie,
For truilly while that my life maie dure
As for a frende ye maie in me assure.

Yet praie I you no evill ye ne take
That it is short, whiche that I to you write,
I dare nat there I am well lettirs make,
Ne nevir yet ne could I well endite,
Eke grete effect men writin in place lite,
Th'entent is all, and nat the lettirs space,
And farith well, God have you in his grace. 1630

Le vostre C.

This Troilus thought this lettir al straunge

Whan he it sawe, and so'roufully he sight,
Him thought it like a kalendes of eschaunge,
But finally he ful ne trowin might
That she ne would him holdin that she hight,
For with ful evill wil liste him to leve,
That lovith wel, in such case, though him greve.

But nathèlesse, men sain that at the last
For any thing men shal the sothè se,
And suche a case betide, and that as fast, 1640
That Troilus wel understode that she N'as nat so kinde, as that her ought to be,
And finally he wote now out of dout
That al is lost, that he hath ben about.

Stode on a daie in his melancolie
This Troilus, and in suspectioun
Of her, for whom he wenid for to die,
And so besil, that throughout Troie toun
As was the gife, iborne was up and down
A manir cote armoure, as saithe the storie, 1650
Beforn Deiphobe, in signe of his victorie.

The whichè cote, as tellith Lollius,
Deiphobe it had yrente fro Diomede
The fame daie, and when this Troilus
It sawe, he gan to takin of it hede,
Avising of the length and of the brede,
And al the werke, but as he gan beholde,
Ful sodainly his herte began to colde,

As he that on the coler fonde within
A broche, that he Creseide yave at morow 1660
That she from Troie toun must nedis twin,
In remembraunce of him, and of his sorow,
And she him laide ayen her faith to borow
To kepe it aie, but now ful wel he wist
His lady n'as no longir on to trist.

He goeth him home, and gan ful sonè sende
For Pandarus, and al this newè chaunce
And of this broch he tolde him orde and ende,
Complaining of her hert's variaunce,
His longè love, his trowth, and his penaunce, 1670
And aftir deth withoutin wordis more
Ful fast he cried, his rest him to restore.

Than spake he thus, O lady mine Creseide,
Where is your faith, and where is your behest?
Where is your love? where is your trowth? he seide,
Of Diomede have ye now al this fest?
Alas! I would have trowid at the lest
That sens ye n'olde in trouthe to me stonde
That ye thus n'olde have holdin me in honde.

Who shal now trowen on any othis mo? 1680
Alas! I never would have wende er this
That ye, Creseide, coulde have chaungid so,
Ne but I had agilde, and done amis,
So cruel wende I nat your herte iwis
To flee me thus, alas! your name of trouthe
Is now fordone, and that is al my routhe.

Was there none othir broche you list to lete
To fesse with your newè love? (qð he)
But thilke broche that I with teris wete
You yave, as for a remembraunce of me? 1690
None other cause alas! ne haddin ye
But for dispite, and eke for that ye mente
All uttirly to shewin your entente,

Through which I se, that clene out of your minde
Ye have me cast, and I ne can nor maie
For al this world within mine hertè finde

To

To' unlövin you a quartir of a daie,
In curfid time I borne was, welawaie!
That you that done me all this wo endure
Yet love I the best of any cature. 1700

Now God (qð he) me sendin yet the grace
That I maie metin with this Diomede,
And truily, if I have might and space,
Yet shal I make I hope his sidis blede,
Now God (qð he) that aughtist takin hede
To forthrin trouthe, and wrongis to punice,
Why n'ilt thou don a vengeance of this vice?

O Pandarus, that in dremes for to triste
Me blamid hast, and wonte art oft upbreide,
Now maist thou sene thy selfe, if that The list, 1710
How trewe is now thy necè bright Creseide,
In sondry formis (God it wote) he seide,
The Goddis shewin bothè joie and tene
In slepe, and by my dreame it is now sene.

And certainly, withoutin morè speche
From hennis forthe, as ferforthe as I maie,
Mine ownè deth in armis wol I seche,
I ne retche nat how sonè be the daie,
But trewily Creseidè, swetè Maie,
Whom I have ay with al my might iserved, 1720
That ye thus done, I have it nat deserved.

This Pandarus, that al these thingis herde,
And wiste wel that he said a sothe of this,
He nat a worde ayen to him answerde,
For sory of his frend's sorow' he is,
And shamid for his nece hath done amis,
And stante astonied of these causis twaie
As still as stone, o worde ne coulede he saie.

But at the last thus he yspake, and seide, 1730
My brothir dere, I may do The no more,
What should I faine? I hate iwis Creseide,
And God it wote I wol hate her er-more,
And that thou me besoughtist don of yore,
Having unto mine honour ne my reſte
Right no regarde, I did al that The leste.

Yf I did aught, which that might likin The,
It is me lese, and of this trefon now
God wote that it a sorow is to me,
And dredelesse, for hert's ese of you,
Right faine I would amende it, wilt I how, 1740
And fro this world almighty God I praie,
Delivir her sone, I can no more saie.

Great was the woe and plaint of Troilus,
But forthe her course fortune aie gan to holde,
Creseide lovith the sonne of Tydeus,
And Troilus mote wepe in caris colde,
Such is this worlde, who so it can beholde,
In eche estate is litill hert's reſte,
God leve us to takin it for the beste.

In many cruil bataile out of drede 1750
Of Troilus this ilke noble knight,
(As men maie in these oldè bokis rede)
Was sene his knightthod, and his gretè might,
And dredelesse his irè daie and night
Ful cruilly the Grekis aie abought,
And alwaie most this Diomede he sought.

And oftin timis I finde that thei mette
With bloody strokis, and with wordis grete,
Assaying how ther speris werin whette,
And God it wote, with many' a cruil hete 1760
Gan Troilus upon his helme to bete,

But nathèlesse, fortune it naught ne would
Of eithir's honde that eithir dyin should.

And if I had itakin for to write
The armis of this ilke worthy man,
Than would I of his battailis endite,
But for that I to writin first began
Of his love, I have saidin as I can
His worthy dedis, who so liste 'hem here,
Rede Dares, he can tel 'hem al ifere. 1770

Befeching every lady bright of hewe,
And every gentil woman, what she be,
Al be it that Creseidè was untrewè,
That for that gilt ye be nat wroth with me,
Ye maie her gulte in othir bokis se,
And gladdir I would writin if you leste,
Of Penelope's trouthe, and gode Alceste.

Ne saie I nat this al only for men,
But most for women that betrayid be
Through fals folke, God yeve 'hem sorow, Amen. 1780
That with ther gretè witte and subtilte
Betrayin you, and this comveith me,
To speke, and in effeete you al I praie,
Beth ware of men, and herkenith what I saie.

Go litil boke, go litill tragedie,
There God my makir yet er that I die
So sende me might to make some comedie;
But litill boke, make thou The none envie,
But subject ben unto al poesie,
And kisse the steppes, wher as thou seist pace. 1790
Of Virgil, Ovide, Homer, Lucan, Stace.

And for there is so grete diversite
In English, and in writing of our tonge,
So praie I to God, that none miswrite The,
Ne The misse-metre, for defaute of tonge,
And redde where so thou be, or ellis songe,
That thou be undirſtonde God I beseeche;
But yet to purpose of my rathir speche.

The wrathe, as I began you for to seie, 1800
Of Troilus the Grekis boughtin dere,
For thousandis his hondis madin deye,
As he that was withoutin any pere,
Save in his time Hector, as I can here,
But welawaie! (save onely Godd's wil)
Dispitously him slough the fierſe Achil.

And whan that he was slain in this manere,
His lightè goste ful blisfully is went
Up to the holownesse of the seventh sphere,
In his place leting everiche element, 1810
And there he sawe, with ful avisement,
The erratike sterres, herkening harmonie,
With sownis ful of hevins melodie.

And down from thennis fast he gan avise
This litil spotte of erth, that with the se
Enbracid is, and fully gan dispise
This wretchid world, and helde al vanite
In respecte of the plaine felicite
That is in heven above, and at the last
There he was slaine his loking down he cast.

And in him selfe he lough right at the wo 1820
Of them that weptin for his dethe so fast,
And dampnid all our werkes, that foloweth so
The blindè lust, whiche that ne may nat last,
And shuldin al our herte on hevin cast,
And forthe he went, shortly for to tell,
There as Mercury fortid him to dwel.

Suche

Suche fine hath lo! this Troilus for love,
 Suche fine hath all his grete worthinesse,
 Suche fine hath his estate royal above,
 Suche fine his lust, such fine hath his noblesse, 1830
 Suche fine hath this false world's brotilnesse,
 And thus began his loving of Creseide,
 As I have tolde, and in this wise he deide.

O yonge and freshe folkis, he or she,
 In whiche that love up growith with your age,
 Repairith home from worldely vanite,
 And of your hertes up castith the visage
 To thilke God, that aftir his image
 You made, and thinkith al n'is but a faire,
 This world that passith sone, as flouris faire: 1840

And lovith him, the whiche that right for love
 Upon a crosse, our soulis for to bey,
 First starfe and rose, and sit in heven above,
 For he n'il falsin no wight, dare I sey,
 That wol his hert al wholly on him ley,
 And sens he best to love is, and most meke,
 What nedith fainid lovis for to seke?

Lo! here of painims curfid oldè rites!
 Lo! here what al ther goddis maie availe!
 Lo! here this wretchid world's appetites! 1850
 Lo! here the fine and guerdon for travaile
 Of Jove, Apollo, Mars, and such raskaile!
 Lo! here the forme of oldè clerkis speche
 In poetrie, if ye ther bokis seche!

O moral Gower, this boke I'directe
 To The, and to the Philosophicall Strode,
 To vouchsafe there nede is for to correcte
 Of your benignities and zelis gode;
 And to the sothfast Christ, that starfe on rode,
 With al mine hert of mercy er I prais 1860
 And to the lorde right thus I speke and saie,

Thou one and two, and thre, eterne on live,
 That raignist aie in thre, and two, and one,
 Uncircumscript, and all maist circumscribe,
 From visible and invisible sone
 Defende us in thy mercy everichone,
 So make us, Jesus, to thy mercy digne,
 For love of maide and mothir thine benigne.

Thus endeth the fift boke, and last of TROILUS.

Here foloweth the piteful and dolorous Testament of faire CRESEIDE.

The Author of the Testament of CRESEIDE, which might pass for the sixth Book of this Story, I have been informed by Sir James Eriskin, late Earl of Kelly, and diverse aged Scholars of the Scottish Nation, was one Mr. Robert Henderson, chief Schoolmaster of Dumferlin, a little time before Chaucer was first printed, and dedicated to King Henry VIII, by Mr. Thynne, which was near the end of his Reign. Mr. Henderson wittily observing that Chaucer in his fifth Book had related the Death of Troilus, but made no mention what became of Creseide; he learnedly takes upon him in a fine Poetical way to expresse the Punishment and End due to a false unconstant Whore, which commonly terminates in extream Misery.

 Doly seson till a carefull dite
 Should coresponde, and be equivalent,
 Right so it was, whan I began to write
 This tragedy, the we'ir right fervent,
 Whan Aries in middis of the lent
 Showris of haile gan fro the North discende,
 That scantly fro the cold I might me defende.

Yet nerthelesse within mine orature
 I stode, whan Titan had his bemis bright
 Withdrawin down, and scylid undir cure, 10
 And faire Venus, the beaute of the night,
 Upraise, and sette unto the Weste ful right
 Her goldin face, in oppositioun
 Of God Phæbus directe descending down.

Throughout the glasse her bemis braft so faire,
 That I might se on every side me by,
 The northrin winde hath purified the aire,
 And shedde his misty cloudis fro the skie,
 The froste fresid, the blastis bittirly
 Fro pole Artike came whisking loud and shill, 20
 And caufid me remove ayenst my will.

For I trustid that Venus, lov'is quene,
 To whom somtime I hight obedience,

My fadid hert of love she would make grene,
 And therupon with humble reverence
 I thought to prais her hie magnificence;
 But for grete colde as than I lettid was,
 And in my chambre to the fire gan pas.

Though love be hote, yet in a man of age
 It kindlith nat so sone as in youthed, 30
 Of whom the blode is flowing in a rage,
 And in the olde the corage dul and ded,
 Of whiche the fire outwarde is best remed,
 To helpe by phisike wher that nature failed
 I am experte, for bothe I have assailed.

I made the fire and bekid me aboute,
 Than toke I drinke my spirites to comforte,
 And armid me wel fro the colde theroute,
 To cutte the wintir night and make it shorte
 I toke a quere, and leste al othir sporte, 40
 Writin by worthy Chaucer glorious,
 Of faire Creseide, and lusty Troilus.

And there I founde aftir that Diomed
 Recevid had that lady bright of hewe,
 How Troilus nere out of his witte abrede,
 And wept full fore, with visage pale of hewe,

Q q q q

For

For which wanhope his teris gan renewe
While Esperus rejoyfid him againe,
Thus while in joie he lived, and while in paine.

Of her behest he had grete comforting, 50
Trusting to Troie that she wold make retour,
Whiche he desired most of al erthly thing,
For why? she was his onely paramour;
But whan he sawe passid both day and hour
Of her gaincome, in sorowe gan oppresse
His woful herte, in care and hevynesse.

Of his distresse me nedith nat reherse,
For worthy Chaucer in that samè boke
In godely termis, and in joly verse
Compilid hath his caris, who will loke; 60
To breke my slepe anothir quere I toke,
In which I founde the fatal destiny
Of faire Creseide, which endid wretchidly.

Who wote if all that Chaucer wrate was trewe?
Nor I wote nat if this narracion
Be authorisid, or forgid of the newe,
Of some Poete by his invencion
Made to reporte the lamentacion
And wofull ende of this lusty Creseide,
And what distresse she was in, or she deide. 70

Whan Diomedes had al his appetite
And more fulfillid of this faire lady
Upon anothir sette was his delite,
And sende to her a libel repudy,
And her excludid fro his company,
Than desolate she walkid up and down,
As some men saine, in the courte as commune.

O faire Creseide, the floure and a per se,
Of Troie and Grece, how were thou fortunate,
To chaunge in filthe al thy feminite, 80
And be with fleschly lust so maculate,
And go among the Grekes erly and late
So gylotlike, taking thy foule plesaunce!
I have pite The should fall suche mischaunce.

Yet nerthelasse, what er men deme or say
In scornfull langage of thy brutilnesse,
I shall excuse, as ferforth as I may,
Thy womanhed, thy wisedome, and fairnesse,
The which fortune hath put to suche distresse
As her plesid, and nothing throughe the gilte 90
Of The, through wickid langage to be spilte.

This faire lady on this wise destitute
Of al comforte and consolatioun,
Right prively without fello'wship or refute
Dishevelid, passid out of the toun
A mile or two unto a mansioun
Bildid ful gaie, wher her fathir Calchas,
Which than among the Grekis dwelling was.

Whan her he saw, the cause he gan enquire
Of her comming, she said sighing ful sore, 100
For Diomedes had gottin his desire
He woxe wery, and would of me no more.
O Calchas, doughtir, wepe thou nat therfore,
Paravinture al comith for the best,
Welcome, to me thou art ful dere a gest.

This olde Calchas, aftir the lawe was tho,
Was kepir of the temple as a preste,
In whiche Venus and her sonne Cupido
Were honourid, and his chambre was nest,
To which Creseide with bale enewed in brest 100
Ufid to passe, her prayirs for to saie,

While at the last upon a solempne daie

As custome was, the peple ferre and nere,
Before the none, unto the temple went,
With sacrifice devout in ther manere,
But stil Creseide, hevy in her entent,
Into the Church would nat her self present,
For giving of the peple any deming
Of her expulse fro Diomedes the King,

But passid into a secrete oratore, 120
Where she might wepe her wofull destiny,
Behinde her backe she closid fast the dore,
And on her kneis bare fel down in hie,
Upon Venus and Cupide angrily
She cryid out, and sayid in this wise,
Alas that er I made you sacrifice!

Ye gave me ones a divine responfaile,
That I should be the floure of love in Troie,
Now am I made an unworthy outwaile,
And al in care translatid is my joie, 130
Who shal me gide? who shal me now convoie,
Sithe I fro Diomedes, and noble Troilus
Am clene excluded, abject, odious?

O false Cupide, none is to wite but thou,
And the mothir of love, that blinde goddace,
Ye causid me undirstande alwaie and trow
The fede of love was sowin on my face,
And aie grewe grene thorough your sople grace,
But now alas! that fede with frost is slaine,
And I fro lovirs leste, and all forlaine. 104

Whan this was said, down in an extasy.
Ravished in spirite in a dreame she fel,
And by apparaunce herde where she did lie
Cupide the King tinging a silvir bel,
Which men might here fro hevin into hel,
At whose sounde before Cupido aperes
The seven planets discending fro the spheres,

Whiche hath powir of al thing gene'able,
To rule and stere by their gret influence
Weðir and winde, and course variable, 150
And first of al Saturne gave his sentence,
Whiche gave to Cupide litil reverence,
But as a boistous chorle in his manere
Came crabbidly with austrine loke and chere.

His face frounsid, his lere was like the lede,
His tethe chatterid, and shivered with the chin,
His eyin drouped whole sonkin in his hede,
Out at his nose the mildrop fast gan rin,
With lippis blew, and chekis lene and thin,
The fleickils, that fro his heer doune honge, 160
Was wondir grete, and as a spere as longe.

Attour his belte his liart lockis laie
Feltrid unfaire, or fret with frostis hore,
His garment and his gite ful gay of graie,
His wiðrid wede fro him the winde out wore,
A boustous bowe within his honde he bore,
Undir his girdle a fashe of felone flains
Feðrid with ise, and hedid with holstains.

Than Jupiter right faire and amiable,
God of the sterris in the firmament, 170
And norice to al thing generable,
Fro his fathir Saturne farre different,
With burly face, and browis bright and brent,
Upon his hed a garlonde wondirs gaie
Of flouris faire, as it had ben in Maie,

His

His voice was clere, as cristal was his eien,
As goldin wier so glittering was his here,
His garment and his gite ful gaie of grene,
With goldin listis gilte on every gere,
A burly brande about his middle' he bere, 180
And in' his right hand he had a groundin spere,
Of his fathir the wrothe fro us to bere.

Next aftir him came Mars the God of ire,
Of strife, debate, and all discencioun,
To chide and fight, as fierse as any fire,
In harde harnesse hewmonde and habergioun,
And on his haunch a rousty fel fauchoun,
And in his hande he had a rousty sworde,
Writhing his face, with many angry worde,

Shaking his brande before Cupide he come, 190
With red visage, and grilly glowing eien,
And at his mouth a blubbir stode of fome,
Like to a bore, whetting his tuskis kene,
Right tursurelike, but temperaunce in tene,
An horne he blewe wi h many boustous bragge,
Whiche al this world with warre hath made to wagge.

Than faire Phœbus, lanterne and lampe of light,
Of man and best, both frute and florishing
Tendir norice, and banishir of night,
And of the worlde causing by his moving 200
And influence life in al erthly thing,
Without comforte of whom of force to nought
Must go dyin, all that this world hath wrought.

As king royall he rode upon a chare,
The whiche Phaeton somtime gidid unright,
The brightnesse of his face, whan it was bare,
Non might beholde, for persing of his sight,
This goldin carte with firy bemis bright
Foure yokid stedes ful different of hewe
But baite or tiring through the spheris drew. 210

The first was sorde, with mane as red as rose,
Callid Eoye in the orient,
The seconde stede to name hight Ethiose,
Whitely and pale, and somdele ascendent,
The third Pyrois, right hote, and fervent,
The fourth was blak, and callid Phlegone,
Which rollith Phœbus down into the se.

Venus was there present, that goddes gay,
Her sonn'is quarrel to defende, and make
Her owne complaint, cladde in a nice aray, 220
The one halfe grene, th' othir halfe sable blake,
White heer as Gold, kembit and shede abake,
But in her face semid grete variaunce,
Whiles parsite Truth, and whilis Inconstaunce.

Undir smiling she was dissimulate,
Provocative with blinkis amorous,
And sodainly chaungid and alterate,
Angry, as any serpent venomous,
Right pungitive with wordis odious,
Thus variaunt she was, who list take kepe, 230
With one eye laugh, and with the othir wepe.

In tokening that al fleshely paramour,
Which Venus hath in rule and govirnaunce,
Is somtime swete, somtime bittir and sour,
Right unstable, and ful of variaunce,
Mingid with careful joye, and false plefaunce,
Now hotte, now colde, now blith, now ful of wo,
Now grene as lefe, now wiðrid and ago.

With boke in hand, than come Mercurious,

Right eloquent and ful of rethoric, 240
With polite termis, and delicious,
With penne end inke to reporte al redie,
Setting songis, and singing merily,
His hode was red heclid attour his croun,
Like til a Poete of the olde fasioun.

Boxis he bare with fine electuaries,
And sugrid siropes for digestion,
Spicis belonging to the potiquares,
With many wholsome swete confection, 250
Doctur in phisike cledde in scarlet gown,
And furrid wel, as suche one ought to be,
Honest and gode, and nat a worde couth lie.

Next after him come lady Cynthia,
The laste of al, and swiftist in her sphere,
Of colour blake, buskid with hornis twa,
And in the night she listith best r' apere,
Hawe as the leed, of colour nothing clere,
For al the light she boroweth at her brother
Titan, for of her selfe she hath non other.

Her gite was gray and ful of spottis blake, 260
And on her brest a chorle paintid ful even,
Bering a bushe of thornis on his bake,
Whiche for his theft might clime no ner the heven.
Thus when thei gaðrid were the goddis seven,
Mercurius thei chosed with one assent
To be fore-spekir in the parliment.

Who had ben there and liking for to here
His faconde tonge, and termis exquisite,
Of rethorike the praðike he might lere,
In brefe sermon a preignant sentence write; 270
Before Cupide valing his cappe a lite
Speris the cause of that vocacioun,
And he anon shewde his entencioun.

Lo, qð Cupide, who wol blasfpheme the name
Of his owne God, either in worde or dede,
To al goddis he doeth bothe losse and shame,
And should have bittir painis to his mede,
I saie this by yondir wretche Creseide,
The whiche through me was somtime flour of love
Me' and my mothir she stately can reprove, 280

Saying of her gret infelicite
I was the cause, and my mothir Venus
She called a blinde goddes and might nat se,
With sclaunder and defame injurious,
Thus her living unclene and lechirous
She would retorte on me and my mother
To whom I shewde my grace above al other.

And sithe ye are al sevin deficate
Participant of divine sapience, 290
This gret injury done to' our hie estate
Me thinke with paine we shuld make recompence,
Was ner to goddis done suche violence,
As wel for you as for my selfe I saie,
Therefore go help to revenge, I you praie.

Mercurius to Cupide gave answere,
And said, sir king, my counsaile is that ye
Referre you to the hyist planet here,
And take to him the lowist of degre,
The paine of Creseide for to modifie, 300
As God Saturne with him take Cynthia!
I am content (qð he) to take thei twa.

Than thus procedid Saturne and the Mone,
Whan thei the matir ripely had digest,
For the dispite to Cupide that she' had done,

And

And to Venus opin and manifest,
In al her life with pain to be oprest,
And turment sore, with sikenesse incurable,
And to al lovirs be abhominable.

This doleful sentence Saturne toke in hande,
And passid doun where carefull Creseide laie, 310
And on her hed he laide a frosty wande,
Than lausfully on this wise gan he saie,
Thy grete fairenesse, and al thy beauty gaie,
Thy wanton blode, and eke thy goldin here,
Here I exclude fro The for evirmere;

I chaunge thy mirthe into melancoly,
Whiche is the mothir of al pensivenesse,
Thy moistir and thy hete to colde and dry,
Thine insolence, thy plaie and wantonnesse
To grete disese, thy pompe and thy richesse 320
Into mortal nede and grete penurie,
Thou suffre shalt, and as a beggir die.

O cruil Saturne, froward and angrie,
Harde is thy dome, and to malicious,
Of faire Creseide why hast thou no mercie
Whiche was so swete, gentill, and amorous?
Withdrawe thy sentence, and be gracious,
As you were ner, so shewith through thy dede,
A wrekeful sentence givin on Creseide.

Than Cynthia, whan Saturne past awaie, 330
Out of her sete discendid dounè blive,
And red a bill on Creseide where she laie,
Containing this sentence diffinitive,
Fro hele of body here I The deprive,
And to thy sikenesse shal be no recure,
But in dolour thy dayis to endure.

Thy cristal eyen mengid with blode I make,
Thy voice so clere unplefant here and hace,
Thy lustie lere orspred with spottis blake,
And lumpis hawe appering in thy face, 340
Where thou comist eche man shall flie the place,
Thus shalt thou go begging fro hous to hous
With cuppe and clappir like a Lazarus.

This dolie dreame, this ugly visioun
Brought till an ende, Creseide fro it awoke,
And all that courte and convocacioun
Vanished awaie, than rose she up and toke
A polished glasse, and her shadowe couth loke,
And whan she sawe her visage so deformate,
If she in herte were wo, In'ote, God wate. 350

Weping ful sore, lo! what it is (qð she)
With froward langage for to move and stere
Our crabbid Goddes! and so' is sene on me,
My blaspheming now have I bought ful dere,
All yerthly joie and mirthe I set arere
Alas! this daie! alas! this wofull tide,
Whan I began with my Goddis to chide!

By this was saied, a childe came fro the hal,
To warne Creseide the suppir was redie,
First knockid at the dore, and eft couth call, 360
Madame, your fathir biddeth you cum in hie,
He hath marveile so long on grose ye lie,
And saith your bedis beth to long somdele,
The Goddis wote all your entent full wele.

Qð she, faire child, go to my fathir dere,
And praie him come to speke with me anon;
And so he did, and saied, doughtir, what chere?
Alas! (qð she) fathir, my mirthe is gone.
How so? (qð he) and she gan all expone,

As I have told, the vengeance, and the wrake,
For her trespas Cupide on her couth take.

He lokid on her ugly Lepir's face,
The whiche before was white as Lily flour,
Wringing his handes oftimis saied alace
That he had lived to se that wofull hour!
For he knewe well, that there was no focour
To her siknesse, and that doublid his pain;
Thus was there care inow betwixt hem twain.

Whan thei togiðir mournid had full lang,
Qð Creseide, fathir, I would nat be kende, 380
Therfore in secrete wise ye let me gange
To yon Hospitall at the toun's ende,
And thiðir some mete for charite me sende
To live upon, for all mirth in this yerth
Is fro me gone, soche is my wickid werth.

Whan in a mantill, and a Bevir hat,
With cuppe and clappir, wondir privily
He' opened a secrete gate, and out therat
Conveyid her, that no man should espie,
There to a village halfe a mile therebie, 390
Delivered her in at the Spittill hous,
And daily sente her part of his almous.

Sum knew her well, and sum had no knowlege
Of her, bicause she was so deformate,
With bilis blake orspred in her visage,
And her faire colour fadid and alt'erate;
Yet thei presumid for her hie regrate,
And still mourning, she was of noble kin,
With bittir will there thei token her in.

The daie passid, and Phœbus went to rest, 400
The cloudis blake orwhelid all the Skie,
God wote if Creseide were a so'rowfull gest,
Seing that uncouth fare and herborie,
But mete or drinke she dressid her to lie
In a darke cornir of the hous alone,
And on this wise weping she made her mone.

Here foloweth the Complaint of Creseide.

O Soppe of sorowe sonkin into care.
O caitife Creseide now and evirmare,
Gon is thy joie and al thy mirthe in yerth,
Of all blithnesse now art thou blake and bare,
There is no salve that helpin maie thy fare,
Fell is thy fortune, wickid is thy werthe,
Thy blisse is banished, and thy bale unberde,
Undir the grete God if I gravin ware
Wher men of Grece ne yet of Troie might herd!

Where is thy chambir wantonly besene, 10
With burly bed, and blankits broudid bene,
Spicis and wine to thy colatioun,
The cuppis all of gold and silvir shene,
Thy swete metis servid in platis clene,
With faverie sauce of a gode fashioun,
Thy gaie garmentes with many godely gown,
Thy plesaunt laune pinnid with goldin pene!
All is arere thy grete roiall renoun.

Where is thy gardein with thy grecis gaie,
And freshe flouris, which the quene Floraie 20
Had paintid plesauntly in every paine,
Where thou were wont full merily in Maie
To walke, and take the dewe by it was daie,

And

And here the Merle and Mavise many one,
With ladies faire in carolling to gone,
And se ther roiall renkis in ther raie!

This lepir loge take for thy godely boure,
And for thy bed take now a bounche of stro,
For wailid wine and metis thou had tho
Take mouldid bred, pirate, and sidir soure, 30
But cuppe and clappir is all now ago.

My clere voice and my courtly carolling
Is ranke as roke, full hidous, here and hace,
Deformid is the figure of my face,
To loke on it no peple hath liking,
So sped in sight, I saie with fore sighing
Lying emong the lepir folke, alas!

O ladies faire of Troie and Grece, attende
My freile fortune, mine infelicite,
My grete mischefe which no man can amend, 40
And in your minde a mirroure make of me,
As I am now paravinture that ye,
For al your might, may come to the same ende,
Or ellis worse, if any worse maie be,
Beware therefore, approachith nere your ende.

Nought is your fairnesse but a fading floure,
Nought is your famous laude and hie honour
But winde inflate in othir mennis eres,
Your rosing redde to roting shall retoure,
Exemple make of me in your memoure, 50
Which of soche thingis wofull witnes beres,
Al welth in yerth as wind awaie it weres,
Beware therefore, approachith nere your hour.

Thus chiding with her drerie destine,
Weping she wōke the night fro ende to ende,
But all in vain, her dole, her carefull crie,
Might not remede, ne yet her mourning mend,
A lepir ladie rose, and to her wende,
And saied, why spurnist thou again the wall
To sle thy self, and mende nothing at all? 60

Sith that thy weping but doublith thy wo,
I counsaile The make vertue of a nede,
Go lerne to clappe thy clappir to and fro,
And lerne aftir the lawe of lepirs lede.
There was no bote but forwith than she yede
Fro place to place, while cold and hungir fore
Compellid her to be a ranke beggore.

That samē time of Troie the garnifoun,
Whiche had the chieftain worthy Troilus
Through jeopardy of warre had strikin down 70
Knightis of Grece in nombir marveilous,
With grete triumphe, and laude victorious
Again to Troie right roially thei rode,
The waie wher Creseide with the lepir stode.

Seing that companie come with o steven,
Thei gave a crie, and shoke cuppis, gode spede,
Worthie lordis, for Godd's love of heven
To us lepirs, part of your almose dede.
Than to her crie noble Troilus toke hede,
Having pite, nere by the place gan pas 80
Wher Creseide sat, nat weting what she was.

Than upon him she kest up bothe her eyen,
And with a blinke it come intill his thought,
That he somtime her face before had sein,
But she was in soche plight he knew her nought,
Yet than her loke into his minde he brought,
The swete visage, and amorous blenking
Of faire Creseide, somtime his own derling.

No wondir was, suppose in mind that he Toke her figure so sone, and lo! now why 90
The' Idea of a thing in case maie be
So depe enprintid in the fantasie
That it deludith the wittes outwardly,
And so appereth in forme and like estate
Within the minde, as it was figurate.

A sparke of love than til his hert couth spring,
And kindilid his bodie in a fire
With hote fevir, in swette, and trembling
Him toke, while he was redie to expite, 100
To bere his shilde his brest begon to tire,
Within a while he chaungid many' a hewe,
And nertheles nat one anothir knewe.

For knightly pite and memoriell
Of faire Creseide, a girdill gan he take,
A purse of golde, and many' a gaie jewell,
And in the skirte of Creseide doun gan shake,
Than rode awaie, and nat a worde he spake,
Penfise in herte, while he came to the toun,
And for grete care oft sith almoſte fell doune.

The lepre folke to Creseide then couth draw, 110
To se the equall distribucioun
Of the almose, but whan the golde they sawe
Eche one to othir privily gan roun,
And saied, yon lorde hath more affectioun
Hower it be, unto yon Lazarous,
Than to us all, we knewe by his almous.

What lorde is yon (qð she) have ye no fele?
That doeth to us so grete humanite.
Yes, qð a lepre man, I knowe him wele, 120
Troilus it is, a knight gentle and fre.
Whan Creseide undirstode that it was he,
Stiffir than stele there sterte a bittir stound
Throughout her hert, and fill doune to the ground.

Whan she, orcome with fighting fore and sad,
With many' a carefull crie and cold atone,
Now is my brest with stormie stoundis stad,
Wrappid in wo, oh wretchfull will of one!
Than fell in swoun ful oft, or she would sone,
And evir in her swouning cried she thus,
O false Creseide, and true knight Troilus! 130

Thy love, thy laude, and all thy gentinesse
I comptid small in my prosperite,
So efflatid I was in wantonneſse,
And clambe upon the fickle whele so hie,
All faithe and love I promittid to The
Was in thy self fikill and furious,
O false Creseide, and true knight Troilus!

For love of me thou kept thy countinaunce
Honest and chaſt in conversacion, 140
Of all women proteſtour and defence
Thou were, and helpid ther opinion,
My minde on fleshly foule affection
Was enclinid to lustis lecherous,
Fie false Creseide! o true knight Troilus!

Lovirs, beware, and take gode hede about
Whom that ye love, for whan ye suffre pain,
I let you wit there is right fewe throughout,
Whom ye maie trust to have true love again,
Prove whan you woll, your labour is in vain,
Therefore I rede ye take them as ye finde, 150
For thei are sad as Weðircocke in winde.

Bicause I knowe the grete unſtableneſſe
Brittle as glasse, unto my selfe I saie,
R r r r

Truſting

Trusting in othir as grete brutilnesse,
As inconstaunt, and as untrue of faie;
Though some be true, I wot right few ar thei;
Who findith truthe, let him his lady ruse,
None but my self as now I woll accuse.

Whan this was said, with papir she fat doun,
And in this manir made her testament; 160
Here I bequeth my corse and carioun
With wormis and with todis to be rent,
My cuppe, my clappir, and mine ornament,
And all my gold, these lepre folke shall have,
Whan I am dedde to burie me in grave.

This roiall ring, set with this Rubie redde,
Whiche Troilus in dowrie to me fende,
To him again I leve it whan I am dedde,
To make my carefull deth unto him kende;
Thus I conclude shortly and make an ende, 170
My sp'rit I leve to Diane, where she dwelles,
To walke with her in waft wodis and welles.

O Diomedes, thou hast bothe broche and belte,
Whiche Troilus gave me in tokining
Of his true love; and with that worde she swelt.
And sone a lepirman toke off the ring,
Than buried her withoutin taryng;

To Troilus forthwith the ring he bare,
And of Creseide the deth he gan declare.

Whan he had herd her grete infirmite, 180
Her legacie, and lamentacioun,
And how she endid in soche poverté,
He swelt for wo, and fell doun in a swoun,
For sorowe his herte to brast was boun,
Sighing full fadly faied I can no more,
She was untrue, and wo is me therfore.

Some faith he made a tombe of marble graie,
And wrote her name and superscripcioun,
And laid it on her grave whereas she laie, 190
In golden lettirs, conteyning this refoun,
Lo! faire ladies, Creseide of Troie toun,
Somtime comptid the floure of womanhed,
Under this stone, late lepir, lyith dedde!

Now worthy women, in this balade short,
Made for your worship and instruction,
Of charite I monishe and exhorte,
Minge nat your love with false discepcion,
Bere in your minde this fore conclusion
Of faire Creseide, as I have faied before, 200
Sith she is dedde, I speke of her no more.

Thus endeth the pitfull and dolorous Testamente of faire CRESEIDE.

The Legende of good Women.

Some Ladies in the Court took offence at Chaucer's large Speeches against the untruth of Women; therefore the Queen enjoin'd him to compile this Book in the commendation of sundry Maidens and Wives, who shew'd themselves faithful to faithless Men. This seems to have been written after the Flower and the Leaf.

Thousande timis I have herd men tell
That there is joie in heven and pain in hell,
And I acord it wele that it is so,
But nathelesse yet wot I wele also,
That there n'is non dwelling in this countre,
That eithir hath in heven or hell ibe,
Ne maie of it none othir waies wittin
But as he herd faied, or found it writtin,
For by affaie there maie no man it preve.

But God forbode but that men shuldin leve 10
Well more thing than thei han seen with eye,
Men shall nat wenin every thing a lie
But if himself it seeth, or els it doeth,
For God wote thing is nevir the lesse soth,
Though every wight ne maie it not ise.

Bernarde the Monke ne saugh not all parde,
Than mote we to bokis that we finde,
(Through which the oldè thingis ben in minde)
And to the doctrine of these oldè wise
Yeve credence, in every skillfull wise, 20
That tellin of these old apprevyd stories
Of holines, of reynis, of victories,
Of love, of hate, and othir sondrie thinges,
Of whiche I maie not makin rehersinges:
And if that oldè bokis were awaie,
Ilorne were of all remembraunce the kaie.

Well ought us than honourin and beleve
These bokis, there we han none othir preve.

And as for me, though that I can but lite,
On bokis for to rede I me delite, 30
And to hem yeve I faithe and full credence,
And in mine herte have hem in reverence
So hertily, that there is game none
That fro my bokis makith me-to gone,
But it be seldome, on the holie daie,
Save certainly whan that the month of Maie
Is comin, and I here the foulis sing,
And that the flouris ginnin for to spring,
Farwell my boke, and my devocion.

Now have I than eke this condicion, 40
That above all the flouris in the mede
Than love I mošte these flouris white and rede,
Soche that men callin Daiesies in our toun,
To them have I so grete affectioun
As I faied erst, whan comin is the Maie,
That in my bedde there dawith me no daie,
That I n'am up, and walking in the Mede,
To sene this floure ayenst the Sunne sprede, 50
Whan it uprisith erly by the morowe,
That blisfull sight softinith all my sorowe,
So glad am I, whan that I have presence
Of it, to doin it all reverence,
As she that is of all flouris the floure,
Fulfillid of all vertue and honoure,
And evir ilike faire, and freshe of hewe,
As wel in wintir, as in summir newe,

This

This love I evre', and shall until I die,
All swere I not of this, I woll nat lie.

There lovid no wight hottir in his life,
And whan that it is eve I renne blithe,
As sone as evir the Sunne ginnith West,
To sene this flour, how it woll go to rest,
For fere of night, so hatith she derknesse,
Her chere is plainly spred in the brightnesse
Of the Sunne, for there it woll unclofe:
Alas that I ne' had Englishe, rime, or prose,
Suffisaunt this flour to praise aright!
But helpith ye, that han conning and might,
Ye lovirs, that can make of sentiment,
In this case ought ye to be diligent
To forthrin me somewhat in my labour,
Whether ye ben with the lese or the flour,
For well I wote, that ye han here before
Of making ropen, and lad awaie the corne,
And I come aftir, glening here and there,
And am full glad, if I maie finde an ere
Of any godely worde that ye han leste;
And though it happe me to reherfin eft
That ye han in your freshe songis saied,
Forberith me, and beth not ill apaied,
Sith that ye se I doe it in the' honour
Of love, and eke in service of the flour,
Whom that I serve, as I have wit or might,
She is the clerenesse and the very light,
That in this derke world me windith and ledeth,
The hert within my wofull brest you dredeth,
And loveth so fore, that ye ben verily
The maistris of my wit, and nothing I,
My worde, my workes, is knit so in your bonde,
That as an harpe obeyith to the honde,
And makith soun aftir his fingiring,
Right so mowe ye out of mine herte bring
Soch voice, right as you list, to laugh or pain,
Be ye my guide, and ladie soverain,
As to mine yerthly God, to you I call,
Bothe in this werke, and my sorowis all.
But wherfore that I spake to yeve credence
To old stories, and doen 'hem reverence,
And that men mustin more thing bileve,
Than men may sene at eye, or ellis preve,
That shall I sein, whan that I se my time,
I maie not all at onis speke in rime,
My busie ghost, that thurstith alwaie newe
To sene this flour so yong, so freshe of hewe,
Constrainid me with so gredie desire,
That in mine herte I felin yet the fire,
That made me to rise er it were daie,
And this was now the first morowe of Maie,
With dredfull herte, and glad devocion
For to ben at the resurrection
Of this flour, whan that it should unclofe
Again the Sunne, that rose as redde as rose,
That in the brest was of the best that daie
That Agenor's doughtir ladde awaie,
And doune on knees anon right I me sette,
And as I could this freshe flour I grette,
Kneling alwaie, till it unclofid was,
Upon the small, and soft, and swete gras,
That was with flouris swete embroudid al,
Of soche swetnesse, and soche odour oer all,
That for to spekin of gomme, herbe, or tre,
Comparison maie none imakid be,
For it surmountith plainly all odoures,
And of riche beaute the most gaye of floures,
Forgottin had the yerth his pore estate
Of Wintir, that him nakid made and mate,
And with his sworde of colde so fore greved,
Now hath the' arempre sonne al that releved
That nakid was, and clad it newe again,
The small fousis, of the sefon fain,

That of the panter and the net ben scaped,
Upon the foulir, that 'hem made awhaped
In Wintir, and distroyid had ther brode,
In his dispite them thought it did 'hem gode
To sing of him, and in ther song dispise
The foulè chorle, that for his covitise
Had 'hem betrayid with his Sophistrie;
This was ther song: The foulir we desie,
And all his crafte; and some ysongin clere
Layis of Love, that joie it was to here,
In worshipping and praising of her make,
And for the newè blisfull Somir's sake,
Upon the braunchis full of blosmis soft
In ther delite thei tournid 'hem full oft,
And songin, Blissid be saint Valentine,
For on his daie I chese you to be mine,
Withoutin repenting, mine herte swete,
And therwithall their beakis gonnin mete,
Yelding honour, and humble obeisaunce
To love, and didden ther othir obseunaunce,
That longith unto love, and to nature,
Constrewe that as you list, I doe no cure,
And tho that had doin unkindenesse,
As doeth the Tidise for newefangelnesse,
Besoughtin mercie of ther trespassing,
And humilly songin ther repenting,
And sworin on the blosmis to be true,
So that ther makis would upon 'hem rue,
And at the last thei madin ther acorde,
All found thei Daungir for the time a lorde,
Yet Pite, thorough his strong gentill might,
Foryave, and made mercie passin right
Through Innocence, and rudil Curtisie,
But I ne clepe nat Innocence folie,
Ne false pite, for vertue is the mene,
As Ethicke saieth, in soche manir I mene.
And thus these foulis, voide of all malice,
Accordidin to Love, and lastin vice
Of hate, and songin all of one acorde,
Welcome Sommir, our govirnour and lorde:
And Zephyrus, and Flora gentilly
Yave to the flouris soft and tendirly
Ther sote breth, and made 'hem for to sprede,
As God and Goddesse of the flourie Mede,
In whiche me thought I mightè daie by daie
Dwellin alwaie, the joly monthe of Maie,
Withoutin slepe, withoutin mete or drinke,
Adoune full softly I gan to sinke,
And lening on my elbowe and my side,
The longè daie I shope me for to abide
For nothing ellis, and I shall nat lie,
But for to lokin upon the Daisie
That well by refon men it callè maie
The Daisie, or els the eye of the daie,
The emprise, and the flour of flouris all,
I praie to God that faire mote she fall,
And all that lovin flouris, for her sake!
But nathèlesse, ne wene nat that I make
In praising of the flour again the lese,
No more than of the corne again the shefe,
For as to me n'is levir none ne lother,
I n'am withholdin yet with neithir nother,
Ne' I n'ot who servith lese, ne who the flour;
Well broukin thei ther service or laboure;
For this thing is all of anothir tonne,
Of old storie, er soche thing was begonne.
Whan that the Sunne out of the South gan West,
And that this flour gan close, and gon to rest,
For derknes of the night, the which she drede,
Home to mine house full swiftly I me spede,
To gone to rest, and erly for to rise,
To sene this flour to sprede, as I devise;
And in a little herbir that I have,
That benchid was of turvis freshe igrave,

I bad

I bad men shouldin me my couchè make,
 For deinte of the newè Sommir's sake
 I bad 'hem strawin flouris on my bedde;
 Whan I was laied, and had mine eyin hedde,
 I fell aslepe, and slept an houre or two;
 Me met how I laie in the Medowe tho
 To sene this floure, that I love so and drede,
 And from aserre came walking in the Mede
 The God of Love, and in his hande a Quene,
 And she was clad in roiall habite grene,
 A fret of goldè she had next her here,
 And upon that a white coroune she bere
 With flourounis small, and I shall nat lie,
 For all the worldè right as a Daisie
 Icrounid is, with whitè levis lite,
 So were the florouns of her crounè white,
 For of o perlè fine orientall
 Her white coroune was imakid all,
 For which the white coroune above the grene,
 Ymade her like a Daisie for to sene,
 Confidrid eke her fret of gold above:
 Iclothid was this mightie God of Love
 In silke embroidid, full of grenè greves,
 In whiche there was a fret of red rose leves,
 The freshest sene the worldè was first begon;
 His gilt here was ycrounid with a son
 In stede of gold, for hevinessè and weight,
 Therwith me thought his facè shone so bright,
 That well unnethis might I him behold,
 And in his hand methought I sawe him hold
 Two fire dartis, as the gledis rede,
 And Angelike his wingis sawe I sprede,
 And all be that men fain, that blinde is he,
 Algatis me thought that he might wele se,
 For sternily on me he gan behold,
 So that his lokin doeth min hertè cold,
 And by the hande he helde this noble Quene,
 Crounid with white, and clothid al in grene,
 So womanly, so benigne, and so meke,
 That in this worldè, though that men woldin seke,
 Halfe her beaute ne shouldin thei nat finde
 In cature that yformid is by kinde,
 And therfore maie I sain, as thinkith me,
 This song in praising of this Ladie fre.

Hide Absolon thy giltè tressis clere,
 Hester laie thou thy mekenesse all adoun,
 Hide Jonathas all thy frendly manere,
 Penelope, and Marcia Catoun,
 Make of your wifehode no comparisoun,
 Hide ye your beauties, Ifoude and Helein,
 My ladie cometh, that all this maie distain.

Thy faire bodie ne let it not appere
 Lavine, and thou Lucrece of Romè toun,
 And Polyxene, that boughtin love so dere,
 And Cleopatra, with all thy passoun,
 Hide ye your trouthe of love, and your renoun,
 And thou Thisbe, that hast of love soche pain,
 My Ladie cometh, that all this maie distain.

Hero, Dido, Laodomia', ifere,
 And Phyllis, hanging for Demophoon,
 And Canace, espyd by thy chere,
 Hypsipyle betrayd by Jason,
 Makith of your trouthe neither boste ne soun,
 Nor Hypermnestra', or Ariadne, ye twaine,
 My Ladie cometh, that all this maie distain.

This balade maie full well ifongin be,
 As I have said erst, by my ladie fre,
 For certainly, all these mowe not suffice
 To' apperin with my Ladie in no wise,

For as the Sunnè woll the fire distain,
 So passith all my Ladie soverain,
 That is so gode, so faire, so debonaire,
 I praie to God that evir fall her faire!
 For ne had comfort ben of her presence
 I had ben dedde, without any defence,
 For drede of Lov's wordis, and his chere,
 As, whan time is, hereastir ye shall here.

Behinde this God of Love upon the grene
 I sawe coming of Ladyis ninetene,
 In roiall habit, a full esie pace,
 And astir them of women soche a trace,
 That sene that God Adam had made of yerth
 The thirde part of mankinde, or the ferth,
 Ne wende I nat by possibilitè

Had evir in this wide worldè ibe;
 And true of love these women were echon,
 Now whether was that a wondir thing or non,
 That right anon, as that thei gonne espie
 This floure, whiche that I clepe the Daisie,
 Full sodainly thei stintin all at ones,
 And knelid doune, as it were for the nones,
 And songin with o voice, hele and honour
 To trouthe of womanbede, and to this flour,
 That berith our aldir prise in figuring,

Her white coroune berith the witnesing;
 And with that worde, a compas envitoun
 Thei sittin 'hem full softly adoun.
 First sat the God of Love, and sith his quene,
 With the white coroune, yclad all in grene,
 And sithin all the remnaunt by and by,
 As thei were of estate, full curtisly,
 Ne nat a worde was spokin in the place,
 The mountenance of a furlong waie of space.

I kneling by this floure, in gode entent,
 Abode to knowin what this peple ment,
 As still as any stone, till at the last
 This God of Love on me his eyin cast,
 And said, who knelith there? and I answerd
 Unto his asking, whan that I it herde,
 And saied, sir it am I, and come him nere,
 And salued him (qð he) what doest thou here,
 So nigh mine ownè floure, so boldly?
 It werin bettir worthy truly

A worme to nighin nere my flour than thou.
 And why sir (qð I) and it likith you?
 For thou (qð he) art therto nothing able;
 It is my relike, digne and delitable,
 And thou my so, and all my folke werriest,
 And of mine old servauntis thou mislaiest,
 And hindrist 'hem, with thy translacon,
 And lettist folke from ther devocion
 To servin me, and holdist it folie
 To servin Love, thou maicst it nat denie,

For in plain text, withoutin nede of glose,
 Thou' hast translatid the Romaunt of the Rose,
 That is an heresie ayenst my lawe,
 And makist wise folke fro me to withdrawe,
 And of Creseide thou hast saide as The list,
 That makith men to women lesse to triste,
 That ben as trewe as er was any stele.

Of thine answer avisin The right wele,
 For though that thou renyid hast my laie,
 As othir wretchis have done many a daie,
 By seint Venus, which that my mothir is,
 If that thou live, thou shalt repentin this
 So cruilly, that it shal wel be sene.

Tho spake this lady, clothid all in grene,
 And sayid, God, right of your curtisie
 Ye mote herkin if that he can reple
 Ayenst al this, that ye have to him meved,
 A God ne shouldè nat be thus agrevèd,
 But of his deite he shal be stable,
 And therto gracious and merciable,

And

And if ye n'ere a God, that knowin all,
Than might it be, as I you tellin shall,
This man to you maie falsely ben accused,
That as by right him oughtin ben excused,
For in your court is many' a losingeour,
And many a queint totoler accusour
That tabouren in your eris many' a foun,
Right aftir ther imaginacioun,
To have your daliaunce, and for envy,
These ben the causis, and I shal nat lie,
Envie is lave'ndir of the court alwaie,
For she ne pattith neithir night ne daie
Out of the house of Cesar, thus saith Dant,
Who so that goeth, algate she wol nat want.

And eke peraunter for this man is nice
He mightin done it, gessing no malice,
But for he usith thingis for to make,
Him reckith nought of what matir he take,
Or him was bodin makin thilkè twey
Of some persone, and durst it nat withsey,
Or him repentith uttirly of this,
He ne' hath nat done so grevously amis
To translatin that oldè clerkis writen,
As though that he of malice would enditen
Dispite of love, and had himselfe it wrought;
This should a rightwise lorde have in his thought,
And nat be like tirauntes of Lombardie,
That han no rewarde but at tirannie;
For he that king or lorde is naturel,
Him ought not be a tiraunt ne cruel
As a fermour, to done the harme he can,
He must thinkin it is his liegè man,
As is his tresour, and his golde in cofer,
This is the sentence of the Philosophèr;
A kinge to kepe his liegis in justice,
Withoutin dourè that is his office,
Al wol he kepe his lordes in ther degre,
As it is right and skil, that thei shulde be,
Enhaunsid and honourid, and most dere,
For thei ben halfegoddiss in this world here,
Yet mote he done both right to pore and riche,
Al be that ther estate be nath both liche,
And have of povir folke compassion;
For lo the gentil kinde of the lion!
For whan a flie offendith him or biteth,
He with his taile awaie the flie ysmiteth
Al esily, for of his genterie
Him deinith nat to wreke him on a flie,
As doeth a curre, or els anothir best,
In noble corage ought to ben arest,
And wayin every thing by equite,
And have regarde unto his owne degre,
For sir, it is no maistrise for a lorde
To dampne a man, without answere of word,
And for a lorde that is ful foule to use;
And it so be, he maie him nat excuse,
But askith mercy with a dredeful herre,
And profirith him, right in his bare sherte,
To ben right at your ownè jugement,
Than ought a God by short avisement
Confidre' his owne honour, and his trespas;
For sith no cause of deth lieth in this case,
You ought to ben the lightlier merciabie;
Lettith your ire, and beth somwhat trefable;
The man hath servid you of his conninges,
And forthrid well your law in his makinges,
Al be it that he can nat wel endite,
Yet hath he madin leudè folke delite
To servin you, in preifing of your name,
He made the boke, that hight the House of Fame,
And eke the deth of Blaunchè the Duchesse,
And the' Parliment of Foulis, as I gesse,
And al the love of Palamon and Arcite
Of Thebis, though the storie is knowen lite,

And many an hymne, for your holy daies,
That hightin balades, rondils, virèlaies;
And for to speke of othir holinesse,
He hath in prose translatid Boece,
And made the life also of saint Cecile,
He madin also, gon is a grete while,
Origines upon the Maudelaine,
Him oughtin now to have the lessè paine,
He hath made many' a ley, and many' a thing. 430
Now as ye be a God, and eke a King,
I your Alceste, whilom quene of Thrace,
I askè you this man right of your grace,
That ye him nevir hurte in al his live,
And he shal swerin to you, and that blive,
He shal ner more agiltin in this wise,
But shal makin as ye wol him devise
Of women trewe in loving al their life,
Where so ye wol, of maidin or of wife,
And forthrin you, as muche as he misseide, 440
Or in the Rose, or ellis in Creseide.
The God of Love answerde her thus anon,
Madame (qð he) it is so longe agon
That I you knew, so charitable' and trewe,
That nevir yet, sithin the worlde was newe,
To me ne founde I bettir none than ye;
If that I wol yfavin my degre,
I may nor wol nat wernè your request,
Al lieth in you, doth with him as you lest:
I al foryeve withoutin lengir space, 450
For who so yeveth a yeste or doth a grace,
Do it betime, his thanke shal be the more,
And demith ye what he shal do therefore:
Go, thankith now my lady here (qð he)
I rose, and doun I set me on my kne,
And sayid thus: Madame, the God above
For yeldè you that ye the God of Love
Have makid me his wrathè to foryeve,
And give me grace so longè for to live,
That I maie know sothily what ye be, 460
That have me holpen, and put in this degre!
But trewily I wende as in this caas
Nought have agilte, ne done to love trespas;
For why? a trewe man withoutin drede
Hath nat to partin with a thev'is dede:
Ne a trewe lovir ought me not to blame,
Though that I speke a falsè lovir some shame,
Thei oughtin rather with me for to holde,
For that I of Creseide wrote or tolde,
Or of the Rose, what so mine author ment, 470
Algatis God wote it was mine entent
To forthrin trouth in love, and it cherice,
And to ben ware fro falsenèssè and fro vice
By whiche ensample, this was my mening.
And she answerde, let be thine arguing,
For love ne wol not countirpletid be
In right ne wrong, and lerne that of me,
Thou hast thy grace, and holde The right therto;
Now woll I saine what penaunce thou shalt do
For thy trespas, understandith it here, 480
Thou shalt while that thou livist yere by yere
The mostè partie of thy timè spende
In making of a glorious legende
Of gode women, both maidinis, and wives,
That werin trewe in loving all ther lives,
And tellin of falsè men that 'hem betraien,
That al ther life ne do nat but assaien
How many women thei maie done a shame;
For in your world that is now holde a game,
And though that The like nat a lovir be, 490
Speke wel of love, this penaunce yeve I The,
And to the God of love I shal so praie,
That he shal charge his servantes by' any waie
To forthrin The, and wel thy labour quite;
Go now thy waie, this penaunce is but lite;
S f f f

And

And when this boke is made, yeve it the quene
On my behalfe, at Eltham, or at Shene.
The God of love gan smile, and than he saide,
Wost thou (q³ he) wher this be wife or maide,
Or quene, or countesse, or of what degre, 500
That hath so litill penaunce yevin The,
That hath deservid forely for to smerte?
But pite rennith sone in gentle herte,
That maist thou sene, she kithith what she is.

And I answerde, naie fir so have I blis
No more, but that I se wel she is gode.
That is a trewe tale by mine hode
(Q³ Love) and that thou knowist wel, parde,
If it be so that thou avise The;

Hast thou nat in a boke in thy cheste
The grete godenesse of the quene Alceste,
That turnid was into a daïsie,
She that for her husbond^e chese to die,
And eke to gone to hell, rathir than he
And Hercules rescuid her, parde,
And brought her out of hel againe to blis?

And I answerde againe, and sayid yes,
Now know I her, and is this gode Alceste
The daïsie, and mine owne hert^e is reste?
Now se I wel the godenesse of this wife, 520
That both astir her deth, and in her life
Her grete bounte doublith her renoun,
Wel hath she quit me mine affectioun,
That I have to her floure the daïsie,
No wondir is though Jove her stellise,
As tellith Agaton, for her godenesse,
Her white coronne berith of it witnesse,
For all so many virtuis had she
As smal florounis in her coronne be,
In remembrance of her, and in honour,
Cybilla made the daïsie, and the flour,
Icrownid al with white, as men maie se,
And Mars yave her a coronne red, parde,
In stede of Rubies set among the white.
Therwith this quene woxe red for shame alite,
Whan she was praisid so in her presence.
Than sayid Love, a ful grete negligence

Was it to The, that ilk^e time thou made (Hide Absolou thy tressis) in balade,
That thou forgette her in thy songe to sette, 540
Sith that thou art so gretly in her dette,
And wotist wel that kalender is she
To any woman, that wol lovir be,
For she taught all the crafte of trewe loving,
And namily of wifehode the living,
And all the bondis that she ought to kepe;
Thy litil witte was thilk^e time allepe;
But now I charge The upon thy life
That in thy legende thou make of this wife,
Whan thou hast othir smale imade before; 550
